Rod Le Rocque and Dorothy Gish have the leads, though Ernest Torrence dominates many of the scenes in the well-considered role of a small town manufacturer. He does not intrude, but he cannot be overlooked when he is on the stage. La Rocque takes a two-fast tempo as the son and Miss Gish over-plays now and then, though mostly she stays within the frame. Helen Lee Worthing makes the most of a small part and Arthur Housman and Riley Hatch hold their own well.

The production is not always well handled. We cannot, for example, vision a consumptive spending his time with a saxophone, nor can one look out of the windows of the Hotel Commodore and see Longacre Square. But it's New York as the rural visitor sees it, and it is good light entertainment if you do not demand logic. It's just what out-of-town likes.

The Story

John Bentley left New York after his fiancee jilted him, following his failure. He did not go back when a manufacturing enterprise made him rich. Instead he installed his luckier rival as New York manager. But his son, Ronald, felt the urge, and after a sensational scrape Bentley accepted the suggestion of his manager, that Ronald be given such a taste of the town that he would be content with Iowa ever after. An actress, Carrie Reed, is hired to teach him his lesson. She quits him cold the first night out. His pace is too rapid. He buys a taxicab, becomes involved in a robbery, perpetrated by the brother of a telephone operator, and he keeps silent for the sake of the girl. She, however, comes forward and Ronald is exonerated and Ronald is quite content to go back to Iowa—with the girl—and settle down. On the other hand the father, having seen his long lost love in her present all-too-fleshy state, promotes Workman to be head of the factory and decides to remain in New York and make up for lost time.

"Marry Me"

James Cruze Makes a Convincing Paramount Story from Utterly Implausible Story of an Egg.

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent.

Perhaps it is not an altogether unmixed blessing to be able to make bricks without straw. James Cruze seems to frequently get lightweight stories on the argument that he can make them real with his skillful direction. He seems to be regarded as an artistic pulmotor around the Lasky lot, for he always manages to breathe the breath of life into the moribund plot and he has made a really delightful little story out of Anne Caldwell O'Day's story of the cold storage egg.

It is unfortunate, except perhaps for the box office, that the title suggests a red hot mamma or a jazz baby daughter, where in reality it is a small town idyl, but this can be corrected in the advertising, and an effort should be made to appeal to those who like good, light entertainment.

"The Nest Egg" was written when jazz still was "ragtime" down on the Bowery and "syncopation" around Carnegie Hall. It's a simple little story that gains more from its telling than from its strained plot. It's a picture, rather than a play, but a very delightful picture of small town life, so well cast and directed that it possesses real charm.

It's a personal triumph for Cruze and a credit to the players, though Florence Vidor is not well cast as the heroine. She does not fit into the picture as well as do the others. On the other hand Edward Horton does a fine bit of work as the man who has ruined his digestion on cold storage eggs. It is one of his best drawn characters. Fannie Midgley is delightful as the grandmother and Ed Brady is photographic as the small town fatuous chap. The others all fit well into their characters and the ensemble is evenly good.

It is thoroughly delightful entertainment throughout and should be a good box office bet, since the play has been so widely done in stock.

Story

Hetty Gandy, called home from her vacationing by a telegram, leaves an egg for John Smith, whose proposal of marriage she has just accepted. The egg goes into cold storage instead of reaching John and for five years Hetty patiently waits his coming, resisting the importunities of Norman Frisbie. Then a wire from John Smith comes, asking her to be ready to go to a nearby town with him, and the whole village knows that Hetty is to be married at last. But this is another John Smith, who received the egg five years late and who is suing the dealer. He merely wants Hetty to testify for him. Through a misunderstanding Smith and Hetty have to spend the night in the same hotel room, and it looks pretty much like a scandal, but John Smith is more of a man than he seems to be and so all ends well, though the clouds pile up with alarming blackness.

"Pretty Ladies"

Gorgeous Reproduction of "Follies" Numbers in Color Plus Good Story Makes Fine Entertainment.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Due largely to Monta Bell's directorial skill aided by the excellent and sincere performance of Zasu Pitts in a sympathetic human interest role, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production "Pretty Ladies" is thoroughly enjoyable entertainment.

A strong human note is struck in the plot of this picture but it would have furnished a rather slight basis for a feature length picture if played up from its straight dramatic angle alone without the introduction of superfluous material to lengthen it out which would probably have weakened the story.

The story centers in the comedy woman of a "Follies" revue who sees all the pretty ladies in the show with their sweethearts and dreams of love but never experiences it until love finally comes to her in the person of the drummer in the orchestra. The leading woman tries to vamp him after he is happily married and he does fall from grace on one occasion. His wife won't listen to him or let him explain and acts as if she refused to believe him guilty, finally everything is O K again and in secret she prays that it will never happen again.

That is really all there is to the story, but the fact that the background is that of the "Follies" offered a fine opportunity to build up along this line and Mr. Bell has taken advantage of it. Referring obviously to the "Ziegfeld Follies" Ann Pennington one of the stars of this noted musical show appears in person and there are impersonations of several of the other principals.

There is to this picture the zest of the peep behind the stage curtain for it is a story of backstage, but after all the big thing for the average audience is the fact that Mr. Bell has introduced a number of spectacular stage numbers with full ensemble and an abundance of "pretty ladies" and the effect has been enhanced many fold by the use of Technicolor. They are simply gorgeous and with the predominance of soft colors are a delight to the eye. This is the finest example of color work we have ever seen, and the appeal of these numbers alone should make the picture a success.

These scenes include a Japanese setting that changes to an Alaskan one covered with snow, a huge chandelier on which the figures are beautiful living women and individual studies of several types of feminine beauty. There is also a novelty scene in which the whole stage represents a kitchen table with shelves, utensils, etc., on the same scale making Zasu Pitts, costumed as a fly, and the other characters appear in perfect proportion.

The way the picture ends is clever and truly unusual and we believe will provide general satisfaction for after all it was the happiest solution of the situation.

In addition to Miss Pitts' fine performance is the good work of Tom Moore in the opposite role and Lilyan Tashman as the vamp, with Norma Shearer and Conrad Nagel scoring in interpolated bits.

We believe that this picture will prove generally pleasing in all classes of houses and that the scenes in color will appeal especially to those who have not had an opportunity to see the "Ziegfeld Follies."

Length, 5828 feet.

Story

Maggie, the comedy woman in the Follies, who make them laugh with her clowning, sees all the other girls with sweethearts but none of the men ever look at her. The best she has is a "dream man" whom she imagines pays her attentions. An accident when she falls into the orchestra and breaks his drum starts a friendship with Al, the drummer. This arouses the jealousy of Selma, the leading lady who tries to win him, but Al who has written a big song success for Maggie, sticks to her and a few years later they have a happy home and a baby. Al has gained fame as a song writer and is called suddenly to Atlantic City to prepare a new number for Selma. There he finally falls for her. A busybody rushes and tells Maggie. When Al comes in he is contrite and prepared to tell the truth, but Maggie absolutely refuses to listen to him. The ending shows him happy with the baby while Maggie prays that it will not happen again.

"The Woman Hater"

Helene Chadwick and Clive Brook in Dramatic Warner Bros. Picture.

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Warner Brothers' "The Woman Hater" provides thoroughly enjoyable entertainment. Presenting an excellent cast consisting of Helene Chadwick, Clive Brook, John Harron, Helen Dunbar and Dale Fuller, the story of an actress's love for a man and a jealous youngster's infatuation for her begins with a minimum of effort and develops great suspense throughout, with clever trick photography of a race through New York traffic supplying a big kick at the end.

The actress has loved and lost because misunderstood and suspected. A youngster comes into her life and introduces her to the other man. Both men come to distrust her. The story is from Dorothy Day's excellent novel, "The Eleventh Virgin.'

Miss Chadwick has the role of the actress and is at her best in emotional scenes. The man she loves has boarded an ocean liner and the actress must reach the pier before its departure. She apparently speeds her auto down Riverside Drive, through the dense traffic at Times Square and onto the pier at breakneck speed. A Fifth Avenue 'bus looms up before her car and she swerves out to avoid it, people and immense vans cross her path but she avoids them.

Evidently this was done by superimposition—the careful placing of a negative of Miss Chadwick in a studio automobile on a negative of New York City streets. Careful calculation of when the racing car must turn out to apparently avoid traffic makes it realistic. It is not simply a shot or two but a couple of hundred feet of film. Audiences ought to eat it up and marvel at how it was done, since they can reason that no traffic cop would let Helene get away with any speeding like that.

Length, 6591 feet.

Story

Clive Brook has left Marie Lamont, actress, because he doubts her sincerity and love for him. Later, through Philip Tranter, a youngster infatuated with her, he meets her again and undertakes to save the boy from her. To show the boy she is unworthy, Brook forces Marie to appear in public with him after cutting engagements with the boy. Insanely jealous, Philip intrudes upon Brook and the actress in her apartment and covers them with a gun. Marie denounces Brook to make him leave, he not having seen the danger, and she herself waits for the shot. The boy confesses he evidently hasn't the capacity to return love like hers. She speeds to the pier, where Brook is boarding a liner, explains the reason for her harangue and wins his love.

"The Marriage Whirl"

Corinne Griffith Gives Excellent Performance in Jazzy Story Adapted from Stage Production.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As the newest of her own productions released through First National, Corinne Griffith appears in "The Mariage Whirl" which is adapted from "The National Anthem," a stage play by J. Hartley Manners.

The story shows a quiet and refined girl who does not care for the mad pace of the modern seekers of pleasure, impulsively marrying one of the foremost of this set on his promise to reform. The expected happens and he gradually goes back to his old ways and finally to try and hold him she seeks to keep up the pace although she abhors it. In the end, however, her husband has an affair with a notorious woman and is killed in an auto accident and she at last finds happiness with a former sweetheart of her own type.

With the exception of the opening scenes the story deals entirely with a succession of jazz scenes, the jazz atmosphere predominates and there are several parties and high jinks in which quantities of the stuff that is prohibited under the Volstead law is consumed. In fact it would seem that one of the reasons for the selection of this story for Miss Griffith is the opportunity it gives her to do some unquestionably good acting in a scene where she is supposed to be intoxicated, although it may not appeal to some of her fans.

Miss Griffith's role is a sympathetic one and with other opportunities such as scenes in which she does fine emotional work, her performance here ranks as one of her best. The story, however, is rather indefinite and pointless. Two of the scenes with the greatest opportunities for drama have been made melodramatic by overplaying and consequently fail to convince. Particularly is this true of the climax where in a rage she picks up a lamp standard and drives her husband and the other woman out, then takes poison by mistake and as the drug is taking effect wanders out into the crowded ballroom and demands that the music be stopped. And while providing the happy ending, the expedient of killing the husband in an auto accident is theatric and decidedly conventional.

As the husband, who is very much of a cad, Kenneth Harlan gives a good performance and with very limited opportunities Harrison Ford handles the role of the other fellow well. Nita Naldi successfully impersonates the Parisian vamp.

Even taking into consideration Miss Griffith's work and personal popularity the reception accorded this production will depend largely on the extent to which your audiences react to jazz themes. As a general proposition, we do not consider that it measures up to the standard of her recent productions.

Story

Tom Carrol and quiet and refined Marian Hale are old-time friends. Marian meets Arthur Carrolton, a jazz devotee, who takes her to a round of parties and although she does not fall for that kind of stuff, she really gets to love Arthur and when he promises to reform marries him. He stays good for awhile but when the old gang calls on them, he not only gets intoxicated but persuades Marian to imbibe and she takes too much. Her father seeing her in that condition is so hurt that he dies. Marian and Arthur go abroad and Arthur is soon mixed up with the fast set in Paris. In trying to keep up the pace which she hates but hoping to hold Arthur she finally starts to drinking. Arthur has an affair with Toinette, a dancer, and one evening when Marian is ill, he brings Toinette to the apartment. Marian sees him making love to her and finally waking up she drives them out. By mistake she takes poison and in desperation phones Tom to come to her. Toinette and Arthur are killed in an auto wreck and Marian recovers and finds happiness at last with Tom.

"My Lady's Lips"

Schulberg Offers Crook Story With Tremendous Suspense Denouncing Barbarity of "Third Degree"

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Following the release by B. P. Schulberg Productions of "Capital Punishment" advocating the abolition of the death penalty, the same company is now offering "My Lady's Lips" in which there is a scathing denouncement of the "third degree" used by the police and a plea for a less barbarous method for the detection of crime.

While the possibility of the death penalty being inflicted on an innocent man furnished the central theme in the previous picture the third degree situations occur late in "My Lady's Lips" and are but one angle of the plot. James P. Hogan directed both pictures.

The new production is the story of a newspaper reporter's successful capture of a notorious criminal gang by going among them and posing as one of them. His falling in love with the female leader caused him to shield her and resulted in his being sent to prison when the police by means of the third degree forced both of them to say that he was actually a member of the gang.

Director Hogan in a minimum number of scenes has excellently pictured the unhappy environment and then the reformatory which lead up to the heroine's career of crime and the romantic element is not introduced until about the middle of the picture. The first three or four reels dealing with the reporter's experience in the crook's den where he is suspected, poses as being blinded and is subjected to various tests to catch him, develop tremendous suspense that is excellently sustained at high tension and never allows the interest to waver for a moment.

Unfortunately, the strength and promise of these early reels is not maintained at the same level. The romantic angle is suddenly introduced and only slightly motivated; in fact it is never clearly shown as to why the hero should have gone to such extreme lengths, including a jail term, to shield this woman. The introduction of a denouncement of the third degree by a prominent police official breaks the dramatic continuity and the scene showing the infliction of this mental and physical torture are designed to accentuate their cruelty.

William Powell has the leading role and gives a very fine performance, his best since "Romola" and Alyce Mills does well as the female crook. Clara Bow is effective in a minor role. Indeed the entire cast is high class and contains a number of other players whose names have box-office value.

With its strong dramatic values, fine cast and the tremendous suspense and nerve-racking tension developed in the earlier reels "My Lady's Lips" rates above the average as a story of the underworld and should prove a good box-office attraction for the majority of houses.

Story

Lola Lombard, daughter of a newspaper owner tells her father she was in a gambling place that the police raided, but it develops that it was a frame-up of the notorious Blake gang. Scott Seddon, star reporter, sees a chance for a scoop by rounding up the gang. He gets into their underground headquarters and poses as a crook but they are suspicious. Afraid to shoot him they decide to give him poison that will blind him. He detects the scheme but simulates blindness and they try all sorts of tests without tripping him. Finally in an unguarded moment Dora Blake uncovers the deception—Seddon signals for the police and when they arrive he succeeds in getting Dora to safety and refuses to tell her whereabouts. He is arrested charged with being a member of the gang and Dora gives herself up to save him, but through third degree methods both are made to confess and are sent to jail. Unable to face him, Dora goes back to her old life and opens a gambling hall. Scott wanders in and denounces her for not keeping her promise to go straight. A disgruntled loser shoots Dora and Scott takes her in his arms and kissing her lips declares he still loves her.

PRODUCER AL CHRISTIE AND THE STARS WHO WILL BE SEEN IN CHRISTIE FEATURES

Christie Sets Complete Schedule for Short Comedies and Features

AL CHRISTIE has completed the line-up of product which will be made in his comedy studios this season, insuring not only an increased program of two-reel star series and Christie Comedies, but also at least three full-length features to be completed during the summer months.

The series of ten Christie Comedies are the first to go into production, the initial comedy in this series now being made under the direction of William Watson, recently signed by Christie to direct during the coming year. In the Christie Comedies will be all star casts featuring such players as Billy Dooley, just signed from the Orpheum circuit in which he appeared in the act called "The Misfit Sailor," Neal Burns, Jack Duffy, Vera Steadman, Natalie Joyce, Bill Irving, Eddie Baker, Lincoln Plumer, Rosa Gore, Bill Blaisdell and others.

Bobby Vernon Comedies will have six pictures. Frances Lee, also from the Orpheum Circuit, has been signed as Vernon's leading lady.

Walter Hiers will also make a series of six comedies. His first series last year is said to have established records for booking, and Christie some time ago exercised the option which he had on Hiers' services as far as two-reel comedies are concerned. Hiers may possibly appear in several outside features, but the series of comedies will be his chief work for the year.

Jimmie Adams has been elevated to the head of a comedy unit and will make six two-reel releases. Adams has been seen on the Christie program before but this year will head a starring series for the first time. Molly Malone has been assigned as leading woman with the Jimmie Adams comedies.

These four series will make twenty-eight comedies from the Christie studios all told, to be directed by Watson, Archie Mayo, Harold Beaudine and Walter Graham. Frank Roland Conklin, Hal Conklin, Raymond Ross, Robert Hall and Sigmund Terzig are writing the stories for these comedies. Arthur Forde has joined the Christie staff as stage director to collaborate with Thomas Brierly, are director, in creating sets and handling production details.

The first of the new Al Christie features to be released will be "Seven Days" from the Mary Roberts Rinehart book and the Avery Hopwood stage play. This is being filmed by Scott Sidney, the Christie star director who shot "Charley's Aunt" and other successes. The complete cast for "Seven Days" includes Lillian Rich, Creighton Hale, Lilyan Tashman, Mabel Julienne Scott, Hallam Cooley, Eddie Gribbon, Tom Wilson, William Austin, Rosa Gore and Charley Clarey.

"Madame Lucy," production of which should start July 14th, will have a big cast in addition to Julian Eltinge who has already been announced. Ann Pennington, Lionel Belmore, Lilyan Tashman, Jack Duffy and Hallam Cooley are slated to appear in the picture.

Christie will film another feature comedy during the late summer.

STARS WHO WILL BE SEEN IN CHRISTIE SHORT SUBJECTS

Release Schedule Is Issued For New Schulberg Program

J. G. BACHMANN, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg productions, issued this week a tentative release schedule for the first half of the program of eighteen preferred pictures to be released during 1925-1926.

The new schedule will be inaugurated on July 27 when "Parisian Love," a Gasnier production, will be delivered to exhibitors throughout the country. This colorful Apache story was written by F. Oakley Crawford and will feature in its screen version Clara Bow, Lou Tellegen, Donald Keith, Alyce Mills, Hazel Keener, Lillian Leighton Jeane de Briac and J. Gordon Russell.

The next release will come on August 15—"The Girl Who Wouldn't Work." Marcel De Sano, new director find, is transferring to the screen this society story by Gertie D. Wentworth-James. Lionel Barrymore, Marguerite De La Motte, Henry B. Walthall, Lilyan Tashman and Forrest Stanley head the cast.

On September 5 will be released the Saturday Evening Post serial by Fanny Heaslip Lea, "With This Ring." Fred C. Windemere is directing this story.

The next six will be released in the following order—September 25, "The Other Woman's Story;" October 16, "Lew Tyler's Wives;" November 6, "The Plastic Age," November 27, "Eden's Fruit;" December 18, "Shenandoah," and January 7, "Horses and Women."

The balance of nine pictures will follow at approximately three-week intervals. The order of their production has not yet been decided upon.

B. P. Schulberg Will Screen "Biography of Race Horse"

PRELIMINARY work on one of the biggest pictures to be filmed on the new program of B. P. Schulberg Productions, was begun this week when production plans were laid out for the Saturday Evening Post novel, "The Biography of a Race Horse" which will be released under the title "Horses and Women." L. B. Yates is the author of this unusual story which ran serially, last winter, in the Saturday Evening Post and was much discussed for the originality of its theme and treatment. Issued recently in book form, it is now recording high sales.

The screen transcription of "The Biography of a Race Horse" will be produced on an elaborate scale, making it one of the outstanding pictures on the Preferred schedule. It will combine all the interests of a horse picture with the flash of a tense society drama.

B. P. Schulberg, who will supervise production, has chosen Fred C. Windemere to direct this story. It will be ready for late Autumn release. Windemere is now at work on another Saturday Evening Post novel, "With This Ring," by Fanny Heaslip Lea, his first production for Mr. Schulberg's organization.

Henry B. Walthall in a strong scene in "On the Threshold, a Producers Distributing Corporation release. Robert Gordon and Gladys Hulette at right.

Georgia Hale and Malcolm Waite in Charles Chaplin's "The Gold Rush," for United Artists.

"Off the Highway" Makes Hit in Audience Test in California

"Off The Highway" Hunt Stromberg's first special feature on the coming program of Producers Distributing Corporation was previewed before a regular audience at the Glendale Theatre, Glendale, this week with the gratifying result indicated in the following telegram sent to John C. Flinn by William A. Howe lessee and manager of the theatre.

"Previewed 'Off The Highway' Monday night. Audience reaction wonderful. Many expressions to effect best picture ever to reach the screen. Picture a certain winner and one of the finest productions I have ever witnessed. Screened 'The Bad Lands' tonight to enthusiastic audience. Believe this best picture Harry Carey has made. Hunt Stromberg is to be congratulated as the most consistent and prolific producer I know of."

"Parisian Love" Completed

As soon as Gasnier finishes the supervision of cutting "Parisian Love," his first B. P. Schulberg Production on the new program of Eighteen Preferred Pictures, he will begin directing "The Other's Woman's Story," according to word just received from the coast. The choice of the leads for this coming production is now being made. The novel by Peggy Gaddis from which the picture is adapted tells the co-respondent's side of a sensational divorce case. It is said to be inspired by an actuality.

Cast Picked for De Mille Film

Clara Beranger, scenarist for William de Mille, has returned to Hollywood from New York with the completed script for "New Brooms." Production starts the latter part of July, with Bessie Love, Neil Hamilton and Robert McQuade in the featured roles.

CLARA BOW
One of the exceptional cast in the F. B. O. picture, "The Keeper of the Bees."

To Do Pryde Novel

"Spanish Sunlight," Barbara La Marr's Next First National Release

Associated Pictures Corporation announces that the next Sawyer-Lubin vehicle in which Barbara La Marr will appear for release through First National Pictures, Inc., will be "Spanish Sunlight." This popular novel by Anthony Pryde, has just been purchased for Miss La Marr's use.

It is further stated that this production will be made on the West Coast in the United Studios of First National under the supervision of June Mathis.

The making of "Spanish Sunlight" in California will mark the resumption of Sawyer-Lubin producing unit's activities in Hollywood inasmuch as, prior to the arrival of this company in New York last year, all productions of this company were made in California under the supervision of Arthur H. Sawyer.

Actual production will start the middle of August from the scenario by Miss Mathis.

Editing "Unchastened Woman"

James Young, who directed Chadwick Pictures Corporation's "The Unchastened Woman," which will mark the return to the screen of Theda Bara, is now engaged in editing and titling that production at the F. B. O. Studios, where the picture was filmed. It is expected the completed picture will be ready for a preview showing at an outlying Los Angeles theatre within two weeks. A completed print will be in New York by August 1 and will be shown to the trade press for review immediately.

Cline to Direct "Old Clothes"

Eddie Cline, one of the best known comedy directors in the industry, has been selected by Jack Coogan, Sr., to direct "Old Clothes," by Willard Mack, Jackie's first picture on his new Metro-Goldwyn contract. The closing of this contract with Cline marks the director's fourth consecutive picture with the juvenile star. The scenario for "Old Clothes" is being written by Kenneth Clark.

Rock Signs with Standard; To Make Comedies for F. B. O.

JOE ROCK, well known comedy producer, who recently completed two series of two-reel comedies starring Stan Laurel and Jimmy Aubrey, which F. B. O. is releasing, has signed a new contract with Standard Cinema Corporation, by the terms of which he will start work immediately on two new series of twenty-six comedies for the distributing company.

The first series will be known as "Blue Ribbon" comedies. Mr. Rock plans to use almost a ton of heavies in each picture, and announces that the Blue Ribbon series will be on the order of a grown-up "Our Gang." Work on the first comedy of this series has been started, and featured in the production, which is as yet untitled, are Frank Alexander, Hilliard Karr and Bill Ross. The total weight of these three men is over half a ton. Billie Rhodes has been cast as leading woman, and James Davis will direct.

The second series of thirteen two reel comedies will be known as the "Parisian Standard" comedies, and will feature some of the best known comedians on the screen. Joe Rock's latest "find," a young woman from Paris, who will be billed on the screen as "Helen from Paris," will play opposite the stars.

Shooting on the first of the "Parisian Standard" comedies will commence this week at Universal City, and prints will be in the F. B. O. Exchanges on September 1.

Bray Studios Will Make 26 Two-Reel Comedies for F. B. O.

THE Bray Studios are taking additional space at 130 West 46th Street, New York, the building in which they are housed, in order to accommodate the increased art staff which has been engaged for the production of twenty six subjects which Bray will make for F. B. O. release for the 1925-26 season.

These twenty six subjects will consist of thirteen Dinky Doodle cartoons, and thirteen comedies which will be known as "Unnatural History" cartoons. The Dinky Doodle cartoons will be burlesques of famous fairy tales and burlesques of the best known feature pictures of the current year. "Don Q" will be the first big production to be burlesqued by Walter Lantz, well known cartoonist. Work on this short subject will commence immediately that Lantz completes the thirteenth of the Dinky Doodle cartoons, a burlesque on the story of Rip Van Winkle.

The "Unnatural History" cartoons will also be burlesques, and the titles of the first four subjects, "Where The Leopard Got His Spots," "How The Elephant Got His Trunk," "Where The Camel Got His Hump" and "Where The Zebra Got His Stripes," are indicative of the laugh-creating possibilities in comedies of this nature.

Third "Potash & Perlmutter"

Close upon the heels of his announcement of his affiliation with United Artists, Samuel Goldwyn announces that besides the forthcoming George Fitzmaurice productions and Henry King's "Stella Dallas" and "The Garden of Allah," the third Potash & Perlmutter production, by Montague Glass, adapted from the Broadway stage play, entitled "Partners Again," will also be released under the United Artists' banner.

Robert Frazer in "The Keeper of the Bees," an F. B. O. picture.

F. B. O. Announces Record Bookings for New Product

THE sales department of Film Booking Offices, under the supervision of Colvin W. Brown, vice-president in charge of distribution, and Lee Marcus, newly appointed sales manager, announces record bookings on F. B. O.'s entire 1925-26 output.

The following theatres have booked all of F. B. O.'s productions for the new season:

Fay's Theatre, at Providence, R. I., Rochester, N. Y., and Philadelphia, Pa.; Dreamland, Columbus, Ohio; Regun, Harlem Fifth Avenue, Stadium, Harlem Grand and Palace Theatres, New York, N. To Play Leading Role

Billie Dove was selected to play the leading feminine role of "Antoinnette St. Ives," in the Irvin Willat production of "The Ancient Highway," for Paramount.

This is the James Oliver Curwood story which gets its title from the fact that much of the stirring adventure and romance takes place on a famous stream which runs through the regions around Quebec known as "The Ancient Highway."

MR. AND MRS SAM WARNER

One of the famous Warner Brothers has taken unto himself a wife—Lina Basquette, of the Follies, the diminutive screen prodigy of not so many years ago.

New Productions Started At Warner Bros. Studios

TO THE list of productions for the Warner Bros. 1925-26 schedule, finished or under way, two have been added in the last few days and work is to start on four others as soon as studio sets are available.

"The Love Hour," with Ruth Clifford, Huntly Gordon, Louise Fazenda and Willard Louis heading the cast, is well started, with Herman Raymaker directing. Mr. Raymaker directed Rin-Tin-Tin in his last two pictures, but this is the first comedy-drama to be made by him under the Warner banner.

"Hogan's Alley," with an all-star cast composed of Monte Blue, Patsy Ruth Miller, Louise Fazenda, Willard Louis, Eddie Gribbon, Frank Bond, Max Davidson, "Texas Kid" and Nigel Barrie, was started the early part of last week. This is a rare story, built around the prize ring and the slums. It offers a great opportunity for pathos and fund and is expected to be one of the high spots on the Warner program. Roy del Ruth is directing, under the personal supervision of Bennie Zeidman.

Preparations are being made by E. T. Lowe, Jr., to start production soon on "Compromise," a novel by Mrs. Jay Gelzer. Irene Rich, Louise Fazenda and Clive Brook will have the principal roles, with others in the cast to be announced soon. Alan Crosland will direct.

As soon as he finishes "Hogan's Alley," Monte Blue will start work on "The White Chief," under the direction of Erle Kenton. Julian Josephson is now preparing the script for "Lady Windermere's Fan," the famous Oscar Wilde drama that Ernst Lubitsch is to produce.

Warner Productions on New Schedule Finished

MORE than 25 per cent of the attractions on the Warner Bros. 1925-26 schedule already are completed, a start which it is believed no company ever had before at this time of the year. Six companies are now in production and four others are making feverish preparations to begin work as soon as studio space is available.

Harry M. Warner has just arrived at the studio, to find it busier than ever before in its history. Because of matters constantly requiring his attention in the past Mr. Warner, on his return, will take Mrs. Warner and their three children with him, to make their permanent home in New York.

It is safe to say that his more than periodic trips to the West Coast will continue, however, and it is equally certain that if, and when, a regular transcontinental airplane passenger service is established no one will welcome it more warmly than Mr. Warner. On his arrival here he complained of the many hours lost in a coast-to-coast trip by the only means of transportation now available.

What a single day's saving in time in the cross-continent journey would mean to the senior member of the Warner organization can be computed only roughly, when present studio activities are set against New York demands, but it would be considerable. He was able to assign only three weeks to the present trip which, when the ten days devoted to travel are deducted, leaves him a scant eleven days in which to attend to business in Los Angeles.

Lowell Sherman's Next

Upon the completion of "Satan In Sables," now nearing an end at Warner Bros. Hollywood studio, it has been decided definitely that Lowell Sherman's next picture for the Warners will be "The Love Toy" from the pen of an anonymous author.

This is the book that created quite a sensation when it was first published around the first of the year, and so far its author has remained in the background. It is a lively story of New York Life and should prove a picture of considerable box office value.

May Make New Comedy Team

In return for their good work in several pictures over the last few months, Warner Bros. are considering starring Willard Louis and Louise Fazenda as a team. They have worked together so well that the Warners believe if given a story and company of their own, they should produce some exceptional comedies.

Warners Take Over Product

Since they acquired their own extensive system of branch exchanges, Warner Bros. have been rapidly taking over product formerly handled by franchise holders. The latest announcement tells of the acquiring of product from Kwality Pictures, Inc., and its placing in the hands of the Seattle Exchange. This includes all Warner product to date.

Close for Warner Pictures

Exhibitors in every part of the country are booking the complete Warner Forty, comprising the Warner Bros. schedule for 1925-26. In one week, John H. Young, Warner branch manager, closed contracts by which nine theatres in Detroit book all forty attractions. These theatres are the Rialto, Boulevard, Rivola, Delthe, Maxine, Your, Grosse Pointe Park, Sawn and Rialto.

Organizes New Division

Brand Appointed to Install Exploitation Department for United Artists

Harry Brand, veteran director of the Jososeph M. Schenck publicity activities in Hollywood and current president of the Wampas, has been appointed by Hiram Abrams, president, to organize and head an exploitation department for United Artists Corporation.

In line with the extensive increase of operations planned by United Artists Corporation, Mr. Abrams also has increased the publicity and advertising departments ot which Charles E. Moyer is head. Moyer has worked out a program of national scope, embracing every phase of production exhibitor and public contact, of which the prompt enlargement of his department constitutes Mr. Abrams' approval.

Associated with Brand in exploitation of United Artists Corporation product will be Nathan S. Syches, who has been heading the publicity department of Earl Hudson's units of First National in New York.

Burton King Signed

Burton King, well-known director, has been signed to make a picture for release by Associated Exhibitors in their new season's program of guaranteed pictures.

Continuity for the new Burton King production is now being prepared by Arthur Hoerl. The working title of this Associated Exhibitors' picture will be "The Attorney for the Defense."

Comedy Relief in "Sky Rocket"

Comedy relief in the first independent Marshall Neilan Production, "The Sky Rocket," which Mr. Neilan personally directed for Celebrity Pictures, Inc., includes Hank Mann, Bull Montana, Otto Ledder, and Sammy Cohen, who left "Harry Carrol's Pickin's" stage show to return to the screen on a wire from Mr. Neilan.

FRANK CURRIER

This sterling actor plays "Arrius" in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Ben Hur."

New Stromberg Film

Finish Casting First of New Harry Carey Pictures

Casting of "The Prairie Pirate" the first of Hunt Stromberg's new series of Harry Carey westerns was completed this week with the selection of Evelyn Selbie, Lloyd Whitlock, Tote Ducrow, Fred Kohler and Jean Dumas for the principal roles opposite the star and his leading lady.

Trilby Clark, recently placed under a long term contract by Stromberg with a view to eventual stardom, will make her second appearance as Carey's leading lady in this new feature.

"The Prairie Pirate" will be an elaborate picturization of W. C. Tuttle's Liberty Magazine story, "The Yellow Seal." It will be the first Stromberg release on the 1925-26 schedule of Producers Distributing Corporation.

Edmund Mortimer, recently with Fox will direct with George Benoit in charge of the camera work.

Working on Third St. Regis

Preparing Continuity of "The Million Dollar Doll," for Associated Exhibitors Release

The continuity for "The Million Dollar Doll," which will be the third St. Regis Picture for Associated Exhibitors' release, is now being prepared by Arthur Hoerl. This picture is being adapted from Mrs. C. N. Williamson's successful novel of the same name.

"Headlines," the second St. Regis Picture made for Associated Exhibitors, was recently completed by Director E. H. Griffith. Alice Joyce heads the cast of this newspaper romance by Dorian Neve. The supporting cast includes Harry T. Morey, Virginia Lee Corbin and Malcolm MacGregor.

"Bad Company," the first St. Regis Picture, was also directed by E. H. Griffith and co-starred Conway Tearle and Madge Kennedy. It is now being shown in the theatres. Recently "Bad Company" scored heavily with audiences at the Academy of Music in New York.

It is planned to produce "The Million Dollar Doll" on a large scale and have it ready for release in the third group of Associated Exhibitors pictures for the new season.

New Stories for Menjou

Adolphe Menjou will soon begin work at the Lasky Studio in Hollywood on a screen play adapted from "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," it was announced by Paramount. The picture is scheduled to go into production on July 6 with Malcolm St. Clair as director.

Immediately following this production, Mr. Menjou will assume another great role in "The King on Main Street," which Monta Bell has been engaged to direct.

Booked Solid

First National pictures will be shown 100 per cent. in Sig. Samuel's Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, and in I. J. Hoffman's Strand Theatre, Hartford, Conn., during the months of August and September. For those two months both theatres will play First National pictures exclusively.

First National executives in Los Angeles took advantage of the parade staged there recently by the Shriners to gain publicity for its new Corinne Griffith picture, "The Marriage Whirl," from Hartley Manners' play, "The National Anthem," and for First National pictures as a group. This was done by means of two floats, entered in the parade. Photos of them were reproduced in some of the Los Angeles newspapers. An entire float was devoted to "The Marriage Whirl," soon to be released. It was built on a flat truck and banked with flowers and foliage. In the center was a dais, upon which stood a man and a woman in bridal costume. On the side of the dais was the name of the star; below her name the title of the picture, made of flowers; beneath the title was, "A First National Picture." On the front of the float stood two Negroes, wearing loin cloths, with arms folded. Each stood on a little platform labeled "Noise." Two other Negroes stood on little platforms labeled "Bedlam" on the rear of the float. Another First National float was emblematic of the world-wide distribution of its product. A globe made of flowers and foliage bore the advertisement, "First National Pictures." The rest of the truck was concealed by clouds made of white cloth. At the rear was a beautiful young woman in a crescent moon, while here and there over the truck were cut-outs of stars supported by rods, each carrying the name of a current First National picture, or of its producers and editorial directors. The floats attracted widespread attention.

Sally O'Neil, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's newest "discovery," is being spanked, in "Don't," a Rupert Hughes story. Mamma (Ethel Wales) is using a hairbrush, reversed, while papa (Dewitt Jennings) is aiding in the task.

M-G-M's "The White Desert" Is Acclaimed by New York Critics

REGINALD BARKER'S "The White Desert," opening at the Capitol Theatre, has been acclaimed with enthusiasm by both critics and public. This new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer triumph is a picturization of the Courtney Ryley Cooper story by Monte M. Katterjohn, Lew Lipton and L. G. Rigby. Claire Windsor, Pat O'Malley and Robert Frazer have the featured roles.

"A movie which is terrifyingly beautiful!" exclaims the New York Daily News. "And visibly perilous! 'The White Desert' is probably one of the most venturesome productions ever screened. It's certainly one of the most entrancing, most spell-binding and, indeed, most interesting."

"Suspense quivered in the air," reports the New York American, "from the first scene of 'The White Desert.' And, as the story progressed, the audience at the Capitol became tense with excitement. This is one thriller that really thrills. The shots of the great snow avalanche slowly creeping down the mountainside, toppling buildings over the cliff, completely swallowing up a village—they are terrific. Then, for good measure, a blizzard, a famine and a madman are thrown in. If you enjoy thrillers, you will find this one of the best."

"There is a soul-stirring thrill in nearly every inch of 'The White Desert,'" observes the New York Evening World. "As the name implies, 'The White Desert' has to do with man's herculean battle against billions of tons of snow in the Rocky Mountains during the construction of a transcontinental railroad. It demonstrates anew the aptness of Shakespeare's observation that 'the play's the thing.' This feature has the advantage of a stellar cast—but its story is so grippingly realistic that almost any cast could have made it convincing. Claire Windsor and Pat O'Malley carry most of the action, and neither was ever better. Robert Frazer and Priscilla Bonner also were splendid, but they have less to do."

"One of the appeals at this particular moment of 'The White Desert'", says the New York Times, "is its continuous snow scenes, which strike the eye gratefully at this season of the year. The scene of the snowslide is one of the best effects of its kind seen recently in pictures. It is very impressively managed. The sequence of the relief train's approach also has moments of high effectiveness. There is skillful direction of the crowd in the ruined camp, in which a sense of their desperate plight and their shattered nerves is well conveyed."

Ballin and Lynch Added to F.-P.-L's Production Staff

AFTER many conferences designed to create a staff of supervising editors adequate for the greatest production boom in Paramount's history, Hector Turnbull, supervisor of productions at Paramount's West Coast studios, this week announced that he has added Hugo Ballin and John Lynch to his organization.

In addition to these two new supervising editors, Mr. Turnbull's staff now includes Walter Woods, Lucian Hubbard, Bernard McConville and Garnett Weston, who served as Mr. Turnbull's assistant and whose promotion to supervising editor has just been made known. Kenneth Hawks, formerly assistant to Clarence Badger, director, becomes Mr. urnbull's assistant.

"It is only through highly perfected organization that Paramount has been able to maintain a consistently fine standard of productions," said Mr. Lasky. "By strengthening this very important part of the producing organization we will be in a position to achieve even more splendid results in the future. Mr. Turnbull and I feel that we now have the finest staff of supervising editors available.

"The extensive production schedule on which this corporation is at present engaged places great responsibilities on Mr. Turnbull's department. The addition of Mr. Ballin, Mr. Lynch and Mr. Weston as supervising editors will enable Mr. Turnbull to cope with the heavy and important work which faces him."

Mr. Ballin has been associated with the drama since he was fourteen years of age. He has won fame as a portrait painter, author, scenario writer and director. He directed for Goldwyn for three years, and was an independent producer for a time. While producing he wrote and directed "The Journey's End," the first feature picture shown without titles. "East Lynne," "Jane Eyre" and "Vanity Fair," were among his notable successes. His most recent picture, to be released, is "The Shining Adventure," with Mabel Ballin and Percy Marmont. He is the author of several successful novels, including "The Broken Key," "The Woman at the Door" and "Night Lights."

John Lynch is one of the most brilliant playwrights and scenarists in motion pictures today. He was educated at Cornell and Georgetown Universities and has been engaged in screen work for thirteen years. "Enemies of Women" may be pointed out as one of his best efforts, and he has written scripts for and supervised a great number of successful pictures.

G. K. Arthur Signed by M.-G.-M.

George K. Arthur, who gained fame as the boy in Josef von Sternberg's "The Salvation Hunters," has been signed to a new contract by Louis B. Mayer, executive in charge of production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. For the past four months Arthur has worked every day at the Culver City studios.

Arthur is now playing in support of Marion Davies in "Lights of Old Broadway," directed by Monta Bell from the successful play, "Merry Wives of Gotham," by Lawrence Eyre. Carey Wilson has adapted this production to the screen.

Ray Completing "The Winner"

Charles Ray is now working on the final scenes of his second rural comedy drama for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, which is being produced under the tentative title of "The Winner." This picture, which will be released following "Some Pun'kins," will be completed next week. The cast includes Gertrude Olmstead in the leading feminine role; Gertrude Short, J. P. Lockney, Frank Austin and Sybil Johnson. Jerome Storm, director of "Some Pun'kins," is directing under the supervision of Joseph De Grasse.

Alice Joyce in Hollywood

Alice Joyce, who has just arrived from New York to portray the role of Helen Morrison in Samuel Goldywn's production of "Stella Dallas," has brought her two charming kiddies west with her.

A beautiful bungalow in Beverly Hills has been leased for the summer, which mother and the two kiddies will occupy during the making of "Stella Dallas,' which Henry King is directing for United Artists release in the early Fall.

Fourteen First Nationals Are Now in Preparation

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES and the producers distributing through it are confronted by one of their busiest summers. Nine productions are now in work, six in the cutting room, and preparatory work is in progress on fourteen new pictures.

Pictures now in production are "Classified," from Edna Ferber's story, starring Corinne Griffith, with Charles Murray, Carrol Nye, Jack Mulhall and Ward Crane; "Joseph Greer and His Daughter," from the Henry Kitchell Webster novel, with Lewis Stone, Shirley Mason, Ethel Grey Terry, Barbara Bedford, John Patrick, Hugh Allen, David Torrence, Tom Wilson, Lewis Dayton and Joyce Compton; "The Viennese Medley," directed by Kurt Rehfeld, with Conway Tearle, Anna Q. Nilsson, May Allison, Ian Keith, Lucie Beaumont, Nigel de Brullier, John Sainpolis, Edward Earle, Hale Hamilton, Carrie Daumery and Cora Macey.

"The Sea Woman," produced by Edwin Carewe from Willard Robinson's play, with Blanche Sweet, Victor McLaglen, Constance Bennett and Robert Frazer; Samuel Goldwyn and George Fitzmaurice's production from the play "The Dark Angel," with Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky, Wyndham Standing, Charles Lane, Frank Elliot and Florence Turner; "The Knockout," from M. D. C. Crawford's novel, "The Come-Back," starring Milton Sills, with Tully Marshall, Lorna Duveen, Claude King, John Kolb and many others.

"The Pace That Thrills," directed by Webster Campbell from a story by Byron Morgan, with Ben Lyon and Mary Astor featured; "The Live Wire," starring Johnny Hines, a C. C. Burr production, with Mildred Ryan, J. Barney Sherry and Edmund Breese in the cast; "The Beautiful City," starring Richard Barthelmess, with Dorothy Gish playing opposite him and Kenneth Webb directing.

The six productions now in the cutting room are: "Her Sister from Paris," starring Constance Talmadge; "Graustark," starring Norma Talmadge; Frank Lloyd's special, "Winds of Chance," from Rex Beach's novel; John M. Stahl's production of "Fine Clothes," from the Franz Malnar comedy, "Fashions for Men;" "The Half-Way Girl," featuring Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes; and "Shore Leave," Inspiration's new production starring Richard Barthelmess.

Productions now in preparation on the West Coast are: Joseph M. Schenck's new starring vehicle for Constance Talmadge, "The Man She Bought," from Pearl Dole Bell's novel; Israel Zangwill's latest play, "We Moderns," a starring vehicle for Colleen Moore; the musical comedy, "Irene," also designed for Miss Moore; Frank Lloyd's next production from Vingie E. Roe's new novel, "The Splendid Road"; Owen Davis's play, "Forever After," starring Corinne Griffith; Reginald Goodes play, "Ashes," also for Miss Griffith; John M. Stahl's next production, "Memory Lane."

East Coast productions now in the preparatory stages are "The Scarlet Saint," with Mary Astor in the lead; the big special, "Men of Steel," based on R. G. Kirk's story of the steel mills, "United States Flavor," with Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon; Robert Kane's first production for First National release, "Invisible Wounds," from Frederick Palmer's novel, with Blanche Sweet and Dorothy Sebastian in the cast; the second Robert Kane production, "Bluebeard's Seven Wives;" Sam Rork's "Clothes Make the Pirate," from Holman Day's novel, starring Leon Errol; Rainbow Riley," C. C. Burr's second Johnny Hines picture for First National, from Thompson Buchanans play, "The Cub."

Pictures recently out of the cutting room are Corinne Griffth's "The Marriage Whirl" from J. Hartley Manners' play "The National Anthem," and Edwin Carewe's production, "The Lady Who Lied," from Robert Hichens' novel, "Snake-Bite."

Maurice ("Lefty") Flynn, the F. B. O. star, has taken unto himself a wife. Mrs. Flynn remains Viola Dana in professional life.

First National Increasing Eastern Production Program

ANNOUNCEMENT of an increased production program at First National's eastern studio was made this week by General Manager Richard A. Rowland. According to the plans of First National's big chief, four feature productions will be started at the organization's own studio within the next month. These pictures, to be made by Earl Hudson units, will be begun as soon as the three pictures now in production are completed, and while these are being made.

This schedule will not only tax the capacity of the present studio but will also make it necessary to engage "shooting" space at another New York studio.

The coming week will see the completion at the eastern studio of camera work on Milton Sills' starring vehicle, "The Knockout," and "The Pace That Thrills," a rapid-fire automobile racing story in which Ben Lyon and Mary Astor are to be featured. Actual shooting of "The Half-Way Girl," a featuring vehicle for Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes, was finished last week and is now being titled and edited by Marion Fairfax.

Two of the next series to be started under the supervision of Earl Hudson are "The Scarlet Saint," based on Gerald Beaumont's "The Lady Who Played Fidele," with Mary Astor and Robert Frazer, and "The Savage," an Ernest Pascal story, for Ben Lyon and Doris Kenyon.

With the completion of "The Knockout," a rugged story of a prize-fighter's love adventures in the lumbering country, Milton Sills will take a brief rest preparatory to the filming of his big special, based on the steel industry, "Men of Steel." Much of the incidental and atmospheric action of this R. G. Kirk story has already been taken but the more intimate part of the story will not be filmed until after Sills' return from a well-earned vacation.

Research and experimental work on Earl Hudson's "Atlantis," a sequel to "The Lost World," his biggest motion picture success to date, has been under way for several months at the eastern studios and it is expected that actual work on this "special" will be begun before the completion of the forthcoming series.

Among other stories now being placed into continuity for early production in the East are "Pals First," Francis Perry Elliott's novel which was presented as a play by Lee Wilson Dodd and had a long run on Broadway several seasons ago with William Courtenay and Tom Wise featured; Lenore Coffee's "Bed and Board," for Doris Kenyon; "Mademoiselle Modiste," an adaptation of the famous comic opera, probably with Dorothy Mackaill, and "The Boss of Little Arcady," Henry Leon Wilson's story of the same title.

Fox Names Cast

Madge Bellamy and Leslie Fenton in "Thunder Mountain"

Madge Bellamy and Leslie Fenton head the brilliant cast with which Victor Schertzinger has launched into production of "Thunder Mountain," the film version of John Golden's successful play, "Howdy Folks," at the Fox Film Corporation's West Coast Studios.

Mr. Schertzinger had no sooner finished filming "The Wheel," another supreme attraction in the John Golden Unit and his first picture under the Fox banner, than he started searching for actors to portray the picturesque mountain characters in this virile drama of a girl whose soul was saved against her will.

Alec B. Francis was hard at work as the kindly clergyman in "Thank You," another of the John Golden plays, when Mr. Schertzinger gave him the role of the mountain preacher in "Thunder Mountain." Paul Panzer is the villain of the piece. Otis Harlan has been cast in a comic role. Others in the cast are Zasu Pitts, Emily Fitzroy, Arthur Housemen, Dan Mason, Natalie Wirfield and Maine Geary.

PERCY MARKS
Author of "The Plastic Age," to be a Preferred Picture.

Listed for December

"The Ancient Mariner" Will be Special Christmas Season Release

"The Ancient Mariner," adapted to the screen by Henry Otto from Samuel Taylor Coleridge's celebrated poem, "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," will be released on December 20 by Fox Film Corporation for the Christmas season, according to an announcement from the Fox company.

The appropriateness of the theme of tolerance and human kindness running through the photoplay, coupled with the fact that a picturization of the Coleridge poem will be particularly appealing to students at home from school for the holidays, brought about the decision to release "The Ancient Mariner" for the Christmas season.

Henry Otto was selected to direct the picture because of his skill in bringing fantasy to the screen, as demonstrated in his remarkably successful production for Fox, "Dante's Inferno."

In Lead Roles

Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky have been selected to play the leading roles in "The Garden of Allah," the second of the Samuel Goldwyn-Henry King productions to be released by United Artists. Henry King will film the story of Biskra, as near as possible to the actual locations described by Robert Hitchens in his famous novel.

Barker Starts Work On Fox's "When the Door Opened"

BECAUSE of a combination of author, director and cast so especially fitted for a production based on life in the Northwest, "When the Door Opened," which has just gone into production at the West Coast Studios of Fox Film Corporation, is expected to make one of the greatest outdoor pictures ever brought to the screen.

The reason for this heroic prediction is that "When the Door Opened" is an adaptation of the thrilling novel of the same name by James Oliver Curwood, whose name is second to none for ability to write tales of the great outdoors on the frontiers of the North American continent. Reginald Barker will bring Curwood's characters to life on the screen with the aid of an exceptional cast headed by Jacqueline Logan and Walter McGrail. J. Farrell MacDonald, Margaret Livingston, Robert Cain and Frank Keenan are cast in strong supporting roles.

Exhibitor and fan alike know what to expect from the brilliant and capable Mr. Barker when his script is based on a tale of the lives of men who wrestle with nature when the "survival of the fittest" is a law and not merely a phase.

Mr. Barker's reputation as one of the greatest directors in the industry is built on his numerous successes, most of which have been based on stories of American outdoor life. He has to his credit such pictures as "Carmen of the Klondike," "Turn of the Wheel," "The Flame of the Desert," "Hell Cat," "Girl From Outside," "Dangerous Days," "Godless Men," "The Branding Iron," "Snow Blind," "The Old Nest," "The Storm," "Eternal Struggle," "Hearts Aflame," "Broken Barriers," and "Women Who Give."

Mr. McGrail, who has just signed a contract to appear exclusively in William Fox pictures, had completed his dramatic portrayal of Captain Dunton in "Havoc" when he was secured as leading man in the dynamic Curwood story. The charming Jacqueline Logan had no sooner finished acting the role of the clergyman's niece in "Thank You," based on the John Golden play, than she was whisked into the romantic atmosphere of the Northwest as the heroine of "When the Door Opened."

J. Farrell MacDonald will have an opportunity to display his versatility in portraying humorous roles by appearing as the servant of the story. Robert Cain is cast as a "heavy" in which hole he excels.

Margaret Livingston will have a part to her liking as the vampire. Frank Keenan, distinguished player of character parts, will be Grandfather Grenfal.

Bradley King wrote the scenario.

Madge Bellamy Is One of the Busiest Players on West Coast

Probably the busiest feminine star in the Hollywood motion picture colony is Madge Bellamy, exclusive Fox artist.

In spite of the fact that she has already played the leading roles in three of the biggest Fox releases for the coming season, namely, "The Iron Horse," "Havoc" and "Lightnin'," this little actress is now "doubling in brass" in two pictures now in the course of production at the Fox West Coast studios.

From the Fox studios comes the announcement that Madge is playing the role of Azalea in "Thunder Mountain," under the direction of Victor Scheartzinger, and when that director is through with her she jumps over to the "Lazybones" set and enacts for director Frank Borzage the part of Kit, freckle faced country heroine, opposite Charles (Buck) Jones.

And no satisfied with that, it is reported, Madge takes home under her arm a copy of the script of two other productions, one of which will not be released until the 1926-27 season, in order that she may thoroughly familiarize herself with the roles she is already scheduled to interpret.

Barrymore Picks Dolores Costello

Personally selected by John Barrymore, Dolores Costello, one of the two daughters of Maurice Costello, will play the feminine lead in "The Sea Beast," the first of the special productions which Barrymore is to make for Warner Bros.

The star is now working on the story, in co-operation with Miss Bess Meredyth, the scenario writer, and Millard Webb, who is to direct.

Harry Carey Wins Lawsuit; Retains Valuable Acreage

HARRY CAREY, Hunt Stromberg's Western screen star, has just won his three year legal fight with the government by the decision of Secretary of the Interior Work, awarding him a clear deed to his "Harry Carey Rancho," in San Francisquito Canyon, forty miles from Los Angeles.

In 1918, Carey took out his homestead entry on this property and since then has spent nearly $40,000 in improvements. He recently established a Trading Post there that has become one of the points of interest around Los Angeles.

Three years ago the government intervened and declared that as the land had oil possibilities it was not subject to homesteading. The land officials finally decided, however, that the oil possibilities were too indefinite to deprive Carey of his claim.

San Francisco Critics Applaud "Black Cyclone"

"BLACK CYCLONE," Hal Roach's unusual Pathe picture starring Rex, the wild horse, has consistently received notices worded in superlatives in all cities where it has been shown. Typical of these newspaper commendations are those written by Elford Eddy in the San Francisco Call and Post, and Curran D. Swint in the San Francisco Daily News.

"A marvelous picture—'Black Cyclone,'" enthused Mr. Eddy in the Call and Post: "What 'Black Beauty' is to literature, 'Black Cyclone' is sure to become in filmature. Had anyone told us, before we caw 'Black Cyclone,' these things could be done with animals—not trained but wild beasts—we'd have led him aside, gently but firmly, and told him he was a delightful madman and interested us hugely.

"These things have been done with wild animals in the Pathe picture. It is one of the most remarkable things accomplished in the picture line since Edison, in the days of his youth, brought forth the kinetoscope.

"'Black Cyclone' is a picture drama in which both men and beasts are actors, but, without crying down the work of the trained actors, and good ones, it can be said in all truth that what they do, the grip they get on the audience is insignificant compared with the way two wonderful horses win the heart. You have heard audiences, in exciting moments, burst into applause as the hero rushes to the rescue. Well, the audiences are doing that as Rex, the 'Black Cyclone' of the Wild Lands, dashes to the aid of 'his man' and his mate, both in distress. These beasts, together with the cowboys and Kathleen Collins, enact a story which is an epic of the desert and mountains, told in epic grandeur, as full of dramatic interest and romance, skuldruggery and comedy as a story could be. The amazing part of it is that Fred Jackson, who directed this Hal Roach production, was able to obtain the results he did."

"There is something new under the cinema sun!" exclaimed Curran D. Swint in his review in the San Francisco Daily News: "It is 'Black Cyclone,' a picture so original, so different from the usual that it stands out on the screen like a beacon of hope to eyes that have become jaded, perhaps, and brain somewhat dulled from viewing picture after picture, many of them good, yes, but all along conventional lines.

"'Black Cyclone' is not to be considered an 'animal' picture. It is drama, well thought out and well acted, horses and human beings working in complete accord. There is never a dull moment in its unfolding. It has its full quota of suspense and delightful incidental comedy. It is filled with nerve tingling action. And through it all run two appealing stories, the one between Rex and Lady, and the other between the Man and the Woman.

"The wonder of it is that these horses could so faithfully do the things they do with the guiding hand of the director never being in evidence."

Capitol Books Big Cosmopolitan Film

The Cosmopolitan Corporation announces the world premiere of "Never the Twain Shall Meet," Peter B. Kyne's famous story of California and the South Seas, at the Capitol Theatre, Sunday, July 26.

This latest Cosmopolitan production, directed by Maurice Tourneur, was picturized, for the most part, in Tahiti and Moorea, two of the famous islands of the South Sea group. An all-star cast includes such players as Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell, Huntly Gordon, Justine Johnstone, George Siegmann, Lionel Belmore, William Norris, Emily Fitzroy, Princess Marie de Bourbon and Florence Turner. More than 3,000 natives of the South Seas also appear in the picture, including 200 of the most famous beauties of Tahiti and Moorea.

"Never the Twain Shall Meet" is to be released by Metro-Goldwyn in the leading cities of the country following its New York run.

Scenes in "Kentucky Pride," a William Fox Special, directed by John Ford, with J. Farrell MacDonald, Gertrude Astor and Henry B. Walthall. This is a romance of the kings and queens of the turf, in which Man o' War, Morvich, Fair Play and half a dozen other celebrities are shown.

First National Retains Colleen Moore; Twelve Pictures Promised; Four a Year

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, general manager, announced this week that First National Pictures has signed a new contract with John E. McCormick, whereby Mr. McCormick will present Colleen Moore in a series of twelve big feature productions. There will be four a year.

Immediately following the signing of the contract, Miss Moore and her husband, Mr. McCormick, left for Los Angeles, where work on the screen version of Israel Zangwill's "We Moderns" will be completed.

In signing the new contract for Colleen Moore pictures, all previous agreements were set aside. The salary to be received by the young star is not stated, but it is understood that the figure is an exceedingly high one, justified by the great popular demand for her pictures both in this country and abroad. Zangwill's "We Moderns" and "Irene," an adaptation of the successful musical comedy, will be the two first productions under the new agreement. Various plays and novels are now being considered for subsequent use.

No player is more firmly identified with the First National organization than Colleen Moore and none is more popular with First National exhibitors. Reports received from all parts of the country during the past year have indicated a steady increase in the demands for her pictures and recent releases have further strengthened her hold on the public. Mr. Rowland recognized Miss Moore's potential abilities two years ago, at which time First National decided to launch its own production unit.

Miss Moore had proven her unique ability in a number of contrasting roles, but not until she came to First National did she have an opportunity to display her talent to the fullest. She has advanced with startling rapidity during the last two years. It will be recalled that one of her greatest triumphs was in "Flaming Youth," a picture that definitely placed her in the star class. This was followed by "Painted People" and "The Perfect Flapper" and other productions that still more firmly established her as an ideal exponent of the modern American girl. Then came the wonderful characterization in Edna Ferber's "So Big" and her outstanding success in "Sally." Miss Moore has demonstrated her ability to portray widely dissimilar characters with equal success.

COLLEEN MOORE

Commenting on the signing of the new contract, Mr. Rowland said:

"Speaking for the directors of First National as well as myself, I cannot express too strongly our gratification at securing Colleen Moore for coming seasons. Colleen is the first daughter of First National's own productions and is now a star entirely unspoiled by success. It is a pleasure to be associated with her. We know from actual figures that Miss Moore is one of the topmost stars on the screen at the present time. Furthermore, her public is growing with each new production and it is my belief that no artist shows greater promise for the future. Miss Moore has the gift of a winning personality that is liked by all types of audiences. She is a natural comedienne and also an actress capable of putting a genuine note of pathos into her characterizations. An unusual combination of qualities makes her a distinct personality. In her own broad field of activities, I think she is without a rival."

Before leaving for the Coast, Miss Moore said that she never felt happier in her life.

"In all my motion picture experience, I never found a more inspiring man to work with than Mr. Rowland," Miss Moore said, "and I don't feel as though I ever want to be with any company other than First National. From the time I signed my first contract, in the Spring of 1923, I have been offered every opportunity to give the best that is in me, and I am confident that my next twelve pictures will surpass anything I have ever done. I feel extremely grateful to Mr. Rowland and to every one associated with First National Pictures."

Mr. McCormick was equally enthusiastic. He said:

"There is not much for me to say, now, beyond giving the assurance that we are going to expend every energy in giving Miss Moore productions of outstanding quality. We are looking for the very best stories available and can assure supporting casts of the highest calibre. The pictures will speak for themselves."

Pathe Releases Arctic Film At Start of Movie Season

"KIVALINA OF THE ICE LANDS," Earl Rossman's sensational photo-drama of the Arctic, which evoked the highest praise from the public and press during its recent showing at the Mark Strand Theatre in New York, has been acquired for distribution by Pathe Exchange, Inc., according to contracts between the releasing concern and B. C. R. Productions, Inc., under whose auspices the unusual picture was made.

August 9 is the release date set by Pathe for this Arctic epic of screen plays.

Two whole years of hard work, privation and suffering were spent by Rossman in the frigid Arctic for the making of this picture. The photographer-director-explorer has made a photodramatic story of the intimate life of the hardy Eskimos who eke out their existence amid the isolation of the frozen North. It was enacted by native Eskimos, against a background of igloos, the Aurora Borealis, and endless expanses of ice and snow

Kivalina is the heroine of this Iceland romance, and she plays the role herself. She is an Eskimo belle. The hero is played by Aguvaluk; Nashuluk is the Witch Doctor; Tooktoo is in the role of Kivalina's brother, and Nuwak is the Master Hunter.

The story is simply told but replete with dramatic situations which are intensified by the straightforward unreeling of the romance.

All through the telling of this romance the daily life of the Arctic people is reflected in scenes of great interest. The everyday hazards encountered in the frigid North are revealed in thrilling actuality.

An outstanding highlight of this new Pathe picture is the sequence in natural colors which reveals the Aurora Borealis in all its superlative radiancy. This is the first effort ever made to photograph the Northern Lights phenomena in color.

Pathe is releasing this unusual feature at the very start of the "Greater Movie Season," giving exhibitors an unusual hot weather attraction which cannot fail to register cash results at the box office.

Darling Appointed Supervisor

Scott Darling, author of many popular screen stories has been appointed by Carl Laemmle as supervisor of comedy units at Universal City. Under Darling's supervision fifty-two comedies, including the Charles Puffy series, featuring Europe's adipose laughmaker, the new "Married Life" series, which C. R. Wallace will direct, and the Zion Myers "Sweet Sixteen" stories, will be made.

"Winking Idol" Starts

Desmond in Ten-Episode Adventure Picture for Universal

William Desmond, one of the screen's most popular serial stars, begins work next week on a new ten-episode picture entitled "The Winking Idol." This is an Adventure Picture produced by Universal and is one of a group of serials which Universal is offering to the public under the name of "The Lucky Six." In addition to Desmond, Universal will star Jack Daugherty and Joe Bonomo in these serials.

"The Winking Idol" is based on the old romantic legend of the so-called "lost Aztec lode" a rich vein of gold believed to be located in Arizona near the border. Among the players are Eileen Sedgwick, Grace Cunard, Helen Broneau, Jack Richardson, Bert Sutch and Les Sailor. Francis Ford wil direct.

Farnum Returns to Screen

After forsaking the stage and screen for more than a year, Dustin Farnum, internationally famous star, will return once more to his chosen profession. He signed a contract this week to play a featured role in "On the Frontier," the epic of the West which Universal Pictures Corporation is to produce on a tremendous scale, according to announcement by Raymond L. Schrock, studio general manager.

Edward Sedgwick will direct. The story which will be taken from Sedgwick's novel, soon to be published, has a historical background, with General Custer as one of its prominent characters. Norman Kerry also will play a prominent part.

LEWIS STONE
R. A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, has signed this great actor to a long contract

Harold Lloyd's "Freshman" Booked Nationally Sept. 20

ALL indications point to practically every important key-center being booked on Harold Lloyd's new feature comedy for Pathe, "The Freshman," by September 20, which will mark the national release of this production.

Prominent showmen in all sections are reported to be signing up the new Lloyd comedy for early fall presentation so as to take full advantage of the football tie-up possibilities which the production accords. Pathe has lined up a series of sure-fire practical helps for the exhibitor in exploiting this picture—all tying up with the college and football angles emphasized in the production.

A feature of the bookings recorded to date is the frequency of indefinite-run engagements. The first-run exhibitors and theatre managers who have seen the new Lloyd picture are so confident that in this comedy Lloyd has created the greatest comedy characterization of his career that they are signing with the idea of extending the picture over an indefinite period at their houses.

Among the prominent first-run engagements closed during the past week are Balaban and Katz's Roosevelt Theatre in Chicago to open on or about September 20 for an indefinite run; J. H. Kunsky's Adams Theatre, Detroit, on or about September 20 for an indefinite engagement: I. Libson's Walnut at Cincinnati on September 20 for an indefinite run; the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, Ky., to open September 20 for an indefinite run; the Southern Theatre at Columbus, O., to start September 20 for an indefinite run; the State Theatre at Dayton, O., also on September 20 for an indefinite engagement.

Lewis Stone Signed by First National for Long Term

LEWIS STONE, recognized as one of the most popular, intelligent and adroit of screen actors, has been signed for a term of years to appear in First National Pictures, according to an announcement made by General Manager Richard A. Rowland, thereby adding another important name to the steadily growing list of leading players signed during the past few months.

Mr. Stone, who recently completed the lead in Edwin Carewe's production of "The Lady Who Lied," from Robert Hichens' novel, "Snake-Bite," and is now acting in "Joseph Greer and His Daughter," from Henry Kitchell Webster's new novel, has appeared in many productions released by First National. Mr. Stone had been on the stage for some years before beginning his screen career.

Mr. Rowland has several important roles in forthcoming productions in mind for Mr. Stone, which require the deft, natural and human touches which the actor gives to all of his characterizations.

New Century Comedy

"A Rough Party," a two-reel Century Comedy starring Al Alt, with Constance Darling and Hilliard Karr in important supporting roles, is announced for release this week through all Universal Exchanges.

Constance Darling is the young actress being groomed by Century for starring roles. In this comedy she has excellent opportunity, in support of Al Alt, to develop her comedy capabilities. The two reeler is built around the idea of grown-ups holding a kid party, and dressing in rompers and other childhood garments. Constance Darling in rompers gives much added appeal to the comedy.

Katherine Hilliker Signs New Contract

Katherine Hilliker, one of the best known title writers in the industry, has signed a new contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and will contribute to the success of important productions forthcoming from the Culver City studio's early this fall and throughout the coming season.

Miss Hilliker's last work for this producing organization was the editing and titling of Hugo Ballin's "The Prairie Wife" in collaboration with H. H. Caldwell. This successful picturization of the Arthur Stringer story featured Dorothy Devore, Herbert Rawlinson and Gibson Gowland.

Title Changed

Rudolph Valentino's new vehicle, which has just been put into production in Hollywood under the title of "The Untamed," will hereafter be known as "The Black Eagle."

Change of title to "The Black Eagle" was approved by Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, through which organization the Valentino films are being released.

Splendid Comedy Offerings On Pathe's July 26 Program

TWO-REEL comedies heading the Pathe release program of the week of July 26th are "Boys Will Be Boys" with "Our Gang," and "Cupid's Boots" with Ralph Graves. The second chapter of the Patheserial "Play Ball," a Grantland Rice "Sportlight" entitled "Why Kids Leave Home," "Topics of the Day," one of the "Aesop's Film Fables," a Pathe Review and two issues of Pathe News complete the schedule of short-

"Cupid's Boots" is a Mack Sennett Star Comedy with Ralph Graves, popular comedian, in the leading role. Graves is seen as a bookkeeper in a shoe store who finds romance in the visits of a certain young lady customer. He resigns his position, and his endeavors to win the miss lead to a fun-riot. Thelma is the "girl." Ed. Kennedy directed the film from a story by Frank Capra.

"Boys Will Be Boys" is one of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" fun-films. The inventive genius of Mickey and his little pals results in their making their own "Coney Island" on a vacant lot. While they are enjoying their merry-go-'round, ferris wheel and other fun devices, surveyors try to chase them away. The "gang" manage to reach the owner of the property who consents to their having their little part. The direction is by Robert McGowan.

"The Flaming Float" is the title of the second chapter of the latest Patheserial "Play Ball," written by Manager John J. McGraw of the New York Giants. Allene Ray and Walter Miller are the featured players. They are supported in this episode by J. Barney Sherry, Harry Semels, Mary Milnor and Wally Oettel. Frank Leon Smith adapted the McGraw story for the screen, and Spencer Bennet directed the chapter-play.

"Why Kids Leave Home" is one of the most entertaining of the Grantland Rice "Sportlights" presented thus far. It reveals all the thrills that every child gets when the circus comes to town and pitches tents on the old ball field. Time may bring its glory and its thrills but they are nothing compared with any kid's first circus.

Pathe Review No. 30 presents a trio of diversified subjects: "The Wilderness of Water," a submerged forest in the Mississippi Valley; "The Garden of Seville," Pathecolor views of the Flowery City of Moorish Spain, and "The Two-Legged Horse Race," a novelty race recorded by the "process-camera."

"Bugville Field Day" is the latest of the Paul Terry creations in "Aesop's Film Fables." The other subjects which Pathe will release the week of July 26 are "Topics of the Day" and two issues of Pathe News.

Bebe Daniels, the Paramount star, with Edmund Burns, her leading man in "The Manicure Girl," her current release on the Paramount Program.

Three Principal Pictures for Release in August by Astor

THREE productions from Principal Pictures Corporation will be released in August by Astor Distributing Corporation, it was announced this week by Harry Rathner, president of Astor.

"A Lover's Oath," the first of the series is a Ferdinand Pinney Earle production. Ramon Novarro is the star and playing opposite him is Kathleen Key. The story, while one of oriental flavor, contains a story of tense interest and strong drama.

"The Business of Love," the second production, is what some exhibitors have come to refer to as "hot weather tonic." The story was built for laughing purposes, although interwoven with it are a number dramatic situations, and throughout the whole is a quaint thread of pathos. Edward Everett Horton is the star. He is supported by Barbara Bedford, Tom Ricketts, Zasu Pitts, Carl Stockdale and Dorothy Wood. "Business of Love" is a Jesse Robbins production and was directed by Robbins.

The third Principal picture is "The Shining Adventure." This is a Madeline Brandeis production and was made in California. The story deals with the unconscious abuse of money and the misdirection of charity. Percy Marmont, of "If Winter Comes" and other successes is the star. The cast includes Mabel Ballin and Ben Alexander. Hugo Ballin directed.

TEA TIME AT THE STUDIO

Director Robert Z. Leonard and the players in "Time, the Comedian," call "time out" for a sip of tea (only in this instance it chances to be MILK). Lew Cody juggles a paper cup in one hand and a sandwich in the other, while Mae Busch manipulates a bottle of milk in true picnic fashion. Gertrude Olmstead, Creighton Hale and Robert Ober are "looking on."

Added to Cast

D. W. Griffith has added to the cast of "That Royle Girl" his first Paramount production, a number of well known players. Marie Chambers, one of the principals of "Is Zat So?" one of Broadway's best liked shows, will have the role of Adele Ketlar, the estranged wife of Harrison Ford.

Ida Waterman, recently seen as the mother of "The Swan" will have a prominent role, as will Gladys Coburn of Ziegfeld's Follies, and Mrs. John Harriman who has been seen recently in a number of pictures.

In featured parts are Carol Kempster, James Kirkwood, Harrison Ford and George Rigas.

CHARLES EMMETT MACK
One of the prominent screen actors supporting Barbara La Marr in "The White Monkey," a Sawyer-Lubin production for First national release.

Hunter's New Play

"The Pinch Hitter" for Associated Exhibitors is A. C. Gardner Sullivan Story

"The Pinch Hitter" in which Glenn Hunter is starring for Associated Exhibitors under the management of Oscar Price and the direction of Joseph Hennaberry, is one of the best known screen stories written by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Sullivan wrote "The Pinch Hitter" originally as a vehicle for Charles Ray when the famous Triangle pictures were at their heyday As the title implies it is a baseball story and in addition to the sport interest contains much humor and heart throbs.

Constance Bennett appears opposite Glenn Hunter in "The Pinch Hitter."

Dorothy Cumming Returns East

Dorothy Cumming, who was the only woman engaged in the East to support Gloria Swanson in her first production after her return from France, has again received unusual recognition of her screen ability. Immediately upon the completion of her Swanson picture she received a wire recalling her to New York, to play one of the principle roles in a new First National Production "Invisible Wounds" which is being held up pending her arrival.

Lenore Coffee Signed

Lenore Coffee, who with Eve Unsell adapted Leatrice Joy's first starring picture, "Hell's Highroad," made such an impression on Cecil B. De Mille by her work that he has signed her under a long-term contract. The next picture which will be entrusted to her literary talent is "Eve's Leaves," another Leatrice Joy starring vehicle which is to be directed by Paul Sloane.

Barrymore Signed by Paramount

Lionel Barrymore, one of the outstanding actors of stage and screen, was signed to play a featured role in Raoul Walsh's forthcoming Paramount picture "The Lucky Lady." Others chosen for featured roles are William Collier, Jr., Greta Nissen, and Marc MacDermott.

"Danger Signal" Booked Fast By Chicago Showmen, Says Cohn

"THEY liked it immensely and want more of our 1925-26 Columbia product," was the first statement Jack Cohn of Columbia Pictures stated on arriving at the home office after an intensive business trip in the Chicago territory for a few days.

Cohn made a special trip at the request of Henry Ellman, head of the Capitol Film Exchanges of Chicago and Indianapolis, to attend a special showing of "The Danger Signal," first of the Columbia productions. A number of prominent exhibitors were present and immediately after the screening, every one of them booked the picture.

"Several actually booked the entire series," Cohn stated, "and all insisted that it is really a more powerful picture than 'The Midnight Express.'

"Jane Novak has perhaps the best role of her career in 'The Danger Signal,' first as the young widow, then as the struggling mother. Dorothy Revier, an entrancingly appealing beauty, has the romantic lead. Robert Edeson, Gaston Glass, Robert Gordon, Lincoln Stedman, Lee Shumway and Mayme Kelso also are featured. Erle Kenton directed.

"Reports have come into the office from other parts of the country," Cohn concluded, "from exchangemen and exhibitors who write the most enthusiastic praise. They believe it is a winner and they are backing their belief by booking it."

Goodman to Make Special Foreign Survey for Fox Film

DELBERT GOODMAN, manager of Fox Far East Corporation, who has been visiting the home office of Fox Film Corporation in New York, has been assigned to make a special survey of foreign territories for the Fox company which will take him into most of the important cities in Europe, Asia and Africa.

In this mission Mr. Goodman will have made a complete tour of the world before he gets back to his desk in Tokio, Japan, where the headquarters of Fox Far East Corporation are located.

Mr. Goodman sailed from New York on July 9 with London scheduled as the first stop. After a series of conferences with Fox managers in the English capital, he will fly to Paris, where he will consult executives of the Fox offices there. These talks are necessary because, in the course of his tour, Mr. Goodman will visit territories and possessions of Great Britain and France.

From the French capital Mr. Goodman will go to Marseilles and thence to Bombay and Calcutta, India. When he has finished his business in India, he will make a long jump to Johannesburg and Capetown, South Africa. Then he will start back to Japan, stopping over at Singapore, Federated Malay States, Saigon, French Indo-China and Shanghai, China.

Goodman left Japan on May 4, arriving in Seattle on May 16 and in New York on June 8.

Cecil B. De Mille's Daughter Makes Hasty Screen Debut

CECILIA DE MILLE, attractive young daughter of Cecil B. De Mille, has gone into the "movies."

She will appear in her father's personally directed production, "The Road to Yesterday," now being filmed.

Part of this picture has the Grand Canyon for a setting, so when De Mille took his company to the canyon for location shots, Cecilia went along for a vacation.

However, De Mille interrupted his daughter's vacation and drafted her into service as an actress, as he needed another character in a hurry. Cecilia gave ample evidence of her heredity in dramatics by playing her part naturally, and without being "camera conscious." She appears in several scenes.

Cecilia has an imposing list of cinema celebrities connected with her screen debut, for not only is Cecil B. De Mille directing "The Road to Yesterday," but Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix wrote the adaptation, and the list of featured players includes Vera Reynolds, Joseph Schildkraut Jetta Goudal, William Boyd, Trixie Friganza and Julia Faye.

"Speed Mad" Ready

"Speed Mad," second of the Perfection releases which are being distributed by Columbia Pictures, has been cut, titled and is being sent to exchanges this week. This picture stars William Fairbanks with a large cast under Jay Marchant's direction. Dorothy Howell wrote this story which was originally slated for release under the title of "The Speed Demon."

Buys Robert Morton Organs

J. A. G. Schiller, general manager of the Robert Morton Organ Co. reports the sale of Four Robert Morton Units to the West Coas Theatres, Inc. for their newest and lates theatres, the Royal at Los Angeles, the Nev Capitol in Sacramento, as well as the nev theatres under construction at 87th and Ver mont Streets, Los Angeles, and Slauson & Mesa Street, also in Los Angeles.

Meador Signs Robertson to Direct Trucraft Specials

JOHN S. ROBERTSON, a leading directorial figure in the film industry, was signed this week by J. E. D. Meador, president of Truecraft Pictures, Inc., for a series of special pictures to be known as John S. Robertson Productions. The first of the series, which will go into production immediately, is "Queen Calafia," Blasco Ibanez's recent best-seller.

Mr. Robertson, accompanied by Mrs. Robertson and his production staff, will go abroad at once, followed shortly by the stellar cast. Exteriors of "Queen Calafia" will be filmed on their actual locale in Spain and Monte Carlo. Blasco Ibanez will assist in the production in an advisory capacity.

The Robertson-Meador special productions following "Queen Calafia" will be selected from Blasco Ibanez stories controlled by Mr. Meador that include "The Cabin," "Sacrifice," "La Bodega," "The Mayflower" and "Sonica." Other works are also under consideration.

Ahead in Summer Bookings

In First National's summer play date contest the Vancouver branch held first place at the end of the fifth week in the percentage of bookings actually played. Its standing, with a percentage based on last year's actual played time was 160.40%. Chicago is now in second place and Atlanta third.

The final standings, on which the prizes will be awarded, will be determined upon the number of bookings actually played at the end of the twelve weeks' playing period.

Douglas MacLean will begin his first production for Paramount soon.

Sax Closes More Territories For New Gotham Productions

ON his latest trip en route to California where he will complete all arrangements for finishing production work on the remaining Gotham productions to be released this year, Sam Sax stopped over and closed three important territorial deals in the key cities of St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha for the distribution of the new series of twelve pictures.

The distribution contract for the St. Louis Territory was made with Jack Weil Pictures, Inc., of 3320 Lindell Blvd., St. Louis, Mo.

Negotiations for the Kansas City district were completed with Mr. E. C. Roden representing the Midwest Film Distributors of 130 West 18th St., Kansas City, Mo., and for Omaha the Gotham Product will be handled by the Independent Film Co., 1304 Farnham St., Omaha, Neb. The contract is now being closed by Mr. J. O. Stern.

Sam Sax, in connection with the consummation of the above transaction, states, "I am very happy to announce that St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha territories will continue to be handled by the organizations representated by Mr. Jack Weil, Mr. E. C. Rhoden and Mr. J. L. Stern. These gentlemen distributed my product last year on the six Gotham productions and the simple fact that they have signed up this year to handle exactly double the amount of pictures demonstrated in an unmistakeable manner their faith in not only my productions but in the Independent market."

Negotiations are now pending and which are expected to be closed in a few days which will complete the entire territorial disposition for the new Gotham product.

Charnas Gets Franchise for 30 Schulberg Productions

J. G. BACHMANN, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, announced the consummation of a deal whereby Harry Charnas, head of the Standard Film Service acquires distribution rights on thirty Preferred Pictures.

In the Cleveland and Cincinnati territories Mr. Charnas will release the ten Schulberg productions made during the 1924-1925 season. They are "The Breath of Scandal," 'White Man," "The Triflers," "Capital Punishment," "The Parasite," 'The Mansion of Aching Hearts," "The Boomerang," "Go Straight" and "My Lady's Lips."

The new program of eighteen Preferred Pictures for 1925-1926 will be distributed by Mr. Charnas in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Detroit. The releases coming under this phase of the contract are: "Shenandoah," "The Plastic Age," "Lew Tyler's Wives," " With This Ring," "Parisian Love," "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," "The Other Woman's Story," "Eden's Fruit," "Horses and Women," "The Worst Woman," "Shopworn," "His New York Wife," "The Aristocrat," "Dancing Days," "Studies in Wives," "Shameful Behavior?" "The Romance of a Million Dollars" and "Exclusive Rights."

"Free to Love," and "The Lawful Cheater," two additional Schulberg pictures, featuring Clara Bow are acquired by the Standard Film Service for Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Detroit.

Closes Foreign Deal

Weiss Brothers Sell Three Series of Pictures to South America

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that he has arranged for the distribution of his program for the season of 1925-26 in South America. The deal was consummated between Jacobo Glucksman who represented Max Glucksman.

The deal is concerned with the series of eight five-reel Rough Riding Romances featuring Buddy Roosevelt, eight five-reel Thunderbolt Thrillers featuring Buffalo Bill, Jr., and the new series of eight five-reel Acrobatic Stunt Thrillers featuring the new star Wally Wales (The Cowboy Prince).

The territory covered includes the greater part of South America and includes Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. Max Glucksman handled the two series of eight five-reel features made last year and which featured Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr. The great demand for this class of product from South American exhibitors has caused Mr. Glucksman to assure himself of a dependable supply of these pictures early in the season.

A Correction

Due to an error, the title of Zane Grey's story, "LIGHTNING," which Tiffany Productions, Inc., announce as one of "The Twelve" on their 1925-26 programme, appeared in an advertisement on Page 264 of the issue of Moving Picture World dated July 18, without the final letter, "G." The Fox Film Corporation is producing the John Golden-Frank Bacon stage success, "LIGHTNIN'," and in order that exhibitors may not be misled, as a result of the error in the Tiffany ad., a correction has been requested by M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Tiffany, and Moving Picture World gladly publishes this correction.

MILDRED RYAN
This dainty young lady has been chosen to play the feminine lead in support of Johnny Hines in "The Live Wire," a First National release.

To Start on "Thoroughbred"

First Peter B. Kyne Story to be Picturized by Fox

"Thoroughbred" is the title of the first original story for the screen to come from the pen of Peter B. Kyne, America's most popular writer of fiction, under his contract with Fox Film Corporation, according to an announcement from the Fox offices.

Actual production work on the Kyne story, the announcement continues, will be started in the near future under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, from a scenario by Gerald C. Duffy, with "Smiling" George O'Brien in the leading role.

The locales of the first Kyne story, the Fox announcement states, are Old Virginia and the Western plains.

Report Big Bookings

All Star Features Distributors of San Francisco and Los Angeles, who have the Coast rights for Banner and Royal product distributed by the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation, report that a number of bookings have been made for first run showing of The Love Gamble, the first of the Banner productions.

Louis Hyman, general manager of the All Star, in a wire to the New York office of Henry Ginsberg, stated that if the first Banner was a criterion for the balance of the releases, that he was assured of a "perfect 100 per cent." booking in his territory.

Books "Play Ball" for Entire Circuit

Pathe reports that Jack Hattam has booked through the New York Pathe branch the new Patheserial "Play Ball" for all the houses in his circuit.

The Hattam circuit includes the following houses: Marcy, Sumner, State, Kismet, Gem, Palace, Hyperion, Victoria, Maspeth, Astoria Grand, Steinway and Messerole.

Flinn Addresses Managers Of New P. D. C. Territories

THE first meeting of the managers of the eight new territorial divisions of Producers Distributing Corporation was held in Chicago this week, presided over by John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager, who is now on his way to Los Angeles.

The Chicago meeting was called by Mr. Flinn for the purpose of discussing the order in which the thirty-seven big productions listed by Producers Distributing for the coming season will be released.

"The order of release," said Mr. Flinn, "is a matter of prime importance. Productions should be arranged as a program in the strict sense of that word and not issued on a haphazard schedule that has no significance other than commercial detail.

"The order in which productions are released should constitute a real program for the season that is as carefully worked out in its diversity as the daily program offered by a theatre. When we aim, as we do, to have our pictures booked and shown in consecutive order at the first run theatre, we must arrange our releasing schedule to present constant variety in theme, color and action."

In addressing the district managers at the Chicago meeting, Mr. Flinn sought their suggestions in the arrangement of the coming release schedule after carefully explaining the theme and locale of each of the thirty-seven subjects so far selected for the 1925-26 season.

"We want to arrange the release of these pictures on a schedule that will constitute a real program," said Mr. Flinn. "Our list of attractions includes every element of showmanship—straight drama, straight comedy, melodrama, farce comedy, epics, allegories, spectacles and Westerns, in just the right proportions to make a perfectly balanced whole.

"It was with the idea of offering a showmanlike program that we assembled our present groups of subjects. Each picture is typical of the best in its class and the group as a whole represents the widest diversity possible to secure from the stage and the literary field.

"And when these pictures are arranged in their final order of release, they may be booked solid for consecutive showings with the absolute assurance of perfect balance."

After further conference on this subject with Cecil B. De Mille, Hunt Stromberg, George Melord, Marshall Neilan, Frances Marion and Al. Christie, Mr. Flinn will be ready to announce definite dates for all the Producers Distributing releases.

Riesenfeld Books "Evolution" For Rivoli and Rialto Theatres

"EVOLUTION," the Red Seal Feature playing at the Rivoli, New York, this week, has drawn so much applause that Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director, has booked the film for both the Rivoli and the Rialto next week.

The New York critics hailed the film enthusiastically. Harriette Underhill, in the Herald-Tribune, declared: "Don't miss it whatever you do. We sat through it twice."

The Sun reviewer declares that "Evolution" is "an absorbing picture tracing the ascent of man. Your beliefs, pro or con, do not prevent your enjoyment of an exhibition presenting in pictorial form the beliefs and deductions of the best known scientists of the world. A wave of applause swept over the audience."

"Absorbing, timely and well-done," says Rose Pelswick in the Journal. Quinn Martin, in the World, called it "Enlightening and amusing." "Unusually interesting and instructive as well," is the verdict of the Post. "Fascinating," says Dorothy Herzog in the Mirror, and adds, "Hugo Riesenfeld should really issue a special invitation to William Jennings Bryan." The Times put its official stamp of approval on it with "The audience applauded 'Evolution,' which proved interesting as a means of popularizing an abstract question." "Applauded for almost a minute," recorded the Telegraph.

Morgan, Back from Sales Tour, Reports Many Big Bookings

AFTER closing practically all of the key cities in the middle-west, W. J. Morgan sales manager of Producers Distributing Corporation returned to New York this week enthusiastic over the prospects of a tremendously prosperous year.

This was Mr. Morgan's first sales tour since his appointment as General Manager of Pro-Dis-Co. He visited the Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Cincinnati branches of the company and returns with the report of an unprecedented volume of business being booked by each exchange.

With few exceptions the entire 1925-26 program of Producers Distributing Corporation has been booked for first runs in Cleveland, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville, Dayton, and Nashville in the territory covered by Mr. Morgan on his trip and contracts are in negotiation for every other key point.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

"For High Brows"

Gosh! S. Glauber, projectionist, Colonial Theatre, Brooklyn, writes about electrons, and how they revolve in their orbits and—gosh! Here is the letter. I'll print it just to show him I'm not afraid of him. He says:

In the projection department of June 6, in your comment on the reply of Brothers Clark and Thoreaus' answer to Bluebook School question No. 267, you ask what it is that forces the current back to the generator if we are to assume that the entire voltage is consumed in overcoming the resistance in the electric power devices in the circuit, etc.

It is well known that electric current in or on an electric circuit is very similar in its action to water in a hydraulic circuit, and as water is present in all parts of a hydraulic circuit, so is electric current (electrons) always present in all parts of an electric circuit, and that the electric generator furnishes the pressure to overcome the resistance of the circuit, just as does the dump in the hydraulic circuit.

Let us now examine the action of the hydraulic circuit, but for the sake of clearness let us substitute steel balls for water, as per diagram 1.

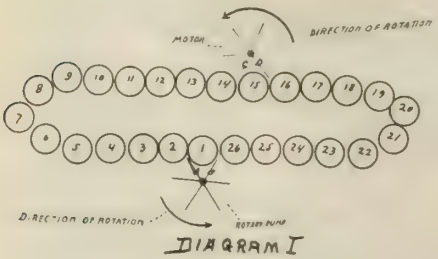

DIAGRAM I

There are twenty-six balls in the diagram, each are numbered. Below is a pump, or wheel, of which wings A B hold ball No. 1 in place. Above is what is supposed to be a motor, wings C D of which are held in position by ball 15. These balls are all presumed to be in contact with each other, and carried in a pipe just a bit larger than themselves.

It is of course seen that under this condition if the wheel representing the pump be rotated counter clockwise, wings A B will force ball No. 1 one space to the left, and this will automatically shift all the balls the same distance, in the same direction, which process will be repeated every time the pump wheel rotates one-sixth of a turn.

It is of course seen that this shifting of the balls will rotate the wheel representing the motor, and in the same direction. Absolutely no time is lost in this shifting of balls. By that I mean that when ball No. 1 moves, every ball in the circuit moves at precisely the same instant of time and precisely the same distance. The force necessary to move ball No. 1 is the force necessary to overcome the resistance of the motor, for the time neglecting the inertia and comparatively slight resistance of the walls of the pipes.

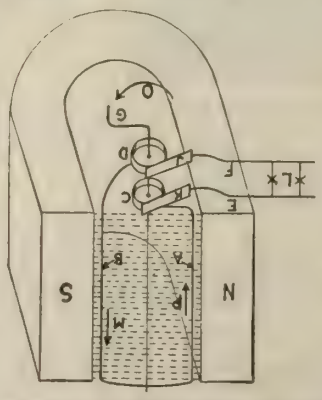
Bluebook School

Question No. 331—(This is a "practical" question, submitted by G. F. Doe, Chicago, Ill.) If you have a 220 volt induction motor, is it possible to get satisfactory service from it, by changing its connections, on 110 volt alternating current, single, cycle, two iycle or three cycle?

Question No. 332—Explain commutation—how is direct current obtained from an altesnating cusrent dynamo armature?

Question No. 333—Are all dynamo armature coils inter-connected?

Question No. 334—Describe an ordinary elementary generator such as is illustrated in accompanying drawing.



Question No. 335—Upon what will the voltage of the generator illustrated in accompanying cut depend?

Let us now examine diagram II, which represents, at A, six atoms of matter not electrically connected in any circuit. Within each atom there are five electrons (Gr-r-r-r. Ed.), revolving about their respective circuits (orbits).

At B these same electrons are electrically connected in an electric circuit. You will note that an electron is passed left to right from atom to atom at the same instant. (I'm getting dangerous. Ed.).

Examining an electric circuit we will try to compare it to the circuit of balls in diagram I, for the sake of simplicity substituting a dry cell for the dynamo or generator.

The chemical action of the battery is such that it will cause the atoms of the anode, which is exposed to the electrolysis, to loose some of its electrons, which same would be transferred to the nearest atom of the electrolysis (Wow! Ed.), and at the same time cause the latter to loose electrons to their neighbors, and so on to the atoms of the cathode, and to the external circuit and back to the anode. * * * * The force causing the first number of electrons to leave the anode is equal to the force which is required to overcome the resistance encountered by the current from positive back to negative of the battery, or generator. That is to say, practically all the E. M. F. is consumed in overcoming the total resistance.

The asterisks above represent about three closely written pages of matter, but I think I have used sufficient to make Brother Glauber's argument clear. It is the electron THEORY. It is very similar to the "molecular bombardment" theory, as I understand it. I have always balked, or at least what little mind I have has balked, at accepting any theory which presumed that any actual thing traveled over or through a wire at the rate of (as I remember it—maybe I'm in error as to speed) close to eight thousand miles per second.

Certainly electricity is some sort of an impulse, but just as certainly the electron theory, as set forth, don't appeal to my mind as the answer to the query I put. Frankly, Brother Glauber, I think I will never get a satisfactory answer unless some one finds out for sure (theories not admitted) just what electricity is before I die—and I doubt that being done, though it may be.

Fade-Away Reasons

A projectionist out in that gr-r-r-rand old state of Illinois wants to know the underlying reason why some screen surfaces give "fade-away," and other do not; also he asks: "It has been stated that in several large theatres it has been found necessary to replace the projector intermittent movements frequently on account of the long projection distance. They said that unsteadiness was more pronounced at such great distance, with which statement I could not agree, though after studying the matter I was unable to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion, hence am asking you.

"In discussing this matter with a brother, he advanced the theory that the point where the light rays crossed in front of the lens acted as a fulcrum, and any unsteadiness was therefore increased as projection distance was increased. However, it seems to me that, with a picture of given size at a long or short distance of projection there would be no appreciable difference."

As to the screen and fadeaway, those with

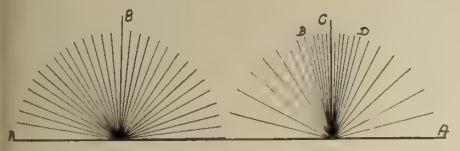
Bluebooks can have the matter explained by reading pages 222 and 223, and parts of pages 225 and 226 and examining figures 66 and 67.



In the drawing you see screen surface A A, the left end of which is what is called a "good diffusing surface" and the right hand end a poor diffusing surface. You will observe that ray B, being incident upon the good diffusing surface, is "broken up" and reflected evenly in every direction, which means that a person who views the screen from an agle will have just as much light reflected in his direction as will the chap seated directly in front of the point where ray B is incident upon the screen. A light ray is said to be "incident" upon a surface when it meets that surface.

Ray C, however, is incident upon the poor diffusing surface, and as you may see by the drawing, it is not reflected evenly in every direction, but mostly almost directly back within the angle B D. With such a screen surface a person seated within the angle indicated by B D will see a brighter light from this ray—and all other rays incident upon the surface at or near that point, than he could see from any point of view with the good diffusing screen, BUT on the other hand, when he gets outside that narrow angle he will have a poorer light than he would have at any point of view with the other surface.

I shall not explain further, because I think the good brother has a Bluebook, and if he has a further study of its pages will enlighten him.

I will add this, however: A smooth, polished surface, such as a mirror, diffused light only to a very small degree. It reflects almost entirely along the lines of the law that the "angle of reflection equals the angle of incidence," as per figure 222 of the Bluebook. On the other hand a surface which is optically rough—such as, for instance, plaster, breaks the incident ray up and reflects it according to the drawing herewith shown, the extent of "breaking up," hence the degree of perfect diffusion, being dependent upon how optically rough the surface is.

"Rough"

However, remember that there is a distinct difference between the term "rough" and "optically rough." The rough surface may be optically smooth, as, for instance, ribbed glass. The optically rough surface may be what we would call smooth, such as fine bleached muslin, paint, kalsomine or plaster. The term "optically rough" I have merely coined in the effort to make the idea clear to you.

As to the projector intermittent and unsteadiness, whoever told you that was himself in error. Distance of projection would make no difference in unsteadiness in any movement which was inherent in the mechanism itself, though picture size would.

On the other hand, any movement of the projector as a whole, due for instance, to an unsteady floor, would be magnified at the screen, if the unsteadiness were such as rocked the projector backward and forward, but the "fulcrum" would not be at the point in front of the lens where the rays cross, but at the lens itself. If your lens have a 6-inch E. F., and the aperture moved up and down (not sidewise—that would not be increased at the screen in any degree, unless there were a twisting movement 1/64th of an inch with relation to the E. F. point of the lens, then the movement on the screen would be (projection distance 50 feet) 100 times 1/64th, or about one and six-tenths inches It would be 100 times 1/64th instead of fifty times that figure, because the E. F. is only half a foot.

On the other hand if the projection distance be 100 feet, then the movement would be 200 times 1/64th of an inch, or a little more than 3.1 inches. If I am in error in my figuring of this you can check me up. Anyhow what I have tried to show you is the difference in picture movement which emanates in the projector mechanism, and is confined strictly to the action within the light beam boundaries at the screen, and movement which involves the light beam as a whole, causing it to move, as a whole, at the screen, which latter the mechanism of the projector cannot do. To move the light beam as a whole at the screen, either the lens or the aperture, or both, themselves move.

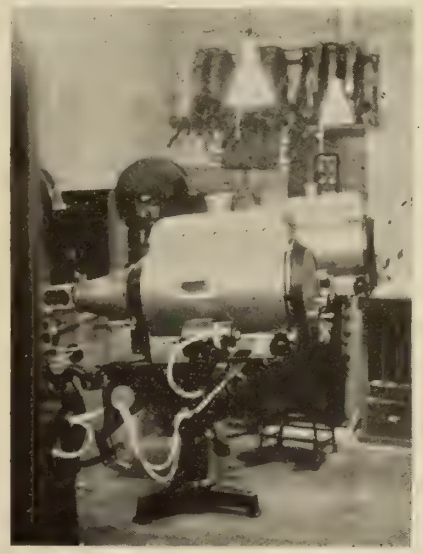
Peerless Arc

Walter Munn, Projectionist, Braumart Theatre, Iron Mountain, Michigan, appears to like the Peerless reflector type lamp equipment. At least I infer from what he says that he does. Judge for yourself. Here is his letter:

Dear Brother Richardson: I was much interested in your comments on the Peerless reflector type lamp equipment in a recent issue of Moving Picture World. As we were among the very first to install them I thought you might be interested in hearing of the success here.



Peerless Equipment As It Looks

When our new Braumart Theatre opened I pulled twenty amperes, using the Peerless lamps. The picture is a sixteen footer, and the screen a "Raven." I found the illumination too brilliant, and reduced to seventeen amperes. The theatre seats 1,000, all on one floor. I enclose some small photographs to give you some idea of the theatre auditorium and the Peerless equipment.

No "Knot Hole" Ports Here

Brother Munn, I thank you for the report, but must call your attention to a few things, not in the way of criticism, but to direct your attention to the fact that a report of performance may be a bit misleading unless one knows ALL the facts.

In the first place please understand that I believe the Peerless to be strictly high-grade equipment. I am firmly convinced that the twenty to twenty-five ampere reflector type arc can be made to duplicate the performance of a well handled 75 to 80 ampere D. C. ordinary arc.

However, when you say your screen was too brilliant with 20 amperes, that statement must be accompanied by other information in order that we avoid possible error, in forming our conclusions.

In the first place, remember that all the equipment, including the screen, was new, hence giving probably as nearly its maximum performance as it could ever be expected to. I would say that after six months there may be a considerable falling off. That is in the very nature of things. I have often objected to statements of efficiency which have been made after shop tests. Such performances will, in all human probability, vary from what the performance will be after the equipment has been in actual service for a short while, and the variance may be very great indeed if the equipment falls into inexpert hands.

In your case at the end of six months the screen surface will have dulled to some extent. It will not have quite the reflective power it had when new. That is, I think, true of any screen, except possibly the glass bead surface, and I am not so sure but that also would show a falling off, though the surface of the glass would, of course, not suffer from time.

Therefore the exact performance of the equipment could be better judged after from three to six months' use. If you have had it that long I would like to hear from you as to exactly how the equipment has "stood up." There is much complaint about reflector type lamp reflectors not standing the gaff. I would appreciate reports from projectionists using various makes of reflector type arc lamps, as to what, if any, trouble of this sort they have experienced.

Another Thing

Another thing: If your auditorium is fairly well lighted and the sixteen foot picture was "too brilliant," using a high diffusive power screen, then that is indeed a remarkable performance. If, however, the auditorium is rather dark, or quite dark, that would be something else again. Screen illumination, or brilliancy, is largely a matter of light tones and contrasts, you know.

Two screens which the photometer tells us are illuminated to exactly the same degree of brilliancy, will appear entirely different in brilliancy to our eyes, if one be illuminated with a white light and the other with a light slightly tinted with amber or yellow.

Also two screens which give the same photometric reading will appear totally different as to brilliancy if one be in a well lighted auditorium and the other in a dark auditorium.

You will, therefore, see that your "too bright screen" means very little, unless we know just what the conditions of contrast are as between it and the auditorium.

More Details

Now please don't think I am criticizing you. Your report is entirely acceptable, only next time try and give more details.

As to the photographs, I would draw the attention of those who object to large projection room port openings to these. At a guess I would say they are two feet high by three wide—the large ones.

Dangerous? Not so, for the fire shutter will close them, to all intents and purposes, as quickly as they would the glorified knot holes still insisted on in some localities.

Noise? Well, yes, but if that proves objectionable, they may be covered with a hinged frame in which plate glass is embedded, with a hole cut therein for occasional unobstructed observation of the screen. The projectors certainly do look small with the little lamphouse of the Peerless. LET US HEAR FROM OTHERS USING REFLECTOR TYPE LAMPS AS TO THEIR EXPERIENCE, ESPECIALLY AS REGARDS THE MIRROR BACKING.

Location of Switches

Walter Munn, Projectionist, Braumont Theatre, Iron Mountain, Michigan, sends us the following epistle, all written in green ink, though he evidently is no greenhorn:

May I direct attention to one phase of projection room practice, or construction, which has, so far as I am aware, not been given the attention its importance warrants. It is the matter of intelligently locating the various switches, control levers and handles used during the progress of a performance. In altogether too many cases the location of these things, which is so vital to the successful handling of a show, is left either to an electrician or an architect, instead of a projectionist. This course usually results in the projectionist thereafter working under more or less unnecessary difficulties—difficulties which could, as easily as not, have been avoided.

This is especially of importance in theatres large enough to be fully equipped, yet not large enough to justify the employment of two projectionists to the shift. In such cases one man must handle two motion picture projectors, a dissolving stereopticon and a spotlight, along with dimmers, curtain controls, etc. (Brother Munn says: "Two machines, a double dissolving stereopticon, a spotlight, dimmers, curtain controls, etc." May I ask him if it is not a fact that ALL those devices are not "machines?" And if so why single out the projectors and tack "machine" to them. Also a dissolving stereopticon is correct—not a "double dissolver." There, darn yuh! Use correct terms or I'll take you out to the woodshed. Ed.). He is apt to have momentary delays, or anyhow some sort of a bobble in the program, if he must move from projectors to spot, or from dissolver to dimmers, etc. No great time involved, certainly, but just the same a delay of even a few seconds ought not to occur in any program, unless it be unavoidable, and it is entirely unavoidable if the various things be correctly located.

Projectionists in this type of theatre should be especially careful in the planning of the location of the various switches and controls. Effort and thought expended in careful, intelligent planning of such things is effort and thought well expended.

A very satisfactory plan is in use here in the Braumart Theatre. The control switches for all equipment are grouped, in order that the operations which should be simultaneous may be so. From either of two gang switch boxes any piece of equipment may be started or stopped. Three-point switches are used on all motor circuits, including curtain control and magnetic dowsers. One of these gang boxes is placed bewteen the two motion picture projectors (You have it right here—why the "machines" in the go off? Ed.), and the other between the right hand projector and the spotlight.

The dimmer handles are within easy reach from the spotlight. All arc lamps, including the dissolver lamps, are equipped with magnetic dowsers, which can also be controlled from either gang box.

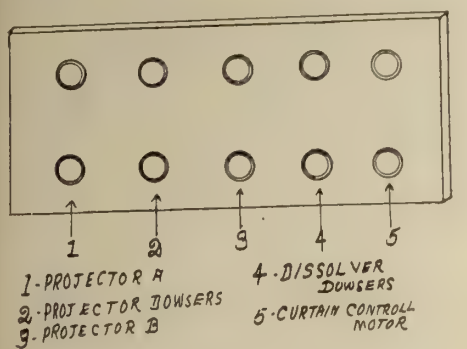
This arrangement makes it possible for one man to handle our equipment without a second of delay. From beside his projector or spotlight the projectionist has every piece of equipment within control, which results in smooth running programs regardless of how many overtures, organ numbers with slides or vaudeville acts there may be.



Of course it costs a bit more to wire a projection room in this manner, but the additional cost is fully justified. The snap switches on the projectors are not used at all, the ones in the gang boxes taking their place.

Yes, you certainly are dead right, Brother Munn. Not only are carefully, properly grouped switches and controls necessary to smooth operation when there is but one man on duty, but also such an installation makes for better work and the saving of much useless labor even when two men are on duty.

I venture the assertion that not one projection room in ten, even in the more modern installations, has switches and controls placed in the best possible manner. Even projectionists either do not seem to sense the importance to them of carefully placed and grouped switches and controls, or else they must not like to do things the easiest and best way. I have often and often had a high grade projectionist boast, as he showed me his installation, that he planned the whole thing—sometimes saying that he had a free hand to do anything he liked—and have noted an almost utter lack of intelligent grouping and placing of switches and controls.

Brother Munn says the comparatively small aded cost of wiring to place the controls and switches as they should be is justified. I will go further, and say that if added cost were the only thing which prevented such installation I would think the failure to expend that money little short of idiotic. The proper grouping and placing of controls and switches is worth not ten, but an hundred times whatever extra it may cost.

I would appreciate it if those who have such installations, which they think are good, would send description and drawings or photographs of same.

Variable Voltage

Hugh H. Oldham, Projectionist, Plainfield, Connecticut, is having trouble, which he describes thus:

"Though I have read our department for years, this is my first time to consult it. Am projectionist of the Lily Theatre in this place. It is the only show in town and we only run four nights a week. Population about 3,000. Of course, I must work at something else, so it's the mill for mine in daytime. We only run one show a night.

The equipment consists of one Power six B and one Motiograph, 1916 model. The light source is Mazda, type H. M. C., Form B, hand controlled. Voltage 100-125. Sixty cycle current.

Have had trouble lately. We are supposed to be on a 110 volt line, but it has been stepped up lately, though how much I have been unable to find out. The town is on daylight saving time and the show starts at 8 P. M., thus making us one of, if not the first to use current in the evening. All the houses are company tenements (It is a mill village) and all the lights go on at once, which is any old time after 8 P. M., and since the show is on the same line, it drops the voltage some. However, I cannot depend upon that, as they are not switched on in time to help me at the start of the show.

Undependable

I cannot use the lamps in day time at all without taking a chance of burning them out. In the morning I note by the lamps (I have no voltmeter) the voltage is down. Then it will register 25 amperes when I light the lamp at the lowest current. If I light the lamp before 7.45 P. M., the needle on the ammeter jumps at once to the black space—about ⅛ of an inch into it. This is at the lowest current control point. Have burned out two or three old lamps, and now I've burned out a new one.

Before closing I would like to say a word about the New Haven exchanges. One day last year a Mr. Kelley, from the Film Board of Trade of New Haven, dropped in on me. He was himself a projectionist, and explained that the exchanges wanted to send film in better condition, and desired the cooperation of all projectionist to that end. He examined my projectors and O K'ed them both. He then asked that I report all bad prints received from that time on. Also he asked that I send him all bad parts I found it necessary to cut out.

Only One Bad Print

I have only had to report one bad print since that time, and all prints received from New Haven exchanges are better than those received from Boston. The Paramount people send the best prints—to me at least. I have watched the department for news of this. I think the New Haven exchanges should be given credit for the improvement. Would like to hear from other projectionists in this district as to what, if any, improvement they have noted since this innovation."

Mentioned Twice

The matter was mentioned in the department twice, friend Oldman, though quite some while ago. You must have overlooked it. The New Haven exchanges started at the matter a bit foolishly in one way, and we had a go-round with them about it, but they have accomplished a good work, and have cleaned things up to a very considerable extent. In large measure they applied exactly the procedure this department has advocated for six or seven years, though intermittently, it is true.

As to your high line voltage, it seems to me it is up to the light company to do as they agreed (In an unquoted part of the letter Oldham says the power company promised to reduce the voltage), and unless it does so, the situation is a bad one. I shall refer the matter to the engineering department of the General Electric Company. They will doubtless communicate with you, and may be able to offer some better way of handling the matter than what I can suggest.

Meanwhile you can construct a shunt as per the drawing I am making, in which A is a single pole, double throw switch, capable of carrying 30 to 35 amperes of current. B is a coil which you can make of soft iron wire about the size of No. 10 copper wire. Any ordinary wire which you can get at the hardware store will do. Connect wire D to the regulator, just as it now is. Cut wire C—the other wire, now connected to the regulator—and connect it, as shown, to the center pole of the switch. Connect the coil of iron resistance wire as shown, and wire C as shown. When the voltage is high in the afternoon, you have only to throw the switch in the opposite position from what it now is, and your resistance will be in series with the regulator and all will be well. When the voltage drops to a safe point, which you soon will be able to tell from experience, throw over the switch and the resistance will be cut out.

How much of the iron wire? Well, inasmuch as I don't know how high the excess voltage is, I can't tell you that. I could not anyhow unless I knew exactly the resistance of the wire. But finding out is easy. Make a coil about an inch in outside diameter. This may be done by winding it tightly on the small part of an ordinary broomstick. Fasten one end of the wire in a vice and the other to the stick, and roll the stick, at the same time pulling against the wire. Continue until it is all wound up. At a guess I would try say ten feet of wire.

Wind the spirals close and then stretch the coil until its spirals do not touch at any point, and instal it. The fault in this is that while cold the wire will not offer nearly so much resistance as it will when hot. Rheostat coils would be better, but that fault is present to some extent, in any wire that I know of. And after connecting the coil you will have to determine its right length by setting the switch to use the coil and then with the wire and coil disconnected at X and everything set to start on the lowest point, touch the end of the wire X to the end of the coil and note what the ammeter registers. If too high then your coil is not long enough. If not high enough, then move the contact back until it is—the contact point of the coil and the copper wire I mean, and then cut the coil off there and make your joint.

Not so good? No it is not, but it is the best thing I know of, unless the G. E. can supply you with a regulator to take care of the excess voltage.

Question No. 301—Quote Ohm's law and explain how it is applied in practice.

Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Massachusetts; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; R. L. Emory, New York City; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan; H. E. Hurlbutt, Oskosh, Wisconsin; Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, and Robert Steinway, St. Louis, Missouri, all gave satisfactory answers to this one.

I think perhaps Colby's answer is, everything considered best, though many of the others are equally good, except as to their wording, and nearly so in that. Colby says:

Ohm's law is the fundamental law of electric action. It reads that electromotive force divided by resistance in ohms equals amperage. Put in another form, electromotive force, or voltage, divided by resistance in ohms, equals current flow in amperes.

In practice this means that if we divide the impressed voltage of a circuit by the total resistance of that circuit, including the power producing or current using device through which it (the current) flows, the result will be the number of amperes flowing through that particular device. Or if we add the resistance, in ohms, of several devices together, and to that add the resistance of the circuit wires, and then divide the impressed electromotive force (voltage) by the sum thus obtained, the final result will be the current strength as expressed in amperes. Or if we divide the total resistance of a device by the exact voltage impressed at its terminals, the result will be the number of amperes flowing through it.

This formula is exressed as $I=\frac{E}{R}$, in which I stands for current strength in amperes, E for electromotive force in volts and R for resistance, in ohms.

In practice we use three variations of this formula. If we know the value of any two of the three factors we can find the other by using this symbol—see page 59 of Bluebook $I\frac{E}{R}$. If you cover any one letter what remains indicates how to find the value of the one so covered, provided we know the value of the other two, thus: suppose we want to know the current flow, in amperes, knowing the voltage and ohms resistance. We cover the letter I, which stands for current strength, or amperes. We have this remaining $\frac{E}{I}$, which means voltage divided by ohms resistance will give the value of I. Or we want to find R, knowing the values of E and I. Covering R, we find that voltage divided by amperes flowing will give the desired result. Of if we want E, knowing the value of I and R, we cover E and find that I X R will give the value of E.

Which seems to be an excellent explanation of the whole matter, if you ask me. Don't you think so?

Question No. 301—Explain how you would calculate the number of amperes a known voltage would force through a known resistance, giving an example.

All the above named gave essentially the same answer. Gray puts it perhaps in a bit the best form. He says:

It is calculated by means of one of the formulae worked out under Ohms' law. To find the amount of current, in amperes, flowing in any circuit, the resistance to which such current flow is opposed and the electromotive force being known, it is only necessary to divide the electro motive force, (voltage), by the total resistance in ohms, to get the desired result, because I equals E divided by R.

If we have an impressed voltage of 110, and there is a total opposing resistance of five ohms in any circuit through which current flows, then there would be 110 divided by 5 equals 22 amperes of current flowing over that circuit.

To quote other replies would be to all intents and purposes merely to repeat the foregoing.

Question No. 303—For purposes of calculation, what is meant by the "arc voltage constant"? Can accurate results be had by its use.

Doe says:

Motion picture projectionists and others familiar with the operation of arcs used for motion picture projection, know that such arcs give best results in light production for the purpose named when operating at a certain voltage drop, and that drop is the "voltage constant." There is a different constant for each current strength (amperage), and the same current strength will have a more or less varying constant with different makes of carbons, or carbons in different condition as to dampness, or for varying working conditions.

Carbon manufacturers have carefully worked out the voltage constants for varying amperage for their own carbons. The constants for two makes of carbon will be found in tables 21 and 22, pages 395 and 400 of the Bluebook. Given ordinary working condition as to lamphouse ventilation, and carbons thoroughly dry, these constants may be relied upon for close accuracy for the carbons they are made for.

However, since different makes of carbons are used, working conditions do vary, and carbons are not always thoroughly dry, such constants cannot be relied upon for anything more than approximately correct results. Unless the conditions are all accurately known, and the constant for the carbon being used is available, the only way to insure accurate results is to measure the actual voltage of the arc—voltage drop—with a reliable voltmeter, its terminal wires attached as closely as may be to the carbon tip.

Excellent, Brother Doe. Excellent! Who could possibly read such replies as we have to these questions without improving his understanding and knowledge? I would suppose that even the most rabid "anti" could not help but admit the benefit of such work as this.

Brother Gray also put the matter very well, as did some others. Gray says:

The term "arc voltage constant" refers to the potential drop across the burning arc in a stated case, and is expressed in terms of the "number of volts." It is resultant upon the resistance of the arc when the carbon tips have been properly spaced to assure the most efficient performance of the carbons of a certain make and diameter, and burning at a certain amperage. Its value is of practical importance in determining the ohmic resistance of the arc in order to calculate the amount of total resistance there is in the circuit. The value of any general "arc voltage constant" for a given amperage can only be approximate, and voltmeter readings taken at various times and with different makes of carbons, under the same identical conditions of amperage and spacing, will show results differing by several volts. As only a small variation occurs, however, a reading obtained under one stated condition, may, for practical purposes, be applied to all similar cases, except where accurate figures are required, in which case an accurate reading of potential drop must be obtained.

Question No. 304—How would you calculate the ohmic resistance of your projector arc?

Gray says:

The easiest way to ascertain the ohmic resistance of a projector arc is to take a reading of its potential drop by means of a voltmeter connected across the arc when it is in operation. It is then only necessary to divide the reading thus obtained by the number of amperes flowing. The result will be the number of ohms resistance in the arc.

'Sall very well, Brother Gray, and correct too, only how many projectionists have voltmeters with which to make measurements?

Hanover says:

The only right way is to measure the voltage drop across the arc with a voltmeter, and the amperage with an ammeter. Unfortunately, however, while most modern projection rooms boast an ammeter, comparatively few have a reliable voltmeter, or any at all, for that matter. It therefore follows that, assuming the amperage to be a known quantity, one may arrive at an approximately correct answer by utilizing the voltage drop shown in tables 21 and 22 of the Bluebook, and dividing the voltage drop, or "voltage of the arc" by the number of amperes flowing. The result is the number of ohms resistance offered by the arc, as nearly as it is possible to get it without knowing the exact amperage and voltage drop.

It is also possible, if you be using the data contained in tables 18 and 19, page 393, and table 21, page 395 of the Bluebook, to closely approximate the amperage if there be no ammeter available. Approximating both voltage and amperage by means of the tables, would however, probably result in only a rather rough approximation of the correct arc resistance.

Wallace says:

To calculate the resistance of a projector arc, we apply the formula: Electromotive force (volts) divided by current strength (amperes) equals resistance, in ohms. Taking my own projector arc for example: The outfit is equipped with an ammeter, but there is no voltmeter, hence I must make use of the arc voltage constant found in table 22, page 400, of the Bluebook. I have a 35 ampere series type generator, hence when the ammeter is registering 35, the voltage constant, as per table 22, is 53. It therefore follows that the ohmic resistance of the arc is equal to 53 (voltage of arc) divided by 35 (amperes), which is 1.514 plus.

Question No. 305—How would you calculate the area of cross section of a round wire? Give two examples.

Thoreau and Clark says:

By measuring the diameter in mills (which means in thousandths of an inch) and squaring same, the result is the area of cross section in circular mills. Thus: A wire .460 of an inch in diameter, is 460 mills in diameter, and that squared equals 211,600 circular mills. Likewise a wire measuring .0403 is 40.3 mills in diameter, which squared is 1,624.09 circular mills area.

Hurlbutt answers it this way:

To find the area of cross section of a round wire, it is necessary to first know its diameter in "mills," which means in thousandths of an inch, for one mill is equal to 1/1000 of an inch.

Knowing this dimension, we proceed to "square it," which means to multiply it by itself. The result will be the area of cross section of the wire in circular mills. For instance, having a wire the diameter of which is 20 thousandths of an inch, or twenty "mills," we have but to multiply twenty by itself to get the area of cross section, thus: 20x20 equals 400, hence the area of cross section is 400 circular mills, or 400 C.M.

Again, assuming that we have a wire measuring 1/8 inch in diameter. One inch is $\frac{1,000}{1,000}$, hence one-eighth of an inch will be one eighth of $\frac{1,000}{1,000}$, or 1,000 divided by 8, which equals 125 thousandths of an inch, or 125 mills. This then is the diameter of the wire in mills, and squaring this gives 125x125 equals 15,625 circular mills as the area of cross section of the wire.

Gray adds a bit, in this way:

In electrical work the cross sectional area of a wire is expressed in terms of "circular mills," and from its area, expressed in this form, is computed its carrying capacity. To determine the cross sectional area of a wire by this method we first find its diameter in mills (a mill is .001 inch). We then square this figure and the product is the area of the wire in circular mills. For example: No. 0000 wire has a diameter of 460 mills. The square of 460 (460 times 460) equals

211,600 circular mills, and this figure will be found to check up with that of the Underwriters table, and thus prove itself. We may also find the area of this same wire (or any other for that matter) in equare inches by using the formula, area of a circle equals the radius squared times 3.1416. Thus No. 0000 wire has a diameter of .460 inch, and a radius of .230 in. .230 inches squared equals .0529, and this multiplied by 3.1416 equals .1661, or .1661 of a square inch is the area of the wire.

Kind of Screen

Henry E. Lang, Kingman, Arizona, makes a number of kindly remarks concerning the Bluebook and this department, of which he says he is a "constant reader." He then asks:

Am considering making some new installations in my small theatre, but before doing so thought it best to write and find out whether or not my judgment is correct. I have arrived at my conclusions mostly through the Bluebook and the Department.

My house is small. It is a remodeled store building. I have dropped the front end of the floor into the basement in order to secure an incline, etc. The auditorium is twenty-four feet wide, and about eighty-five feet long. The projection distance is 78 feet. The picture is thirteen feet and the drop from projection lens to center of screen is sixteen feet. I propose to install a new screen; and from information gathered I think a ——— ——— screen will be best suited to the conditions outlined. Am I correct?

I am now using sixty amperes A. C. at the arc, but have considered changing from that to a 900-watt Mazda. Would this be best, or would the reflector type lamps be best? Please give me names and addresses of those making equipment you regard as suitable for my little theatre.

The good brother inclosed a check in payment for a personal answer, but inasmuch as I see no objection he would have to publicity, and the fact that what I have to say to him may be of interest and value to other small town men, I am using the matter in the department.

In the first place, the screen people referred to have not submitted samples of their screen for test, as per page 260 of the Bluebook, hence we have no available, authentic data as to exactly what the effect as per figures 66, page 223 and 67, page 226 of the Bluebook is, and this is a HUGELY important matter in almost any theatre.

However, inasmuch as your house is very narrow I think it probably will give excellent results as viewed from a large proportion of your seats.

I have tried to impress upon you all the facts that when you ask information concerning screen surfaces for individual theatres you MUST, in order to get a really competent reply, send a floor plan of your house, with all measurements marked thereon, or else give these dimensions: (A) width of picture. (B) distance from screen to first and to last row of seats. (C- width of first row of seats—that is to say, from end seat to end seat.

With this information I can give you exact information as to what the results will be, provided the surface has been tested—see page 260 of Bluebook. When the tests were made from which the table on page 260 was made up, several screen manufacturers declined to submit samples for test, while others who consented to submit samples, refused to permit the results of the tests to be made public.

From this you may gather the idea that probably those were the very ones which SHOULD have been tested, and the results published. I shall presently request all screen makers to submit samples of their screen surfaces to a competent authority, and an entirely disinterested one, for test, which same tests will be published. The names of those who refuse test, if any, may be given you later.

I believe, if you are satisfied that you can clean the ——— ——— screen efficiently, it will give you very good results. As I have said, the house is narrow and there will be objectionable fadeaway only from a comparatively few front side seats, if there is any objectionable fadeaway at all. I cannot say as to that, not knowing either the angle at which the front side seats will be, or the exact diffusing power of the screen.

As to light sources: With a 13 foot picture and a 900 watt Mazda you should get excellent results, especially with a brilliant surface. The light will be soft, and of a yellowish tone. By this I do NOT mean that it will APPEAR yellow. It won't. I mean that it would look very yellow if it were compared with the arc light illumination you now have.

The reflector type lamp would give you a brilliant, white light. They are both excellent in their place, and your conditions fit either fairly well. I believe that situation may be summed up thus: If you want a brilliant, highly contrasty screen picture, use the reflector arc and about fifteen to twenty amperes would be ample current. If you want a soft, well illuminated, very pleasing, but not so contrasty picture, then use the 900 watt Mazda.

I shall send you names and addresses by mail.

Screen and Lenses

J. F. McCoy, Indianapolis, Indiana, asks:

"Will you, if it is not asking too much, advise me as to what size screen and what lenses should be used in a theatre 44 feet wide by 88 feet long, in order that the best results be had.

"I also would appreciate an expression of opinion as to whether Mazda or reflector type lamps would produce the most satisfactory results, the supply being 110 volt A. C."

As to you "asking too much," why friend McCoy, it is a part of the service of this department to give advice of this sort.

However, when you merely advise me that the theatre is a certain size, you leave altogether too much to the imagination. For instance, in all human probability when you say a "theatre 44 feet wide by 88 feet long," you really mean an auditorium of those dimensions. Still, as you put it I have a perfect right to suppose the theatre, outside measurements, is 44 x 88 feet. Then, too, if really 100 per cent. advice is to be given I must know other things, such as, for instance, the distance from front row of seats to the screen surface also the distance from rear row of seats to screen. Of course, it is fairly safe to assume that the latter will not be less than 80 feet, and very likely may be 88 feet, and anyhow the variation would hardly be enough to seriously affect matters. The distance front row of seats to screen surface is, however, quite another matter, and is very important.

For instance, I have seen small theatres with seats jammed right up within eight or ten feet of the screen. Under such a condition a picture size which would be best for the rear seats would be an outrage from the front seats point of view.

Well, anyhow I will do the best I can for you. For a theatre such as that I would not myself use a picture size in excess of twelve (12) feet wide, and if I proposed to have a rather brilliant screen illumination I would cut that a bit down to, say, ten or eleven feet.

A ten foot picture, if brilliantly illuminated is, in my opinion, large enough for a maximum viewing distance of 88 feet. However, if you think the patrons would like something a bit larger, then make it eleven or twelve feet. With a ten foot picture and no distortion—a level, or approximately level projection—you would have to spread whatever projection light you may have available over only 75 square feet of screen surface. With a twelve footer, and no distortion, you would have to spread it over 108 square feet, which acts to reduce the screen brilliancy by something more than one-quarter.

Also remember this: (A) Whatever film faults (rain, etc.), there may be, will show up less prominently in the smaller picture, and (B) It is very much more comfortable to view the smaller picture from the front seats. The smaller picture will appear in every way better from those seats.

I therefore advise you to have two sets of lenses (projection) sent with the projector (I assume it is a new theatre), one to project a ten foot picture and one a twelve footer. Try them both, and keep the lenses which project the picture YOU like best. BUT be sure to view the two sizes of picture from all parts of the theatre seating space. I am not telling you the focal length of the lenses, because you have not told me the exact projection distance, and anyhow the best way is to tell the man you buy the lenses from that you want a picture of a certain width, giving him the EXACT distance from lens to screen. You thus put it up to the lens man to provide what you want, and it is his business to do so.

As to light source—well that depends. If you want a soft, pleasing, but just fairly brilliant screen illumination, Mazda will fill the bill under your conditions, though I think the Mazda folk will probably advise you to have a larger picture, than a ten footer, because that would necessitate a rather long projection working distance, which is a thing the Mazda men do not especially hone for, though I believe they can get fairly efficient results by using a Cinephor condenser. I would like to see, and to have for publication, some photographs of the light beam, using Mazda and Cinephor condenser.

On the other hand, if you want a brilliant, white light, the reflector type lamp will give it; also it will handle the long projection lens working distance well and efficiently.

It is very difficult to give satisfactory advice in matters of this kind, partly for the reason that individual ideas of just what constitutes the best results vary somewhat widely, due probably to inability of many to examine and compare the results obtained under varying conditions with various light sources.

One man will literally rave over the soft-tone light of the Mazda, while another will prefer, and quite possibly very decidedly prefer, the brilliant white light of the arc. Why not visit a few theatres using Mazda and others using reflector type lamps? You thus will be in position to judge for yourself which you like best. Surely both types are now in use in or near Indianapolis. That would seem to me to be the better way, but don't let any one talk you into either the one or the other. Examine them and their performance, and then judge for yourself.

Screen Painting

J. H. Collins, Nashville, Tennessee, asks: I am contemplating an experiment in the way of a traveling show, and will need a screen which may be rolled up for shipment. Will you be kind enough to give me directions for painting such a screen?

Yes, but I would advise you to get a "Raven" screen for such a purpose. If you are careful with it it will last a long while and give you good service. You can get their address from the advertising columns.

Your letter reminded me of something, and I got busy digging down into a huge pile of matter laid aside from time to time through the years, because, while not available for use just at the time, I thought it might be some day. I finally found what I sought.

So long ago that its pages were numbered 648 to 253 with the new numbering machine I got to number the department Mss. with, which now stands at 2,110, O. F. Allen, Chelsea, Vt., asked for directions for painting a screen to roll up. I supplied the directions and printed them, whereupon a gentleman down in New Jersey took exception to my directions, and supplied some of his own. His handwriting was so hard to read that when I had his letter copied I sent it to him for O. K., whereupon he asked that I wait until he could find time to re-write the whole thing, so it was laid aside, and there it has lain until now. I think this man knows what he is talking about, hence I am going to use that old article to answer friend Collins, with the suggestion that he "try it out" first on a sample say two feet square. Here it is:

Friend Richardson: I have followed your writings for the past eight years and have found that you usually know what you are talking about. When you come to screen painting, however, you stub your toe and fall flat. I don't like to butt in, as my time is pretty well taken up, but for the benefit of all concerned I will do it, prefacing my remarks by saying that I was a practical working boss painter in Newark and New York City for twenty-five years. Ill health forced me out of the painting busines, and I have been in the hotel business ever since —making a success of it, incidentally.

O. F. Allen, Chelsea, Vt., asked advice about making a roll-up screen, January 14 issue, (Heavens only knows what year. Ed.) and the advice you gave him you evidently have not yourself tried out. Were Allen to paint a screen according to that direction, it would look like a crocodile's skin when he rolled it up, and ou made it worse by adding a coat of paint on the back of the screen.

In the first place, just forget about adding the blue to the white, as it is a rather dangerous experiment in the hands of a novice. I will describe the main process to be followed in painting a screen to be rolled up.

First, get wide, unbleached muslin. It may be had twelve, and I think even fifteen feet wide. If you cannot get it wider than twelve feet, and want a screen say fourteen feet the narrowest way, add two feet to both the top and bottom, making a flat seam —that is to say, place the edges together like the leaves of a book and sew them. The object of adding to both top and bottom is to keep the seam away from center of screen as far as possible, as it will show less prominently near the edges, even though there be two seams instead of one. By add- two feet on top and bottom, there is one foot left for working space, border, etc.

Burlap can, I think, be had eighteen feet wide, and for a wide house it would make a good screen.

For a roll-up screen there is nothing better than the scenic, or distemper method, same as is used for scene painting. It is nothing but glue, whiting and water.

Make a frame out of 1¼ inch by 6 inch white pine trim for permanent artist's frame. Any stout timbers will do to stretch a roll-up screen on for painting.

Tack muslin on frame with six ounce tacks, but drive them part way in only, as they must come out again.

Dissolve about one pound of good ground glue in a pail of hot water. Stir in about one pound of sifted whiting, and size the cloth with the mixture, using a calcimine brush. Let it dry thoroughly.

Next, mix whiting to paste form in cold water, adding to it a little of the size mixture just described, and thin down to working consistency with water. Coat the screen with this. A little soapy water or molasses added will slow up the drying and help you get it on without laps.

Or after the sizing coat described, a good coat of ready prepared calcimine will make a good screen, which will roll without cracking or wrinkling, but that sort of screen absorbs light and does not give so brilliant a picture as a screen with a metallic surface, and in the country town I find they want a brilliant picture.

For a roll-up metallic surface screen, proceed as follows: Size the cloth, as before directed—glue and whiting mixture, being sure the cloth is stretched tight, and is not baggy. Procure one quart of best Elastic Finishing Body Varnish. This is important. Pour in large pail, add one pint clean turpentine and stir thoroughly. Procure one pound of the best white aluminum bronze—made for screen purposes.

Your canvas being sized evenly and thinly and thoroughly dry, place back side of frame against a wall and work from two step ladders with a plank across them, forming a platform in front of the screen. Paint the whole surface evenly and thinly, being very sure that the coating IS even. The reason for carriage varnish is that it dries slowly, and gives you time to get over the entire surface, but brush it out very evenly and thinly, even though it be necessary to go over it again with the brush.

When coated evenly all over, lay the screen down flat on two trestles, or "horses," and sprinkle the bronze powder on the surface, having a wide floor brush, such as is used to sweep with. They are of horse hair and about two feet wide. Be sure the brush is clean, and then brush the bronze powder over the surface. Continue to brush for fifteen minutes or more, or until the surface will absorb no more powder and you have a good polish on the screen. Do only as much on the screen as is needed for projection surface, of course, with an inch or two over to extend under the border. Sweep off surplus bronze, hang screen in place, project the light to it and mark corners. Snap lines between corners as directed in the handbook. This is for a plain, or roll-up screen.

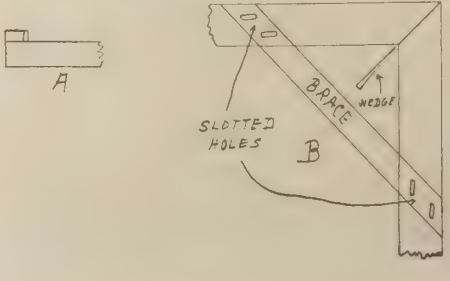
For a matte surface, size and proceed as before, but before applying bronze, paint entire surface with white lead paint, mixed half linseed oil and half turpentine. There is no boiled oil today, or practically none. What is termed "boiled oil" is just ordinary linseed oil with japan dryer added. When this coat of paint is dry, mix enough plaster of paris into some of the paint until it is a semi paste—just so it can be brushed on the surface—and cover that part of the screen used for projection surface thickly. Allow it to get semi dry, then stipple it, which means jab it all over with the end of your paint brush—end of the bristles. This will give an excellent matte, or rough surface, called a "pebble grain." Allow this to dry thoroughly and then give finishing coat as before described, remembering that the varnish must be very evenly and thinly distributed. Much depends on that.

When using lampblack for border, never use oil. Mix the lampblack to paste form with good japan dryer, add a little varnish, but not much, and thin with turpentine. Result will be a dead velvet black.

Burlap can be treated the same way as directed for muslin.

An "artist's frame" which is suitable for frame mounting, as set forth in the handbook, can be made out of 1¼x6 inch white pine trim, with a piece of lattice stock around the outer edge. Lattice strips are about 1½x⅜ inch. End view would look like A in the drawing. This keeps the canvas from contact with the frame, thus presenting a perfectly smooth surface clear to the outer edge. A simple way to make corners of frame adjustable to tighten screen is as per B in the illustration.

Holes in the frame should be to take ⅜-inch x 3-inch carriage or flat head bolts, and must be through corner braces, but holes in braces must be slotted. They should be put in before canvas is tacked on, with large washers on rear side, and nut drawn up fairly tight. To tighten frame slack off on nuts and drive large, thin wedge into joint, as indicated, after which re-tighten bolts. The slots allow the corner braces to give. The braces, which should be made of 1x6 inch stuff, are necessary to hold screen square and brace it.



For a roller for roll-up screen, use lattice strips (white pine ⅜x1½ inch) nailed to wood rings, or wheels spaced about two feet apart. Wrap this spirally with muslin strips, glued down, the same way an auto tire is wrapped with paper. For metallic surface screen the roller diameter should be six inches, but it may be less for a calcimine screen. This description is crude. I can do the job better than I can describe it, but you will find it practical in all details; also it is easy to do. Should you wish any further details, write me.

On behalf of myself and those many who will appreciate the effort of a friend to help, I most cordially thank him. I shall, however, take issue with his conclusions in one or two points, leaving it to friend reader himself to decide who is right and who is wrong.

In the first place I freely grant that I have not actually tried out the directions I gave friend Allen. Maybe our New Jersey friend is correct though I'm danged if I'm so certain about that. I am unable to see why flat paint should crack, especially when applied in thin coats. I do believe, however, that in the matter of painting the back of the screen I was, in all probability, in error.

Anyhow I will yield the point, because New Jersey is a man who has had wide experience with paints. If Allen has tried out my directions I want to know what happened. If it won't stand rolling he is hereby directed to make another screen, according to the directions supplied by New Jersey, and send me a bill for the cost of the spoiled one, upon receipt of which I will send a perfectly good check to cover the loss. There, that is fair enough, I think.

And now as to the distemper. Well, perhaps so! Frankly it is one too many for me, but darn it all, man, you can't get a really good projection surface with distemper, though as I understand you (not very clear on that point) you suggest sizing with the glue and whiting mixture and then coating with calcimine, which will make a very good projection surface in a permanent location and if the surface will stand rolling without cracking—of which I have small doubt, then it is a good surface for a roll-up screen. Within reason high brilliancy may be had on it by the use of high amperage.

And now as to the main point of difference between New Jersey and I. If it is possible to make a metallic surface screen with but little brushing, then I agree that his directions are the first I have ever seen which appear to be practical, because a polish is exactly what is NOT wanted on a metallic surface screen. Polish sets up superimposed reflection, and that is the reason for the "haze" so many have complained of in front of a metallic surface screen. If you can just dump the powder on the size and brush it around until it has covered every portion of the surface, but with great care to produce NO polish, then, while I do not wish to be understood as recommending that novices try making a metallic surface screen, still the directions given do look practical.

As to the matter of brilliancy, in my opinion small town exhibitors would better secure it by using the whitest surface possible (which is white zinc, so far as I know, mixed almost entirely flat for the last coat) with reduced size of picture and higher amperage.

Two Splendid Houses Added to Chain Operated by Coast Theatres, Inc.

TWO splendid theatres have been added to the growing chain controlled by the West Coast Theatres, Inc.

The West Coast Theatre in Long Beach, Cal., was thrown open to the public on June 6, and stands as one of the best examples of its kind in the West Coast Theatres, Inc., chain. This large edifice seats 2,300 and with facilities of the most modern type in every way, is one of the very latest additions to the great circuit of playhouses.

Among the prominent features in this house are a large three-manual orchestral pipe organ; expensive opera chairs and large leather loge-divans; projection equipment of the very latest type; stage equipment that is without peer in any theatre in the country; an intensive ventilating system; lighting effects that can be operated both from the stage and the booth, on many circuit dimmers, giving any desired effect; and a decorative scheme which is pronounced by criticics as one of the most beautiful in any Western theatre.

Browne Assumes Charge

The theatre is under the resident managership of Frank L. Browne, widely-known Long Beach theatrical executive, who, prior to assuming charge of the new house, operated the Liberty Theatre in that city for several years for the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and who will continue to manage both houses. The Long Beach houses are under the direct personal supervision of A. M. Bowles, General Manager of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., direction of Gore Bros., Ramish, and Sol Lesser.

A fourteen-piece orchestra will be a part of the regular staff, and the policy calls for a split-week change, with the fore part of the week being devoted to big pictures and elaborate stage presentations produced by Fanchon and Marco, widely-known Pacific Coast stage producers, who have charge of the Production Department of the West Coast Theatres, Inc.

West Coast Theatre, Long Beach, Cal.

The latter part of the week will be devoted to standard big Orpheum vaudeville, and pictures.

The furnishings, tapestries, carpeting, and other similar accoutrements are of the very best that can be obtained anywhere. Seven thousand people attended the gala opening, and among the prominent visitors present were all of the high officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., as well as prominent Long Beach citizens, headed by Mayor Clark, who was the principal speaker on the program. General Manager A. M. Bowles responded to Mayor Clark's address on behalf of the West Coast Theatres, Inc.

San Bernardino House Opened

The West Coast Theatre in San Bernardino, Cal., formally opened on May 20, takes rank with the most atractive and most comfortable houses in the celebrated chain from which the house derives its name. One of the very newest links in the West Coast chain, it is, without doubt, one of the finest theatres of its type in the entire West. With a seating capacity of 1,600; a huge stage with equipment excelled in no other theatre of its size in the country; projection equipment of the finest, and a decorative motif that stamps it as artistically beautiful in every respect, the West Coast Theatre is everywhere regarded as one of California's most elaborate show places.

This big theatre is part of the Platt Building in San Bernardino, and the opening of the building and the theatre simultaneously marked a new era in that city's forward march of progress. A throng estimated at 6,000 attended this event, and visitors included all the prominent officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., as well as representative citizens of San Bernardino, and the speakers' program was under the direction of the San Bernardino Chamber of Commerce. Mayor Holcomb was the principal speaker on the program, and response was made by A. M. Bowles, General Manager of the West Coast Theatres, Inc.

Hartman in Charge

H. L. Hartman, formerly a Division Manager, is in personal resident charge under the supervision of General Manager Bowles.

The policy of the house calls for a three per week change, with high calibre pictures, elaborate stage presentations, produced by Fanchon and Marco, production experts of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and two days of the week devoted to high class vaudeville bills.

San Bernardino is a city of 35,000, and the acquisition of this big show-house at once places this city among the prominent theatrical communities of Southern California.

The theatre is under the direction of Gore Bros., Banish, and Sol Lesser, and the building and completion of the theatre, was under the personal supervision of M. Gore, President.

The Warwick, Kansas City, Mo., to Be Entirely Remodeled

ONE of Kansas City's largest suburban theatres, the Warwick, will undergo complete reconstruction. Day and night forces will be employed to complete the task in five months. More than $150,000 will be spent in making the theatre one of the best suburban houses in the Middle West, containing a seating capacity of 2,200, according to E. W. Werner, manager. This announcement comes on the heels of Mr. Werner's previously announced plans to construct the largest suburban house in the city, a $1,000,000 combination theatre and office building, at Broadway and Valentine road. The Warwick is located at 3927 Main street, six blocks from the site of the proposed new theatre, which will be known as the Werner.

Plans for rebuilding the Warwick followed the signing of a 95-year lease Saturday by Mr. Werner. Reconstruction of the theatre will begin not later than June 15, the theatre to be dark for five months. Only the side walls of the present structure, which is elaborate compared to many theatres, will be retained. The new building will be supported by steel and concrete frames and will be 72 feet deeper than the present structure, the theatre becoming 235 feet in depth. The leasehold acquired by Mr. Werner includes a 60-foot strip of ground extending from Main to Walnut streets. The main floor of the new building will contain 1,500 seats, an orchestra pit large enough for forty musicians and a stage ample for large prologues. A balcony will provide loge seats for 300 persons and 400 chairs, such as will be on the main floor, increasing the seating capacity to 2,200. The seats will be of the usual width, being more than 20 inches broad.

A large entrance foyer will be finished in travertine stone and marble and there will be a separate exit lobby. An innovation here will be the "cry room," just off the main lobby and inside the theatre, where its occupants may witness the picture through the double plate glass partitions, which will comprise the walls. The "cry room," of course, will be for fretful children.

The principal lobby, 25 feet deep and the width of the building, which will be distinguished from the entrance foyer, will be heavily carpeted and finished in dark walnut. From this room stairways will lead to a promenade, which will be an intermediate level between the main floor and the lobby.

The front of the theatre will be pulsichrome terra cotta, with ornamentations in gold. An indirect lighting system in three colors will be installed, enabling various effects to be obtained, both across the face of the building and the main lobby. Equipment will include a cooling system which will change air in the theatre every three minutes, and a Hope-Jones pipe organ to cost $40,000. Boller Brothers of Kansas City are the architects.

The annual rental to be paid by Mr. Werner will be $8,000 net for the next ten years and $8,500 net for the remainder of the lease. Besides all carrying costs of the property, Mr. Werner also must pay income tax on the rent, according to the terms of the lease.

East Aurora Gets 800-Seat House

Featuring the western New York premiere of Gloria Swanson in "Madame Sans Gene," the beautiful new Aurora Theatre was opened in East Aurora, New York, recently. Roycrofttown may well be proud of this fine new 800-seat motion picture theatre fireproof to the highest degree, most attractively decorated and featuring equipment equal to the largest houses in the land.

Merritt A. Kyser is the manager of the Aurora and the following are members of the board of directors: Elbert Hubbard II, son of the famous "Fra," president; Irving Price, vice-president; James W. Persons, Robert North, Lyman S. Loomis, Cecil M. Jackson, secretary and treasurer.

The house is built of brick and hollow tile with concrete floors, wide aisles and more exits than the law requires. The lobby is of fireproof construction. The building is plastered on metal lath and is fully equipped with sprinklers. It has the lowest insurance rate of any structure in the town. The roof is supported by structural steel girders on brick piers with independent foundations below the frost line and the structure conforms with the most rigid city building inspection codes. Comfort as well as safety is essential in every modern public building and the owners have looked after this feature with great care. The 800 seats are roomy, with deep, curved backs and upholstered seats. The simplex projection machines are used in the modernly equipped room. Comfortable dressing rooms, a large stage 32 by 25 feet, footlights, border lights, dimmers, etc., are ample to meet all possible demands for local performances if needed.

Warner's Egyptian Theatre Is Architecturally Picturesque

TEMPLE-LIKE lines, spaciousness, a replica of the golden throne of an Egyptian king, are just a few things that help to make Henry Warner's East Pasadena Egyptian Theatre, typical in architecture of the country from which it derived its name.

The theatre, opened May 6th, under auspicious circumstances, with a bevy of stars in attendance and with the world premiere of Al Christie's "Stop Flirting," provided a gala evening long to be remembered.

Designed by Kenneth A. Gordon, of J. H. Woodworth & Son, massiveness, simplicity and dignity mark its construction: the Woodworth firm also supplied material for the structure, and managed construction and financing.

The theatre accommodates 900. There is a spacious foyer, above which will be found a nursery and the lounge rooms.

An unusual feature of the organ installation is that it is located above the stage, the tones being carried to the auditorium by way of an especially arranged grill in the ceiling.

The projection room is given importance in the plans, and approximately $7,000, was apportioned to this feature. Everything of the most modern type is used.

Henry Warner, who operates the new theatre, has been in the exhibiting activities for many years, graduating to his present standing from very modest beginnings.

The total cost of the building approaches $165,000.

The final safeguard for success—

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

To make the most of a picture from the box office view point you carefully plan the publicity notices, newspaper advertisements, lobby displays, tie-ups.

But one more safeguard for success remains—photographic quality. Look in the film margin for the black-lettered identification "Eastman" and "Kodak" and you know that the screen will show all the quality of the negative.

"Incidentally our Greater Movie Season is ON, ushered in by 'The Ten Commandments' and we're proud of that, too, for what could be more fitting for a pace-setting starter?"

Editorial in Greater Amusements, Minneapolis, Minn.

"Paramount's 'The Ten Commandments' is being given a warm welcome in the territory by the clergy. Ministers and preachers of all denominations are going out of the way to plug this DeMille spectacle. Don't overlook this bet. It gets to a class of people that newspaper ads and lithos mean nothing to. At Mantorville, Minn., where Sunday shows have been taboo for years, Ferrin & Joslyn, Liberty Theatre, got one of the leading ministers there so enthused that church services will be called off so the flock may witness the picture. In exploiting 'The Ten Commandments' it would be wise to make two separate and distinct appeals: one to the better element by way of the church; the other through circus billing, stressing the entertainment qualities of the picture, and overcoming the impression the title may create that the picture is a preachy one. The picture can stand the limit of both."

THE SATURDAY EVEN[ING] POST

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

New York City acclaimed this photodrama one picture in a million!

"Drusilla with a Million"

Vibrant with the love, laughter and tears of life!

Filmed from ELIZABETH COOPER'S famous novel

Directed by F. Harmon Weight

WHEN "Drusilla With a Million" opened at the famous Capitol Theatre, critical, blase New York laughed, cried, and proclaimed this photodrama, "one picture in a million"—

It was AN EVENT at the Capitol, just as it will be an event when it is shown in your City, and all other cities throughout the Nation.

It is a brilliant example of how clean, big and inspiring a photoplay can be made

To see Drusilla With a Million is to love it. You'll live through its poignant drama,—you'll revel in its comedy,—you'll be thrilled as you've never been before by its stunning dramatic power,—you'll laugh as you brush away a furtive tear and you'll be held spell-bound by one of the most dramatic climaxes ever witnessed on the screen

Here is magnificent photodramatic entertainment for everybody from 8 to 80.

Played by a distinguished cast including Kenneth Harlan, Mary Carr, Priscilla Bonner and many others. Brilliantly directed by F. Harmon Weight.

Not in years have dramatic critics, reviewers and editors received a motion picture on Broadway with such unanimous acclaim. Read what just a few of them said: (We have space for but a few of the many wonderful comments.)

NEW YORK TIMES "'Drusilla With a Million' at the Capitol Theatre sent audiences away with wet cheeks."

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS. "Did the audience like this picture? Oh-no! They fairly ate it up, subtitles and all."

N. Y. MORNING WORLD. "Here is a picture with a tremendous human appeal. This picture a knockout."

What CECIL B.

WITH brilliant directorial, scenario and production staffs working as a unit under his direct supervision — with stars of proved box-office value ideally cast in great stories by world-famous authors— Cecil B. DE MILLE is going to do!

THE tremendous scope and superlative quality of the Cecil B. De Mille product for the coming year are forecast in the showmanship calibre of his first three attractions for 1925-26.

"THE ROAD TO YESTERDAY," the first of two big Specials directed by Cecil B. De Mille, is a production to which the word stupendous can be fittingly applied. Big in theme, spectacular in action, rich in scenic investiture, with a cast of extraordinary distinction, this picture will equal anything Cecil B. De Mille has ever done.

This big personally directed Special, with the first two personally supervised productions, will serve as a criterion by which the entire product can be gauged.

"HELL'S HIGHROAD," the initial production starring Leatrice Joy, with Edmund Burns, Julia Faye and Robert Edeson heading a brilliant cast, directed by Rupert Julian, is a smashing drama of the New York "gold coast," with all the spectacular thrill of "The Ten Commandments" and with a story that out-romances "Male and Female."

"THE COMING OF AMOS" stars Rod La Rocque in the first of his four pictures. It is a graphic picturization of the world-famous William J. Locke's most popular novel, sales of which have already reached six figures. It is a melodramatic comedy — swift in action — with the festive Monte Carlo and the Riviera as background. Paul Sloane directs.

ROD LA ROCQUE

These three attractions are typical of the super-excellence of the Cecil B. De Mille product—a product that has consistently led the industry in box-office successes.

ARE YOU CLAIMING

"The Best Projection In Town"?

A selling point with the public that is far too often neglected is Perfect Projection.

You book good pictures; you advertise them; you stunt them, and you ballyhoo them.

But—

Do you back them up with Perfect Projection? Are you telling your public not only how good your pictures are but also how clearly and perfectly you are projecting them?

It's an appealing argument to Mr. and Mrs. Public. Many times it's the deciding factor with them. Furthermore they will advertise it for you. Perfect Projection will give your theatre the very best kind of word-of-mouth advertising.

Start improving now and be all ready to shout "Perfect Projection —the very best in town" when Fall business comes.

For quickest and best results consult F. H. Richardson's 4th Edition HANDBOOK OF PROJECTION—the straight-line approach to Perfect Projection.

Looking 'em Over Again

OUT of the hat comes a slip marked "Warner Brothers." We turn to the job with pleasure. For the first page of the season's announcement is before us.

We like that line-up of titles. There's a "something" there that gets a response. They seem to be the sort of titles that we'd like to see in the electric lights if our bank account were paying the bills.

"The Limited Mail." "Three Weeks in Paris." "Bobbed Hair." "Rose of the World." "The Pleasure Buyers." "Broken Hearts of Hollywood." "My Official Wife." And so on. And then some more. And then some.

We have just taken a hop, skip, and a jump through those titles. There's an alternate for every one we have mentioned that might have struck the next fellow as even better. It's a great list. It hits home.

THERE'S a workmanship about that entire announcement and line-up that strikes a responsive chord in a mind thinking "SHOW" thoughts. For example, up near the top of the list of stars we find Syd Chaplin. Might mean a lot, might mean nothing. Let's turn a few pages and see what vehicles they are putting Syd in.

"The College Widow." "The Man on the Box." (Remember Henry Dixey in that one?) They ring true. That's hitchin' the star to the vehicle. That's edging towards another "Charley's Aunt."

John Barrymore's name is on the list. Let's see what he is presented in. "The Sea Beast." Never heard of it. Then we read the fine print and discover that it is an adaptation of "Moby Dick." Now we know something. The fellow who bought that story for pictures knew what he was about. And the chap who changed its title for picture purposes knew even more.

And so it goes. Do you get what we mean when we say "workmanlike?"

THEN comes what may seem a minor point to some folks, but is a pretty important one to us. The heading on the page reads "Scenarios By Proven Experts." After which we read:

"The finest story, scenarized by an experienced and capable screen writer, will become a finer picture. To the scenarist is entrusted the work of injecting those points of audience appeal that mean increased box office returns."

After which we read the roster of folks who will do the continuity job for Warner Brothers.

A minor point—to some folks. But here is our thought: We have looked at many line-ups that struck us as one hundred per cent and then found ourselves saying, "But I don't see any names on that scenarists list that hit us right." We have checked other lists that didn't strike us favorably and soliloquized, "Wish they only told us who would do the continuities—it might make all the difference in the world."

It does make all the difference in the world. Someone at Warner Brothers is wise enough to know that. And then still wiser when he gives it the importance of a separate page and warm endorsement in the annual announcement.

Again we say, "workmanlike."

WE could go into details for inches and inches more. But we are not going to. Because there is one thought that is going to take all the space that is left to us. That thought is named:

Ernst Lubitsch.

Here is the man who could open a School for Directors tomorrow and take on all comers. Here is the man who is technical finesse down to his finger tips.

He has made many fine pictures since coming to this country. Some that didn't mean so much because they didn't have stories that had any particular reason to exist. But, every time, the fine hand of Ernst Lubitsch has been there. And evident.

Now, here is our thought. Some day—why not this year?—this man Lubitsch is going to get HIS story, the BIG STORY. When he does!

Clear the track of locals and freights, and make way for the express!

Secret of Full Houses—Salesmanship

M. W. Jencks Tells Why

By A. M. Pearson

"THERE never was a time when the public went shopping for what they want as they do now," declared Maurice W. Jencks, joint manager with G. L. Hooper of the National Theatres Corporation of Topeka, Kansas. "And the theatre shopper is the most discriminating of any.

"You can exploit a picture all you want to; you can put ads all over the theatre. You can buy up white space in half a dozen dailies; if your picture isn't what they want, they will go elsewhere. The public has graduated from stereotyped plots and is fed up on bromidic situations. No longer can we run the soldiers up around the hill and get away with it. We have to give them real pictures. It is a day of expert salesmanship, in the movie business as in all others; but the most clever salesmanship cannot sell a wary public inferior films."

In Theatre Game Twenty-two Years

Mr. Jencks has been in the theatre business more than twenty-two years. In 1902 he started in Yankton, South Dakota, with the New Theatre. Later for eleven years he had a circuit of theatres with headquarters at Sioux City, Iowa. He built five theatres for the government during the war at Camp Funston and Fort Riley. He operated these theatres, too. At the close of the war he came to Topeka. His partner, G. L. Hooper, has been in the theatre business in Topeka for ten years.

These two men operate the Novelty, vaudeville; the Isis, pictures; the Orpheum, pictures, and the New Grand, legitimate attractions, all in Topeka. They rebuilt the Grand Theatre last summer, making it one of the finest theatres in the middle west for legitimate attractions. This summer they will rebuild the Orpheum Theatre, increasing the seating capacity. They will enlarge the Isis Theatre as well, adding to the convenience of the public. A new picture house seating 1,400 persons will be constructed during the coming year by Mr. Hooper and Mr. Jencks.

Exhibitor Must Judge Product

"We have a splendid box office business with big, unusual pictures. The different, the novel, the unexpected, these get us the money. It is exceedingly hard to put across the common garden variety of film.

"No man in the exhibition business," affirmed this manager, "can afford to buy pictures on faith. He must use his knowledge of the theatre business to gauge box office value. He must determine whether a big picture feature is really big or just amazing. It is not enough that he has read all the stupendous statistics associated with the production of the film. It is not enough that he has listened to the high-voltage selling talk of the salesman. HE MUST SEE AND JUDGE THE PICTURE PERSONALLY. He must view it as an exhibitor; but he must also look through the eyes of his potential audience, see the film as a college man, a bricklayer and a woman in quest of diversion. If he hesitates on the merits of a given picture, he may be very sure that a fair per cent. of his spectators will feel the same uncertainty as to the bigness of the film.

"One of our biggest problems is repetition of type. When a good picture with a novel setting is released a dozen films are made, in sort of a second and third carbon copy of the first one. We have a South Sea island success. Overnight spring up other pictures in pale imitation. Then comes a film covered with prairie schooners and pioneers, follow two others in rapid succession.

"One bad feature is that perhaps the original film is not the biggest of the lot. Perhaps the first patriotic production is not quite a success; then the second or third, which may be far bigger, operate under the handicap of the failure of the first to strike fire. A producer may have spent a fortune trying to build a big picture. It may, after all, be unconvincing, and have little box-office value. The producer knows, probably, that it misses somehow, if he is honest with himself, but out go his six publicity men, his special pleaders, and do the best they can to get the film sold. Probably they succeed.

"We should have, I am convinced, fewer and better pictures," added this exhibitor. "The market is flooded with mediocre films. We would rather buy twelve box-office successes than twelve ordinary pictures and twenty-eight cheap ones, which we cannot unload without a loss of money and confidence."

Honest with Fans

"And what do you do when a patron calls up and asks you about a show?"

"I never tell him anything but the truth. If he calls and asks about the cast, I tell him it is the original New York cast or it isn't. You must get, and keep, the confidence of your patrons. That is a sound principle and policy for every theatre man to build business upon. Never let the public come to the playhouse under a delusion. The effect is disastrous to all concerned. Of course I don't urge any exhibitor who has been caught with a weak bill to send out sandwich-board announcements bearing the legend: THIS SHOW IS PUNK. STAY AWAY AND SAVE YOUR MONEY. But when a man or woman asks, I tell them the truth, and my patrons know they can trust my word to the end of the chapter," concluded Mr. Jencks.

"There is no doubt that the picture business is a gamble for the producer, the exhibitor, and the ultimate consumer—the public. Some people buy price first and attraction second. What will suit one theatre-goer will disgust another," laughed Mr. Jencks. "Tastes differ as widely as names, and personality is a pretty sacred thing. The man who operates one theatre must rather take turns to please some of the people all the time, and here the man with several theatres can solve his problem by running certain types of picture for certain habitual audiences in each house."

Tells of "Bigger Thing"

"What is the biggest thing you have learned in twenty-two years?" Mr. Jencks was asked.

"Just this: People don't want to be preached at nor educated. They are afraid of the truth. It is unfortunate for our business, for we could do a lot of good if people would see and hear the plays which make moral truths clear. Never was a better play on the legitimate stage than Kennedy's Servant in the House. But it didn't make money. The Passing of the Third Floor Back was a great show, and succeeded. But its success was due more to the fact that Forbes Robertson played the title role than to the popularity of the play. People who admired Robertson just tolerated the drama to see him."

Ealand Helps Critic to Review Shorts in His Home

By Harold Heffernan

TOM EALAND, manager of the Regent Theatre, at Grand Rapids, Mich., devotes space in his newspaper ads on Sunday and throughout the week to announcements and cuts bearing on his short subjects, but this practice he contends is perfunctory and should be carried through by every exhibitor who advertises at all.

How Mr. Ealand develops interest in his short subjects by making it convenient for the motion picture editor of his leading newspaper to see them is a story all its own, and it demonstrates how a little thought and foresight will turn up profits at the box office.

The motion picture editor of the leading newspaper of Grand Rapids was induced to take unto himself a home projector some time ago and now Mr. Ealand, in co-operation with the various exchanges who book him short subjects, sees to it that the editor is supplied with "the big little events on the program."

When Mr. Ealand receives a batch of short subjects for screening, he selects those he intends to purchase and sends them over to the editor for screening. Through this system the Regent has secured some very advantageous "copy" on various short subjects it has played from time to time.

When "The Voice of the Nightingale," a one-reel feature dealing with the bird's life, was released, Ealand was so impressed with its artistic value and the wide scope of appeal it presented that he immediately got in touch with his editor and informed him he had something very unusual for him to see.

When the editor screened the picture at his home, it so happened that one of his associates was on hand. Both were highly impressed with the little picture. The associate returned to the office the next day and found the picture still haunting his brain. The result was that he wrote a striking editorial and published it—an unusual tribute for a metropolitan newspaper to give to a single reel short subject.

"If you make it convenient for newspapermen who handle copy on your theatre to see your short subjects in advance," says Mr. Ealand, "there is no reason why much valuable newspaper reading matter—away from the advertising columns—will result."

His Shorts Are More Than Fillers

By C. M. Patterson

WILL STEEGE, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Great Falls, Mont., is a firm believer in the value of short subjects, properly put over, as an aid to box office receipts. Says Mr. Steege:

"I think short subjects should be advertised the same as your feature pictures. Too many exhibitors do not realize to just what extent different subjects interest their patrons. I am now speaking for the town in which I live and manage theatres. It is possible that in some other localities people may be different, but as a rule I think they are practically the same everywhere.

"When I have a feature comedy I always try to build up the balance of my program with a news, a novelty reel and a sport review. Quite often I have heard the remark from patrons going out, that they did not care for the feature but they got their money's worth with the comedy and short reels. Take the Pathe Review, for instance. Each week they take a different American city. I always make it a point to find out what city is going to appear in the Review that we are running and give it publicity. If you have any patrons who have been in that particular city or lived there, nine chances out of ten that one point will bring them in.

"Take a sport review. If it deals with the subject of thoroughbred horses, or swimming, or thoroughbred dogs, etc., let your patrons know it, because it may interest a particular class of people.

"At this time of year, and during the hot weather, a scenic of mountains, snow, etc., is always cool and refreshing to an audience and is always a nice little filler on any program."

Some time ago Mr. Steege proved his point on the worth of stepping out on a short subject, when he was running a "Felix" comedy with Douglas MacLean in "Going Up." He made a tie-up with a well located store, dressing up a window in black and white. Aeroplanes swung on cords from the top of the window. Felix bestrode the largest of these. Then there was a vast procession of Felixes in marching order, as the announcement card stated: "Felix on his way to see Douglas MacLean in 'Going Up' at the Liberty. He and Douglas MacLean are on the same bill. It's a laugh riot!"

Mr. Steege has a special method of exploiting the Felix subjects. He always arranges to run them on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, knowing that parents will bring or send their children on those nights because they do not interfere with schoolday bedtime schedules. He also arranges his feature bookings to be suitable to children, being careful not to have a picture that could give offense or arouse criticism on the part of parents. Felix is always given a musical presentation that delights the youngsters as well as the "oldsters."

In short, Mr. Steege builds his programs according to his belief that short subjects are just as important on a program as a feature.

Film Congress Stands Postponed; America "Too Busy"

By W. Stephen Bush

THE Great International Film Congress, arranged by the League of Nations, which was to have begun a three-day session in Paris next week has been postponed—some say for good, others claim that it will positively take place toward the middle of October. The three distinguished Frenchmen in whose hands had been placed the charge of sending out the invitations and preparing the program are very sure that the Congress will be held in October at the latest. None of these gentlemen, it must be borne in mind, is a practical film man. M. Julien Luchaire has an enviable reputation as a teacher and leader of intellectual movements in and out of France and is one of the experts in the cultural department of the League of Nations; the second, Mr. Frederick Cornelissen, headed a committee for "considering the international aspects of the film" appointed by the League of Nations, and the third is a member of the French Chamber of Deputies—M. Locquin, a gentleman known for his disinterested and competent judgment in all matters pertaining to art and culture.

It seems that the expectations of answers from the United States were somewhat disappointed. All the prominent people who had been invited were courteous enough to respond, but in many cases the response amounted to a request to be excused. Summing up the general tone and character of the American replies received by the committee, it would seem that everybody was "too busy" just at this time. Many of the answers declared that the director, being unable to leave his work at this time, would nevertheless be glad to send a substitute or transmit a paper which might be read to the members of the Congress. It is intended to make a new effort and a determined one to get the Americans to attend, for it is felt by all that without a strong and representative delegation from across the water the Congress would entirely lose its international character and the great purposes underlying the convocation of the Congress by the League of Nations, as I have outlined them in a previous letter, would be entirely defeated. One of these purposes which was emphasized anew by all three gentlemen in charge of the Congress, is to either abolish censorship through international co-operation of all the great producers of the world or to keep it within bounds and to hold the vast army of cranks and fanatics at a safe distance. It is proposed to enlist the full power of the League of Nations for this object.

"While the resolutions we might pass at this Congress," said one of the leaders to me, "are not vested with any legal force or authority, it must be remembered that a good deal can be accomplished through diplomatic channels which of course the League of Nations will always find open and willing to serve. The moral effect of our action, leaning as it does on the prestige of the League of Nations itself, is bound to be great throughout the civilized world, even in countries which do not at this time belong to the league.

"A strong and unanimous pronouncement against unfair methods might help us here in France particularly. We have a very bad custom here in regard to the censoring of films. According to common usage, any member in the Chamber of Deputies has it in his power to suppress any film that he does not like. He merely makes a motion to that effect and as a matter of parliamentary courtesy the house will always sustain him, irrespective of any party affiliations. The objections of the deputy need not be stated at all and his motives are not always ethical nor even political. It generally is just a whim.

"Thus, as you know, the wonderful film of your countryman showing the war of independence in which France took such an active part, was kept out of the French picture theatres for many years merely because some member of the Chamber did not like it. We are grateful to Moving Picture World for the attention it has given to our efforts and hope it will continue this friendly attitude."

A decided sensation has been caused in France, and indeed in all countries where the rapid new advance of American pictures is feared, by the announcement that Gaumont has made a five-year contract with Metro-Goldwyn for its entire program. M. Gaumont is not an easy man to interview and jokingly remarks that he does not want the general public to believe there is such a man as Gaumont, preferring to remain "in mysterious seclusion like Santa Claus."

From excellent sources, however, I am in a position to state that Gaumont has stopped producing for the present at least. He feels that with the increasing cost of production in France and with no market except that of France and some minor states, it is becoming increasingly difficult to find a profitable return of the investment. In reply to all kinds of criticism, both in the daily and in the trade press, the Gaumont offices declare that the contract was a business necessity as films of the right kind and in sufficient quantity were needed to keep the Gaumont theatres open.

The publication of the figures showing the export of American films into Europe in the course of the last few months has caused a good deal of nervous prostration in all countries which are still engaged in the manufacture of films. Nowhere is the cry of distress louder than in Germany. To think that the brave little spurts they have made of late have been so completely surpassed by the renewed efforts of American "invaders" simply breaks their hearts, and in the halls of the Reichstag one hears frantic demands for more protection of the native industry.

"The day is at hand," the journal says, "when the Americans with their unlimited resources will buy theatres in this city for their first-run exploitation and then all the key cities of the Reich will eventually belong to different American circuits beginning here in Berlin. The Americans will then exploit all their features themselves and any number of German film exchanges will go out of business. German production, which of late bids fair to revive and conquer new markets, will gradually dwindle and that will be the beginning of the end."

The paper suggests two remedies: One is to have the government come in and protect the domestic product; the other is to make only standard films of the highest quality. The latter remedy seems to be the better, but the prescription is hard to fill.

"Break" Reports Premature, Says Woodhull; Meet July 30

THE threat of William A. Steffes, Northwest Allied leader, to secede from the M. P. T. O. A. unless National President R. F. Woodhull called a directors' meeting in Chicago not later than July 15 has resulted only in the reiteration by Mr. Woodhull of the announcement that the regular directors' meeting will be held in Detroit on July 30. His statement follows:

"Acceptances to date indicate full meeting of the National Board of Directors, Detroit, July 30. Any reports of break prior to this meeting are manifestly premature and must be receiving encouragement from sources unfriendly to exhibitor organization."

Nothing further has been heard from Mr. Steffes.

A possible split in the organization has been a source of conversation everywhere, though not always credited. The Missouri and Kansas territory is apprehensive, according to MOVING PICTURE WORLD's correspondent, who quotes R. R. Biechele, a director of the M. P. T. O. A., president of the M. P.-T. O., Kansas Missouri, and a former Allied director, as saying:

"The meeting (in Detroit) may determine a great deal and, again, it may mean nothing. We have demanded that the national organization adopt an active program. Unless this is done it is only reasonable to presume that something will happen. Any rumor now concerning a possible split is premature. Everything will depend upon what is done at the Detroit meeting."

PRESIDENT R. F. WOODHULL

Poli and Paramount Consider Exhibition on Division Basis

CLOSELY following a denial from S. Z. Poli that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was to take over his theatres came the announcement in New Haven, Conn., on July 14 by Mr. Poli that negotiations for a working agreement between the Poli interests and Famous Players to obtain pictures jointly and exhibit them on a division basis through both circuits of theatres were under way. Mr. Poli intimated, however, that it was quite possible the proposed arrangement would not be effected.

Mr. Poli denied a report that he had acquired Gordon's Olympia Theatre in New Haven on July 15, the date that Famous Players took over the operation of the thirty-seven Gordon theatres in New England.

In connection with the contemplated arrangement between Famous Players and Poli is the fact that Poli shows Paramount pictures in all his theatres in New England, using this product almost exclusively. Of course, in such cities as Bridgeport, where he has more than one theatre, other producers are represented on the Poli screen, although more Paramount features are used than the films of other concerns. In New Haven, Paramount films are shown at the Bijou, while at Poli's Palace Universal and Metro-Goldwyn are shown.

Nathan Gordon, who retired from the active direction of the Gordon Olympia circuit on July 15, started in the show business in New Haven more than twenty-five years ago. He established one of the first picture theatres in the United States—the Park Theatre at Worcester, Mass.

HOGARD VS. CASSADY, MARION, KY.

It is reported from Marion, Ky., that W. P. Hogard, editor of the Crittenden Press, has filed suit in Circuit Court against Charles L. Cassady, formerly connected with the Aerodome Theatre, Marion, and S. M. Jenkins, of a utilities company, holding that following the destruction of the theatre by fire defendants secured $1,000 of insurance money, that Cassady endorsed the draft and turned it over to Jenkins in payment of a personal matter, without Hogard's knowledge or consent. It was alleged that Jenkins held a mortgage on Cassady's equity in the enterprise, but that the insurance was on the building and Hogard as well as Cassady were entitled to share in the insurance money.

LOUISVILLE YEGGMEN FAIL

Louisville, Ky., July 20.—Yeggmen made an unsuccessful effort to rob the Kentucky Theatre, on Fourth street, late Saturday night or early Sunday morning, opening two office safes but securing only a couple of rolls of admission tickets. Like many others, the company sends its daily receipts to hotel or bank vaults for safekeeping, and doesn't carry much cash overnight.

Letters to the Editor

Robert E. Welsh, Editor,
Moving Picture World:

I notice in several of the Chicago papers, also in the New York papers, under date of July 7, a news item to the effect that Judge Morgan of Chicago has issued a fugitive warrant against one Nat Royster, former manager of the LaSalle Theatre in Chicago and most recently a press agent in New York.

I would certainly deem it a great favor if you would inform your readers that there is no relationship between the Nat Royster in the above named news story and myself.

I have been in the South practically all of my life but have hundreds and hundreds of friends throughout the United States in the motion picture and legitimate theatrical business who might possibly become confused at the story in question, therefore I trust you will be kind enough to once more inform your readers that I am doing my best to put over a circuit of theatres for Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., have a wife and only one child and am thoroughly satisfied with said wife and child and do not care to leave them flat. I am enjoying the best of health in the performance of my daily work.

Thanking you and with very best wishes and kindest personal regards, I am

Testimonial Dinner to Independence, Not Sydney Cohen

The New York banquet designed as a testimonial to Sydney S. Cohen, past president and now chairman of the Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. A., by Independent producers and distributors will take the form of a dinner to independence, if Mr. Cohen's wishes are acceded to.

This is made clear in a letter from Mr. Cohen to Samuel Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, replying to the latter's communication to Mr. Cohen stating that Abraham Carlos, Oscar A. Price, Whitman Bennett, W. E. Shallenberger, Ben Amsterdam, J. G. Bachmann, Ray Johnston and Arthur James have accepted his invitation to join with him in arranging a testimonial dinner.

Declining to be singled out for especial honor, Mr. Cohen suggests that the plans "take the form of a dinner to independence, one that you can broadcast throughout the land, one that can focus the attention of the world on the fight we are waging for our freedom in this industry and to keep our screens free from the restraint and control of monopoly for our people."

Exhibitor Court Action to Test Worthiness of Uniform Contract

Lying on the Desk

Joseph M. Seider's "dare" to Will Hays to arrange for a debate on the uniform contract has not yet officially come to Mr. Hays' attention and therefore no cognizance of Mr. Seider's open letter will probably be taken until the head of the M. P. P. D. A. returns to New York City from California.

C. C. Pettijohn, attorney of the producers' organization, said on Monday of this week that the Seider letter was lying on his desk awaiting Mr. Hays' return. Other mail has been forwarded to Mr. Hays in the West but the Seider letter was not, therefore the conclusion is drawn that the Hays organization thinks that the matter can wait a while. In fact, since Nathan Burkan and Gabriel Hess, authorities with Mr. Pettijohn on arbitration matters, are on vacations, the chances are that there will be little doing in an arbitration way for a few weeks.

The attitude of the Hays organization toward the Seider letter was announced at the weekly meeting of Hays executives with trade paper representatives. Various matters were discussed, with Courtland Smith presiding, but conversation on each one was prefaced by the request that it be kept confidential.

PLAYHOUSE BOOKS "LEGITIMATE"

A new policy has been adopted at the Great Neck Playhouse by Irving M. Lesser, owner, whereby not only legitimate plays which are billed for Broadway but also those which already have played Broadway will be seen there. In short, the Great Neck Playhouse now will take its place with the legitimate theatres.

This innovation for a motion picture theatre was brought about by Lesser through a working alliance with such producers as John Golden, Sam Harris, Arthur Hopkins, A. L. Erlanger, the Selwyns and the Shuberts.

Wellenbrink of New Jersey Involved in Legal Dispute With Apollo Exchange—Seider Declares Hays Evades Debate

AN announcement by Joseph M. Seider, chairman of the Committee on Contracts of the M. P. T. O. A. and president of the New Jersey organization, declares that Will Hays has "ignored" his challenge to debate the present arbitration system and that its merits will now be decided in the courts. The case is the Apollo Exchange of New York versus Harry H. Wellenbrink, a New Jersey exhibitor. Behind the plaintiff stands the legal array of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York and behind the defendant that of the exhibitor organization. The case is set on the calendar for Friday, July 24, in the Supreme Court of New York, New York County. "Thereby," says Mr. Seider, "a legal determination of the validity of the high-priced clause will be obtained in spite of the attitude of the Hays organization."

"We feel that we have exhausted every effort to show the merits of our claims to those in whose hands lies the power to give to the theatre owners of the country an equitable contract, and based on a fair contract, arbitration, unencumbered by rules and procedure that take away from the theatre owner his property rights.

"It was our sincere hope that this situation would be settled within the industry. What fairer method could there be than a debate on the merits? Yet Mr. Hays has seen fit to ignore our invitation. We know that Mr. Hays is not in town, but his office has not even extended us the courtesy of acknowledging the receipt of our letter. Further, they have caused statements to be printed to the effect that they will ignore our offer to debate the issues.

"The challenge to Mr. Hays to debate the issues involved is equal to an offer to arbitrate the shortcomings of the present arbitration system, predicated on an unfair contract.

"We feel that we are justified in taking steps to compel a legal determination of our rights. Our members must be protected. We cannot continue longer without relief of the condition of terrorism in our industry, particularly as it relates to dealings arising out of the purchase and booking of pictures.

"Mr. W. Gavazzi King, in his report to the British organization on the Milwaukee Convention, stated in part: 'But the M. P. T. O. has been negotiating with the Renters organization and a standard contract of abnormal length and of a character which would have produced a revolt amongst your members has been framed.' Of course the M. P. T. O. of America is not responsible for the contract. It has consistently refused to accept it.

"Mr. Pettijohn, attorney for the Hays organization and the Film Board of Trade, has repeatedly, forcibly stated that they want 'teeth' in the arbitration clause. They paid $10,000 to a firm of lawyers, outside of their organization, to put the 'teeth' in.

"The reason so much money was paid for the drafting of this one clause is that the procedure is illegal. The great desire for the 'teeth' in the clause, by the Hays organization, was the cause for the effort to obtain from high-priced lawyers some kind of clause that would pass legal scrutiny. This, to our minds, is the reason for the fear of the Hays organization to submit the question to an unbiased and equitable tribunal. They would prefer to rely on the condition of terrorism now prevalent—on their belief that the theatre owner is a coward and would not resist—on the belief that the theatre owner is not organized.

"The theatre owner is organized and he will resist and his organization is behind him to the extent of all its resources.

"In order to collect from an exhibitor, who denies the right of the distributor to cite him before the arbitration board, claiming that he had been compelled to sign the contract with the arbitration clause, under the penalty that he would not be sold any film, the Film Boards of Trade, controlled by the Hays organization, obtain a judgment by default and proceed to collect this judgment, by all members of the Film Board of Trade concertedly refusing the theatre owner film. The Film Boards of Trade claim the right to this procedure under the arbitration clause for the drawing of which they paid $10,000.

"But this is 1925. The New York F. I. L. M. Club tried this on Harry H. Wellenbrink, who operates three theatres in New Jersey. Mr. Wellenbrink refused to become terrorized. He came to his organization for protection. Mr. Wellenbrink acceded to the demands of all the members of the New York F. I. L. M. Club with whom he did business and put up with each exchange $250 and had faith in himself and in his being right and in his organization.

"Finding that Mr. Wellenbrink refused to become 'buffaloed' or scared by the bugaboo, the Apollo Exchange, through the attorney for the F. I. L. M. Club, Louis Phillips, did what they could and should have done in the first place. They applied to the courts for an order compelling arbitration. Whether they will receive such an order will soon be determined. They surely would receive the order compelling arbitration if their contract were equitable, if their procedure were fair, if they would not concertedly force the the-

McCormick General Manager Of First National on Coast

JOHN E. McCORMICK has been appointed general manager of West Coast productions of First National Pictures, Inc., in which capacity he will be the executive head of First National's own units on the West Coast, according to an announcement just made by General Manager Richard A. Rowland. He will continue to act as Coast representative of First National in dealings with independent producers.

On his return to Los Angeles last week, Mr. McCormick assumed his new office and already is placing in operation plans for drawing First National's own producing units closer together. It is probable that in the near future three or four units will be working continuously at the Coast studios. Announcements of other equally important developments in the production branch of First National Pictures are expected within the next few weeks.

Since the engagement of June Mathis as scenario editor on the Coast, Miss Mathis and Mr. McCormick have worked in the closest harmony, not only in the selection of story material, but in all phases of production. The present plan of operation, according to Mr. Rowland, is calculated to bring Mr. McCormick and Miss Mathis into even closer partnership in the development of First National product. Whether or not there will be other changes or additions to the Coast studio personnel has not been disclosed.

"The rise of Mr. McCormick to his present position of responsibility is entirely due to his display of merit since his association with First National," said Mr. Rowland. "Mr. McCormick has been with this company for about five years, during which period he has spent most of his time on the Coast as our representative. He has shown executive ability of the highest order, has displayed unusual initiative and has been an instrumental factor in the making of many of our finest pictures. Our executives have every confidence in his ability to provide exhibitors with productions that they will be proud to show. There is no more loyal or conscientious worker in the organization and it is a source of personal gratification to me that he should be given this opportunity."

In commenting on his new work, Mr. McCormick said that he will bend every effort toward preserving the unity of action which now exists in First National. He said that everything is in readiness at the studios for the most active season in the history of the company.

Another Fox Suit Over Art Mix Advertising

Leaving no legal stone unturned to obviate confusion in the minds of the moving picture public in connection with the William Fox Productions of Tom Mix pictures, another suit has been filed in Denver by Fox Film Corporation against the distributor and exhibitor of Art Mix Production to restrain the exhibition and advertising of Art Mix Productions by the Colonial Theatre of Denver in a "misleading manner."

Only recently Art Mix Productions, Inc., was enjoined by a California court from advertising pictures under the title "Art Mix" in such manner as to create the impression that "Art Mix" is a motion picture actor, and a violation of the order of the court led to a subsequent proceeding in contempt in which the defendants were fined. Another similar suit was instituted in the United States Court, Southern California District, against William (Bill) Mix Productions, and that corporation was likewise restrained from the use of their chosen title "Mix" in a manner that might indicate that an actor by the name of "Mix" was appearing in their pictures.

REGAL HITTERS WIN

The baseball team of Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, captured the first half of the scheduled series of the Toronto Motion Picture Baseball League with a total of four wins and two losses. Regal gained the final lead when Famous Players team walloped First National in the last game of the first series by 8 to 6, thus forcing First National into second place with three wins and three losses. Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., tied with First National with a similar standing and Famous Players Film Corporation finished in fourth place with two victories and four defeats. In the last game played by Regals they lost to Famous-Lasky by 12 to 10.

atre owner to sign the contract with the arbitration clause under the penalty of not receiving any film. Thus it is clear that there is no need of this $10,000 clause that makes the Film Board of Trade arbitration system both the judge and the sheriff. They render the judgment and then proceed to collect it.

Apollo vs. Wellmont

"The case referred to is now pending in the Supreme Court of the State of New York, New York County. The title is 'Apollo Exchange, Inc., plaintiff, versus Wellmont Theatre, Inc., defendant.' It is scheduled for hearing next Friday. Our attorney, Norman H. Samuelson, is appearing for our member. Additional counsel has been engaged, who will make their appearance in due time. In addition, our attorney has been instructed to prepare a complaint in an action in the United States Court for damages sustained by Mr. Wellenbrink through exchanges at the same time refusing him film, unless he paid the default judgment or deposited with each of them the sum of $250. In this action the arbitrators not selected by Mr. Wellenbrink, who took the law in their own hands and gave a default judgment, will be included.

"Thereby a legal determination of the validity of the high-priced clause will be obtained in spite of the attitude of the Hays organization. Just another form of debate, only officially before the same court, as suggested in my letter. The only difference is that in this way the decision will be absolutely binding. Just another way of obtaining for the theatre owner a square deal, only more expensive, and it is thrashed out in public instead of within the industry.

Editors Silent

"Although these matters have been pending for a long time, in fact before the Milwaukee convention, the trade paper editors have refrained from editorial comment on this troublesome subject. We are sorry. The investment of the theatre owner, who is the outlet of the production of this industry, is jeopardized and yet the unbiased branch of this industry is silent.

"The fight is not the writer's. The fine tribute received by him during and after the New Jersey convention would satisfy the most vain person and, therefore, he could not truthfully be charged with seeking publicity. It is the very existence of the theatre owner that is at stake. This and the availability to him of quality product.

Elliott Group "Square"

"Mr. Elliott's group apparently are playing square. When a fair contract and a good system of arbitration is agreed upon, when the members of the Independent Producers and Distributors of America resign from the F. I. L. M. Club or Film Boards of Trade consisting of both distributors and exhibitors, when a penalty is placed for the bringing of unmeritorious claims and when the custom of distributors bringing claims promiscuously in amounts of $2.50 up is stopped, then the theatre owner will have the choice of buying from the company giving him a square deal and which does not take away from him the property rights granted him by law."

ROBERT S. HORSLEY

Robert S. Horsley has resigned as New York exchange manager for Warner Bros. His future plans are to be announced soon. He is considering three offers. Horsley has been associated with the industry for more than sixteen years. For eight years he was attached to the Vitagraph organization, first as "graveyard territory" salesman in New York State, then in Brooklyn and later as sales representative in New York City alone. Vitagraph made him branch manager in Philadelphia. After a year there he returned to New York as local exchange manager for Vitagraph. That was a year and a half ago. He is one of the best liked men in the motion picture business.

Harry Reichenbach for President of the A. M. P. A.

At its closed business meeting at the White Horse Tavern at noon on July 16 the nominating committee appointed by officials of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., presented their nominations for officers for the ensuing year. The committee consisted of P. A. Parsons, chairman; Bert Adler, Fred Baer, Paul Gulick, Victor Chapiro, C. L. Yearsley and Lon Young.

The following names were presented as the sole and unanimous choice of the committee: For president—Harry Reichenbach; for vice-president—Jerome Beatty; for treasurer—Charles Einfeld; for secretary—Russell Holman. For five members of the board of directors—Glendon Allvine, Walter Eberhardt, Charles Barrell, E. O. Brooks and Gordon White. For members of the auditing committee—Sam Palmer, chairman; H. C. Bate, Hal Howe. For managing editor of the A. M. P. A. Bulletin, W. E. Mulligan. For business manager of the Bulletin—Ed McNamee. For the finance committee—Edward Klein, Mel Shauer and Lon Young. For trustees of treasurer's fund—Paul Gulick, three years; Victor Shapiro, two years; P. A. Parsons, one year.

FATHER OF WEISS BROTHERS DIES

It is with great regret that Louis Weiss announces the death, after a protracted illness, of his father, Samuel Weiss, at the age of seventy, on Friday, July 17.

The late Mr. Weiss was born in Austria-Hungary and came to this country in his early youth. He was retired from active business during the past fifteen years. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Lena Weiss; his sons, Messrs. Adolph, Max and Louis Weiss, and a daughter, Mrs. Anna Kosack.

Fox News Is Now Operating Its Own Airplane Service

"I CHRISTEN thee Fox News," said Mrs. William Fox as she smashed a bottle against the propeller of a glistening Oriole at Fox News Hangar at Curtiss Field, Mineola, L. I., this week, and then waved a greeting as Lieutenant George A. Wies, Jr., the pilot, sent the machine into the air and soared towards New York on its maiden trip.

On either side flew a squadron of eight other Curtiss machines as escorts and not less than 1,000 men and women stood about Mrs. Fox and joined with her in waving congratulations as this unique step forward in commercial aviation was taken.

With the launching of this plane, Mrs. Fox participated in a most interesting function, for the machine is the property of Fox Film Corporation. It will be operated solely in the interests of Fox News and dedicated to the gathering and distributing of pictures for news reels. With it awaiting instant call to speed to some distant point, Fox News becomes the only news-gathering agency in the world to maintain a hangar and operate its own plane.

Evidently the unusual importance of the event was appreciated by those who were invited to attend the christening of the "ship." Friends and relatives of Mrs. Fox were present in large numbers; representatives of trade and technical motion picture magazines and newspapers, general newspapers, state and city officials, members of aeronautical societies, many men prominent in the motion pictures and theatrical world and even more whose lives are devoted to forwarding aviation.

Especially enthusiastic were the leading executives and experts of the Curtiss Aviation Company. They had made an earnest study of the unusual tasks a plane devoted to news-gathering would be called upon to perform. As night flying is hazardous, many suggestions tending to increase safety and efficiency had been made, and the men who had perfected the additional safeguards were present to inspect and to explain.

"She's a beauty," said a Curtiss engineer as the yellow-bodied machine passed out of sight. "With favorable conditions, Lieut. Wies can carry the men to a point 250 miles distant in 160 minutes. The plane will do more than 100 miles an hour on account of that newly devised metal propeller."

Speed is the requisite in news-gathering, but safety has been added to speed in this machine. It is equipped with three parachutes for pilot and cameramen passengers, flares for night landings, compass, speed and altitude indicators and balloon tires on landing gear. A radical improvement has been made through the installation of an extra "gas" tank which broadens the cruising radius from 400 to 750 miles. Thus equipped, the "Fox News" can make a non-stop flight from New York to Chicago in seven hours, or cross the continent with but two stops for "gas" and oil, it is claimed.

Chicago Asks Dawes to Lead Greater Movie Season Parade

CHARLES G. DAWES, Vice-President, has been invited by Will H. Hays to lead the "Greater Movie Season" parade, planned for August 1 as a "curtain raiser" for the Chicago campaign, it is announced by Ralph T. Kettering, general manager. According to Russell Moon, chairman of the arrangements, the parade promises to be the most unusual and interesting ever held in Chicago, as animated representations of products made and distributed here, as well as many novel features, will be shown.

Preceding Vice-President Dawes and Mr. Hays, will be a beautiful floral float provided by the Allied Florists' Association for the King and Queen of the movies, to be elected in a popular contest. Thousands of dollars worth of flowers will be strewed along the line of march. Perfume will also be sprayed along the route, making it the first perfumed parade the world has ever had.

Another feature of the parade will be the Chicago Evening American photographer's float, who will take pictures along the road of the crowds. These pictures will be published in the Silver Jubilee section of the American.

The post-office department is providing an unusual demonstration. The mail carrier's band will be followed by mail trucks with mail clerks at work showing how mail is sorted. This will be followed by the first air-mail plane to make the night trip from Chicago to New York.

The Yellow Cab Company is placing a series of cabs in the parade, the first being one of the initial cabs, the last will be the latest model, so as to show the progress made in taxi transportation.

The Western Union Telegraph Company will have its messenger boys' band, followed by mounted messengers and a float depicting the progress of message delivery from the days of the old pony express. The Daily Newsboys' band, as well as military and civic organization bands, will be in the parade.

Twenty noted film stars are coming from Hollywood and New York. Floats will also be filled with girls from the musical comedy shows now playing in Chicago.

The opening of the campaign in Chicago will culminate in three great movie balls, which will be attended by Will Hays and the visiting stars. During August local theatres will make every endeavor to show not only the best of the feature films but will also provide exceptional travel, science and news pictures.

JOHN E. WEIER DEAD

John E. Weier, editor of Fox Folks, the Fox Film Corporation monthly magazine, has passed on. The end came with dramatic suddenness on July 17. He was stricken with apoplexy while in a tea room near his home in Flushing and died shortly after being taken to the hospital.

Like most veterans, Weier died in the harness. He was at the Fox offices spreading his irrepressible cheerfulness the day before and talked hopefully of plans for the future. His sudden end left his legions of friends in the newspaper and moving picture fields stunned. He is survived by a wife and two sons.

Film Players' Frolic to Aid Unfortunate People of Films

AN unusual social event in the form of a "Midsummer Night's Frolic" is to be given by a group of prominent film stars at the Hotel Astor, Wednesday evening, July 29, for the benefit of the recently organized Film Players' Relief Fund, according to a statement issued by James Kirkwood, chairman of the Supervisory Board of fund.

Raymond Hitchcock is to be master of ceremonies for the affair, which is to be a midnight supper dance and entertainment, so the statement reads, in which many film stars and stage celebrities will personally appear in novel and impromptu acts. The affair is open to the public. Tickets, including supper and all other features of the frolic, are $25 each; private tables, seating six, $150.

Among the film and stage stars named as sponsoring the affair are included James Kirkwood, Ethel Barrymore, Barbara La Marr, Hope Hampton, Holbrook Blinn, Raymond Hitchcock, Lila Lee, Fay Templeton, Sigrid Holmquist, Frank McGlynn, Johnny Hines, Otto Kruger, Nita Naldi, Maurice Costello, Cecilia Loftus, Ben Lyon and Flora Le Breton.

"The function of the Film Players' Relief Fund, for which the affair is being given," the statement says, "is to do for the unfortunate people of the films what the Actors Fund does for the unfortunates of the speaking stage. As there is an immensely greater number of people engaged in supplying amusement and entertainment to the public on the screen than on the speaking stage, there is a correspondingly larger number of cases of distress requiring relief in the films than among other actor folk.

"A special work of the fund is to return disillusioned 'film-struck' girls to their homes. These are by far the most unfortunate cases coming to our attention, and are caused by the constant flow of ambitious young girls to the film centers of the country seeking fame and fortune on the silver screen. Perhaps one in a thousand of them has even a chance of success; the other 999 are foredoomed to failure and blasted hopes. It is in this moment of disillusionment their need is greatest for the sympathetic ministration of an understanding friend. It is the function of the Relief Fund to supply this need and to either find these young friends suitable employment or return them to their homes."

Thomson of F. B. O. Discusses "Bread and Butter" Pictures

By SUMNER SMITH

AFTER talking to Major H. C. S. Thomson, managing director of F. B. O., one cannot but feel that the opportunity of a lifetime lies in becoming a small-town exhibitor. And the feeling is strengthened by seeing the pictures that F. B. O. is getting out. "Bread and butter pictures," Major Thomson calls them, meaning that, except for a dozen or so higher-priced ones, F. B. O. is specializing in good entertainment to exhibitors who cannot afford the great rentals asked nowadays for many features.

The conversation turned to a film man's recent declaration (He isn't with F. B. O.) that F. B. O. signs more New York City contracts than any other distributor.

"That may be so," Major Thomson said. "Of course, because of our moderate rentals, we wouldn't claim the greatest cash business in New York, but I do know that we are signing a tremendous number of contracts, not only in a single locality like New York but throughout the country. To date, 'The Third Alarm' contracts number 9,200, and our older films average 5,500.

"We are specializing in offering the smaller houses a complete change of program. Our position is sound and we are making satisfactory profits. We are operating on a mind-your-own-business and live-and-let-live policy toward exhibitors and toward other producers and distributors, and we are going to continue to do so.

"The western studios are beehives of activity, getting out the fifty and more pictures scheduled for the coming year. I was three weeks on the West Coast and I was impressed by the results our men are attaining. Their hard work and co-operative spirit are gaining rapid results. In fact, I'm proud of the organization. There are no internal politics and the boys all pull together. We have been fortunate in our work and are making better and better pictures. 'Smooth as Satin,' with Evelyn Brent, played the Capitol here. It was a program picture and it is being sold in a series, but it was good enough for the Capitol. Our only hard blow recently was the sad death of Harry Berman. We miss him."

F. B. O.'s product will range from fifty to sixty pictures a year. The company has Fred Thomson and his horse, Silver King, in westerns, Bob Custer in westerns and a new western "find" in the person of Tom Tyler, who has just started his first picture. "Lefty" Flynn will supply comedy-dramas, Evelyn Brent a series of melodramas and Richard Talmadge stunt dramas. There may be a big western special with Fred Thomson. Twelve Gold Bond specials, designed to especially attract the small-town exhibitors, will be made. Among these will be two Laura Jean Libby stories, an Emory Johnson newspaper story and several melodramas, to say nothing of "Drusilla with a Million," "Parisian Nights" and "If Marriage Fails," which have been completed.

Other product will include the Bray cartoons, twenty-four two-reelers of the type of "Fighting Blood" and twenty-six slapstick comedies.

BRITISH EXECUTIVE HERE

W. A. Lott, head of the print department of First National Pictures, Ltd., London, arrived in New York last Wednesday, aboard the Homeric. His visit was for the purpose of gaining a thorough knowledge of the manner in which the home office print department is handled, and he hopes to take many new ideas back with him. To use his own words, Mr. Lott feels that his end of the business can be much improved upon, and it is his intention of bringing his department up to the standard set by the American office.

Wholesale Murder

Every craft has its own language and the bill-posting profession is no exception to the rule.

A note written by H. R. ("Dutch") Reimer some time ago to his boss, referring to advance three-sheet billing in San Francisco, read:

"I have Galli-Curci in a panel at the Civic Auditorium and will let her live another week. Monday I will kill Heifitz at Post and Powell and will cover him with Ysaye-Elman. The fifteen Galli-Curcis will be dead in Oakland the 21st."

AN EDUCATIONAL JAM

What promises to become a lively public issue has developed at Ottawa, Ontario, through the request of the Amusements Branch of the Ontario Provincial Treasurer's Department at Toronto, that the Ottawa School Board take out theatre licenses for each of its fifteen public schools possessing an assembly hall.

The matter came to a head when a letter was received from the Provincial Government demanding that theatre licenses be applied for at the regular annual fee for the numerous schools because of the amusement features which were being staged in the school halls. The secretary of the Ottawa School Board replied that any performances held in the schools had been for educational and charitable purposes. It was reported to the school board that the committee of management for the Ottawa schools had decided not to obtain the theatre licenses.

Coming and Going

J. D. Williams will sail on July 25 for Europe, taking with him the foreign print of "Cobra."

Dr. A. H. Giannini of the East River National Bank will sail soon for a vacation abroad.

Thomas Meighan and a company of fifteen will sail on July 25 to film "Shamrock" in Ireland.

Dallas Fitzgerald is on his way east to buy two Broadway stage plays.

John Leroy Johnson of the Frank Lloyd organization is in New York with a print of "Winds of Chance."

L. J. Durmour, vice-president of Standard Cinema Corporation, left New York for Hollywood to confer with Joe Rock about production plans for the series of thirteen Blue Ribbon and thirteen Parisian Standard comedies that Rock is producing for F. B. O. release.

M. J. Mintz, inventor and patentee of the "Thematic Music Cue Sheet," is again back at his desk after an illness which confined him to his bed for more than two weeks.

I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, who has been personally supervising all production of his company in Los Angeles, arrived in New York this week with three recently completed productions. He intends to remain in New York for several weeks before returning to California to start production on two new specials, "Winning the Futurity" and "The Transcontinental Limited," and the third Charles Ray picture, as yet unnamed.

Gloria Swanson left Hollywood for New York on July 18 to make "Stage Struck." Allan Dwan will direct.

A tribute to a triumph

NOT long since Pathe publicly voiced appreciation for the splendid and most unusual spirit displayed by the Harold Lloyd Corporation in spending upon "THE FRESHMAN," their last picture under the Pathe contract, a sum far exceeding their contractual obligation.

Now Pathe desires, in all sincerity, to voice equal appreciation of the fact that this picture, representing a cost far beyond the producer's obligation, represents also a supreme effort in feature comedy making, a really monumental achievement in mirth-creation.

Pathe congratulates Mr. Lloyd personally and the Harold Lloyd Corporation upon their greatest triumph,—"THE FRESHMAN."

Pathe assures exhibitors of its profound conviction that "THE FRESHMAN" is not only Mr. Lloyd's greatest picture, but also the greatest picture and the greatest business-getting picture this business has ever seen.

Pathe is proud to present this supreme testimonial of the friendship and intimate relations enjoyed for eleven years with Harold Lloyd.

Shallenberger Sees Success Of the Independent Movement

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation and one of the most important figures among the independent distributors and producers of motion pictures, says:

"The present movement of the independent producers with the co-operation of the motion Picture Theatre Owners will result in the successful attainment of an objective that will stimulate box office activity and divide the industry into its two natural, component parts, namely, the production end in the hands of producers and the operation of theatres resting solely with the theatre owners. This will bring about a solid and permanent perpetuation of the industry in its entirety."

Mr. Shallenberger continues: "The history of any large industry, whether it be the manufacture of steel, textile products, railroads or any other industrial activity, discloses that when competition is throttled, quality output is lessened.

"No less an authority than Judge Elbert Gary, chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation, has said repeatedly, 'It is not the policy nor the intent of this company to monopolize the steel industry. On the other hand competition is invited, as it is rivalry with other producers that brings about an activity that keeps our selling organization on their toes and the manufacturing department keenly alive to the importance of keeping up the quality of product as well as more efficient and economical cost of manufacture.'

"This country has grown too large for any one man or group to control any particular branch of our industrial and commercial life. The independent producer of motion pictures asks that he be permitted to enter into legitimate competition with other organizations and that price and quality of product be the determining factors of success.

"The spirit of live and let live is too thoroughly American to be killed by any group or organization or individual. The United States Government has always and still insists to this day that no nation or nations can close the doors of commerce to American products. It is this policy of the perpetuation and maintenance of the open door which Uncle Sam stands for. So strong is our government committed to the open door that time and again our presidents have told the world that men and money and all other resources of our government are committed to freedom of commerce.

"The independent motion picture producers demand as their inalienable right as American citizens and American institutions to sell their goods within the borders of the United States to any exhibitor on a basis of quality of product and price.

"The exhibitor whose theatre is his only means of income and livelihood is also vitally concerned with the policy of the open door. With the present tendency of the large picture companies coralling theatres, it is only a question of time if they be permitted to continue when the independent exhibitor will be as extinct as the dodo. There are enough independent theatres in the United States who, if they booked independent pictures in the same numbers as they have booked trust pictures in the past, could within six months bring about an entire change of present and possible future conditions so that from henceforth the independent theatres will never need to fear dictation or possible ownership at the hands of inimical interests."

The chain store idea, concludes Mr. Shallenberger, has been made possible in the grocery business by the apathy of the individual grocer, and it is up to the independent exhibitor to see that it does not swallow the motion picture industry, by "energetically watching his rights and privileges instead of sleeping on his opportunities."

DAVID SELZNICK WITH DAVIS

David J. Selznick, one of Pittsburgh's best known exchangemen, having for years managed the Selznick exchange, and more recently conducting his own exchange, known as the Preferred Pictures, Inc., has deserted the ranks of the exchangemen and entered the theatre end of the business. He has been selected by Harry Davis, head of the Harry Davis Enterprises, to act as his assistant and to be a general supervisor of the company, which controls several picture theatres, as well as a number of legitimate houses.

"Dave" will look after the countless details necessary to the operation of a chain of picture theatres, and will also do the buying for practically all of the houses. He is a brother to Lewis J. Selznick, at one time head of the old Selznick Pictures Corporation.

Public Relations Department Announced by Pathe Exchange

A DEPARTMENT of Public Relations is being established by Pathe to render personal contact service to exhibitors, Elmer Pearson, vice-president and general manager of the distributing concern, announced this week. To direct this new work Mr. Pearson has engaged Miss Regge Doran, who inaugurated the idea with the West Coast Theatre Circuit in California, where the Public Relations Department was a highly successful factor in building up goodwill as well as increased box-office returns.

According to Mr. Pearson, Pathe believes that they can go further in aiding exhibitors by the type of personal contact service than by limiting the co-operation merely to the regularly accepted forms of publicity and advertising. The Department of Public Relations, although a separate entity, will work in close co-operation with the Exploitation, Publicity and Advertising Departments of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

In citing Miss Doran's work on the Pacific Coast, Mr. Pearson recalled one example which was especially beneficial to exhibitors and motion pictures generally in California. In this instance, Miss Doran so interested a prominent social group in the real purpose of motion picture entertainment that the entire body and its state affiliations backed her work and adopted the excellent slogan, "Make the Best Pictures Pay." As the well-worded slogan suggests, the best way to make pictures better is for patrons to support the theatres showing the best pictures and thus encourage the continued production of higher calibre films. Miss Doran will join Pathe on August 3.

BREAK GROUND FOR NEW HOUSE

On Friday, July 18, the wrecking crew started razing the City Hall at Owosso, Mich., which site is to be utilized for the new 1,200-seat Capitol Theatre, which will be operated by the Butterfield interests. The ceremony of the breaking of the ground will take place on August 1. Plans call for completion of the theatre by the middle of December, and the formal opening will take place during the Christmas holidays.

Plans for the new theatre at Ann Arbor, Michigan, are being completed, and Colonel Butterfield announces that construction work will be under way by fall. Also that work on the new Capitol Theatre at Flint will commence in the very near future.

Metro-Goldwyn May Be Buyers of Kansas City Site

A block of boulevard frontage at the northeast corner of Linwood boulevard and Troost avenue, Kansas City, has been designated as the sit for a fourteen-story shop building and the largest picture theatre in Kansas City, a 90-day option to purchase the tract having been given by M. H. Cohen of Des Moines to W. C. Gumm, who was represented by Al Finklestein of the Harry Finklestein Realty and Theatres Company. The price stipulated was $500,000.

It has been persistently rumored in Kansas City for the last two months that Metro-Goldwyn was negotiating for a large suburban theatre. Mr. Gumm admitted negotiations were pending for the leasing of the theatre to a large producer but declined to name the company.

Plans are being prepared by H. Alexander Drake, architect. They provide for a theatre on the ground floor level, seating 3,760. The theatre stage, as outlined, would be one of the largest in the city, being adequate for the largest of prologues. The estimated cost of the building, as shown in the architect's plans, would be $2,500,000, which, with the ground, would be a total investment of $3,000,000. A steel frame will support the building, according to Mr. Drake, the exterior walls to be of light cream colored brick and terra cotta. Construction, it is said, will begin in September.

THALBERG RETURNS TO STUDIOS

Irving G. Thalberg has returned to the Culver City studios, where he has resumed his administrative duties as associate executive after an absence of sveeral weeks due to an attack of influenza. His return was the occasion of considerable enthusiasm throughout the studios, Louis B. Mayer and Harry Rapf giving a luncheon in his honor. Mr. Thalberg spent a week on the golf links at Coronado just before returning to his work and is now again in excellent health.

Chicago Theatre to Have Jeweled Dome, Radio Station

Another huge picture theatre is projected for Chicago's West Side. This time it is the Marks Brothers who have the project in hand. The house will be called the Paradise Theatre and will seat 5,000.

Features will be a jeweled dome, a huge stage for presentations and vaudeville acts and a broadcasting station.

The site selected is on the north side of Madison street, 350 feet west of Crawford avenue, and the plans are by J. H. Woodworth and Son, and Kenneth A. Gordon. Louis L. and Meyer S. Marks are the owners of the Marks circuit. They have a large building program outlined for the coming year.

COMPANY DISSOLVED

The Chaplin-Mayer Picture Company of New York, voluntarily dissolved through the action of its board of directors, filed papers to this effect last week with the secretary of state at Albany. The company was incorporated on September 30, 1919, with a capitalization amounting to $1,000,000. The officers included Louis B. Mayer, Hollywood, president; Colman Levin, Boston, vice-president; J. Robert Rubin, New York, secretary, and Oscar Grosberg, Boston, treasurer.

NO CHANGES IN EAST SIDE HOUSES

Charles Steiner, president of the Allwon Corporation, New York City, announced that there had been no change whatsoever, although rumors would have it, in the ownership of the East Side theatres controlled by the aforementioned corporation. The Allwon group includes the New Delancy, the Florence, New 14th Street, Sunshine, Atlantic and Casion Theatres.

LEE HEADS JERSEY TERRITORY

Joseph Lee will take charge as New Jersey sales manager for Fox Film Corporation, next Monday, leaving a similar position with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Announcement that Mr. Lee had been engaged was made July 10 by Harry H. Buxbaum, the new manager of the Fox New York exchange.

Real Picture-Selling Idea

Did you notice that eight-page Metro-Goldwyn insert up front? It's our idea of a real picture-selling idea—presented in a forceful and unusual manner. It is the work of Si Seadler, now advertising manager of Metro-Goldwyn, who has been associated with Howard Dietz, Director of Advertising and Publicity, since the days of the old Goldwyn company.—B. TO START ON WARNER'S THEATRE

Plans have been completed and given the approval of H. M. Warner for the new Warner's Hollywood Theatre at Hollywood Boulevard and Wilcox Avenue. Work will start on the building in sixty days.

The theatre itself is to be a modern style of architecture and its seating capacity will be 3,600. The building will be four stories in height and will house in addition to the theatre auditorium, an immense ballroom, a roof garden and promenade, with the balance of the structure devoted to high-class shops and offices.

There will be a huge stage, capable of accommodating the most elaborate prologue or stage presentations. The orchestra pit will be fashioned to accommodate 100 pieces. An order has been placed for a mammoth organ. Plans are also under consideration to transfer the Warner radio broadcasting station to the new theatre so that the entire country may have an opportunity to hear the talent and music offered.

MARCUS—MARCUS. MARK US!

Freda A. Marcus, private secretary to Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, has been married to the owner of the Woodbridge Theatre, in Woodbridge, N. J. Freda's new name is the same as the old, only she is "Mrs." now, not "Miss." Many friends of the Jans offices expressed their disappointment on learning that Freda, who joined the Jans organization in 1914, had resigned.

MRS. J. S. BURKS DIES

Mrs. Jean S. Burks, the wife of A. Landon Burks, exploiteer on the home office exploitation staff of the Universal Pictures Corporation, died recently at her home in New York City as the result of cancer. She had suffered for many months. The Burks were married eight years ago. There is one child, a boy of 5. Interment was in the Lutheran Cemetery, Brooklyn.

KENNETH HARLAN HAS OPERATION

Warner Bros. received word at their New York office this week that Kenneth Harlan, who has just been appearing in "Ranger of The Big Pines," was recovering in St. Vincent's Hospital, Hollywood, from an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Harlan, who is the husband of Marie Prevost, was taken with an acute attack of the ailment last Saturday.

The Rudolph Valentino Medal for Screen Acting is presented to John Barrymore in Hollywood with elaborate ceremonies. The decision was made by a vote of the leading critics of the country. Barrymore won with his performance in "Beau Brummel," rated the best of any picture generally released in 1924. State Rights Sales

William Skirboll, president of the Skirboll Gold Seal Productions with headquarters at Cleveland has acquired the territorial rights for the state of Ohio for Henry Ginsberg productions, Banner Productions and Royal pictures.

A branch office of Skirboll productions has also been established at Cincinnati to facilitate shipments and service to exhibitors.

Incorporations

Renewed activity in the number of companies incorporating and entering the motion picture business was evident last week, when the secretary of state of New York issued ten charters to companies proposing to engage in the business. This shows a good record for the summer months, both in the number of companies filing papers and in the amount of capitalization represented. The ten companies were: Hornell Motion Picture Corporation, Hornell, $200,000, with Benjamin Liebmann, Brooklyn; John and Betty Jordan, New York City. Cargross Exhibition Company, Inc., $25,000, Cecil E. Carter, Conrad A. Ross, David E. Grange, New York. Irving Theatres Corporation, $500,000, Marion L. Elkin, Mollie Salit, Anne Eichel, New York City. Heisler Amusement Corporation, $10,000, Abraham W. Feinberg, Bernice E. Weil, Leonard L. Helburn, New York. C. & D. Amusement Corporation, $10,000, Albert Cooper, David Davis, Jacob W. Kers, New York City. Hamilton Avenue Exhibition Company, Inc., $2,000, Pauline Malter, Brooklyn; Sophie C. Edelhertz, Dora L. Bernstein, New York City. W. & I. Amusement Corporation, $10,000, David Schneider, Samuel Bedell, Brooklyn; Samuel Ottenstein, New York City. Baldwin Amusement Corporation, $5,000, Baldwin, N. Y., Robert T. Rasmussen, George Rasmussen, Freeport; Beatrice Smith, Roosevelt, N. Y. New Blake Theatre Corporation, $10,000, Hyman Bernstein, Bronx; Isidore Levine, Isaac Kafko, Brooklyn; and the Valley Theatre Corporation, capitalization not stated, with Genevieve Meyers, Anna Radeloff, Louis Mehl, Brooklyn.

CONNECTICUT'S MEMORY TEST

Under date of July 14 Connecticut exhibitors were notified by Tax Commissioner Blodgett that they should have their projectionists keep a detailed list of all films shown since July 8 and until such time as the constitutionality of the tax law is determined.

Lester S. Tobias of the Yale Film Exchange in New Haven, speaking for the exchangemen, expressed an opinion it was virtually an impossibility for a projectionist to search his memory to ascertain the films he has shown since July 8, especially the exact length of each reel, since he did not receive any intimation of the necessity of doing this until the receipt of the letter from Commissioner Blodgett on July 8.

In issuing the order that a record be kept of the films shown, the commissioner said he was acting under orders of Attorney General Frank E. Healy.

ROCHESTERITES ON PICNIC

Many prominent figures in the motion picture industry were guests at the annual picnic of the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held on July 21 at Point Pleasant. The guests included R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. of A.; Sydney Cohen of New York and Michael F. O'Toole of Scranton. Most of the managers of the Buffalo distributing companies attended, as did several Syracuse, Auburn, Hornell and neighboring towns. Jules Greenstone, president of the Rochester exhibitors, arranged the program of entertainment, assisted by Michael F. Carr, secretary of the league. The exhibitors left the Lyndhurst Theatre at noon and motored to Point Pleasant. There was a baseball game and other sports.

FIRST NATIONAL HOLDS OUTING

The annual outing and picnic of the First National Club, held at Indian Point, up the Hudson, on Saturday, July 18, was the most largely attended and enjoyable of First National employes' outings. About 150 persons were on board the river steamship Chauncey M. Depew when it left the West 42nd street pier at 9:30. They returned, tired but happy, at 10 o'clock in the evening.

The athletic events were carried out as scheduled except that one of the contestants in the finals of the tennis match for the Eschmann cup was away on his vacation. The finals will be played off upon his return.

New York State Showmen Have Bitter Struggle with Exchanges

By SUMNER SMITH

ROCHESTER exhibitors and exchangemen met on the field of battle this week, with National President R. F. Woodhull taking a prominent part in the controversy. Before a cessation of the hostilities, exchangemen loudly proclaimed that favoritism was being extended Woodhull and advanced other serious charges. The exhibitors responded in kind. Just what effect this bitter struggle will have on the motion picture situation nationally can only be conjectured. And we haven't the nerve to conject.

The trouble is said to have arisen in the third inning. Woodhull was at bat for the exhibitors. He got a base on balls, exchangemen allege, though they say their pitcher's curves bisected the plate. Then, they charge, the umpire whispered, "Go down to second, Pete, and I'll call you safe." "Pete" went down to second and, it is rumored, was called safe though "out" by ten feet.

Naturally, "Pete," playing shortstop, starred. Another star was Jules Greenstone, who guarded exhibitor interests at first base. He isn't exactly a spring chicken, but not a single error was charged up against him. For reasons of courtesy, Frank Koch, Rochester deputy commissioner of charities, was allowed to catch for the exhibitors, and for practical as well as courteous reasons, he was allowed to catch on first bounce.

The score? Ninety-nine to forty. Both sides agree on that, as exhibitors and exchangemen occasionally will agree. Of course, they agree sometimes. But who got the ninety-nine and who got the forty is another bone of contention that threatens to rock the industry to its very foundations. Moving Picture World, the foremost trade paper (Don't you listen to anybody who tries to tell you different.), has to date received 7,654 telegrams from New York exhibitors (subscribers) and 4,567 telegrams from exchangemen (also subscribers) presenting various evidence and asking us to arbitrate. We will: Score, exhibitors, 7,654; exchangemen, 4,567; game called at end of seventh on account of exhaustion.

Well, it's customary to tell where a thing happens. This happened on Tuesday, July 21, at Point Pleasant, Irondequoit Bay, and the occasion was the annual picnic and field day of the Rochester Motion Picture Theatre Owners. President Woodhull was the guest of honor. Besides playing baseball he spoke briefly on the progress and aims of the national organization, and congratulated Rochester theatre men on their initiative and loyalty.

Sawyer-Lubin-Rothafel Plan New York Theatre Circuit

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, Herbert Lubin and S. L. Rothafel will build a circuit of huge motion picture theatres in New York City. This announcement comes upon the heels of the deal recently consummated by the Sawyer-Lubin-Rothafel combination whereby the "Roxy" Theatre, the world's largest amusement palace, will be erected at Fiftieth street and Seventh avenue, New York, with actual construction beginning on or about September 15 of this year.

It is planned to erect at least six theatres of enormous seating capacity and luxurious appointment at carefully chosen spots in Greater New York, with Roxy, as he is familiarly known to millions of movie fans and radio listeners-in, presiding over the entire circuit as director and embodying in each new theatre his personal genius in matters of presentation and screen entertainment.

The "Roxy" will be designed by Walter W. Ahlschlager, internationally famous architect of Chicago, who has been responsible for the plans for several of the largest theatres in the Middle West and who will also design each of the houses in the "Roxy" circuit.

The first theatre in the Sawyer-Lubin-Rothafel combination will have 6212 seats, involving an expenditure placed at $7,000,000, covering real estate and construction, and will offer to the public for the first time a reserved loge section of 1,100 seats.

Many innovations in the matters of seating, lighting, stage construction and general appointment will be placed into effect in the "Roxy," by the man for whom the theatre is named, and who, through his successful direction of the Strand, Rialto, Rivoli and Capitol during the past ten years, has become one of the most distinctive personalities in the theatre and radio world.

Extraordinary provisions regarding radio broadcasting have been made in the plans by Walter W. Ahlschlager,

Wuxtry! Albany Believes Fish Stories of Hays and Moe Mark

If Walter Hays of Buffalo and Moe Mark of New York City, high Moguls in the Strand chain of theatres, with houses also in Albany and Troy, happen to mention the fact that they were taking the black bass two at a time and on a fly at that, don't make them swear to the story on a stack of Bibles. Mr. Hays and Mr. Mark were in town the other night, returning from a fishing trip to Livingston Lake, a private preserve north of here and which is said to have the finest black bass fishing in the entire state. Mr. Hays continued on to Buffalo, while Mr. Mark took the night boat for the metropolis. Frank P. Dolan of Albany, a real estate dealer, accompanied Mr. Hays and Mr. Mark on the trip and took along his colored chef from his camp on Crooked Lake. In words of Mr. Dolan, while both Mr. Hays and Mr. Mark are good fishermen, the latter is characterized as being a d—— good fisherman. The bass were so thick and so ravenous that as the flies whipped out over the water, the fish would rise two at a time, all running a pound or better. It may be that Mr. Hays and Mr. Mark will include themselves in a group of ten or a dozen men who will acquire the preserve.

Bill Smalley of Cooperstown doesn't pay much attention to talk about the "usual summer slump." He is running the "Ten Commandments" over his circuit, with special music and all the fixin's, much as he did with "The Thief of Bagdad." While some of the other exhibitors are inclined to play all of the left-overs and weaklings these days and then complain of poor business, Mr. Smalley is running fully as high-class pictures this month and next as during any time of the year.

L. L. Connors of Cambridge, W. H. Linton of Utica and Louis Buettner of Cohoes were welcome visitors along Film Row during the week. Mr. Linton continued on to New York City.

GLORIA SWANSON

The Paramount star is wearing a sport outfit of Scotch plaid, the color being a tobacco brown.

Charles McIver has just leased the Empress in Norfolk and the Star in Norwood from A. E. Curry, who has been running the former house for many years and the latter for about twelve months. The two houses have been recently renovated and improved. Mr. McIver states that the same type of pictures will be continued and that at times there will be vaudeville as well as amateur nights. An orchestra has been installed at the Star, and as soon as arrangements can be completed, additional music will be provided at the Empress.

They are telling a good story along Film Row based on a remark made by Mr. Lefkowitz, of Quittner and Lefkowitz, who run the State Theatre in Middletown. It seems that in connection with the vaudeville which is run with the pictures one of the actors came to the office to protest against this or that. Mr. Lefkowitz listened for a time and then interrupted: "You are paid to act, not to complain." The answer was sufficiently to the point and Mr. Lefkowitz returned to the perusal of his mail, the actor to the stage.

George Roberts, managing-director of the Berinstein chain of houses, who makes his home in Albany, is spending a week or ten days in Elmira superintending the installing of an organ in the Majestic Theatre there. Ormond Roberts, who runs the Hudson in Albany, but who is also looking after the Colonial during his father's absence, was heard to declare during the week that before he decided where he would spend his vacation he must first know when it was coming. It now looks as though Mr. Roberts' vacation will consist of a day or two now and then right out in front of the grandstand at the Saratoga meet. The Hudson is being renovated and painted this month.

The sympathy of all readers of the Moving Picture World is extended to C. L. Gardner of the Pine Hills Theatre in Albany in the loss of his mother a week or so ago. The house was closed for a couple of days. Mr. Gardner is now running matinees on Wednesday and Saturday, but will drop out the Wednesday one as soon as school starts, as the two are pretty much confined to children. Mr. Gardner states that business is "not so bad," the evenings in Albany remaining cool.

Definite announcement has been made that the American in Troy will open on August 15. A piano will furnish the music, it having been decided to dispense with an orchestra. Selection of a manager will be made from out of the Strand staff. Admission will be 15 cents, the house operating as a first-run theatre, split-weeks to prevail.

Having journeyed in vain to Utica on many an occasion, some of the film boys are suggesting that Nate Robbins of that city, head of a considerable chain, should buy a commutation ticket good between Utica and New York, or transferable between Utica and Mr. Robbins' camp. They declare that Mr. Robbins is one of the hardest exhibitors in the whole state to locate and always seems to be on the go.

Everyone in the film colony shook hands last Monday with Bob Pierce of Ilion, son-in-law of Ben Young, when he dropped into town to do a bit of booking. Mr. Pierce is a prime favorite along the Row.

Dorothy Revier, "the most beautiful woman in California," who is being featured in Columbia Pictures Corporation's Waldorf Series, and in a number of Columbia releases.

When the Altamont Fair officials jumped up the price concession rights, John Mattice, who runs the Novelty Theatre in Middleburgh and doles out hot frankfurters by the thousands at county fairs, decided to pass up the Altamont gathering. At the present time Mr. Mattice is booking both pictures and fairs and promises something new this fall. When asked just what this would be, the other day, he winked and replied that he knew which shell the pea is under.

Harry Hellman of the Royal in Albany, having absorbed a bit of the Lake Placid atmosphere last winter, has just bought himself a country home at Crooked Lake, outside of Troy. The summer home is beautifully located in a group of pines and has nearly 200 feet of lake frontage. Mr. and Mrs. Hellman will keep right on running the theatre, however, driving in each day. They will be joined soon by their daughter and son-in-law, the latter being a well known song writer, numbering among his hits such songs as "Jealous" and others.

Exhibitors will be interested to know that up to the present time, nothing has been done in Albany by the Film Board of Trade, relative to changing the shipment of film from parcel post to express. The matter was up for a further discussion at Monday's meeting of the Film Board of Trade, but owing to the fact that several members were away on their vacations it was decided not to take final action on the matter until a month or so later.

Louis Buettner of Cohoes put on the fight pictures last Saturday and played to big business. Mr. Buettner's Majestic will reopen on Labor Day.

A. J. Petersmarck, proprietor of the Baker and Bluebird theatres, is in bed as a result of a fall from a ladder in front of his theatre. While repairing the marquise Petersmarck slipped and fractured his heel in four places.

The Film Building baseball team will jorney to Imlay City on August 9 for a ball game with a team representing that city. Arrangements were made by Harry Holberth, manager of the Maxine Theatre at Imlay City and he is planning some advertising tie-ups for the occasion.

Roy Tillson of the Fuller Theatre, Kalamazoo, has left on an extended motor trip to Niagara Falls and New York City.

The deal pending between the Consolidated Theatres, Inc., at Grand Rapids and the Butterfield interests has been closed. Under the terms of the transaction the Butterfield circuit takes over control of the Majestic, Orpheum, Isis and Strand theatres in the Furniture City. With Powers Theatre already under Butterfield control, this gives the Detroit operating concern an unusually strong foothold in the second city.

Minneapolis

There is much speculation here regarding the future of the new Lyceum. The theatre was opened last winter by Clinton & Meyers of Duluth with movies and dancing. Business was big at opening but gradually dropped off. The theatre closed for the summer and according to rumors may be taken over by Warner Brothers.

No new developments have occurred since the announcement by Phil Dunas, branch manager, that Universal would build a $1,000,000 first-run house on Hennepin Avenue. The site has not been selected and Mr. Dunas when pressed for additional details declares he is awaiting word from Universal officials.

W. A. Steffes is directing the plans for exploiting Greater Movie Season in Minneapolis. He is co-operating with Eddie Ruben and Harold D. Finkelstein of the Finkelstein & Ruben, who control most of the theatres in the Twin Cities.

Len Brown, formerly manager of new Lyceum in Minneapolis, is now manager of the Majestic and Parkway theaters at Madison, Wis.

Fred Pfaender of New Ulm, Minn., besides being a bood showman is a good fisherman. Pfaender was recently named president of the state Fishermen's association. He operates the Turner Theatre at New Ulm.

Hugh Andress, formerly manager of Lagoon, F-R house in Minneapolis, has become manager of the Tower Theatre in St. Paul. The Tower is operated by Joseph Friedman and is the largest opposition house to Finkelstein & Ruben in St. Paul. Andress succeeds William E. Mick as manager.

A new Finkelstein & Ruben theatre costing $225,000 will be erected at Sioux Falls, S. D. Jay Dundas is associated with the F-R organization in the building of the theatre. Contracts have been let.

Oklahoma

A fifty-foot extension and other improvements are being made by the Amusy Theatre at Frederick, Okla. A stage for road attractions will also be added.

Mr. and Mrs. N. H. Hinds have purchased the Lyric Theatre at Perry, Okla.

DON'T MISS PARAMOUNT'S "THE TROUBLE WITH WIVES"

Star in Hudson now offers a spick and span house of ivory finish with lighting effects changed and one that brings him many words of praise from patrons. Mr. Hochstim takes his business in a serious way, and after several years as a salesman in Albany, is well equipped to buy just the type of pictures his people want.

Miss Noma Suckno, who with her brother Walter handles the Albany and Regent theatres in Albany, will take a two weeks' vacation in the near future. Miss Suckno devotes most of her time to the Albany Theatre, doing an excellent business with even a week's run this month.

Mrs. Finley J. Shepherd, who was formerly Helen Gould, is somewhat of an exhibitor herself, with small and decidedly exclusive audiences. The Shepherd home is a beautiful affair near Roxbury, south of Albany. Mrs. Shepherd sent for Edward Hochstim, a local Pathe salesman, one day last week, and selected, among other things, "The Chronicles of America" for a showing at her home with the four adopted children making up a portion of the audience.

The Empire in Glens Falls is cutting down on the size of its newspaper advertisements during the summer. The house is doing an excellent business under the direction of Manager Garry, with Oscar Perrin running up from Albany three days each week.

A. A. Elliott of the Playhouse and Rialto in Hudson returned home last week from a day or two in New York City, where he conferred with Sydney Cohen on a number of matters, including the reservation of play dates for independent productions.

There is one thing certain and that is that whatever happens, Alec Sayles, manager of the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany, will never return to the newspaper game. Before he started to handle the Clinton Square Theatre, Mr. Sayles was on the city desk of an Albany newspaper. He works in his shirtsleeves when occasion demands and is a first-class critic when it comes to pictures. Speaking of titles, Mr. Sayles declared last week that there were many that had absolutely no bearing on the picture showing. Mr. Sayles reports business as holding up well and with plenty of good pictures coming.

William Benton's nights were sleepless last week, as his little son struggled to keep the spark of life following pneumonia that developed with the removal of the lad's tonsils a few days before. Exchange managers and others kept in touch with Mr. Benton's home in Saratoga and were overjoyed on Wednesday to hear that the crisis had passed and that the boy's heart was somewhat stronger. Mr. Benton runs the Congress in Saratoga Springs, as well as another house in Plattsburg, and will open a third in Mechanicville on Columbus Day.

After inquiring just how many fish he could bring back from Canada, Uly S. Hill, managing-director of the Strand chain in Albany and Troy, accompanied by his son, Norman, left this week on a trip over the line and to the Rideau lakes section. Father and son are both expert anglers and some interesting tales will probably be forthcoming on their return.

It's a foregone conclusion that the fight between the new theatre to be erected by the Strand interests in Albany and the neighboring Leland will be to the bitter finish. Announcement was made this week that a 25-cent admission will prevail at the new theatre, which will seat 1,400 and work upon which will begin almost immediately. The Leland has always charged 25 cents and as a first-run house has been showing the best pictures obtainable. At the other Strand Theatre in Albany a 50-cent admission prevails.

Meyer Schine of Gloversville, in town the other day, journeyed on to New York via the night boat.

News of the Canadian Territory

J. M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, had complete charge of the luncheon of the Rotary Club of Ottawa which was held at the Chateau Laurier, on July 13, which was attended by Mayor J. P. Balharrie of Ottawa and other notables. Mr. Franklin was chairman of the meeting and directed the whole program.

Manager McNeil of the Rideau Theatre, Smiths Falls, Ontario, made a special play for patronage during the Old Home Week celebration which was conducted in Smiths Falls during the week of July 13. He gained a real slice of business despite numerous counter-attractions by staging a number of novelties and putting over good advertising. Features booked included "The Dixie Handicap," "Zeebrugge," the British naval picture, and "Charley's Aunt."

The regular picture and vaudeville performances at B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, on August 7 are being cancelled by Manager Joe Franklin to provide for a transient treat, the concerts of Sousa's Band at both matinee and evening appearances. Last year Sousa's Band played under the direct auspices of the Rotary Club of Ottawa in the Ottawa Auditorium, but this year Mr. Franklin secured control of the feature.

Donat Paquin, proprietor of the two picture theatres in Hull, Quebec, is sparing no expense in the remodelling and re-equipping of the Laurier Theatre which he will reopen in August. The other day, for instance, Mr. Paquin walked into the showrooms of C. W. Lindsay, Ltd., and purchased a Steinway grand piano for the use of the Laurier Theatre orchestra during the coming fall and winter. The Eden Theatre, Hull, which Mr. Paquin also owns, is running full blast throughout the summer.

Universal's first prize for the best exploitation for the serial, "The Great Circus Mystery," consisting of a cheque for $100, was won by Howard Snook, manager of the Columbia Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, a bright suburban house owned by George Bannister of Winnipeg.

A free moving picture performance, one of a series which is being conducted in Montreal, Quebec, under municipal and university auspices, was held at the Palace Theatre on July 18 under the direction of Manager George Rotsky for a group of 1,500 underprivileged children. The feature of the program was "Christopher Columbus." Various free morning picture shows, giving pictures of natural resources, safety first, scenic and other subjects, have been presented in Montreal during the summer for adults and children.

The Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, now has its manager back, Leonard Bishop having returned after a month's sojourn in Los Angeles, where he visited his father, mother and sisters and also spent some time in the big studios. He had an advance view of "The Gold Rush," Charlie Chaplin's latest, which he will play early in the fall.

The wives of former Ottawa, Ontario, theatre managers were prominent in the social news of the Canadian Capital on July 16 when Mrs. Oral Cloakey entertained at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa's famous hostelry, in honor of Mrs. Frank Goodale, wife of Captain Goodale, manager of two Loew theatres in White Plains, N. Y. Captain Goodale was formerly manager of Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, while Oral Cloakey was manager of the Ottawa Regent. Mr. Cloakey is now in the gold mining business.

The "Take-a-Chance Week" has become quite a stunt among Canadian theatre managers. It was put over in great style by Manager Harry S. Dahn of the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, during the week of July 12. Another "Chance" week has also been staged by Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Capitol Theatre in Vancouver, B. C., with equally satisfying results.

The annual flapper and baby shows of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, were staged during the week of July 25 under the direction of H. M. Thomas, director of theatres in Western Canada for Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

Griffin's Theatre at St. Catharines, Ontario, has been closed for the summer but Manager George J. Forhan is as busy as ever because of extensive alterations undertaken in the theatre.

ERNEST TORRENCE

The splendid Famous Players' character actor is seen here as "Ascension Jones" in "The Pony Express," which James Cruze has begun to produce for Paramount.

Buffalo, N. Y.

Fairport, N. Y., is to have a new picture theatre. The J. Meyer Schine Theatre Corporation will build a house in West avenue, just west of the Jacobson block. The Schine company operated the Rivoli Theatre in the same town.

The petition of the Riverside Amusement Company for a permit for the construction and operation of a picture theatre at Tonawanda and Prairie streets was denied this week by the Buffalo city council. Property owners and residents in the vicinity were opposed to a permit. It is likely that the petitioner will apply for a mandamus order compelling the council to grant the permit. The house was to have cost $200,000 and it was reported that the Shea Amusement Company was interested in leasing it.

J. B. Strayline has purchased the Grand Theatre in Geneseo, N. Y. The house formerly was operated by Carrie Aprile. Mr. Strayline will redecorate and remodel.

Ben Wallerstein, manager of the Broadway Theatre, was seen on the promenade at Crystal Beach last week end, demonstrating what a well dressed young man should wear.

Vincent R. McFaul, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, is vacationing at his summer home at Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Texas

The Lyric Theatre at Terrell, Texas, has closed for repairs.

The Cleveland Theatre at Rochester, Texas, has closed for repairs.

S. C. Fry will open a new theatre at Omaha, Texas, in the near future.

Bullseye for Cupid

A true love story reached a climax in Ottawa, Ontario, on July 11 when J. C. Kennedy, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Fort William, Ontario, came back to the Canadian Capital to take unto himself a wife, Miss Blanche Gauvreau, cashier of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, for some years. The theatre men of Ottawa turned out in large numbers for the event and one of the handsome gifts was a set of table cutlery from the staff of the Regent.

Mr. Kennedy was manager of the Ottawa Regent some time ago when he was the boss of Miss Gauvreau. He went away, however, becoming manager of the Capitol at Petersboro and then manager of the Fort William Orpheum. Some months ago he returned to Ottawa on a personal visit of great importance and shortly afterwards the engagement was announced.

After a honeymoon down through the eastern states the couple will reside in Winnipeg, Manitoba, where Mr. Kennedy has received an important appointment from the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto. He will be associated with H. M. Thomas of Winnipeg, western supervisor of theatres for Famous Players.

Connecticut

Irwin Wheeler has been denied permission to conduct film shows on Sunday nights at his Playhouse in New Canaan by the Board of Wardens and Burgesses. It is expected that the question will be settled when it is placed before the voters. New Canaan residents have indicated that they desire Sunday film shows, for a vote taken by a news paper showed fully two-thirds of the population in favor of the Sunday entertainment.

The state police department has approved the plans of John E. Panora for the construction of a theatre in Winsted. The new playhouse will utilize the space in the rear of the Opera House. The entrance will be from Main street.

The Palace Theatre in Norwich, which was closed during May, has been reopened.

Approximately 2,000 tickets were stolen by thieves, believed to be boys, from the box office of the Capitol Theatre in New Britain.

The Empress Theatre in Danbury is scheduled to begin its fall and winter policy on September 7.

That's What We're Here For

D. Serrao, proprietor of the Savoy Theatre, Ford City, Pa., writes:

"The Princess Theatre of Ford City, Pa., is now under new management, D. Serrao, owner of the Savoy Theatre, of Ford City, Pa. The Princess Theatre has had the name changed to the Palace Theatre. From now on it will be Palace Theatre instead of Princess Theatre.

"If you want to run any news in regard to this matter I will appreciate it very much. And it will make it easier for the exchanges to get it on their books."

Kansas City

Just fourteen days ago last Monday Adolph Eisner, former president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas City, assumed charge of the Circle Theatre, a Kansas City suburban house which had been doing a weekly "flop" for several months. Today Mr. Eisner's books will show a daily increase over the previous day—and he hasn't even started his exploitation campaign on the house. How did he do it? Simple enough. A large sign in front of the theatre, bearing the words, "Summer Price 10 Cents," started them coming. When they "got there," the congenial smile of Mr. Eisner made a staunch friend of virtually every patron. But the price will remain at 10 cents permanently.

"Why should I worry about charging 10 cents when my gross receipts show more than the house formerly did at 15 cents?" asked Mr. Eisner. "That's what counts with me."

Through tie-up arrangements with the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., of Kansas City, the M. P. T. O. K.-M. will receive a substantial percentage on the earnings of the serial, "Battling Brewster," which will be recommended to the organization's membership as a means of obtaining additional organization funds.

When out-of-town directors of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri attend the next directors' meeting in Kansas City next month their railroad fares will be defrayed by the organization, that policy having been adopted by the M. P. T. O. K.-M., according to C. E. Cook, business manager.

A second arrest was made last week in connection with the bombing of the World-In-Motion Theatre, Kansas City, last February. William McKinstry, business agent for the Motion Picture Operators' Union, was arrested and charged in an indictment returned against him with malicious destruction of property. He formerly was with the Victory Theatre, Kansas City.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City territory last week were: Mr. and Mrs. Roy Pierce, World Realty Company, Omaha, Neb.; Perry Ryan, Liberty, Fort Scott, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.; Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Caskey, Best Theatre, Independence, Kas.; Edward Shanberg, Midland Circuit, Hutchinson, Kas.; John Tackett, New Tackett, Coffeyville, Kas.

With the acquisition of the Isis Theatre of Arkansas City, Kas., Roy Burford now controls that town, he also owning the Burford, Rex and Strand there.

St. Louis

Alleging that the lease on the house provided that negroes should not be barred, Hyman, Sarah and Sam Komm and the Franklin Amusement Company have filed a suit in the St. Louis Circuit Court to prevent Edward P. Laurent and the Little Theatre Corporation from operating the New Palace Theatre, 1310 Franklin avenue, exclusively for whites. The suit alleges that the house was leased to Jesse S. Horwitz on February 28, 1924, and that a stipulation in the lease provided that the house was to admit both negroes and whites but that it could be operated exclusively for negroes.

No loot was obtained by two young men who held up Miss Elsie Betzold, cashier of the Kings Theatre, near the Chouteau Trust Company, St. Louis, Mo., at 10:30 a. m., July 13. Miss Betzold was on her way to the bank. On May 18 two employes of the Kings Theatre were robbed of $1,700 while en route to the bank.

The new picture theatre recently completed at Pine Lawn, St. Louis County, will be operated by James Drake. The house accommodates 600 persons.

H. Roman of Benld, Ill., and Green Luttrell of Jacksonville, Ill., were among the visitors of the week.

Omaha

Ralph Johnson has sold the Gay Theatre at Wilcox, Neb.

Dalby Hall at Lewiston, Neb., has been closed.

O. R. Bennett of Auburn, Neb., has bought the Lyric at Brock, Neb. R. R. Blankenship was former owner.

Julia Ross has sold the Lincoln at Elm Creek, Neb., to Ethel Hansen.

C. B. Zellers has bought the Royal at Ainsworth, Neb.

W. A. Bowker, of the Opera House at Onawa, Ia., was an Omaha visitor recently.

J. T. Graham has sold the Princess at Eagle Grove, Ia.

C. E. Belford has sold the Lyria at Clay Center, Neb., to Becker and Birdsall.

Ricardo Cortez and Greta Nisson in "In the Name of Love," a Paramount picture.

Chicago

The National Theatres Corporation of Illinois, owners of the New Capital, Stratford, Chatham, Cosmopolitan, Hamilton, Avalon and Paradise in Chicago, the last two under construction through President J. J. Cooney, issue a denial that they have merged, amalgamated or consolidated with any other theatre firm, nor is such action contemplated. The company used paid newspaper space in addition to the news stories sent out, to give the denial as much publicity as possible. The cause of all this disturbance was a story in the newspapers last week that the Ascher circuit, the Cooney circuit and the Karzas and Coston group of theatres had combined for mutual protection in the booking of pictures for this territory. The newspaper story gave the impression that the Ascher circuit had bought the other houses, which was not true; the only object the promoters had was for a booking combination which is still in effect, according to Max Ascher.

Emil Stern of Lubliner and Trinz is out of the city for a few weeks on a vacation trip.

Mike Fuegel has sold the New Home Theatre on Armitage avenue, Chicago, to Joe Salinsky.

Will Mueller of the Milford and Famous Theatres, Chicago, has written friends from abroad that he expects to be back from his tour around the world about September. He is accompanied by his family.

Carl Barrett has sold his interest in his Central Theatre on East Van Buren street to Leo Sexton, well known South Side exhibitor.

Charles Dubuque of the Palace Theatre is going to the West Coast for his vacation and will be away several weeks. Everett Hayes, manager of the Majestic, is back on the job from a few weeks' rest and now his assistant, Fred Ackerman, will leave for a four weeks' vacation.

It is reported along film Row that Fitzpatrick & McElroy have a working agreement with Balaban & Katz not to enter the Chicago field if the big circuit does not work in the towns where Fitzpatrick and McElroy now have houses established.

The American Theatre at Cambria, Ill., under the management of C. C. Jones has been closed for the summer.

The boys are extending congratulations to Bill Hersberg owner of the Schindler, Cameo and other theatres, on his engagement, announced recently to the trade.

Manager Louis H. Franks' Halsted street theatre was damaged by a fire last week which wrecked the screen organ and stage. He expects to rebuild in time for the fall business.

Ben L. Berve, F. E. Allaben and Howard E. Crossland have organized the Berve Allaben Theatres Company at Rochelle, Ill., with a capital of $40,000, to operate theatres in that territory. The boys are all well known to the trade and will have quite a circuit in that part of the state when their plans are completed.

Lewis R. Lipstone, well known to the musical circles of the city, has been made business manager of the orchestras of the Balaban & Katz circuit. He will look after the personnel of the musical organization, while Nathaniel Finston, musical director of the Chicago Theatre, will engage the artists for the stage shows that play the Balaban & Katz circuit. In the other houses, the musical directors of the theatre will build up their own programs to fit the stage shows that play the Chicago Theatre and then go over the circuit. Burton Bidwell has been named as chief of the art department of the chain.

John Graham has added the Strand Theatre to his circuit at Valley Junction.

Seattle

William F. Code, owner of the Paramount Theatre, Seattle, has broken all records here for long-time suburban runs with "Charley's Aunt," which did a tremendous business for six days notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Code's nearest competitor, the Neptune Theatre, played the same picture day and date for four of the six days. Mr. Code goes in heavily for exploitation and puts in some excellent lobbies in addition to playing all good pictures during the summer. He is so fortunately situated as to get advertising benefit from small district newspapers reaching five districts with a total distribution of 30,000. Starting next month Mr. Code will add a balcony with considerably augmented seating capacity.

Benjamin W. Fey is moving from his Seattle home to a new home in Renton, Wash., which has several advantages. He will be near his new Renton Theatre, eliminating the long-distance commuting, and he will be better able to become a part of the life of his community and—they do say the Cedar River be full of fish!

E. A. Hallberg of the Lincoln Theatre, Port Angeles, Wash., is reported to be building a new house in Mount Vernon opposite the beautiful new Court House. This will give opposition to Ulsh & Ruth, who now operate the only houses in town. The new exhibitor is already booking, so it is probable the house will be rushed for an early opening.

Bill Armour of Montesano, Elma and Cleary, Wash., is in Seattle for a day or so arranging bookings for his circuit.

R. E. Charles, manager of the new Everett Theatre, is working wonders with the beautiful lighting effects for which the house is noted. He is doing much in the way of presentation of well balanced shows and is running a list of splendid novelty short reels with special exploitation.

The Metropolitan Building Company of Seattle admits that negotiations are under way for the construction of a huge downtown theatre on the site of the old Hippodrome, which was recently torn down. Ownership is being carefully guarded at present.

San Francisco

Harry M. Seigler, who recently purchased property at California and Fillmore streets, San Francisco, has announced plans for the erection of a picture house to cost $250,000. The theatre, which will seat 2,000, has been leased to Samuel H. Levin.

The Egyptian and Aztec Theatres, San Francisco, have adopted a special admission price schedule for the summer, all seats being offered at 25 cents. The Grecian Theatre, adjoining the Granada Theatre on Market street, will be added to the chain shortly.

The new Bay Shore Theatre in Visitacion Valley, San Francisco, is nearing completion and will be ready for occupancy in August.

H. C. Oastler of the American Theatre, Winnemucca, Nev., paid San Francisco's Film Row a visit the middle of July. Mr. Oastler is chairman of the Rodeo Association of that city and advised that a great show is being arranged for the fall.

E. B. Anderson of Coalinga, Cal., and W. S. Lester of the California Theatre, Turlock, were recent visitors in San Francisco.

Charles Kurtzman, director of publicity for the California Theatre, San Francisco, departed on his annual vacation the middle of July, heading for the Southland.

The Hippodrome Theatre at Taft, Cal., partly destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, is to be rebuilt and plans for the new house will be prepared at once. A. B. Crawford is manager.

Pittsburgh

Among the exhibitors who attended Paramount's recent exploitation conference at the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, were: Thomas Shrader, Pittsburgh; Al Hicks, Columbus Amusement Company, New Kensington; C. M. McCloskey and K. V. Woodward, Penn-State Amusement Company, Uniontown; Mike Marks, Oil City; Spear Marousis, New Castle; Frank Panoplos and Charles J. Eggers, McKeesport.

Johnny Harris, Jr., son of Senator J. P. Harris, President of the Harris Amusement Company, is back at his duties again as general manager of the Harris Enterprises, having been confined to a local hospital for a week by a nasal operation.

Max H. Barnett of Charleroi is having plans prepared for the erection of a $250,000 building at the corner of Brighton and Washington streets, to house a picture theatre, eight storerooms and apartments. The building, of brick and steel construction, will be three stories in height and situated on a plot of ground, 120 by 90 feet.

M. A. Tauber, owner of the Oakland Theatre, Pittsburgh, is spending a two-weeks vacation at Cambridge Springs, Pa.

Louis K. Sidney, managing director of Loew's Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, has returned from his fortnight's vacation in Atlantic City. It was "Sid's" first vacation in seven years.

William G. Maute of Maute's Theatre, Irwin, is spending his vacation camping in Canada.

James B. Clark, head of the Rowland and Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh, is back in his office after a two-weeks fishing trip with a party of friends in Canada. Mr. Clark says luck is not with the fishermen this year, practically every nimrod making the same report.

Jack Maple of Pt. Marion, Pa., and the Sybert Brothers of Moundsville, W. Va., were recent Pittsburgh visitors, and gave Film Row a thrill by stating that business is good.

Denver

Many interesting events competed with the hot weather in bringing exhibitors to Denver during the last two weeks. First and foremost was the annual picnic held by the Denver Film Board of Trade. This picnic is always well attended, every exhibitor who can possibly get away is usually on hand and this year was no exception. The picnic was held at the Mt. Morrison Hotel, Morrison. Prominent exhibitors seen at the picnic were Mrs. Kate Cramer and family, Annex Theatre, Denver; Gordon B. Ashworth, Federal Theatre, Denver; Frank Culp, Rex Theatre, Denver; Harry Long, America Theatre, Denver; A. J. Hamilton, Ivy Theatre, Denver; Leonard Levand, Palace Theatre, Denver.

A day or two before the picnic, H. W. Braly, local manager of Famous Players-Lasky, held an exploitation meeting for the purpose of giving to his customers exploitation hints which will be useful in putting over the new block of Paramount pictures. Among the exhibitors who attended this meeting were the following: Fred Bezold, Lotus Theatre, Sheridan, Wyo.; Jim Hughes, Imperial Theatre, Alliance, Neb.; Russell Hardwick, Lyceum Theatre, Clovis, N. M.; Miss Maud Buford, Avalon Theatre, Grand Junction, Col.; Henry Fulkerson, Lyric Theatre, Powell, Wyo.; Paul Krier, Star Theatre, Walsenburg, Col.; Dave Hess, Iris Theatre, Monte Vista, Col.; George Frantz, Mt. Rose, Col.; Ed. Marquand, Isis Theatre and Longmont Theatre, Longmont, Col.; William Ostenburg, Orpheum Theatre, Scotts Bluff, Neb.

Other exhibitors visiting in Denver the last week were Mrs. Sudie I. Henry of the Liberty Theatre, Des Moines, N. M., and R. V. Davis of the Gem Theatre, Fleming, Col.

Tweedledee, the midget, is surprised in the dead of night by the little daughter of the house which he plans to rob. A dramatic moment in "The Unholy Three," which Tod Browning directed for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with Lon Chaney, Mae Busch and Matt Moore in the leading roles.

Ohio

Sol Bernstein, who came to Canton, Ohio, from New York City last February, following the purchase of the Lyceum Theatre, has had plans drawn for a new house seating 2,500, representing an investment of $1,225,000. The site is at corner of Market and Sixth streets, one of the most prominent points in Canton.

While returning from a motor trip to Canada, Roy H. Beattie, manager of the Palace Theatre, Cincinnati, met with an accident a few miles from Erie, Pa. Beattie was forced to apply the brakes suddenly to avoid hitting a machine just ahead of him. In doing so his car skidded off the road, hitting a tree, causing considerable damage to the machine. Mrs. Beattie, who accompanied her husband on the trip, was injured by broken glass from the windshield. Mr. Beattie escaped injury.

The McGuire Estate, Chillicothe, Ohio, will erect a theatre in that city at an estimated cost of $25,000, the general contract having recently been let.

Joe Blau, publicity manager of the Jewel Photoplay Co., Hamilton, Ohio, was married recently to Miss Helene Menzer of that city.

The Circle Theatre, Cleveland, has been closed for July and August. Manager Printz will make extensive repairs during this time, additional balcony seats being one of the items included in the repair program.

The Opera House, Prospect, Ohio, has passed into possession of W. M. Hatch, who will make some changes in the place.

Jules Frankel of Gifts Theatre, Cincinnati, is in Florida for awhile, where he and his father are negotiating some real estate transactions. Another Cincinnati manager to throw off the yoke of regular business is Paul Mayo of the Morris Theatre, who is angling for the elusive finny tribe in Michigan.

The Warner Program

The Warner program has been enlarged to the formidable list of forty specials. This issue of Moving Picture World gives you full details about them. Turn to page 540.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

LONE WOLF. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. Another semi-foreign mystery picture which neither brought them in nor pleased; in fact, the comedy, "Giants vs. Yanks" (Our Gang) is all that kept them from howling. Good tone. Appeal forty per cent. No for Sunday or special. Firkins and Laws, Crystal Theatre, Moravia, Iowa.

NEVER SAY DIE. (6 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. Stay off of this picture as for comedy it is absolutely a failure. No good at all. Star not much here after pictures of this sort. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

F. B. O.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5,291 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Keep 'em coming, Fred. Each one is better than the previous, and this one would draw smiles at a Baptist convention. Fine tone. Appeal excellent. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw mixed class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John A. McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5,291 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. I have run many a good picture, specials and so-called specials, but when it comes to real, hundred per cent pictures I would class this as that—plus! as this pleased everyone who saw it and caused more favorable comment than any picture I have ever run. Here is to Fred and Silver King. Tone, yes. Appeal a hundred per cent—plus. Yes for Sunday and for special. Draw small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5,291 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Fred's newest and it is a dandy. Silver King better than ever. In my opinion this horse is the most intelligent horse on the screen today. Here he is more of a favorite than Thomson is. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5,291 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Another good one for Fred. This boy has arrived. The people like him and so does the box office. That tells the story. His stories are clean, action fast, and plenty of comedy. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BREED OF THE BORDER. (4,920 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. A good western, suitable for a Sunday night crowd. Flynn is a comer. O. G. Odell, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

FOOLS IN THE DARK. (7 reels). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. A dandy good program picture. Bought right and patrons were well pleased. Had opposition, so didn't make any money. F. B. O. is sending out some good pictures and good prints. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. General class, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

FORBIDDEN CARGO. (4,850 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. A nice little picture, but too short. There is nothing to keep Miss Brent from being a winner if she is properly handled. We like her here; she is a little actress, and pleasing to look at. All she'll need is story and direction. Tone okay. Appeal, 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday. No as special. Draw general class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

First National

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A sure bet for any house large or small. Best fight I have seen for a long time. Comedy in picture good. Buy it and boost it. You can't go wrong. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Here is my idea of a picture. Has thrills, action, comedy, pathos and a nice little love story. Sills is great and Miss Dana is also very good. Should please everybody, and everywhere. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday, but no as special. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BELL BOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A mighty funny comedy drama. Film fine. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, fair. Fine appeal. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

GALLOPING FISH. (6 reels). Star, Syd Chaplin. A very clever seal and some good comedians put this picture over nicely. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (750 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

MIGHTY LAK A ROSE. (8,026 feet). Star cast. Every one pleased with picture. Good for two days, I'd say, any place. Good as many specials. Yes for Sunday. Tone, ninety per cent. or more. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

PERFECT FLAPPER. (7,000 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A very nice program picture that pleased majority. Tone, all right. Special, no. Appeals to mining town. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre (175 seats), Glen Alum, West Virginia.

QUO VADIS. (8,745 feet). Star, Emil Jannings. A very good special; advertised heavily and got results. Don't be afraid to boost this one. Good audience appeal. Suitable for Sunday and special. Goodrich Brothers, Strand Theatre (225 seats), Callao, Missouri.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A good show, but a little too long. The comedian shares honors with Colleen in this. Color effects add good novelty. Tone, O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw student and family class, town 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats). Decorah, Iowa.

Fox

CUPID'S FIREMAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Buck Jones. With Richard Harding Davis on the story end and a capable editing and directing force this is just about the best fire picture I have seen. It fully justifies the endorsement of the firemen who see it and who will give their endorsement. Fine to run a free show for firemen. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

DARWIN WAS RIGHT. (4,982 feet). Star cast. Only a two-reel comedy made into a five-reel so-called special by Fox and you pay three times as much for it. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, not any better than any good two-reel monkey comedy. O. G. Odell, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

DEADWOOD COACH. Star, Tom Mix. Boys, here is a picture. Talk about action and comedy. I think this is Mix's best offering in some time. It is so interesting that even my cashier became so interested in it that he refused to count up his cash until after the show. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal great. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

DEADWOOD COACH. Star, Tom Mix. Substituted just eight hours before show time for the "Cyclone Rider," consequently we lost the benefit of a little exploitation on Mix's name and the attendance was far less than it would have been had we known a day or two ahead that Mix was to be played. This is an excellent western picture with the best western star in the world as the hero. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Personally, did not care very much for this one, but it got over good with the audience, so what pleases them satisfies me. Okay tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-20. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A fine picture. Really a little too good for a Saturday crowd. Wish I had run it during the week. Would have been appreciated more. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

GREAT DIAMOND MYSTERY. (6,056 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Pleasing, well done melodrama with action and suspense. Ranks pretty well with anything this little star has put over. Has pleasing characters and seemed to please the small crowd that it attracted. Draw general class, city of 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

IN LOVE WITH LOVE. 5,677 feet). Star cast. Well done throughout. Contains some good laughs, and will be especially appreciated by the younger set. Tone okay. Good appeal. Sure for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, city of 25,000. Admission 20-30. Frank J. Framer, Empire Theatre (1,100 seats), New London, Connecticut.

IT IS THE LAW. (6,000 feet). Star cast. A fair business for three days. Picture liked by the greatest majority. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Drew the usual Mix fans, who were pleased with it. Tone all right. Appeal good. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw mixed class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John A. McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

MAN HUNTER. Star, William Farnum. The minute this hits the screen one can tell that it is the oldest kind of "junk" and by the time it's over they are fully convinced that it is even worse than that. No tone, no for Sunday or special. Appeal, forty per cent. Draw masses, city 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama.

SHADOWS OF THE EAST. (5,874 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. The only thing special about this picture was the price. People here considered this picture well below the average. No box office value. Town 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WARRENS OF VIRGINIA. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Very poor at the box office but not a bad picture. Sunday, yes. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

Metro-Goldwyn

BEAUTY PRIZE. (5,789 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Just a good program picture. Story not so heavy or peppy as one might expect from the title. Advertising foreign to story, as the print we had was minus the bathing suits. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BOY OF FLANDERS. (7,018 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A very good picture that did not please the children as well as something in a lighter vein. Adults were lavish in their praise of this feature. A little sad for the kiddies but a fine offering just the same. Moral tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

CHEAPER TO MARRY. (5,921 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Supported by an exceptional cast. Very good society picture. Points moral in a pleasant way. Hot weather hurt business. Pretty good tone. Yes for Sunday. As special, no, but it's above program. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DIXIE HANDICAP. (6,905 feet). Star cast. A very good program picture with a Southern race track as a background. Plenty of thrills, entertainment; lack of padding makes this particularly good for hot weather. A well selected cast includes Claire Windsor, Lloyd Hughes, Frank Keenan and Otis Harlan. Had many favorable comments. Moral tone is good and it is suitable for Sunday but not strong enough for a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

DIXIE HANDICAP. (6,905 feet). Star, Claire Windsor. We class this as a high class racing story with plenty of negro comedy. Good races and a consistent story, well acted and directed, with Lloyd Hughes and Frank Keenan in the cast. Wish we could get more as good as this one. Good tone. Appeal, 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday. No as special. Draw general class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

ETERNAL STRUGGLE. (7,374 feet). Star Earle Williams. A very good picture all the way through; pleased all. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers, town 750. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (360 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

ETERNAL STRUGGLE. (7,374 feet). Star Cast. Three days to fair business. Would have done more if weather hadn't been so hot. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

EXCUSE ME. (5,084 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. One of the best comedy dramas of the year. We had "Hot Water" against us and the general verdict was that "Excuse Me" was the best picture. Norma Shearer does some very nice work in this picture and so does Nagel. Walter Heirs very funny as the porter. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

IN SEARCH OF A THRILL. Star, Viola Dana. A very good program picture. Pleased all who saw it. Business rotten. Good tone. Appeal 80 per cent.. For Sunday or special, no. Draw farmers, town 750. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Treatre (360 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (10,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A picture that would have pleased better if it had been three reels shorter. People were restless before it was over, and I was sleepy myself. Don't see why they made 'em so long! (I might not be a howling success as a director, but by gosh I'd save money on film! I'd try to make quality without so much quantity). Moral tone good. Sunday yes. Special yes. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

By the time you read this the sad Cape May surf will be whispering a report to the effect that Van in a bathing suit is no picture at all—no appeal, not suitable for Sunday, and everything.

I want to thank "Our Gang" for making it possible for me to get away for a while by guaranteeing enough tips so that exhibitors will be sure of a steady flow of reports.

For kind expressions of good will and good wishes, thanks "from the heart" are due to:

Carl Anglemire, Hedberg and Johnson, Guy Sawyer, John A. McGill and Ed. Malhiot.

If I'm not at the desk I'm with you in spirit and thank you for making me sure that the good work will go right on, while I'm away a couple-a-weeks. VAN.

Paramount

ADVENTURE. (6,602 feet). Star, Tom Moore. Very good South Sea Island story and as she wins in this there is plenty of adventure and action in it. Good tone and appeal, no for Sunday or special. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvedere, New Jersey.

AFTER THE SHOW. Star cast. Well received. Print okay. Plenty of pep all through. Tone and appeal fine. Draw rural class, town 850. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (190 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

BEDROOM WINDOW. (4,550 feet). Star cast. A good picture, but not good drawer for small town. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Farmers' town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

BORDER LEGION. (7,645 feet). Star cast. Best western I have had the pleasure of using for a long time. Lots of action and pretty scenery. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Had several flattering comments on this picture but despite this it didn't show up well at the box office. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star cast. A Zane Grey story; that should be sufficient for a money-getter. It's a great story of the West, with suspense all the way through, the best western we ever showed. No cheap stuff here, thrills galore and tremendously interesting. Antonio Garrido Monteagudo Moreno (Get That!) Helene Chadwick are splendid and Rockcliff Fellowes is a villain you'll like. Get wise! City and country, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

CALL OF THE CANYON. (6,982 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Very good. A good drawing title helped out by the author's name Zane Grey. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Farmers' town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

COMING THRU. (6,522 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Meighan is a favorite and pulls a good crowd whenever we show his pictures. Pleased a hundred per cent. Good tone and appeal. No as special. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvedere, New Jersey.

COMING THRU. (6,522 feet). Stars, Thomas Meighan, Lila Lee. This one is better than his last and drew fairly good also. He is not a big drawing card with the kids for us. Meighan and Lila Lee makes a good team. Good tone and appeal. A family picture. Not as a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

COMING THRU. (6,522 feet). Stars, Thomas Meighan, Lila Lee. Everyone seemed to enjoy it. Perhaps it was because Meighan is popular. Nothing big, but should go over, especially in small towns where they like this star. Tone, and for Sunday, O. K. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star cast. Rental too high. Poor business. Just an average picture. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. Notwithstanding the fact that this is one of Pola Negri's best American-made pictures, fails to please and my people simply will not pay to see her emote any more. Never again will I try to get them in on this forgotten star. Too bad she didn't stay in Europe last winter. Fair tone. Appeal ninety per cent of audience. No for Sunday or special. Draw industrial class, town 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. Will not draw in small towns. Advise small towns to keep away from Negri. Appeal, forty per cent. No for Sunday or as special. J. M. Krouse, Grand Theatre (800 seats), Ephiston, Pennsylvania.

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 feet). Star cast. Good picture. Pleased all who saw it. Sunday, yes. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT. (5,785 feet). Star cast. Not so good. A Zane Grey with a good title but a rather weak production. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Farmers' town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats). Natoma, Kansas.

HER OWN MONEY. Star, Ethel Clayton. Personally I love Miss Clayton. This was a nice picture, well liked by those not caring for rough stuff. Fine tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday; fair special. Draw rural class, town 850. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (190 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

LIGHT OF THE WESTERN STARS. (6,650 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A very good box

If you are not reporting the short subjects you run, put the tips in on them too, won't you?

Many a time, a short subject that was strong has saved the show where a feature fell down in quality or appeal.

The boys want to know about the short subjects so they can step on the advertising and let the public know that the shorts have advanced right along with feature improvements.

SEND SHORT SUBJECTS TOO!

office picture. Patrons liked characters and story. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Very good appeal. All classes, city of 100,000. Admission 40-50. Guy O. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

LOCKED DOORS. (6,621 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A modern society drama dealing with a young wife married to a man much older than herself who meets her fate in the younger man. You would naturally suppose that with William DeMille directing, Clara Beranger putting the story on the screen and Betty Compson and a fine supporting cast you would be getting something good, but the entertainment value is very poor. I'm sorry boys, to knock Betty Compson, but I wouldn't get this one, too much mush from beginning to the end. Otherwise a fine picture with Betty charming as ever but much better in her crook roles. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

MADAME SANS GENE. (9,994 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A few highbrows told me Gloria "Clowned" the part too much, don't know about this myself, but I do know I was the "goat" for it was poison at the box office. She may be a knockout in New York but here and surroundings she is "worser" than nix, wish some one would outbid Paramount for her if I am to continue further Paramount. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

MADAME SANS GENE. (9,904 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This picture was a complete flop. People positively will not come out to see a costume picture, regardless of who is in it. A ten dollar western or a fifteen dollar program picture will at least hold them in their seats. This super (?) failed to hold the few who came out to see it. At one time Gloria was the most popular actress in my house. Now her pictures do not do ordinary business. I wonder why they do not give her some popular stories. Tone ? ? ? ? Appeal, here none. Sunday ? ? ? ? As special, no. Draw all classes, small town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

MAN WHO FIGHTS ALONE. (6,337 feet). Star, William Farnum. Just an ordinary picture but is a pretty good one. Didn't have any kicks or any compliments. Fair tone. Appeal eighty per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and merchants, town 450. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

MAN WHO FIGHTS ALONE. (6,337 feet). Star, William Farnum. From reports I had read thought this one would be a bum show. Had a number of nice comments on picture and personally myself thought it was good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Not suitable for special. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

MARRY ME. Star, Florence Vidor. One of the screen's most appealing stars. Spoiled by the wrong kind of a picture. One in fact that should not have been made. It lacks every element that goes to make a popular story. The crowd does not like to see romance spoiled, comedy hero wins the girl; nor long lapses in stories. A picture that would be better left unmade and unplayed. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Another show from Paramount that lost money for us. It drew a little extra, but not enough compared to the rest of our Wednesday nights, the past month. Good tone and appeal. Not for a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MANHATTAN. (6,415 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This was considered a good show, and results were satisfactory. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. Good picture for me equal to the "Covered Wagon." It should go good any place. Don't be afraid to get behind it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. Had expected to do a smashing business with this picture, but for some inexplicable reason it flopped badly throughout its entire run. However, in my estimation, it's a good picture. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,867 feet). Star cast. A sin to waste a cast like this on such mediocre or worse story. Some patrons got sarcastic and asked if I got paid for running such stuff. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Excellent entertainment in a farce comedy. Griffith and Compson draw well for us. Sorry Paramount will not have her for the "Greater 40" group. She does some honest to goodness acting in this picture. Tone, good. Special, no. Residential appeal. Residential class town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. James N. Fisher, Lyric Theatre (250 seats), Versailles, Kentucky.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Here's an entertainer of the first rank. It just can't be beat, and will pull them in any house like it has for me. Worlds of comedy, suspense and action. It's too bad there aren't more pictures of this type. All classes city of 95,000. Admission 40-50. Guy O. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1,152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star cast. This is the immortal fairy tale by Sir James M. Barrie faithfully transferred to the screen with all its spirit and charm by Herbert Brenon. The acting of Betty Bronson in a personification of Peter Pan is wonderful indeed, as she takes you to Never Never Land and Eternal Youth. Ernest Torrence is "Captain Hook," the pirate. He has never done anything better. Don't cheat the children out of this one. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

PETER THE GREAT. (7 reels). Star cast. A good picture that pleased the majority. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Tom sure goes over with my fans as they will come in any kind of weather to see him. I did not like the short ending on this picture but it got by all right. Good tone. Fine appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, town 600. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. About as good a comedy as I have had for some time. Although the picture is not exactly on the book, nevertheless it is a dandy. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, town 600. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

Corinne Griffith and Kenneth Harlan in "The Marriage Whirl," a First National Picture.

SACKCLOTH AND SCARLET. (6,732 feet). Star, Alice Terry. The best picture I have used here for months. Made me lots of friends here as a number came the second night that were never in the house before. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is one of the best Dix has made. Plenty of thrills on a skyscraper that was great. Dix is becoming more popular right along. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeals to residential class. Residential class town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. James N. Fisher, Lyric Theatre (250 seats), Versailles, Kentucky.

SIDESHOW OF LIFE. (6,511 feet). Star cast. While the majority agreed it was a good picture it had no pulling power and it showed a bad loss. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A pleasure for exhibitors to run pictures of this kind. Both stars popular here. Not a special but could be used as such. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). A fair program picture made from a story that is rather improbable but if one's imagination is working all right it will go down. Miss Daniels and Richard Dix are popular here, so that may have helped to put the picture over. One feminine patron, who might be described as a trifle "highbrow" remarked that "it was certainly romantic"—but I guess it pleased seventy-five per cent. Moral tone is questionable and it is not a Sunday picture nor a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (7,912 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Splendid show. Pleased small audience. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. J. J. Parker, Cozy Theatre, (200 seats), Merom, Indiana.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star cast. Good special, but not in with "Covered Wagon" or "North of 36." Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

TIGER LOVE. (5,325 feet). Star, Estelle Taylor. A fair program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (300 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

ALYCE MILLS

One of the newest of our stars will be seen in "The Keeper of the Bees," an F. B. O. release program schedule. Worth seeing. Good tone. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw merchants and farmers, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson, James Kirkwood. Good production. Tone and appeal good. Yes for Sunday. Draw merchants and farmers, widely scattered town, 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This made a nice program; the colors were fine. Film was in fair shape. Every one pleased. We did poor business on this, but no fault of picture; bad weather. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special some places. Draw farmers, town 150. Admission 10-25. Jack Snyder, Casino Theatre (310 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

WILD BILL HICKOK. (6,892 feet). Star, William S. Hart. Same as "Call of the Canyon." If you get a good print which I did not; badly cut out. Several historical parts of the old west in it. Sunday, no. O. G. O'Dell, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

Pathe

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels). Star, Rex (horse). About one hundred per cent. better than the human actors was the Wonder horse, Rex, seen for the first time here. This is a western show with all the old time hokum but the horse puts it across with a slam. Exploit the horse big. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. I have been waiting for more than two years for Pathe to bring their film rentals down from the (for me) region of the clouds on Lloyd pictures, to the vicinity of a small town man, that he might view at closer range. I got "Dr. Jack" for my first Lloyd feature and although I paid too much for it, that fact did not spoil my enthusiasm for its merit. Comedies of this order are good for my business. To my mind, Lloyd starts in where the other comedians leave off. "Dr. Jack" is a very good comedy, suitable for Sunday, with a moral tone that is one hundred per cent. pure—(even better than Ivory)—but as special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

Principal

GIRLS MEN FORGET. Star, Johnny Walker. A very good drama of the times. A little different kind of picture and pleased most of the audience. Good tone. Appeal seventy-five per cent. No for Sunday or special. Firkins and Laws, Crystal Theatre, Moravia, Iowa.

RE-CREATION OF BRIAN KENT. Star cast. Harold Bell Wright's worst picture to date. A few said it was good but the majority did not like it at all. Business was fair the first night, but fell off. The paper was not as good as on the former Wright pictures. Tone, okay. Fair appeal. No as special. Draw all classes, small town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. (5 reels). Star cast. Good picture. Bought right and it will please everyone. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Railroad class, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (750 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. No matter what kind of a play Harry is called upon, he always has proven he can take care of it. Especially so from Western to this one. Harry's pictures always please our patrons, this one, is as good as the rest from Producers Distributing Corporation. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Mining class. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre (175 seats), Glen Alum, West Virginia.

STOP FLIRTING. Selected cast. Good in spots, but rather tame after "Charley's Aunt." Suitable for one night or double bill. Tone, O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw family and student class, town 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

TIGER THOMSON. (5,700 feet). Star, Harry Carey. A good western with all action desired. Am trying to buy second series; first one went over O. K. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

TROUPING WITH ELLEN. Star, Helene Chadwick. Good one-day picture. Helene Chadwick very pretty in this one, and story is fair. Tone, O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw student and family class, town 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

Schulberg

APRIL SHOWERS. Was well liked and played to fair business. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Universal

DARLING OF NEW YORK. (6,260 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. Very good program subject. Appeals especially to children. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A good one. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Hoot's pictures are always a drawing card. This proved no exception and was enjoyed by all. Tone, all right. Appeal, O. K. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw mixed class, town 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Extra good program, western. The roundup scenes are O. K. Hoot seems to be popular here so I did a good business in the face of tricky competition. Tone, okay. Appeal, good. No as special. Draw all classes in small town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. This is a splendid railroad picture and pleased everyone. Wallace Beery as the man who is "Hell with the women" incites the usual detestation that his remarkable ability as a heavy usually does. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

THUNDERING DAWN. (6,600 feet). Star, Doris Kenyon. Fair picture with a big storm scene; it had no box office value nor did they get excited over it. Good tone. Appeal, sixty per cent. No for Sunday and as special. Firkins and Laws, Crystal Theatre, Moravia, Iowa.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. A good show, only we paid too much for it as the amount of business we are doing just now does not warrant such a high rental. It drew mostly kids for us. Draw better class. town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WOMAN'S FAITH. Star, Alma Rubens. Starts out fair but the rest just drags along. Last two reels shows weeping Percy in different churches. Why do they waste time on such awful draggy pictures? Pleased nobody. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Railroad class and miners, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Masters, Strand Theatre (750 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Vitagraph

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. Had a good audience on this one and they enjoyed it and boosted it fine for the second night's run. Tone, all right. Appeal, very, very good. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw mixed class, town 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,710 feet). Was considered a good picture here and the comments were very favorable. Did satisfactory business. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

CAPTAIN BLOOD. (10,680 feet). Star cast includes J. Warren Kerrigan. This is the type of picture which does not pull or interest a small town audience, in proportion to high rental charged by Vitagraph. Tone, all right. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday and yes as special in cities. Draw mixed class, town 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

MYSTERY OF LONE RANCH. Star, Pete Morrison. I believe this was a good picture, or would have been if they had not balled things up in the assembling of the print at laboratories. A lot of repeat stuff—and I had first run on it. Vitagraph made a very fair adjustment with me. Draw mixed class, town 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

Is that feature for next Saturday a SATURDAY picture?

Is that comedy coming along with the feature you're sort of leery of likely to hold up the standard or help make the feature seem a flop?

Is the serial you're thinking of booking going to hold up?

Nobody can tell you but an exhibitor who has had experience with those pictures.

You send tips to help him, and he will be more likely to send tips to help you!

ONE LAW FOR THE WOMAN. (6 reels). This one might please, but it's doubtful. The director lacked the ability to inject the much-needed pep and the audience patiently waited until the hero saved the girl, etc. Tone none. Suitable for Sunday but no as special. Appeal, fifty per cent. Draw from masses, city 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama.

SCHOOL FOR WIVES. Star, Conway Tearle. This is very good. Fine acting and scenery. The young people will like it. Will appeal eighty per cent. Very good for Sunday. Special, yes. New Empress Theatre (500 seats), Philadelphia, Pa.

SCHOOL FOR WIVES. (6,182 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. Pretty good domestic drama. Well mounted and well acted. Pleases the class of people who like love stories. City trade, city 15,000. Admission 20-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

Warner Brothers

CONDUCTOR 1492. (6,500 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. Even the old grouches complimented me on the picture as they came out. Went over big. Just what the small town demands outside of westerns. But one possible adverse criticism, seven reels is at least one too many for small towns with only one machine, although this one did not seem to drag with the audience at any time. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre. Bristol, Colorado.

Comedies

HIGH LIFE. (Educational). Good of its kind but my people get tired of this class of comedy. Unfortunately I have a fifty-two weeks' contract with Educational and must stick it out even though I lose. Tone, questionable. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. J. J. Parker, Cozy Theatre (200 seats), Merom, Indiana.

LOVE'S SWEET PIFFLE. (Pathe). Nothing much to it. Can't see a thing to Ralph Graves. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

ONE HORSE PLAY (F. O. B.) Pop Tuttle Comedy. Pretty good because it is a little different from the usual comedy. This one is pretty old, but went over just the same. Good tone; yes for Sunday. Drew farmers and merchants, town 450. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

PAPA'S DARLING (Fox). A very good Fox comedy that will make them laugh aplenty. Draw masses, city 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

RARIN' ROMEO. (Educational). Star, Walter Heirs. Poor Walter. If this is the best he can do, give him another job. Patrons were unanimous in saying that this was a bum comedy. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

RED PEPPER (Educational). Star, Al St. John. This comedy is good enough to save any show, no matter how weak the feature is. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 10-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

ROMANCE AND RASCALS (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. Another Semon re-issue that's not much of a comedy. Draw masses, city 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

SEA LEGS. (Educational). Star, Jimmie Adams. A fair comedy. Nothing more. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Short Subjects

PATHE NEWS No. 39. (Pathe). A good news subject, very interesting. E. N. Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

SPANISH ROMEO. (Fox). Star, Earle Fox. The best two-reel subject of the 1924-1925 season. Every exhibitor should get this one and tell 'em about it. They'll go out pleased even if the feature on the same program is a rotten one. A bull fight in this subject that wasn't just simply flashed off at the best part. It was on the screen long enough for everybody to get so thrilled that they screamed in several instances. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Independents

PAINTED FLAPPER (Chadwick). (5,600 feet). Star, Pauline Garon. Far better than name implies. Another title would help the box office a lot. Fair tone. Sunday yes, special no. Draw conservative class, city 22,000. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

RACING FOR LIFE (State Right). Stars, Fairbank-Novak. This is a very good feature; has an auto race that is a whiz. Tone, appeal and for Sunday, yes. No as special. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

RANCHES AND ROMANCE (State Right). Star, Leo Maloney. The best picture Leo Maloney has ever made, and I have run them all; the audience laughed until their suspender buttons came off; the operator (Projectionist Richardson will want him called) got so interested in the picture that he let the screen go white; and the piano player forgot to play—but I will not say what the boss did. Tone okay. Appeal—you bet! Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

RANGER BILL. (Bill Mix Productions). Star, Richard Carter. Good average western program story that holds those who like the action pictures. Not a wonderfully expensive story to make, but is up to the average for one day play. Draw general class, city 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

STAGE COACH DRIVER (State Right). Star, Tom Mix. This is the worst lemon that I have ever had the "privilege" of running; a bunch of old two reelers hashed up and miscalled a feature. Leave this alone if you value your reputation as a showman; run this and you will sure regret it; for every quarter that I have taken in on this one, it has cost me a dollar. Shun it like you would the smallpox. Tone, none. Appeal, zero. Nope for Sunday. As special—it is to laugh. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

TOMBOY (State Rights). Star, Dorothy Devore. Fairly good story with a suspected surprise finish. Bootlegging and thrills. Would probably go best as a second feature. Draw general class, city 25,000. Admission 25-30. Frank J. Framer, Empire Theatre (1,100 seats), New London, Connecticut.

TWO GUN SAP. (State Right). Star, Franklyn Farnum. A picture with some action, but I did not like it very well. Will get by for Saturday. Sunday, no. Special, no. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. D. C. Smith, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Fordyce, Arkansas.

WINGS OF THE TURF. (State Right). Star cast. Might as well be all blanks. This is rank. An old print and a poor picture on it. The pathos was dipped out by the bucket and the glycerin tears flowed freely while the villain still pursued her. Bah. Tone, punk. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

McDowell Finds a Way to Get Them In During the Counter Pull of a Festival

FILL a niche in the Exhibitors' Hall of Fame for Walter D. McDowell, manager of the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y. He kept the house out of the red ink during a local celebration, when there was a wealth of free attractions to lure the amusement seeker. He used it for a centennial, but you can work it on an old home week or a county fair, if you switch it around a little.

Some time ago Cliff Lewis, the publicity annexer, wrote to know if we had any dope on a stunt to grab business with free shows all over the place. We frankly admitted that we did not know what could be done. We have seen a lot of money spent for extra big attractions in the hope that the size of the offering would pull them away from the grand street parade, but we never saw it done.

Figured It Could

Syracuse was about to celebrate its hundreth year. There were to be all sorts of things happening, and it looked like a good time to book in a good cheap show and go fishing.

But that advice did not suit McDowell at all. He could not see why he should not do better than usual business with twice the usual number of people in town, so he started to figure and he figured until he hit on an idea that tied right into the celebration scheme.

He dug out fifteen of the oldest photographs of the city he could find. He got more than these, but he picked the fifteen that looked the most interesting, and had these made into slides.

Meanwhile he arranged with a local photographer to make about a reel of sky shots of the city; the first aerial pictures ever made of the town.

This gave him the basis of an attraction that covered the idea of a century of progress, though none of the pictures went back that far. He called it the Centennial Review.

To get advertising, the ever-useful Herald was let in on the scheme and the title of Syracuse Herald-Strand Theatre Centennial Review was given the production. The paper did an immense amount of advance work, (without charge), and during the festival week ran one of the old pictures each day, with a two column cut and from half to a quarter column reader, always hooking up to the full display at the Strand.

With the centennial uppermost in everyone's thoughts, the presentation exerted more pull than the film attraction, and the house did an excellent business in spite of the numerous counter attractions. It was virtually made a part of the celebration, and visitors and residents alike wanted to see what Syracuse used to look like and what it looked like from the sky today.

With the newspaper doing all of the advertising, the cost was very small and the stunt is well within the reach of the average town, though the smaller houses may have to cut out the aerial review.

Put Up a Front

What is said to have been the first false front ever built on the Cameraphone Theatre, Pittsburgh, was erected for Man and Maid and is reported to have excited the East Liberty section as much as it would have impressed in a small town.

This was backed by a crossword puzzle contest with a single ticket to every solver.

Get the Orphans

Because of its story, Zander the Great is especially indicated for the orphans' matinee and the Metro-Goldwyn exploitation men are playing this angle with great success. But you don't have to wait for a M-G man to suggest it to you. Play it on your own with the help of the newspaper, and you will find it a winner.

Dressed the House To Sell Quo Vadis

Realizing that it would take a little extra effort to put Quo Vadis over properly, the Strand theatre, Seattle, made that effort. With the exception of Jannings, the players were unknown, and the fact that it was a big production had to be gotten over through some special effort.

An electric sign was made to cover the usual two-story Strand sign, to throw the title in letters of light up and down the street. Festoons of greenery with bunting and cut-outs, completed the festival suggestion above the marquise line.

The foliage decoration was brought down below the canopy and draped around a cross banner over the doors with the title in electric lights, and the entrance doors were paneled with painted cards carrying sales material from the press sheets.

The result was that the patrons were impressed with the idea that Quo Vadis was something unusual, and so they turned out. Being in the proper frame of mind they fully valued picture instead of merely regarding it as "one of those foreign things." You can't make a patron like a poor picture, but you assuredly can help him to properly value a good production by showing it some extra respect yourself.

Four Banners

Banners on the streets in Birmingham require a special municipal dispensation, but D. Roscoe Faunce persuaded the City Commissioner that the showing of Charley's Aunt was a matter of sufficient importance to warrant a display and he got permission to erect four of them, which aided the laughing cat in the lobby to run the crowds up to the box office.

One Co-opper

A little different from the usual run was a co-operative page arranged by the Kings and Rivoli Theatres, St. Louis, or I'll Show You the Town. The difference was that there was only one co-operator, an automobile concern.

They dealt in used cars and tied in strongly to the idea that their cars could show you the town. Goldman took the upper half for the theatre ad and the company paid for the remainder, and both got full page value.

TOOK SEVEN CHANCES ON SEVEN-ELEVEN AND CAUGHT THE TOWN

The Jones Theatre, Canon City, Col., put out two boys, one dressed as Buster Keaton and the other in burnt cork. Both placcarded for Seven Chances and played craps all over the business district for about three hours a day. The best stunt yet.

New Toys Prologue Helped the Picture

Russell F. Brown, of the Rex Theatre, Eugene, Oregon, got out a two-piece banner for Barthelmess in New Toys, the top being his usual rosin paper effect while the bottom was done on compo board since it was subject to more strain.

Most of Brown's banners are done on this cheap paper, but after the paint is put on it looks just as good as a cloth sign and it costs but a small proportion of what cloth would come to. M. W. Larmour uses a somewhat similar paper, which is used to line freight cars in which grain is shipped, and he writes that he gets enough for a banner for thirty or forty cents. It might be well to remember that George Schade leads the list. Several years ago he was using corrugated paper for his marquise work instead of the more costly compo board. The others seem to have followed his lead.

Mr. Brown stiffens the paper with lath to gain rigidity and gets a very pleasant effect. The two sections are more nearly the same shade orange to touch it up.

The sign in the lower right hand corner is an announcement of a very effective prologue, which immediately preceded the picture. In this two youngsters enter on the curtained stage at the close of the March of the Wooden Soldiers. They meet in the center and dance around when the boy spies a new top; a rocking horse, and deserts his little playmate for the novelty. This brings her to tears and the penitent lad comes to comfort her.

The back curtains part, disclosing a large box, the lid of which rises to reveal a mechanical doll, who comes forward and does a stiff-joint dance, a large rachet, off stage, suggesting the creak of the mechanism.

At the close of the dance she reenters the box and the lid slides into place, the curtains closing. After a momentary pause the children timidly draw the curtains aside, revealing the screen with the main title.

It was inexpensive, but it made for an unusually good business.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

The Fates decreed that "Kivalina of the Icelands" be the attraction in what was probably the hottest week of the year. That fact in itself, far from being harmful, was on the contrary helpful as "Kivalina of the Icelands" was widely advertised as one of the coolest pictures available. The program, of which it was the feature, was made up of four stage presentations and two additional film subjects, making a whole show that rounded out an even two hours' entertainment. "Kivalina of the Icelands" was 1 hour and 4 minutes, the comedy, an Educational called "Baby Blues," was 15 minutes long and the usual Mark Strand Topical Review was 8 minutes long. The remaining 33 minutes of the two hours were given over to the stage numbers.

The overture was selections from "The Princess Pat," the operetta by the late Victor Herbert. These numbers, all of the lighter sort, helped to get the program under way by putting the customers in a pleasant mood right at the start. The lighting effects for this were: an amber Mestrum flood of 160 amperes on the orchestra from the dome; an overhead spot of light green on the vase in each transparent window at either side of the orchestra stage; foots and borders of large stage in blue; entrance spots, one green and one blue, crossing on ceiling drapes; 4 amber spots hitting the pleats of the gold draw-curtains closed across the small production stage; 2 green Mestrum floods on these curtains from the projection room. The overture required 8 minutes.

The second stage incident was the Brooklyn debut of the Russian National Orchestra of twenty-five pieces, under the directorship of Stephan Stephanoff. This organization, all strings, was billed as "direct from a six year world tour." They were pyramided on the stage all in Russian costumes, of green tunics, blue trousers and tan boots. The black cyclorama served as the back-drop for this number and at either side was a fabric column hand painted by P. Dodd Ackerman in fantastic colors typical of the Chauve-Souris. At the base of one column was a magenta spot light and in the other an orange spot for the opening number. Toward the close of the act the magenta in one column was dimmed down and a green dimmed up. The lighting for the set from the dome and projection room included straw floods, amber and white. The selections by the orchestra were: excerpts from Russian operas, a Russian dance, the "Second Hungarian Rhapsody," another Russian dance, "Katharina" and as an encore "Bright Shines the Moon." This incident required 16 minutes.

Immediately after the Topical Review came Estelle Carey, programmed as "Brooklyn's favorite soprano." She sang "Meneenia." Lights were as follows: lemon spot on singer from the dome and two variegated Mestrum floods on orchestra and spangled draw-curtains closed across the production stage.

The prologue to "Kivalina of the Icelands" was programmed "Northern Lights" and represented an eskimo igloo in a field of snow. In the foreground was a property sled loaded with furs and standing by the sled was a basso in full eskimo trappings. He sang a song called "Northern Lights" and at the chorus a snow on the lamp in the dome gave a very realistic effect of falling snow. This number ran 4 minutes, with lighting from sides and overhead.

Shot the Fathers

E. P. Briggs used the neckties sent all Paramount theatres to be given out on Father's Day, but he went beyond this. He had a local cameraman shoot all fathers who entered the Rialto Theatre, Pubelo, Col., between one and half past on that day. The picture was shown later in the week and will be shown again next year.

THE LOBBY DISPLAY AND A SCENE FROM THE PROLOGUE ON NEW TOYS IN EUGENE, OREGON

Russell F. Brown made this display of rosin paper on a lath foundation. It is blended from light to dark blue with orange border and a bright title letter. The cutout from the six sheet is mounted on compoboard and the colors match the banner. The prologue was a mechanical doll dance dressed up with a little allegory done by a pair of clever children. It helped to get the crowd.

THE RAGAMUFFIN CONTEST WILL HELP JACKIE COOGAN

This is a variant on the impersonation idea and was originated by John Hannon, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C. A prize was offered for the most ragged child and all were admitted to see The Rag Man. Only these nine responded, but the stunt made good.

Tattered Kiddies for The Rag Man

Getting away from the Jackie Coogan impersonation, John Hannon gave a new quirk to an old idea when he played The Rag Man at the Rex theatre, Sumter. He offered a prize to the most ragged child, and four boys and five girls responded to the rollcall at the appointed time.

The chief of police was the judge of the contest, and an unofficial jury of several hundred endorsed his verdict. The winner was given a small prize and all of them were awarded a pass to see the picture.

Nine Were Enough

Nine is a small turnout, even in a small town, but they drew a large crowd, and seemed to help business.

The regular lobby stunt was a display of ragged clothing which flapped in the wind. When there was no wind an electric fan was turned on to get the desired movement.

Now that vacation time is here, an impersonation stunt for the youngsters should be staged on any picture giving half an excuse, and this ragamuffin idea is new. Use that if you can hitch it to any title.

Larmour's Hints On Fancy Fronts

For some reason M. W. Larmour, of the National theatre, Graham, Texas, is unable to get out good photographs of his fronts. He cannot afford professional negatives and his hand camera turns up prints that suggest a too-warm toning bath, but he sends in some good suggestions, though the pictures will not reproduce.

The most elaborate of his recent efforts was for Peter Pan. This is built in a shadow box about 16 feet long and four feet high, with a 1x4 frame in front. Instead of cloth he uses a sort of sheathing paper, which he can purchase very cheaply and which serves for a short time as well as muslin. For Peter he painted the front frame with supporting columns of paper with a tesselated pavement effect.

Back of this was a paper backing, painted blue to represent the sky. This was cut out for the title and a moon, the latter being yellow tissue with the lettering in deep green crepe paper, brush shaded with blue. Both were lighted from behind.

In front of this sky were placed cutouts of Peter and others from the small posters, with artificial flowers and vines to sketchily suggest a garden effect.

As Mr. Larmour does all his own work, the cost was very small and the effect decidedly good.

For The Dressmaker from Paris he copied the mannequins from the fashion sheet on this production and mounted them on top of a straight banner, lettered with the title and players. The dresses were done in vivid colors to contrast with the plain white banner lettered in red and black, with a green border.

On The Goose Hangs High he used an oval banner with the flapper daughter on the left facing her prim mother on the extreme right. Here the card was a light yellow, with orange and dark blue border, orange title, outlined in black, and a row of silver moons. These last were made by varnishing circles, powdering them with aluminum paint when nearly dry and burnishing the metal when fully dried. This is a wrinkle we do not recall having reported before.

Making it Harder

A cutout puzzle of Hoot Gibson's face on a circus style throwaway was the exploitation for Let 'er Buck at the Pullman Theatre, Chaffee, Mo. All you had to do to get a pass was to paste the puzzle together neatly. The neatest fifteen got passes to later shows.

But you also had to identify the star by name, and to make this part more difficult, he was connected with his eight previous releases and his name was plastered all over the front of the theatre.

No one contracted brain fever solving the mystery.

A different style of lobby display will get you better attention. Change over.

Played to Dad

Next year remember that Frank J. Miller got a lot out of Fathers' Day by hooking the newspaper to a search for the oldest man in Augusta, Ga. When they found him they let him invite six of his cronies to be his guest at a Monday showing of Her Night of Romance at the Modjeska Theatre.

Any man who could show that he was 85 or older was made the guest of the house, but he got no party. The old men at the County Home were special guests.

Another stunt was a huge painted postcard which was displayed in the lobby the latter half of the previous week, addressed "To Father, all over the World."

A LOBBY DISPLAY ON WELCOME HOME THAT COST $42.25

Harry Gould made this for the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. The material cost $15, the art work was $25, hauling was $2 and tracing paper for the windows 25 cents. It made a knockout flash and can be used again with a little painting.

Sold Charley's Aunt on Numerous Stunts

One of the best campaigns on Charley's Aunt is reported by Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga. He knew he had something that was able to make good for the best he could do, so he shucked his coat and hustled.

One of his best stunts was worked by a female impersonator who pulled various stunts three days before and during the run of the farce. This particular one was to call from the grand stand to one of the favorites of the local team. This player, previously coached, called back, "On my word. It's Charley's Aunt, from Brazil, where the nuts come from."

The Aunt promptly rushed on the field and embraced him, and then was introduced to the large crowd as being the guest of the Modjeska.

The impersonator was also perambulated in an old-fashioned horse-drawn carriage with a venerable darkey driver. She handed out cards at dismissal time around the schools and did not overlook the downtown district. By the end of the second day practically everyone in town had seen her.

During the showing times she sat in a rocker in front of the theatre, busily knitting, apparently oblivious of the crowds she was attracting.

The lobby was masked in with compo board with a black cat painted either side of the entrance. Over the door was "Enter for laughing purposes only" with the title and other catchlines. Above this was a shadow box the width of the opening, containing nine black cats silhouetted against vari-colored lights set behind them. Larger black cats were on either end of the marquise. On either side of the marquise, against the house front, was a banner with an opening masked by scrim, back of which were phonograph horns, the laughing record being used. These read: "Inside they are laughing at Charley's Aunt."

Mr. Miller obtained a special permit to parade a small boy, a black cat and six black kittens around the street. It would be interesting to know how he induced the cats to follow the kid. The boy, of course, carried the usual sign to the effect that Charley's Aunt was enough to make a cat laugh.

A large department store let in a large cat with animated head and tail, and smaller cats were landed in numerous other stores.

And over it all was spread the idea: "You'll forget the hot weather when you see Charley's Aunt at the Modjeska, the coolest spot in town."

It's not only the racing titles that can use riders. A girl in a very toppy riding habit perambulated Boston recently in the interest of The Sporting Venus at the State Theatre. She got them in by the bunch.

A Producers' Distributing Release

HOW THE MODJESKA WAS DRESSED FOR CHARLEY'S AUNT

Frank J. Miller, of Augusta, Ga., spread himself on this farce, and the house front was only one item of a campaign that brought him an astonishing summer business. The large signs on either side of the marquise carried laughing records.

Got Them Laughing Before They Entered

Often a lobby stunt will prove to be as good as a prologue in getting the patron in the right frame of mind. W. Irvin found this to be the case the half-week he played Charley's Aunt at the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

His main lobby attractor was a black cat five feet high, lettered with the title and the familiar "It's enough to make a cat laugh." The mouth of the cat was masked with scrim, which permitted the laughing record to filter through. Patrons came up to the box office with their laugh already started, and went in to see the picture in the proper frame of mind.

As Mr. Irvin had not used the record on Harold Lloyd pictures, it was brand new and the first couple of days it not only halted the pedestrian but vehicular traffic was stopped while the drivers tried to figure it out. The stunt was worth a lot of extra money to the house and the comedy played to the best business in more than six months.

The lobby idea was supplemented by a street worker; a man dressed as a woman, who carried a suit case, properly labeled, and a basket of tagged nuts. Some 1,200 of these were given out, as well as 1,000 heralds, and the perambulator supplemented this with a lot of breezy talk as he went along the streets and through the stores.

For a clincher, a display advertisement was used the Sunday before the opening. As it is not customary to advertise the last-half attraction on Sunday, this simple stunt carried an unusual amount of conviction.

Chinese Curios Sold Chin Chow

Selling Chu Chin Chow is largely a matter of selling. You can't get it off to a good start with the usual campaign. You must sell the difference in style and create an atmosphere. Earl Settle did, and made money with the title.

He created an Oriental atmosphere in the foyer for four days in advance, being aided by a wealthy resident of Oklahoma City who is an enthusiastic collector of Oriental art treasurers. He put his collection at the disposal of Settle and the latter changed the lobby of the Capitol into an Oriental cozy corner in advance of the showing.

No Cost for Loan of Antiques

A wonderful inlaid cabinet was the centerpiece, and this was filled with rare porcelains. Teakwood and ebony chairs and tabourets were disposed in front, with Chinese rugs for drapes. The value of the collection ran well into five figures, yet the loan was made at no cost as the collector was proud to exhibit his treasures.

Most of this display was made in the foyer, but the open doors permitted the objects to be seen from the street. In the lobby proper two sphinxes guarded the box office, standing on cedar chests. They were not Chinese, but they were effective and helpful. Further front a cutout from the sheet was centered and flanked on either side wall by cutouts from the threes. Red and amber lighting aided the effect at night.

With a comparatively small newspaper campaign the picture was put over to a handsome profit.

A CLEVER UNDERLINE DISPLAY FROM THE CIRCLE

Ace Berry, of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, used this foyer design for the advance on Chickie. Each block is of a different color, with a cutout from the one-sheet atop. It made a fine flash and helped to a literally enormous business.

Guessed on Stills

Most identification stunts are based on star portraits, but Norman W. Pyle, a Metro-Goldwynner, worked it more effectively on a still. He ran a picture in the Morgantown, W. Va., Post and offered tickets for the identifications. The scene was from Zander the Great, shortly to play at the Metropolitan Theatre, so everyone guessed Marion Davies, but they studied the press stories to get the other names.

TWO GOOD POSTERS ON THE THIEF DONE BY SHIRBY YOUNGBECK

The Oriental picture lends itself to striking designs, but the house artist of the Milwaukee Theatre, Milwaukee, does not have to wait for a self-suggestor. He does capital work every week, though few photograph well on account of the color.

"Truth Well Told" Is Shimon Slogan

Louis C. Shimon, of the Milwaukee theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., has sent in a number of clever poster and card designs done by Shirby Youngbeck, the staff artist, but most of these will not reproduce since the camera will not yield the color values and the photographs seldom are satisfactory. We show on this page two designs on The Thief of Bagdad which came through better than usual.

Mr. Shimon also sends in a rubber stamp impression reading "Truth Well Told" with the name of the house in a surrounding circle. This is the slogan of the Advertisers' Club of the World, of which he is a member, and all Milwaukee Theatre posters are stamped with this design. It is also played up in the press work.

Helps the House

He writes that it has materially helped the house. Good pictures are offered merely as "good" and not "great," and fair pictures are slid over without lying, with the result that they can make a clean-up with the big pictures and do not lose business on the others, since the uniform use of "good" is just as good as the uniform use of "great" while leaving the latter to collect extra business.

Mr. Shimon writes that if any manager desires to correspond with him on this matter he will be glad to explain his methods and tell results. Years ago George Bleich built a wonderful following on this policy. It is just as good today; perhaps better, for the public has grown wiser meantime. Why not drop Mr. Shimon a line?

Exhibitor "Uncle" Likes His Title

Because of his genial ways, Thomas Sherlock, of the Castle Cinema, Northwitch, England, is known to the youngsters as "Uncle Tom," and gradually everyone has come to think of him by the same title.

He is proud of the name and clever enough to realize its commercial value, so his billboards, erected along the roads leading into town, carry the title, as shown in a cut on this page. Being a First National fan, he advertises his showing of that brand.

You never heard of a grouch being called "Uncle" by others than those who have to through relationship It's as much of a title of affection as it is a certification of good fellowship, and to be held in such popular esteem is a business asset as well as a matter of pride. We don't blame him for going to the billboard with his title.

Flapper Preview is Good Chickie Angle

M. A. Malaney, of the Love Theatres in Cleveland, pulled an extra good one on Chickie at the Stillman theatre.

He knew, of course, that Chickie is preeminently a flapper picture. He knew, too, that the Cleveland Press is running the sequel to the story.

Selected Ten Flappers

He permitted the editor to select ten typical flappers, for whom he gave a special advance showing of the picture. Then they were asked if Chickie came up to their idea of the modern girl. Six said "yes" and four took the negative, but all ten were quoted in a long story in the paper, with pictures of three of the girls to liven it up.

The Press threw in a box on the page containing the day's instalment of the sequel stating that the picture made from the original story was to be seen at the Stillman, and also printed a two column scene cut.

Everyone who read that page was interested in Chickie. It was the best sort of hand-picked advertising, and well worth the slight trouble involved in showing the picture in the private projection room.

Malaney helped along with a two inch streamer ad across the bottom of the page, and all told managed to get winter business in a summer temperature.

Like a Church

Salamanaca, N. Y., is small enough to rely on the church bells, and so the bells were used to put over The Hunchback of Notre Dame. A large bell, obtained from the local railroad shops, was hung over the marquise and was rung thirty and fifteen minutes before the showing of the picture at the Andrews theatre.

The free taxi if it rains stunt also was used, but it didn't rain.

UNCLE TOM SHOWS ARE SOMETHING ELSE IN WALES

They are not the once familiar "Tom show" of the Stowe story, but the capitalization of a title bestowed by the kiddies on Thomas Sherlock, of the Castle Cinema, Northwitch, Wales. The kids started it, but now he is "Uncle Tom" to everyone.

Strong Dog Story an Aid to Raffles

Making a dog story the chief stunt for Raffles at the Isis Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., F. R. Cleaver, a Universalist, helped put over the stunt in a way that made for real advertising.

Through the friendship of the general manager of the Consolidated Theatres, the Chief of Police was sold on the story and promised his help to put it over. He was the only outsider in the secret.

Shortly before the showing of the House Peters picture at the Isis, a truckman drove up to Police Headquarters with a strong box which he said he had received from two men who were standing beside a broken down automobile some distance out of town. One of the men started to ride in with him, but was unaccountably missing when town was reached. This looked suspicious, so he brought the box direct to the police.

Discovering the stencil of the U. S. Quartermaster's Department almost obliterated by dirt and age, the Chief called up Camp Custer, but was told that no such box was missing.

The police reporters were given the story as more or less of a mystery, and they all carried stories the next morning. Through the forenoon efforts were made to claim the box and remove it, but at last the box was claimed by C. Hurd, of the Isis, who explained that it contained the film of Raffles, also 50 bottles of perfume, as many packages of toilet powder and other articles intended to be given out as souvenirs on the picture. He announced that the combination had been lost and that he would pay a reward to anyone who would open the box before the picture was due to open, adding that the souvenirs would be distributed to those who might be in the lobby when the box was opened.

For several days the box stood in the lobby where all who wished might try their luck with the combination.

Saturday morning Mr. Hurd came out with the announcement that if the box were not opened by noon he would dynamite it, if necessarry, to get the films, but that he had sent for a safe expert.

Naturally this crowded the lobby at noon when the expert went to work. He opened the box with little delay, since he had the combination and only worked on it long enough to make it look difficult.

The films were found to be intact and the souvenirs were handed out, as promised. But fearful of a real Raffles, Mr. Hurd had put the things in only that morning. He was taking no chances.

The stunt gave several good news stories and made for real interest so the picture went over to big business.

A SPIRITED PAINTING SOLD THE SPANIARD IN BIRMINGHAM

Mr. Larmour's Idea On Cooling Appeal

It's a little late for this season, but it will pay to remember next Spring that M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, cools his house with fans and psychology.

He switches to "The Cool National" just before Texas warms up, and he starts his fans about a week before they really are needed, so that some people will complain that the house is too cold. That idea persists after the weather warms up, and the tradition of cold house is carried through the summer with a perceptible improvement in business. But Mr. Larmour says it is as bad to turn the fans on too soon as too late.

You may be interested in his annual advertisement. This year it ran as two thirds of a three sevens. It runs:

WHY THE NATIONAL IS ALWAYS COOL:

1. Every Minute the Air Is Changing.
   As you enter, notice how pure, sweet and cool the used air remains. We draw it from the shady side of the building, from under the spreading limbs of a large oak and blow it through the theatre to the street. But first it passes through our cooling and cleaning plant.
2. All Air Entering the National, Is Washed, Cooled and Dried.
   In the right hand wall near the screen you can see an eight foot blow fan. The air from this fan is drawn from the shade, through sprays of cold, circulating water, dried, and delivered to you.
3. An Abundance of Ceiling Fans Keep this Pure, Cold Air Stirred Up, Blowing It to All Parts of the Theatre.
   You sit in a slow moving breeze of washed and cooled air, and also receive a direct breeze from the ceiling fans overhead.

NOTE: To Those Who Find the National Too Cold.

If you do not sit directly under the ceiling fans, you will still get the clean, cool air from our air washing plant without the direct draft from the ceiling fans overhead.

USING A TWENTY-FOUR SHEET TO REINTRODUCE TOM MIX

Don Nichols, of the Paris and Savoy Theatres, Durham, N. C., had not run a Mix picture recently so he used the entire sheet for Riders of the Purple Sage when he played that title at the Paris. It worked better than any smaller display.

Tried Prologues

Newburgh, N. Y., got its first taste of the prologue idea on Code of the West, when Charles R. Hammerslough, of the Broadway Theatre, used two costumed singers offering West of the Great Divide in a scenic setting. The people liked the idea, and it helped to draw business.

As a by-product cards were tied to automobiles reading that the recipient had violated the Code of the West, and summoning him to see the picture. It's a bit old, but it was new in Newburgh, where they are just waking up.

The title writing contest did so well for Janice Meredith it has been shunted over to Zander the Great in towns where it was not worked on Janice. Giving a newspaper a set of tickets for prizes also enabled the Columbia Theatre, Sharon, Pa., to edge in the crossword puzzle. Digging still further back, an orphan's matinee was given, all of which helped Zander to pay the rent.

Getting Charley's Aunt for its first showings in the State, the Isis Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Ia., not only got a week of big business but got two extra days for the final clean-up. One of the big selling points was a well-handled full page that preceded the showing. This was mostly cut and title, with the result that the sales talk is all read, because there is comparatively little of it. It does not take a page of argument to sell this comedy, but a splash page will sell the argument through the creation of a sense of bigness, and so cut it better than more copy. The halftone did not come through very well, but it is reasonably clear and gets the idea of the character over, but with all its years in stock Charley's Aunt is too well known to be dependent upon any one factor. In this display we particularly like the boxing in of the main copy. Taken by, large and sideways this is an unusually good display.

Strong Display in Simple Typography

This 50 by 6 from the Rialto Theatre, Burlington, Ia., is far from being a good example of artistic typography; indeed it is quite the reverse, and yet it is not without its interesting points. It gives an exceptionally strong display to Meighan's name; and most of the selling will be done through Meighan rather than his play. There is some lost space over at the left, where it does not count as white space attractor, and a column might have been saved without losing any of the effect. The rule work is part of the attention-getting appeal. It does not mean anything and does not form any particular design, and yet the six point rule gives a real sense of strength to the space. It seems to belong as much as the type, chiefly because of its boldness. It might have helped had the "Filmed in the picturesque coal fields of Alabama" been shoved over to the left, under the sales talk, which would have permitted a better spacing between the title and Miss Lee's name, but it does not matter much, since Meighan's name has already won attention for the space and you cannot well overlook the rest if you are interested in this star. The placement of the small features is unusual, but it is good, since it gives them more importance than they could have gained below the star name. Below they would have been the tail to the dog. Above they seem to be more important. Generally this placement would pull the layout out of shape. Here it has a reverse effect. It actually helps. It's not a "pretty" advertisement, but it is a good seller, and therefore a good advertisement. It was framed by Harold D. Barnes, the manager.

Uses Local Events to Scale Up Sally

Tell a man that a thing is six feet tall and he will have a better idea of the height than if you mentioned two meters. On the same line N. L. Royster, managing director of the Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., uses two local happenings as his measuring stick for Sally in an effective two fives. The lower part of the space is worded to suggest a personal appearance, which we do not believe was intended. What is meant is that rotos are to be given, but some are apt to show up with the idea that Colleen Moore will be there, too, to hand them out. It would have been better to have made this a little more definite, but the general idea of the space is capital and stacking Sally up against the auto races and the pageant will do more to sell that production than the flashiest full page ad ever slipped into a form. A full page is just cuts, but the auto race is a definite and tangible standard of comparison. Ten inches did more selling than the average page.

A Special Reverse for Great Divide

This display from the Sun Theatre, Omaha, does not seem to be press book stuff, but a locally drawn title plate, very appropriate when you realize that the design is that of an Indian blanket. strong black, which materially helps the effect, but such bold lettering cannot be wholly lost even in a weak grey, and it is particularly effective in that it throws into prominence a title that already has been sold to the possible patrons through its long stage use. In general the type is well laid in. The section starting "while three men—" is in all caps, but there are not more than three words to the line and these are well spaced, so even this is not as objectionable as usual. Using light Roman above and below, the star name gives a display to Miss Terry that could not come from the use of any size of full face for the lesser lines, and while here an upper and lower would have been better, the lines are not important and their partial loss does not affect the general result. This Ad Sells on the Griffith Play

Most theatres have sold Isn't Life Wonderful on the strength of the producer's name, but the Hippodrome Theatre, Baltimore, plays up the name and then adds the criticism from the Telegram-Mail, of New York, set into the cut. This cut seems to have been locally produced, and works out very well.

A United Artists Release

NAME AND CUT

We like this selling angle. This picture is so different from the usual product that some advance explanation is essential if the patron is not to be disappointed, and the line "A simple romance of love and potatoes" backs up the comment of the reviewer and gives the prospect some idea of what to expect. Having some idea, he is better able to appreciate this excursion into untrodden fields. The better you educate your clients, the better they will be pleased. Get them in expecting to see the usual Griffith, show them something entirely different, and before they have had time to get used to it, they have decided that they do not like it. Play on the producer, but prepare your patrons for something unusual.

Hand Lettering is Hurtful to Display

Here is another example of a poorly lettered display from Lowe's Valentine Theatre, Toledo. The artist gave it up on the quoted speech below the head, but the printer was right with him—he set it in all caps. The rest looks as though the space had been slapped together in a hurry, for the lettering is sloppy in the extreme, and the spacing is almost inexcusable in spots. Probably the average reader will know that the panel is trying to tell him that there is a Charley Chase comedy, a cross word puzzle film and the news reel, but what it announces is "A Charley Chase comedy, Crossword News." With all that space at command, there was plenty of room for a better exposition of the added attractions, but it looks as though it had been put in by one of the ushers. It's a shame to waste four nines like this, even though Norma Talmadge probably sold the show on her name alone. If she can do that, it would have been better to have left out the rest, rather than offer such a mess. The Valentine does good type work now and then. It is a pity it does not hold the artist to his proper place.

Gets Title Over With Little Copy

This space from Loew's Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., is mostly plan book cut, but when the cut can sell the idea of Husbands and Lovers so well, it is scarcely necessary to add much copy. The sale is made through the cut, with the announcement of the featured players to add to the interest. But the house and the printer made a workmanlike job of packing in the type, and it makes a nice three tens with a minimum of effort.

You have the girl the proffered heart and the wedding ring. Of course you know the censors will insist upon the wedding ring, but the situation suggests that it has interesting points and the chances are that you are sold before you come upon the three line: "Something new about lovers. Something new about husbands. Something new about Wives." You scarcely need that, but it certainly does not hurt.

This Double Frame Gives Prominence

Frank H. Burns, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., sends in a strong small ad on Forty Winks in which he gets a powerful kick out of a double frame. The space is only a three sixes, but a quarter page would have given no better display. The foundation is from the plan book, but Mr. Burns has worked the cut out to get something entirely different. He handles white space about as well as anyone we know of, and he knows the value of cutting into the space to get extra attention. Both the house name and the "Today only" strike the eye the first thing, though it is the odd cut which probably gets the most attention. That small line at the bottom of the space reads, "Personally endorsed as a peach of a fun film for everyone," and the small letters inside the inner frame are jazz copy urging everyone to be sure and see it. He does not try to tell what it's all about. He has the reading notices to look after this. This space comes to cash in on the advance, and it did just what was required of it. It's a nice example of open spacing, but most of his displays are that.

Sold Extra Star

Because His Supreme Moment and The Sporting Venus have the same players, E. Irvin of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., made the most of the fact that The Sporting Venus, which he was playing, has one more star than the other picture. He did not come right out and say this, but he played up his cast in larger newspaper spaces than usual and the people got the idea that if Venus required one more star than a Supreme Moment, it must be a better picture.

Then he did more by playing up the Hamilton comedy, King Cotton, which naturally is an attractive title in the cotton belt. Giving the comedy a share of the lobby display brought in a nice addition to the box office roll.

Riesenfeld Jolts Broadway Orchestras

IF Dr. Riesenfeld has accomplished but one thing with the "Engagement Extraordinary of Ben Bernie, Himself and His Band," that one thing is—a general recognition of the fact that if the Symphony Orchestra is to survive in the moving picture theatre, it must offer a variety of musical compositions in the overture spot which are in direct contrast one to the other, not bordering along a familiar strain.

There are some overtures which may be perfectly proper in a concert hall, but which have no place whatsoever in a motion picture program. The overture should reflect a certain spontaneity, a life, a colorful tonal treatment. It is the beginning of the show, and necessarily it is a dominant factor in setting the tempo which the audience unconsciously absorbs, and reflects during the balance of the program. There are some overtures which have been offered in picture houses which have so lowered the temperament of an otherwise appreciative audience with their slow, dreary, dismal movements, that all of the comedy subjects and excellent presentation features have had a terrific battle to win the good will back again.

Jazz music is one form of music and a limited form at that. A jazz orchestra may be classed as "nerve disturbers." They shock one's emotions like an electric vibrator, but in the range of music which is available to the Symphony Orchestra there are so many forms, so many excellent compositions, so many good things which are practically overlooked by the average conductor that we are confident when the Symphony Orchestra settles down to business some real results will be attained.

It is high time that orchestras begin to clean house by the elimination of the old standard numbers plus the temptation to repeat compositions. Let us have an influx of original compositions, of new arrangements, without having two theatres playing the same overture at the same time. There is absolutely no excuse for such a condition. The orchestras in the five leading Broadway motion picture houses have long been recognized as the finest of music aggregations. They have excellent conductors, are composed of talented artists, and there is no reason why the music should not be of such scintillating character as to be one of the drawing powers of the house. The large orchestras cost enough, we know, and the theatre should get value received as well as the patron. This will not come with a strict adherence to the old stuff.

The Hays Office Speaks of Better Programs

WE are grateful for a statement recently received from the Greater Movie Season Division of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Incorporated, which we are printing here in its entirety.

"Unseen workers will make history during Greater Movie Season. Producers, directors and camera-men who stand on studio sidelines have created better motion pictures. Producing-directors and technicians in back-stage areas of first-run theatres will provide better motion picture entertainment.

"Too much praise cannot be accorded the development of their particular art. In fostering that art 'The First Run' department of the Moving Picture World has contributed importantly; for a theatre's methods of presentation, the atmosphere with which it surrounds the screen, enhance public receptivity and make possible the production of still finer and more thoughtful photoplays with some certainty of popular appreciation. An audience prepared for the spirit of a classic by the advance presentation, then kept in that spirit by the orchestral accompaniment, naturally will respond in a manner that would be impossible were the picture flashed coldly upon them. To that great extent do producing-directors govern public emotion and, because emotion makes entertainment, the success or failure of the screen's worth-while efforts.

"Entertainment is the film industry's basis. The ratio of presentation to picture in creating that entertainment cannot be gauged, although the box-office tells the story in terms of 50c or more as against 25c admission.

"Mr. Hays' statement in launching the national drive might well be borne in mind. 'Greater Movie Season begins in August. It continues—not for a week or a month, but for as long as theatres, by the entertainment they afford, justify the enthusiastic support that this season will inspire nationally.

"Greater Movie Season aims directly at the 40% of the American people listed as irregular patrons. That percentage includes the body that prefers to think of pictures as they were eight or ten years ago—in the era of flickers, illustrated ballads, a discordant piano with, perhaps, a fiddle and cornet extra on Saturday night. The advances in screen-art will surprise the critics, but what the men behind the screen have done for the art of presentation—lifting it as high as the best production standards of the stage—will amaze them."

This book clearly and concisely informs one of the correct costuming of the various Slavic people. The purpose of the book is to "facilitate the difficult problems of this particular costuming by eliminating individual research and, through practical suggestions, to minimize the expense of making the costumes. The collection has been developed from authentic sources. not so much from the historical as the point of view which selects as significant for its use, line and color effects rather than the details of decoration and execution."

Some very interesting subject matter is included in the book which embraces a description of costumes, etc. attendant on the holidays and festivals of the Slavic Peoples. This includes data relative to the important holidays in Bulgaria, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Russia and Serbia.

There are practical suggestions for making the Slavic costumes. The various costume plates are sketched in black and white, but with a simple key which links the drawings with the color plan for the costumes described, specifying the shade, material and other details.

Capitol Ballet Corps

A fabric drop hung in two, toned rainbow colors from the sides with reds, greens, blues and pinks which blend in a manner to cover the entire surface of the drop. The two returns down in one are caught back about two-thirds of the way up, the surface of the returns being toned a deep blue from the sides. Four girls dressed in green ballet costumes enter with four men wearing green tights, black sleeveless jackets and white shirts, and form a ballet background to Gambarelli, who enters in a white ballet costume with silver trimming, and dances to "Valse Celebre" (Moszkowski). Canary from the sides and foots highlights the dancing area, with the ballerina dancing in a pink spot.

Duet from "Carmen"

An artistically painted set of a street in a Spanish quarter similar to a scene in Bizet's opera "Carmen," which consists of a cut drop hung in two with a masonry span running from a painted house left over to some structures at right center, and the balance of the set in three. A blue sky gradually ascends to a red tint visible through the small passageway up center. Singers dressed in costumes characteristic of the play are highlighted with blue from the right and light amber from left, with light amber spot and red foots. A small chair is placed right center.

The Spirit of the Rainbow

An unusual number which combines a bit of motion picture film with a dance. At the opening of the number a motion picture scenic shot of a water falls in the distance falling into a rocky chasm is shown on the screen and fades into a closeup of a water falls similar to that of Niagara. A wide angle lens on the projection machine widens the frame so that the picture fills the entire proscenium opening. This is thrown on a scrim hung in one with black to back. Presently a rainbow is thrown in at right center and the figure of Gambarelli appears center in a scarf dance emulating the various movements of the falling water. Red from the sides highlights the form of the dancer who gradually comes down to the stage floor on an invisible stairway, and the lighting in the various positions changes from green to purple and rose. The general effect is that of dancing "spirit of the water falls" amid the cataract.

Ye Olde English Tavern

A plain interior suggestive of an English tavern with buff walls, an alcove at center with casement windows, a door at the right of the alcove leading off center, two double casement widows over the alcove. A brown wainscoating and casings comprise scenic treatment of the set. This is all done on a drop hung in two. A landscape drop painted in colorful fashion with a thatched roof visible through the top casement windows is hung in three to back. Old English benches and other similar furniture, including a cask on a "horse," was used to dress. Amber from the sides and canary to flood were used in the performing area. Old English costumes of about 100 years ago were worn by the various artists. The ballet appeared for the finale dressed in hunting costumes of red coats and white breeches, with one character dressed as a fox, entering through the window at center.

A Little Bit of This and That

Joseph Plunkett presents four numbers in a group of divertisements.

(a) Duet from "Il Trovatore" (Verdi)

Two singers dressed in characteristic costumes of this particular opera appear before red fabric drop and work in a steel blue spot. Red foots, blue and green from the sides on the singers constitute the general lighting treatment.

(b) The Chantal Sisters

A piano duet featuring (1) "Scherzo" . . . Saint-Saens; (2) "Dizzy Fingers" . . . Confrey; (3) "Popular Fantasy." Setting consists of seven light red silk panels hung in columnar folds at about 3-ft. intervals over black plush. Two mahogany grand pianos at center set back to back with pianists dressed in silver cloth gowns, down at right and left center. Red foots and border tone the set. Shafts of white from the sides highlight the faces and backs of the musicians.

(c) "In a Garden"

A garden scene which is very effective. A gate at center with two 5-ft. green posts with a white split gate that is practical, over which is a heart shaped arch covered with flowers in amber tones. A hedge row in block formation leads off right and left from the gate. First section is about 3-ft. high. At left center another section about 7 ft. high surmounted with small bay tree leads to left, which is joined to another hedge section which is about 12 ft. high. A small hedge row is back of the gateway. A blue cyc to back. Blue foots and borders with amber, canary and green to highlight. Dancer who appears first in the gateway wears a white dancing costume with jewelled headgear. Two men enter for finale wearing tuxedoes, tile hats and carrying canes. They work in a white spot.

(d) The Eight Volga Singers

(From the Ed Wynn Show)

Eight singers in Russian Folk Songs dressed in colorful cossack coats with gray lambs wool hats, oil cloth boots and sheathed knives worn in the center of the belt. They stood in alignment against a black patent-leather drop hung in one which was tinted red from the border with red, green and blue from sides in vivid colors. Singers were flooded with white from the booth and amber foots up.

Music:

Overture: "Waters of the Minnetonka" (Lieurance), played by the Colony Melody Masters, with E. Charles Eggett conducting. "The Mystic Voice," held over for a fifth week, still entertains patrons. The number this week is "Somebody We'll Meet Again" (Hock and Van Loan), with console accompaniment by John Priest.

Mexico City Grand Opera Company:

Harold McCoy, managing director, has brought an excellent quintet of artists to the Colony and with very simple scenic treatment presents the singers in an excellent manner. This is the New York debut of the company and judging from the reception accorded by the audience this organization proved an instantaneous success. The cast includes Carlos Mejia, tenor; Rodolpho Hoyos, baritone; Diana M. Milicua, coloratura soprano; Margarita Cueto, mezzo soprano; Rosa De Carli, dramatic soprano. They present a group of the most impressive selections from the foremost operas.

The first number introduces the "Rigoletto Quartette." Four singers in characteristic costume standing in one at right center. A scrim is hung at the curtain line, and black plush in two to back. The singers are highlighted from right and bridge with canary and light amber. The "cameo" effect is well done. Lights dim down, a black plush tab curtain is raised at left center, the lights come up, revealing a "flash setting." The corner of a Spanish house. A flat with door, with balcony and window above it, runs parallel with the black plush backing. The adjoining flat with an upper window covered with a striped awning of Spanish style, and a bright colored shawl hanging from the window ledge is obliqued down stage to extreme left with a plain flat to match and carry off. A "senorita" sits on a table against the obliqued flat, and sings a song to the accompaniment of a guitar played by a character dressed in Spanish costume standing in the doorway of the house. Amber from the bridge highlights the singer and the guitar player. Lights dim down, the tab curtain at left is lowered and the one at right center is raised. The lights are brought up at right, revealing a half section of the arched entrance to an arena. A top piece painted to give the effect of a tiled roof supported with an upright painted to resemble stonework. Black plush masks the opening. A singer dressed as a "Toreador" enters and sings the famous song from "Carmen." Canary, light amber and amber from right and from bridge highlights the singer. The lights dim down, tab curtain is lowered. The lights are gradually brought up, as the scrim is taken away, the black plush is drawn at center, presenting a full stage set which consists of a landscape painted on a cut-out row, backed with blue cyc. The entire company appear in colorful Mexican costumes for a finale. Amber foots, canary and amber from right and left, with a pink flood on artists.

"On the Bowery":

An atmospheric presentation used in the spot preceding the picture. The scene represents a portion of the water-front on the lower East Side (New York City). A set building representing the entrance to "the old saloon" is at left. A flat, with practical entrance and swinging bar-room doors, obliqued on stage, with another flat completing the building to mask and carry off. Two windows are cut at the top of each flat, the openings covered with light colored shades. The end of a fire escape is visible at the extreme up stage corner of set piece. One step platform leads from the building. A painted row to represent the border beams of a wharf, with an occasional cap of a spile being noticeable, set across stage at back. The under structure of the "elevated" is hung directly over the row, a "steel" support at right center. The blue cyc is used to back. An old-fashioned street lamp is placed on the right of the "support." Black plush legs are used at right to mask and carry off. The routine opens with a singer dressed in navy uniform standing beside the lamp post right center. Blue from right and dark amber from bridge highlight the character. A policeman dressed in the uniform of other days, helmet and long coat, enters from left, approaches the sailor, questions him, and is answered with a song, "If You See That Gal of Mine' Send Her Home." At the finale of the song, the policeman exits left, the singer at right. A character dressed in a typical "Bowery outfit," tight-fitting gray checked suit, with rolled rimmed derby, enters from the bar-room at left. He is joined by a girl dressed in characteristic Bowery garb, who enters from right. They do a clever "Bowery Dance," ending with an acrobatic routine. The lighting treatment consists of blue and red foots dimmed down about half, blue borders on full. Amber within set building left, with shafts of amber coming through the opening above and below the swinging doors. Amber tone back of window shades in house, amber light in lamp post, with amber from bridge and sides spotting the area near the lamp post at right center. Amber from left is shot across upright, and blue from right to left on face of building.

Rochester, N. Y.

Featured Picture: "The Night Club"

An organ overture, "Northern Rhapsody" (Lucius Hosmer), is offered in substitution for the regular orchestral program. The number is played alternately by Robert Berentsen and Harold Osborn Smith. What the composer did for the South in his "Southern Rhapsody," which was played a few weeks ago by the Eastman Theatre Orchestra, he has in his "Northern Rhapsody" done for the North. The "Northern Rhapsody," like its Southern counterpart, is a free treatment of motives and melodies dear to the people of the section of the country from which it takes its name, interspersed with original ideas. An introduction, including excerpts from "Hail, Columbia," and "When Johnnie Comes Marching Home," is followed by the principal movement, founded on the dances of old New England freely and elaborately developed. An original treatment of "Home, Sweet Home" follows and the composition concludes with a martial finale reminiscent of old-time war songs. The working up of the three counter-melodies with "Yankee Doodle" as a basis makes a brilliant and thrilling climax.

As an extra attraction, the Russian National Orchestra with Stephan Stephanoff, conductor, is presented. The orchestra is assisted by a soprano and two solo dancers from the Ballet Russe.

The second of the big musical features which will be presented at the Eastman Theatre during the absence of the orchestra, which is enjoying its annual three weeks' vacation, will be Al Jolson's Jubilee Singers. The group of ten musicians will open on Sunday for a week's engagement, presenting a varied program of comedy, song and dance to their own stringed instrument accompaniment.

McDONALD THEATRE PROLOGUE:

The new McDonald Theatre in Eugene, Oregon, is to be congratulated for the special prologues being produced under the supervision of Russell F. Brown and Donald McDonald.

We are in receipt of a flashlight and description of the prologue devised for "A Thief in Paradise," which, according to reports, attracted much attention and pleased comment from the patrons.

The blue foots are brought up on the close-in curtains as guitar and ukes are heard off stage with aid of magnavox playing "Aloha." The organ starts introduction of "My Isle of Golden Dreams," voices off stage sing verse, during which the plush curtains slowly open, revealing a tropical island setting. The door of a hut with a pent roof at left. Wings painted with palm tree and tropic grass base is used as returns right and left, the one at left masking the down stage side of the hut. Set palm trees up left center with a foliage border to mask. Up stage, a row upon which is painted a scene depicting a beach, a palm tree growth and distant volcano, set across from right to left, the volcano at center. Sky drape curtain is used for backing. A man and a girl are discovered seated on the ground in front of the hut, singing and strumming the ukes. At the end of the song they arise and enter the hut, left. A dancer dressed in Hawaiian costume enters from right and dances to "Beach at Wakiki." At the conclusion of her dance she exits, as a character dressed as a "beachcomber" enters, sings "Dreamer of Dreams" and exits. The man and girl enter from hut, left. A dramatic note is injected into balance of the prologue wherein the girl, unable to persuade her lover from leaving her, invokes the aid of the spirit of the volcano. Her invocation includes the song, "One Fine Day," from "Madame Butterfly." At the end of the solo, the deep blue lighting treatment of the set changes slowly to purple, then red, as the sky back of the volcano tinges with pink to red. Rumble is heard off stage, and increases in volume as smoke and steam spouts from the volcano, the crest breaking, with rocks, lava and kindred effects being brought into action. The prayer is answered as the hula dancer who has joined her in supplication is seen by the beachcomber, who rushes to their aid. As the volcano effect dims down, the lover returns. The reds dim down and out as blues are brought in full. The hula dancer exits, as the two lovers sing "Rose Marie" for a finale which is augmented with a bit of action closing into the main titles of the picture.

IN THE SPELL OF PARADISE

A Midsummer Novelty
A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

PRACTICALLY the major part of audiences will have reached the peak of their vacationing within the next fortnight, and it will not be amiss to present a feature which will recall some of the high lights of their lazy days spent in recreation in the great outdoors. There will be vivid memories of glowing camp-fires, of winding streams, of gorgeous landscapes, of distant vistas clothed in Nature's glorious colors bathed in wondrous sunsets.

This presentation has been devised to permit a breadth of action, but it seems to us that the proper routine should be solely musical as in the Great Outdoors song means more than the dance. There are so many constantly changing forms in Nature which are in themselves suggestive of rythm that a dance by mortals, unless it bears the characteristics of the primitive peoples, would not seem fitting.

The setting which is comparatively simple will prove an effective background for songs which bespeak of Nature, Romance of the open spaces and other kindred compositions. A lighting treatment naturally lends to the beauty of this setting. The general details follow:

GROUND PLAN OF SET

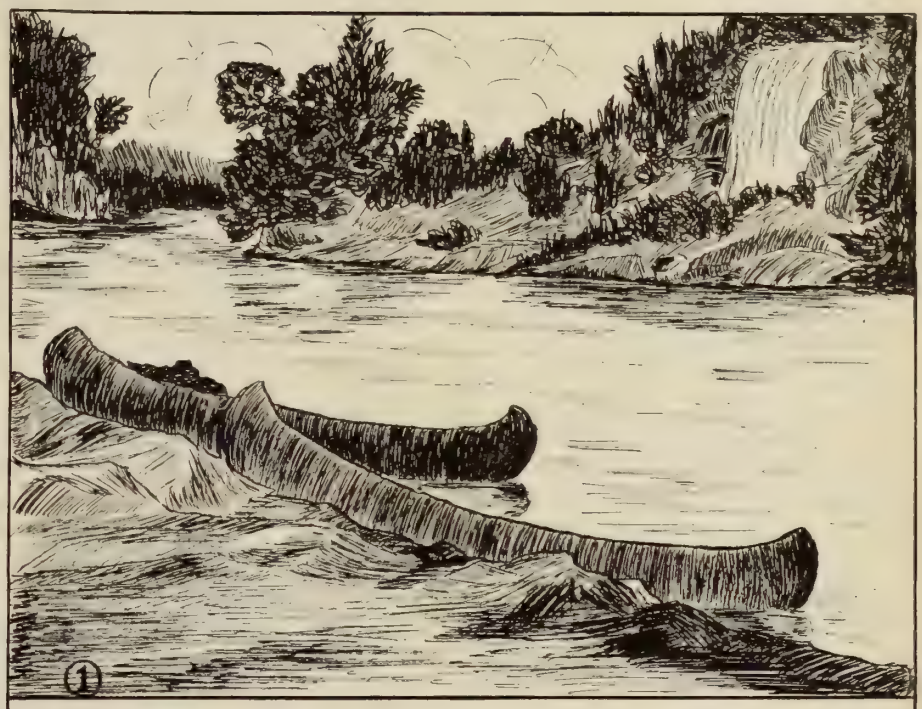
In Fig. 2 the ground plan indicates the simplicity of the general setup. A ground row is placed down in one, back of it are placed the canoe cut-outs which may be fastened to a shorter row or built on standards and placed on an angle, giving the effect of the ends of the canoe being "beached." A sub-water row is placed directly back of the canoe cut-outs; the top of it should be stretched on a wire and not placed on a frame, so that it will form a perfect blend with the bottom of the back drop. This will carry out the effect of the canoes being partly in the water and will also carry out the idea of an expansive stream. The back drop should carry cyc arms and the balance of the scene painted upon it. The water-falls at left can be painted, with a water falls effect focused upon it, although the suggestion made later will perhaps prove more effective.

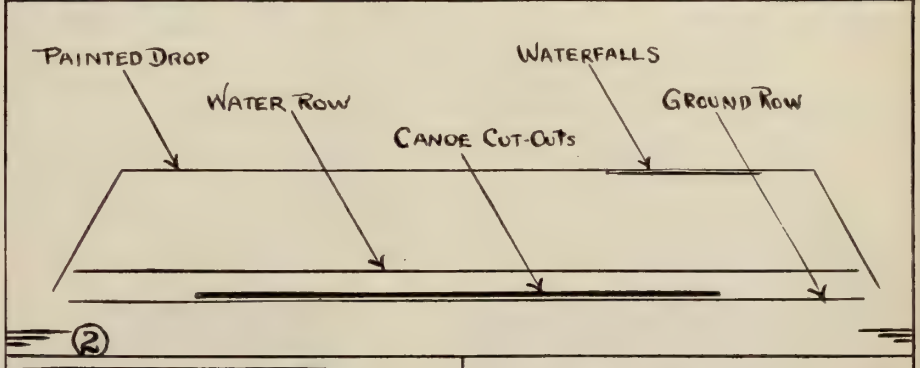
CONSTRUCTION DATA

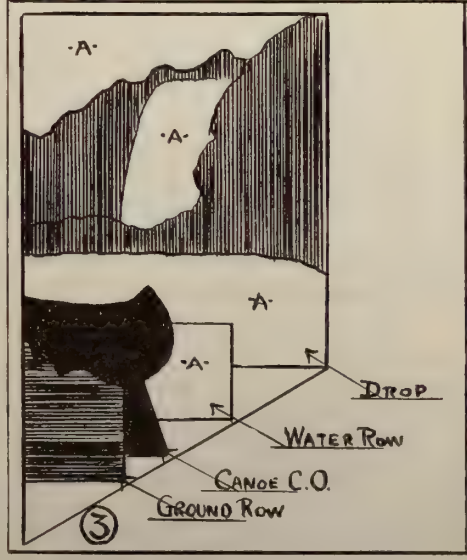
In Fig. 3 is a cross-angle view of the upper units comprising the set, and particular attention is called to certain phases to note in constructing the various units:

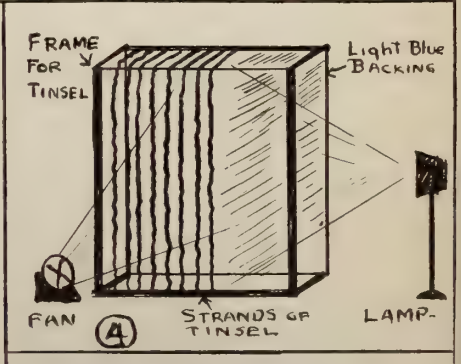
(a) Ground Row:

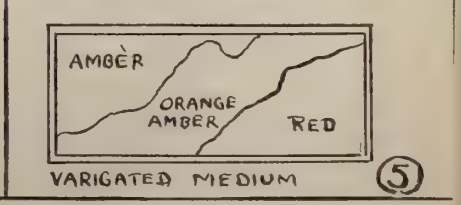
This row should be constructed so that the right end is higher than the left running on an angle that will correspond with the shore line painted on the back drop.











It should be cut and painted to resemble an uneven and rock-studded shore leading gradually to the stage.

(b) Canoe Cut-outs:

These can be made of beaver-board and placed on standards. If desired a small platform can be placed back of the canoe so that a person can stand or sit in back of same giving the appearance that they are in the canoe.

(c) Sub Water-Row:

This water-row is a very important unit in the setting. It is suggested that a wire netting be placed over the top upon which can be super-imposed the edges of the muslin, permitting a thin line at the top which will make it an easy blend with the bottom of the painted drop. It should be transparent so that it can be hooked into the lighting scheme dominating the back drop. It is also suggested that the ends of the canoe cut-outs be placed in slits cut in the water-row giving the effect that the ends of the canoe are in the water.

(d) Drop:

The back drop carries the major part of the scenic treatment. The trees and rocks should be painted and opaqued from the back so that the lighting treatment back of the drop for the sunset effect and for the water tone treatment could be worked effectively. The water falls may be painted but not opaqued permitting a treatment to be given it with the effect machine. The spaces marked "A" on the back drop and sub water-row indicate the parts which should not be opaqued. The shaded portions indicate the opaqued areas.

WATER FALLS

This is one of the most effective parts of the setting from a mechanical standpoint. A simple method which will respond to an artistic lighting treatment and will prove effective, may be achieved with a simple device as indicated in Fig. 4. A frame should be constructed to mask in the opening cut for the water falls. The opening on the drop should be covered with a scrim which may be dyed a blue. On the top and front of the frame strands of silver tinsel should be fastened and placed about one inch apart across the opening. Directly back of the tinsel several strands should be hung loosely so that they will flutter back and forth. The back part of the frame should carry a masking piece painted blue. A bunch light or two spots with blue mediums should be placed to highlight the tinsel. A fan placed at the lower corner of the frame and set for low speed is used to agitate the various strands of tinsel and from the front will give the effect of falling water glistening in the light.

SCENIC TREATMENT

The artist should make this setting very colorful. The foreground should carry the browns and greens of the short line, the canoes painted to resemble old birch bark and the back drop should present a picture of Nature at its best, with a varying of greens in the trees and lower foilage, with a flower studded short and a distant horizon of deep green hills shrouded in a purple haze. The glistening waterfall will, of course, add life to the setting which will lend a completeness to the colorful treatment of the drop. The river and water-row should be dyed in the greens and blues of the usual stream.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

The foreground should carry a dark amber done with green highlighting the ground row. Canary and light amber spots can be shot across stage from sides in the area of the canoes. The back drop should be spotted with greens and ambers. At the top of the foliage purple brought in at extreme right, with a mixture of blues and greens extreme left, and a canary spot tipping the rocks edging the water-falls. The river should be toned a deep blue at the upper part gradually blending in a light blue, green with a canary rippler in the foreground. The lighting treatment on the river should be done from the back of the drop if possible. The sky should be a deep blue, rose toned clouds floating over the surface of it and as the action progresses the sunset colors brought in using a variegated medium as indicated in Fig. 5 on the olivettes used to flood the sky area of the drop. A glow from a camp fire off right can be brought in to highlight the character in the foreground. For finale the lights should be gradually dimmed down leaving only a dim suggestion of the rippler on the river; the foreground in darkness, the trees on the back drop in silhouette against the red sky with blue brought in at the top and the water falls dimly visible.

COSTUMES

It is suggested that the regulation roughing clothes, consisting of breeches, blouse, puttees, etc. be used. An Indian character can be introduced as well as an old woodsman.

Presentations

painted four large roses, with small white flower clusters intermittently displayed. Drop toned red from borders and sides. Two compo-board candelabras with spiral base are placed right and left of the panel on the drop. Singer in a silver cloth gown appears in a pink spot and sings, "Listening." At the finale of the song the closeins are drawn, amber floods are brought up on the Jazz Orchestra. A member of the orchestra wearing a slouch hat and a wired mustache stands on the orchestra rail in an amber spot, and sings "Ah Ha." This is followed with another song by a member of the orchestra who sings from the pit in a pink spot a number entitled "Spain." At the chorus of this number the closeins are opened revealing the same setting, previously used, only the lighting has been subdued and the amber lamps on the candelabras are brought up. A singer enveloped in a light colored Spanish shawl appears in an amber spot and joins in a duet with the singer in the pit. For the finale a male dancer dressed in black Spanish costume with red sash appears, does a few Spanish steps with the lady on the stage. The members of the Jazz Orchestra wear Spanish hats for this number.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Street of Forgotten Men"

Ben Bernie and His Orchestra at Montmarte

(Paramount)

The title suggests the entire program, set in a French atmosphere, such as is common to the view in the French City of "laughs and tears." The orchestra, dressed in smocks and soft tams, is seated on raised platform outside of what is representative of the lobster palace catering to the French night life. Painted masking piece running down left shows cabaret exterior, festoons of vari-colored paper-tape loosely bunched formed background through which stretched black velvet, giving night effect. Hung from top across stage were some bunched paper-tape and Chinese lanterns, lighted with different colored bulbs. Broad awning striped scolloped border hangs in two. Several tables with several guests seated at them complete the setting. No attempt was made at lighting effects.

The entertainment opened with a mottled light effect on the close-in curtains with blue and rose foots. At opening, the stage is flooded with canary and blue, amber spot on Ben Bernie who introduces:

(a) "Overture Francaise."

(b) Mlle. Fi Fi, who sings "So this is Love" by Ray Goetz.

(c) "Danse Apache." Effectively executed by Jack De Fey and Frances Nanine, the climax of each routene was spotted with white.

(e) "Tango du 'Reve."

(f) "Can-Can." Ben Bernie and Ensemble.

At conclusion of the program there was a shower of vari-colored paper streamers across two, with the four graceful dancing girls completing their very pretty dance in front of this shower.

Harold Ramsbottom, feature organist at the Rivoli, is presenting a novelty this week entitled "Songs that You Have Sung."

Review on "National Costumes of the Slavic People"

There are some simple scene motifs, such as a "Russian-Scene—Bringing the Ikon to the Village," "A Russian Interior," "Moravian Village in Czecho-Slovakia," and a "Siberian Village." The costume plates include designs of costume or clothes worn by the people in Western, Southern and Northern Russia, Ukrainians, and a Ruthenian girl. Polish folk, Czechs, Slovakians, Moravians, Dalmatians, Bosnians, Jugo-Slavs, Serbians, Croatians, Montenegrins, and Bulgarians.

This book is an excellent production aid, especially in arranging scenes, or song and dance specialties appertaining to these particular types of people. The simplicity which constitutes the instructions, plates, and general data, makes it available to all producers, as an expert costumer is not needed to make the various garbs. It is one of the most comprehensive we have seen on this particular subject, and the price of One Dollar does not make its purchase prohibitive.

"Lightnin'"

One of Stage's Greatest Successes Reaches Screen as Unusually Satisfying and Pleasing Picture

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As a play, "Lightnin'" was one of the stage's greatest successes. In fact, by running for three years in New York City it broke all records up to that time and has since been topped by only one other production. Its presentation now in film form by Fox Film Corporation as the first of the John Golden unit which will transfer to the screen this producer's big successes, makes it an event of especial significance.

Frances Marion in her scenario, and John Ford in his direction, have followed closely the original, making it an unusually faithful adaptation, retaining the story in its entirety with its tremendous audience appeal and as many of the clever and amusing lines as possible, and it should duplicate on the screen its stage success and prove a big box-office winner.

The keynote of the story's appeal lies in the character that gives it the title, "Lightnin'" Bill Jones, a thoroughly human and lovable old fellow with a heart of gold and a strong sense of humor, but who like most of us had his faults, for he wasn't much of a provider and did like his little nips of something stronger than water.

Much of the success of the picture depends on the rendition of this character and in Jay Hunt, Fox has found an excellent substitute for Frank Bacon, who died at the height of his success in this role. Mr. Hunt is an excellent type, possesses the necessary qualifications for the role and makes it one that will endear the character to the spectators.

You just can't help liking old Lightnin' Bill and sitting back with satisfaction enjoying his homely humor and feeling intense sympathy for his misfortunes. Consequently you follow with pleased interest his experiences and those of his little family. When he takes to heart his wife's hasty remark and moves to the old soldiers' home you will feel a big tug at your heart and when he gets up in court and tells of his failure as a husband and says his wife can have her divorce if she wants one there will be many in the audience with moist eyes and lumps in their throats.

There are, however, other points of appeal. The story is absolutely clean and every one of the characters is well cast and each adds his bit to the enjoyment. Especially is this true of J. Farrell MacDonald as the judge, and we must not overlook the clever little dog that continually retrieves the bottle for Lightnin'. There is a pleasing little romance and the picture is just filled with sure-fire situations and excellent comedy. Otis Harland as the old man's pal contributes a generous share and when his two fat boys imitate the peculiar walk of their father it is a scream.

With its finely balanced humor, pathos and heart appeal "Lightnin'" stands as an unusually pleasing and satisfying picture, one that you will continue to enjoy long after you have seen it. Fox is to be congratulated on producing this picture and we predict for it great success.

Story

Mother Jones runs a small hotel on the border line between California and Nevada and Lightnin' Bill is her easy-going, good natured husband who is quite partial to a little drink now and then. A couple of schemers plan to buy the hotel with worthless bonds and resell it to the railroad company. John, a friend of Lightnin', comes to aid him and finds that Millie, his adopted daughter, is the girl he saw once and fell in love with him. Millie gets angry with him when he denounces the schemers and persuades Lightnin' not to sign the bill of sale. Mother Jones tells Lightnin' she is through with him and he goes to an Old Soldiers' Home. The schemers persuade Mother to sue for a divorce so that she may sell. Lightnin' pleads his own case but finally says that many of the charges are true except the one that he was cruel, and if Mother wants to divorce him he is willing, but Mother breaks down and takes him back. John convinces Millie of his love, the schemers are arrested and Lightnin', again happy, is soon up to his old trick of sneaking a drink and signaling his pal, Zeb, to come and share one with him.

"The Goose Woman"

Remarkable Character Work, Excellent Murder Mystery and Tremendous Drama Make Exceptionally Fine Production

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "The Goose Woman," listed as a Jewel, Universal has a picture that is truly worthy of this brand name in all that it signifies. Viewed "cold" in a projection room, it received applause from an audience of hard-boiled critics and the writer does not recall ever having witnessed more absorbing entertainment.

What is the reason for this? First, the intense drama resulting from one of the finest characterizations ever seen on the screen. Louise Dressers performance of the title role is a magnificent piece of work. The character is not a sympathetic one, far from it. The reaction towards this woman, formerly a grand opera star, now a dirty, slatternly, drunken hag who lives in squalor, sore at the world and even hating her own son, whose birth was the cause of her losing her voice, is decidedly unpleasant and so realistic that it is at times even loathsome; but there is no denying its force or the compelling drama that keeps your eyes glued to the screen.

This alone is sufficient to make "The Goose Woman" take high rank, but there is another angle equally fascinating. For dovetailed into this woman's story is an absorbing murder mystery which has been handled with exceptional cleverness, leading up to a climax with a tremendous punch where this unnatural woman in her thirst for publicity finds that she has unwittingly placed her own son in the very shadow of the gallows and all her latent mother love is suddenly awakened.

The heavy drama is lightened by excellent comedy touches and a pleasing romance between the son and an actress, who is true blue, with Jack Pickford and Constance Bennett in these roles. The entire cast is high class and such care has been used in its selection that Marc MacDermott was chosen for a role that is little more than a "bit."

Not only has Clarence Brown given this picture exceptional direction but with an excellent story to begin with the continuity has been developed with unusual smoothness and skill. The various elements sandwich perfectly and while the identity of the slayer is hidden so that few will guess it, there is no placing of suspicion on innocent parties nor is there a dearth of "leads" pointing to the guilty man. The altogether admirable construction and development aids in making it an exceedingly well-rounded production.

There are a few touches where some patrons may feel that unpleasant realism has been carried farther than necessary but, regardless of these, we believe that "The Goose Woman" will afford splendid entertainment for the great majority of patrons of all classes.

Story

Marie DeNardi a famous opera singer gives birth to a boy and loses her voice. She takes to drink and sinks lower and lower finally becoming a sloverly old hag, who spends her time in a dirty shabby house where she raises geese, continually thinking of her past glories and blaming her son who grows up unloved. Despite his surroundings the boy is an upright manly fellow who wins the love of the leading lady Hazel in the local theatre. The owner of the theatre who has wrecked the lives of many girls starts to win Hazel and is suddenly found murdered. The only witness was the opera singer known only as Mary Holmes. Seeing a chance to gain publicity and again get her name before the public reveals her identity to the district attorney who turns her over to beauty specialists, gets her swell clothes and finally presents her to the reporters, creating a sensation. Her testimony pointed to a man in a new flivver with a defective light, which the police found was owned by her son Gerald and he was arrested. Called upon to identify the murderer she found him to be her own son and, her mother love suddenly awakened she stated that her story was all lies. The district attorney told her, however, he had sufficient evidence to hang the boy on her own testimony. At this juncture the police arrived with the old stage door keeper whom they had traced by a gun that fired the fatal shot. The old man confessed that he killed to save Hazel. Gerald exonerated found happiness with his regenerated mother and Hazel who had stuck by him.

"The Street of Forgotten Men"

Paramount Offers Very Out-of-the-Ordinary Story of the Underworld That Should Please Majority

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Paramount is offering a decidedly out-of-the-ordinary picture in the Herbert Brenon production, "The Street of Forgotten Men," based on a magazine story by George Kibbe Turner, with Percy Marmont, Neil Hamilton and Mary Brian in featured roles.

The title refers to a fictitious street running off of New York's Bowery, the haunt of the dregs of the great city's life. The opening scenes take the spectator back to the days of the tough Bowery saloon of a generation ago and Director Brenon has injected a lot of colorful atmosphere with a variety of underworld types and the women in the quaint costumes of the period.

We believe, however, that audiences will find the back room of this saloon of unusual interest. Here is a so-called cripple factory and there is shown the tricks of the trade whereby able-bodied men are disguised so as to appear as crippled, blind, deformed, mis-shapen, in order that they may go out and seek charity from the soft-hearted.

It is one of this number who is the hero of the picture figuring in a story that holds the attention and develops a lot of human interest. This chap, Easy Money Charlie, admirably played by Percy Marmont, is persuaded by a dying unfortunate to adopt her baby daughter and he rears her in luxury, keeping his occupation a secret. Finally he realizes what a cheat and faker he has been and discovering that the girl has fallen in love with him he disappears, leaving her to find happiness with a young chap who adores her.

Considerable drama is developed in the unfolding of this story and especially forceful and logical is the ending where this beggar returns in his rags and secretly watches the girl's wedding. There are a number of other good touches throughout, including a fight between the fake cripple and a fake blind man who is the villain, with a good punch in a second fight between these two, as they are, without their disguises, ending with the villain going blind. Exceedingly melodramatic but effective. Another excellent scene with strong emotional force is the death of the kid's mother.

There is good concentration of interest in this picture, for although there are a large number of characters, only four of them are of any importance.

Rivaling the fine work of Percy Marmont is that of John Harrington in the particularly exacting role of a crook who throughout almost the entire picture feigns blindness, showing only the whites and a bit of the iris of his eyes, and even standing the test of a lighted match in front of his face without blinking. Mary Brian is charming as the young girl and Neil Hamilton makes a good appearance opposite her but has very little to do.

This story is decidedly impressive, out-of-the-ordinary and interesting and we believe that it will be quite generally liked.

Story

A dive located on a street near the Bowery in New York run by Diamond Mike, is known as the Dead House. It is a resort for crooks and in the back room is a "factory" where whole and healthy men are made up as blind, crippled, legless, armless, etc. The leader among these is Easy Money Charlie, whose one affection in life is for his dog. Charlie poses as having but one arm. White-Eye is the only one who disguises the fact that he is not deformed, and always appears as being blind. Jealous of Charlie, he kills his dog. Fancy, a woman of the streets, knowing Charlie is kind-hearted, persuades him to take her little girl when she dies. Charlie raises her in secret and years later she has become a beautiful young woman, reared in luxury in the suburbs and sought after by Philip, a young lawyer. Philip proposes but Mary loves Charlie, whom she believes to be a successful business man. White-Eye learns about Mary when he sees Charlie with her all dressed up. A cop learns that Charlie is not crippled and tells him he is a liar, cheat and faker and unfit for decent people. This preys on Charlie and he reveals his secret to Philip and disappears, word coming later that he was drowned at sea. After several months Philip's engagement to Mary is announced. White-Eye sees a chance for blackmail, but Charlie shows up and in a fight White-Eye really goes blind. Charlie takes care of him and when Mary and Philip are married Charlie stands unobserved outside the church in his cripple's rags, confident of her happiness.

"Private Affairs"

Renaud Hoffman Feature Interests with Finely Drawn Character Studies of Small Town Types

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Renaud Hoffman is the director of "Private Affairs" a Producers Distributing Corporation picture and like "Not One to Spare" his first feature released through that company it is a simple picturization of real life without a villain and even without a hero or "plot" in the usual screen sense of the term.

This picture in its construction and treatment differs greatly from the average production. It is in reality a series of character studies of small town types such as were probably more common before the age of jazz, sophistication and the automobile. They do not differ materially from the usual screen or play types of their kind except for the fact that Mr. Hoffman has succeeded in making them less exaggerated and more human. Many will be able to pick out characters whose counterparts they know in real life and consequently find their affairs, the little problems of their daily life, more interesting and realistic.

Most persons live a rather humdrum existence and to secure the dramatic angle necessary to round out a story, a situation has been introduced showing a package of letters which was lost and reached their destination five years late. The effect on the receipients is worked out in detail giving rise to some scenes that are humorous and some pathetic. The only real drama in the story is in the case of a girl who married another man when she did not hear from her sweetheart and when she found out he did write to her she wanted to leave her husband and children and go to him. This is possibly a little exaggerated, but the reappearance of the former beau who has developed into a conceited fop makes her realize she has married the right man after all and adds a satisfying note.

An unusual point in this production is the fact that there is no concentration of the story on any one set of characters, and the romance of two of the girls is of about equal importance.

Mr. Hoffman has shown great skill in developing his characters almost entirely through their actions rather than the method too frequently used by painting characterizations in subtitles, in fact we do not recall a single subtitle of this kind although each of the principals is clean-cut.

The lack of drama and action tends to slow down the narrative, but we believe that "Private Affairs" will please a great many people because of its fine characterizations.

Story

In the small town of Two Forks Agnes Bomar, the postmaster's daughter has fallen for the blandishments of Lee Cross who, however, is in love with Amy Lufkin. Cross gets an opportunity to go West during an oil boom and promises to send for Amy. The letter does not come and five years later finds her married to John Maddox. During this period there have been few changes, Alf Stacy the drug clerk now owns the store and is married to Irma his sweetheart. Young Fred Henley who is always trying new schemes to get rich is still in love with Agnes and has bought police dogs to raise puppies. Agnes' father gets bad news and falls dead. An officious politician Sam Hanks is made postmaster and he finds a package of letters five years old behind a desk and puts them in the mail. They cause all sorts of confusion. Those to Irma and Alf are from their old sweethearts and come near causing a divorce. The greatest tragedy happens to Amy when she receives Lee's delayed letter. Regardless of her children she plans a divorce. Lee, however, returns to town apparently prosperous but when Amy sees he is a shallow and conceited dandy she is content and tells her husband it is wonderful for a woman to learn that she married the right man. Lee calls on Agnes and attempts to embrace her but Fred gives him a good beating and he leaves town. Andy, the town drunkard learns from the delayed letter he has inherited a fortune and when Fred's scheme of raising dogs fails, he tells him he must come along.

"A Slave of Fashion"

Excellent Work of Norma Shearer and Lew Cody Makes Pleasing Entertainment of Improbable Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Can a story purporting to deal with life and not fantasy be made into an enjoyable picture if based on an utterly improbable foundation? The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production "A Slave of Fashion," starring Norma Shearer and Lew Cody, would seem to answer in the affirmative.

This picture hinges on the masquerading of a charming and innocent country girl as another woman, using her beautiful wardrobe and even occupying the apartment of a wealthy stranger during his absence. Circumstances cause her to pose as being married to this man and complications and embarrassment result from his unexpected return, although the final outcome can be readily guessed.

On this slight and preposterous basis is built a story in which inconsistencies develop, but cleverly built-up situations, skilful direction, a good set of amusing substitutes and above all the excellent work of Miss Shearer and to only a slightly lesser degree that of Mr. Cody, because he only figures in the climax, succeed in holding the attention and providing enjoyment for the patrons who are willing to forsake logic for the sake of being entertained.

We don't believe we have ever seen Miss Shearer do better work than in the situations after her "husband" unexpectedly returns, where for minutes at a time she sits as if dumbfounded, but still holds your attention. She also registers in the emotional sequences and her stunning clothes will delight the women. Once again, Lew Cody gets away from "villainous" roles and his work as a sophisticated man of the world is a delight. Mary Carr has a chance to put over some very effective mother-love scenes and Vivian Ogden is excellent as the gossiping country aunt.

Katherine Emerson, who lives in a small town in Iowa, determines that she will come to New York and make good. En route, the train is wrecked and Katherine, who is uninjured, finds the beautiful hand bag of an attractive woman on the train and discovers in it a note in which Nicholas Wentworth offers this woman, Madeline, his apartment while he is away, with the stipulation that she leave before his return on May 1. Katherine decides to take a chance for a glorious adventure and poses as Madeline. She enjoys herself immensely and revels in wealth and beautiful clothes. Suddenly her family appears and she tells them she has married Wentworth; she continues to allow Dick Wayne to call on her and her mother finally writes to Wentworth. Katherine is flabbergasted when he returns suddenly and seeing no way out of dilemma determines to tell her family the truth. Wentworth, however, falls in love with Katherine and she accepts his proposal that she become Mrs. Wentworth in reality.

"Tracked in the Snow Country"

Warner Brothers Present Rin-Tin-Tin in Story That Should Please the Majority of Spectators

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As the newest production starring the remarkable dog Rin-Tin-Tin, Warner Brothers are offering a story of the snow-covered Northwest, "Tracked in the Snow Country," which should prove decidedly entertaining to the majority of patrons.

A number of pictures have already demonstrated that there is an unusual appeal in the performance of an intelligent dog and in this picture the dog has a more than ordinarily prominent role, being really and truly the center of the action.

Exceptional sympathy is developed for Rin-Tin-Tin early in the picture, for on circumstantial evidence he is accused of the murder of his master and tracked with a price on his head. Cast as a dog that is half wolf and whose father was a killer, when turned on by his human friends he returns to the wilds and mates with a she-wolf. Eventually, however, the real murderer is discovered, Rin-Tin-Tin gets his revenge in a scene that is rather gruesome, where he prevents this man from getting out of a hole in the ice through which he has fallen.

The casting of suspicion on Rin-Tin-Tin is rather inconclusive, but it affords opportunities for a lot of good melodrama and gives this intelligent animal many chances to do some really remarkable work. He keeps your interest keyed up to a high pitch every minute he is on the screen and he is in almost every scene.

There are a lot of good melodramatic situations between the dog and the villain and exceptional punch in the fight scenes where Rin-Tin-Tin leaps through the air at his throat and they grapple and roll on the ground. A pleasing touch at the end shows this dog rocking a cradle containing twins and then showing his master his own family, a litter of newborn pups.

Mitchell Lewis gives a fine performance in the arduous role of the villain and the spectators certainly won't envy him in his encounters with the dog, for they are intensely realistic. The other principals do good work, but after all it is the dog that is practically the whole show.

Simon Hardy and his daughter journey to the north country and Hardy discovers a vein of gold but keeps the location secret. His daughter Joan adopts a wolf-dog puppy and when Hardy is found murdered, this animal, now grown up, is blamed. He escapes and returns to the wilds and mates with a she-wolf. The real murderer comes back to the cabin for a map which shows the location of the claim, and is tracked to the mine by Joan's sweetheart. He arrives in time to witness a fight between the villain and the dog and hear the villain threaten to kill the animal as he did his master. There is a terrific fight and the villain escapes and falls through a hole in the ice and Rin-Tin-Tin keeps him from being rescued. Joan and her sweetheart find happiness together and are blessed with twins, while Rin-Tin-Tin himself is presented with a fine litter of pups by his mate.

"A Yarn About Yarn"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

This Aesop's Film Fable is a delight. The farmer and the cat are engaged in winding yarn only to be interrupted by mischievous mice, who turn the tables on their ancient enemy and cause the farmer many heart-rending moments. Paul Terry's artists have done an especially fine bit of work in drawing this subject. The facial expressions of the cat are wonders.—S. S.

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS PROGRAM

FOR the first time since the plan of establishing programs of feature releases was adopted by the distributing organizations, a trade paper is in position to furnish in one issue reviews of a company's entire product for an extended period.

Through the co-operation of Associated Exhibitors, Moving Picture World has been able to view the eight pictures which will be released from August to November, inclusive, and believing that this constitutes a distinct service for exhibitors in arranging their bookings, our opinion of each production is printed herewith.

This program shows considerable variety. There are two comedies: "Never Weaken," a Harold Lloyd re-issue which should prove highly amusing, and a Monty Banks feature, "Keep Smiling," filled with gags and slapstick that should get many laughs. "Manhattan Madness," a mystery melodrama, offers the opportunity to exploit Jack Dempsey and his wife, Estelle Taylor. "Headlines" is an entertaining story of a mother's sacrifice for a daughter who is an ultra-jazzy flapper. "His Buddy's Wife" also introduces the element of self-sacrifice in an appealing sentimental romance. "Fifty-Fifty" is a sophisticated domestic triangle story featuring Hope Hampton and Lionel Barrymore. The underworld is represented by two pictures in which regeneration figures. One is "Camille of the Barbary Coast," a colorful heart-interest story of a dance hall woman and a youth convicted of forgery. The other, "Under the Rouge," is an excellent crook melodrama with strong heart interest, drama and comedy and an exceptionally thrilling climax.

"Manhattan Madness"

Associated Exhibitors Star Jack Dempsey and Estelle Taylor in New Version of Fairbank's Film.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With heavyweight champion Jack Dempsey and his bride Estelle Taylor in the stellar roles, Associated Exhibitors is offering a new version of "Manhattan Madness" which in its original form served as one of Douglas Fairbank's earliest successes.

Much of the appeal of the picture is staked on keeping the audience mystified regarding the reason for a series of exciting happenings. The plot concerns a westerner who complains that New York offers no excitement. He becomes interested in a pretty girl and soon finds himself in the midst of much more excitement than he bargained for. It developes that it was all a frame-up on the part of his friends, but he "kidnaps" the girl nevertheless and marries her.

The series of mysterious happenings in the count's home in which Jack comes to the rescue of the girl follows closely along the lines of the original version; the action leading up to this, however, has been changed considerably. A couple of reels are used in bringing the star to New York and another in planting the frame-up. During this time there is not a corresponding advance in the plot action the footage being used largely for introducing obvious and somewhat forced comedy supplied by two "green" cowboys on the train and more scenes between them and the negro porter in an exclusive club.

The plot does not really take shape until about the fourth reel; then the action gets fast and furious, so much so that you are apt to wonder whether it is burlesque melodrama, as some of the scenes are so overplayed. Dempsey is confronted at every turn by a new adversary and so effectively does he use his celebrated fists that once he has a half dozen knocked out in one room and as many more sprawling in another room. A mysterious jewel case has been introduced and there are trap doors galore, sliding panels and hands that strangely appear from unusual places.

Jack Dempsey appears to best advantage in the scenes where he has a chance to use his fists. Estelle Taylor gives a satisfactory performance as the girl, while the lesser roles are portrayed by such well-known actors as George Seigmann, Frank Campeau and Bull Montana.

While the climax reveals the whole thing as a frame-up some of the earlier development leading up to the "thrills" is not explained, and the use of so much footage for the comic by-play retards the story and lessens the interest.

As a whole "Manhattan Madness" seems to lack dash and spontanity and will probably register with the majority as average program entertainment. The presence of Dempsey and his bride, however, offers good opportunity for exploitation.

Steve O'Dare receives a summons from friends in New York to come in reference to a contract for horses and wires that he hopes for excitement while there, as New York cannot compare with the West. On the train he overhears conversation regarding himself and Harlan, another rancher, and also is attracted to a mysterious girl. Arriving in New York he again sees her in a cabaret with Harlan and she seems to be in trouble. Going to the Count regarding the contract she appears on the scene and appeals to him for help. Steve comes to her rescue and is beset on all sides by a gang, during which he knocks several of them out and two or three get shot. It is all a mystery and centres around possession of a mysterious box which every time he gets, mysterious hands reach out and grab. Finally the house suddenly appears to be deserted and he opens a door to find everyone seated at dinner. It is explained it was a frame-up to provide him with excitement. He turns the tables by grabbing the girl and taking her off to a preacher.

"Under the Rouge"

Crook Story With Intense Drama, Comedy and Heart Interest Is Excellent Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

About a year ago Associated Exhibitors released "The Chechacos" the first picture filmed entirely in Alaska, thus focussing attention on Lewis H. Moomaw its producer. Now this company is offering another Moomaw production "Under the Rouge" which is of an entirely different type.

"Under the Rouge" is a story of the underworld. Its leading characters are crooks and some of its situations melodramatic, but it differs greatly from the familiar type of crook melodrama. It throws no glamour over the commission of crime and is concerned entirely with the better natures of a man and a girl whose circumstances had made them crooks.

Mr. Moomaw has succeeded in developing strong dramatic tenseness right at the outset and a sympathy for the characters despite the fact that they are not in the least ashamed of their profession. Several deft touches and original twists make the characters exceedingly human and establish intense earnestness and sincerity.

So well established is this angle that the story sustains the suspense and holds the attention despite the fact that so many new characters are continually being introduced that the theme becomes rather involved. This lack of dramatic concentration would cause the interest to waver were it not for the fact that it is over-balanced by the power of the main theme.

"Under the Rouge" has a great melodramatic climax which develops additional punch because it comes when you are sure that you are going to see old stuff. There is certainly nothing new in seeing the hero start out in a boat to rescue the heroine who is being swept through the rapids towards a waterfall, but when you see them swept over the edge of the falls and saved by grasping a tree at the waters edge there is an honest to goodness thrill.

It is along human interest lines, however, that Mr. Moomaw really shows to best advantage and makes his characters unusually convincing and appealing, in fact this is the keynote of the production. He makes you feel that Whitey, though a crook, is every inch a man, his friendship for his young pal and his devotion to the girl who is persecuted will warm your heart and there is a tremendous tug in the scene where he gives his own war medal to his pal's mother to make her believe he died a hero instead of while fleeing from the police. And an unusual and effective note is the detective who instead of hounding Whitey, aids him at every turn and urges him to go straight.

The work of the entire cast is excellent. Tom Moore and Eileen Percy have the leading roles with Eddie Phillips as the pal, James Mason as the villain, Claire DeLorez as a vamp, Mary Alden as the mother and Carmelita Geraghty as the susceptible village girl. In the role portrayed by Wm. V. Mong, that of a confidence man who turned evangelist, there is a suggestion of a "Miracle Man" theme.

This picture should please the majority and rate well above the average as a box-office attraction.

Several years after the Great War, Whitey, who won a hero medal, and his pal, Skeeter, are crooks, while their friend, Jim, is a detective. Whitey loves Kitty, who is also a crook, and Mal, a confidence man, is his rival, and Whitey earns Kitty's gratitude when he saves her from an attack by Mal. While pulling a job Skeeter shoots a watchman and is himself killed. Whitey is held as a witness, but Jim secures his freedom on Whitey's promise to go straight. This he gives as he wants to see Kitty who has gone to the country to recover from a nervous breakdown. Whitey hides his own love when he believes Kitty is in love with Morton, the cashier of the local bank, and is given a job in the bank. Whitey finds out that the old lady with whom Kitty is living is Skeeter's mother and he tells her that Skeeter died a war hero and gives her his own medal to prove it. Mal, the advance agent for Doc, a confidence man who is posing as an evangelist and working the small towns, lures Evelyn, the old lady's daughter, and Kitty tries to save her. Whitey finally thrashes Mal. There is a shortage at the bank and Whitey is suspected, but when Morton throws Kitty down on hearing about her past, Whitey exposes him as the crook. Kitty, despondent, tries to kill herself by going over the falls, but Whitey saves her just at the edge and they find happiness together.

"His Buddy's Wife"

Glenn Hunter Featured in Appealing Sentimental Story of Youthful Romance and Self-Sacrifice

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Against backgrounds of the World War and a small New England village there is unfolded a touching and tender romance of youth in the Associated Exhibitors production "His Buddy's Wife" with Glenn Hunter in the leading role.

Using a magazine story by T. Howard Kelley as the basis and preparing his own adaptation, Director Tom Terriss has turned out a picture that is filled with charm and beautiful sentiment. He has left no angle untouched that would add to the building up of sympathy or the bringing out of the pathos of the two leading roles, for sadness and sacrifice are the keynotes of this little story which is intense in its heart interest.

Glenn Hunter was an ideal selection for the role of the fellow who felt his first thrill of love, when in the trenches he saw a picture of his buddy's wife and who, true to his promise when his buddy failed to return from a raid, went to the village and devoted his life to the girl. His sincerity and splendid handling of the emotional angle makes the character very real and causes a tug at the heart. Edna Murphy gives a good performance as the girl who, while deeply grateful to the boy, finally came to his rescue when he was threatened with jail for defending her name and bravely declared her intention of marrying him although her real love was for her missing husband.

Up to this point the story is smoothly developed with an increasing hold on the emotions. Then, there is an anti-climax with the return of the missing husband and we believe that many patrons would prefer to have it ended here for this new development brings about a situation which, while fraught with considerable suspense as to the final outcome, must necessarily disappoint some patrons whichever way it works out. The solution used by Mr. Terriss is the more logical one and keeps up the note of self-sacrifice for the hero who stifles his own feelings to bring happiness to the woman he loves.

Mr. Terriss has handled both the war and village scenes well and despite the fact that the romance does not turn out happily for the hero, we believe that the strong pathos and human interest and fine work of Glenn Hunter will appeal to the majority of patrons especially the women.

Jimmy falls in love with Mary's photograph and when Bill goes on a scouting expedition and does not return, Jimmy is glad to heed his last request to take care of Mary. The Mullaneys live in a small New England town. Just after Jimmy arrives old Mrs. Mullaney dies and the doctor persuades Jimmy to stay and run the farm. To avoid talk he lives in the barn, but when Mary faints Jimmy kisses her and gossips see him. This starts slander and when Jimmy defends Mary's name he is arrested. Mary comes to his rescue and announces she is going to marry him. As they are preparing for the wedding, Bill who was captured by the Germans returns, and realizing that Mary still loves him Jimmy sacrifices his own love and leaves them to their happiness.

"Headlines"

Mother's Sacrifice to Save Her Jazzy Daughter's Reputation Makes Story That Should Appeal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Two possible angles are suggested by the title of the Associated Exhibitors release "Headlines." One that it is a story of newspaper life and the other that it involves something that would make good newspaper headlines. Both of these figure in the plot to a limited extent, for the story opens in the editorial rooms of a big daily, two of the principals are members of the staff and there is a threat of a "headline" story in the big climax.

The predominating point of the production, however, is the unhesitating sacrifice of her good name by a mother to save her daughter's reputation. This occurs when the mother follows her daughter to the villain's apartment and hiding her in a bedroom comes out and faces the irate wife looking for divorce evidence. While by no means new, such a situation is always effective if well handled as it is in this instance. Of course all turns out right eventually and the mother's sacrifice is appreciated by the man she loves.

The principal character in the drama is a woman feature writer who has kept secret the fact that she has a grown daughter, but from the minute this girl appears on the scene she is the centre of interest. Posing as her mother's younger sister she turns out to be an ultra-modern flapper with exceedingly advanced ideas of independence. This introduces a decided jazz atmosphere and the sex angle is rather daringly suggested in some of the scenes.

Alice Joyce gives a sincere and thoroughly symathetic portrayal of the mother while Virginia Lee Corbin is excellent as the jazz-baby daughter. The male members of the cast have roles of less importance but acquit themselves creditably although Elliott Nugent seems rather miscast as the city editor.

The production details are adequate, the continuity smooth and the direction well handled, and "Headlines" should provide satisfactory entertainment. Patrons who may be fed up on jazz and sex will find that this angle is counteracted by the appeal of the mother's role.

Story

Phyllis Dale, feature writer on a newspaper, keeps secret the fact that she has a grown daughter. This girl, "Bobby," is a regular jazz baby and when she is expelled from school for a prank she returns home but begins to pose as Phyllis' sister. Phyllis, however, tells her sweetheart, Lawrence Emmett, the truth, and Lawrence takes an interest in the girl and seeks to curb her. Bobby turns down easy-going Roger, the city editor, for a wealthy philanderer, Austen, whose wife is seeking evidence for a divorce. Bobby falls in love with Lawrence and tells her mother they are engaged. Stella, learning Bobby is to visit Austen at his apartment, follows her and is found by Austen's wife and to save Bobby assumes the appearance of guilt. Lawrence is heartbroken and Bobby, realizing her mother's sacrifice, is greatly chastened. Roger comes to the rescue and arranges to bring Stella and Lawrence together and there is a reconciliation and Bobby, having learned her lesson, is glad to accept Roger.

"Fifty-Fifty"

Hope Hampton, Lionel Barrymore and Louise Glaum in Sophisticated Domestic Triangle Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With Hope Hampton, Lionel Barrymore and Louise Glaum in featured roles as the three sides of a marital triangle, Associated Exhibitors are offering "Fifty-Fifty" produced in this country by the noted French director Henri Diamant Berger.

Mr. Berger is on familiar ground in making this picture for the locale of the earlier part of the story is Paris. Miss Hampton has the role of a young French modiste's model and the story is somewhat continental in flavor. The title refers to the fact that when the young French wife saw a fascinating widow winning her wealthy husband away from her she retaliated by making him believe that what was fair for him was equally fair for her, a fifty-fifty proposition. This was all a pose, however, and while the story is sophisticated there is only one situation, where there is a frame-up to get divorce evidence, that is at all risque.

There are rather too many scenic shots of Paris at the start of the picture, but the story, while it never develops much drama has some good light comedy touches and smooth development and should prove moderately entertaining. A clever touch shows a notorious French underworld resort to be all a fake for catching American tourists, and another good touch is the exceedingly polite Grand Duke who has no trouble in serving summonses on the unsuspecting wealthy.

Hope Hampton has several opportunities to appear in beautiful gowns, but she also gives a good account of herself and reveals more acting ability when in less spectacular raiment. Lionel Barrymore is convincing as the wealthy American husband and Louise Glaum who returns to the screen after a long absence is thoroughly at home as the fascinating vamping widow. Jean Del Val is especially good as the French dancer and the other roles are well handled.

"Fifty-Fifty" will probably provide average enjoyment for the masses and appeal more to sophisticated patrons.

Story

Frederick Harmon, an American millionaire enjoying himself in Paris is attracted to Ginette, a mannequin in a fashionable establishment. On a slumbering tour he is surprised to see her as an Apache dancer. He learns later that she is a good girl and that the supposed Apache resort is really a fake to kid the American tourists. Harmon marries Ginette and brings her to New York. He again meets Mrs. Olmstead, a scheming adventuress and becomes infatuated with her. Mrs. Olmstead conspires with a down and out grand duke to frame a scene between Ginette and Jean a former admirer and secures a compromising photograph, hoping to bring about a divorce. Jean learns of the plot and tells Ginette who finally through a ruse gets the photos from Mrs. Olmstead. When Harmon confronts Ginette she produces them, exposes the whole frame-up and Harmon, denouncing Mrs. Olmstead becomes reconciled to Ginette.

"Keep Smiling"

Monty Banks' Newest Feature Comedy Has Plenty of Good Gags and Snappy Boat Racing Sequence

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Very much like his former picture "Racing Luck" in type is Monty Banks' newest Associated Exhibitors production "Keep Smiling." In the former he was mistaken for an auto racing driver and forced to drive a car in an international road race while in this picture a similar combination of circumstances causes him to drive a motor boat.

The picture starts out with a melodramatic sequence in which a mother and baby are rescued in a shipwreck while the father is drowned, and in planting the groundwork for the story there is more drama than comedy; in fact it is not until the hero starts out to interview a steamship owner regarding his invention of an automatic-inflating life preserver that the comedy element really develops.

Herman Raymaker and Clyde Bruckman, experienced gag men, has from this point on provided a rapid succession of amusing gags and while not adding anything to the convincing quality of the story do provide situations that should get a lot of laughs from the average spectator. Most of these gags occur during the boat race. The various things that happen to the boat and the hero are utterly improbable but they have been cleverly worked out and keep the comedy element moving at a rapid pace.

Possibly because of the similarity of the stories the laughs here do not seem so spontaneous and the effort to build up the comedy is more obvious than in the former production. However "Keep Smiling" should provide a number of laughs for patrons who like comedies built on gags.

There is naturally a romantic angle and while Monty Banks is not so well suited to the heroic role, he gives a good account of himself in the comedy situation. Anne Cornwall is attractive as the girl and the remainder of the cast entirely satisfactory.

Story

An ocean disaster resulted in the rescue of a tiny boy and his mother, although his father was drowned, and the boy grew up intensely afraid of water, with the one desire to conquer it. He spent his time inventing a life preserver that inflated automatically when it touched water. A girl fell in the water and the Boy saved her. Reading of an offer by Ryan, head of a steamer line, for such a device, he sought to see him. Ryan had entered his speed boat in a race and expected the arrival of a driver. Through an accident their letters of introduction were exchanged and the Boy was received as the racing driver, and found that the girl he saved was Ryan's daughter. His rival, Deane, saw his opportunity to win both race and girl and arranged it so that The Boy had to drive the speed boat in the race, but to make sure, placed his own crooked mechanic in the boat to aid the boy. The Boy's absolute ignorance and the crooked work of the mechanic were responsible for a lot of exciting complications, near accidents, etc., including the loss of the stopping lever and dismantling of the steering wheel. The boy won the race but wound up by running into a boat loaded with explosives. His new life preserver saved him and he won the girl and the contract to fit out all of Ryan's steamships

"Camille of the Barbary Coast"

Mae Busch and Owen Moore Score in Pleasing and Dramatic Story of the Seamy Side of Life

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Many a picture has for its climax a court room scene with the hero on trial, but in the Associated Exhibitors production "Camille of the Barbary Coast" the end of the trial and the sentence of the hero to jail for forgery opens the picture and provides a punch that makes the spectator sit up and take notice.

A few flashbacks quickly cover the events leading up to this situation; the hero's prison term ends quickly and then in the sordid and drab surroundings of San Francisco's centre of underworld and half-world, The Barbary Coast, there begins an appealing story of regeneration based on human kindness and awakened self-respect.

The woman is a disillusioned frequenter of a questionable dance hall, a sort of Camille type hence the title. Something about the stranger awakens her better nature; she offers to aid him and this rekindles ambition. Together they fight their way back up the ladder.

Mae Busch gives one of the best characterizations of her career bringing unusual sincerity and intense human appeal to the title role and Owen Moore is a good type for the man. The other roles are all in capable hands with Tammany Young providing some out of the ordinary comedy.

Mr. Dierker has used to advantage considerable footage in establishing the proper atmosphere for the story by developing various types around the dance hall and made this section interesting besides enhancing the dramatic value.

The final reconciliation with the father is not entirely convincing and is more a concession to a happy ending, but the story as a whole is an excellent characterization of a girl of the underworld, and with its unusually intense sympathetic note should provide pleasing entertainment for the majority.

Robert Morton becomes infatuated with Dora Malcolm, a grafter, and to supply her extravagances forges his father's name, swearing by his dead mother's memory that he is innocent. When he confesses at the trial, his father lets him go to prison. Two years later he is freed and wanders into a Barbary Coast resort where he attracts the attention of Camille, one of the women. She becomes interested in him and when she tries to buy him an overcoat it awakens his manhood. He gets a job but is fired on account of being a convict but finally lands another one, and gradually works his way back to self-respect. His father, now repentant, finally calls on him and tries to persuade him to leave Camille, but although she tries to make out that she is going back to her old life and has no real interest in him, Robert defends her and sticks by her, saying she is already his wife. His father finally surrenders and takes them home.

"Never Weaken"

Reissued Harold Lloyd Three-Reeler Chock Full of Laugh-Provoking Gags and Thrill Stuff

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Included in Associated Exhibitors' program for the first four months of the new season is a Harold Lloyd reissue "Never Weaken." This comedy, which has been re-edited, was one of the first Lloyd pictures to exceed two reels, in fact in its present form it is only 2339 feet but every foot is filled with laughs or thrills or both.

The early part of the picture is devoted to amusing scenes showing Harold carrying on a romance with Mildred Davis, who is now Mrs. Harold Lloyd in real life. Seeing her in the arms of another he determines to commit suicide and the various schemes which he tries and discards as unsatisfactory introduce a fine collection of laugh-getting gags with a lot of uproarious and quite a little subtle comedy.

After he has mistaken the bursting of an electric globe for the report of a pistol he has rigged up, a steel girder lifts his chair out of the window and up to the top of a skyscraper The situation where he removed a bandage from his eyes and sees the figure of an angel on the corner of a building and hears the angel's chorus being played on a harp by a girl inside one of the offices, and thinks he is in heaven, is one of the best comedy situations ever filmed.

A lot of thrill comedy follows with Harold scrambling over the steel framework continually meeting with mishaps and having a lot of near falls. This picture is just as amusing today as when it was first issued and foot for foot should be able to hold its own with the majority of his later releases.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Tee For Two"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Alice Day, petite and charming, makes her debut as star in two- reel comedies in "Tee For Two," a Mack Sennett subject for Pathe release. Motion picture fans should welcome her, for she has plenty of personality as well as good looks and acting skill, and it is likely that, after witnessing her first two-reel vehicle, they will look forward to more starring her. This subject deals with a little Scotch girl who, arriving in the United States, tries to support herself as maid-of-all work and is relieved of domestic burdens by a romance. Raymond McKee is the fortunate actor cast opposite Miss Day. He does not appear particularly impressive —at times almost awkward—but that is partly the fault of the director, who seems to have given Miss Day all the best of it. The supporting cast also includes Thelma Parr, Eva Thatcher and William McCall. Director Eddie Cline has seen to it that the action is kept moving fast and that the most is made of Miss Day's daintiness. From the early scenes, which show her presumably at Ellis Island with her clever Scotch terrier, to the hug and kiss of the final footage, the star dominates and charms. She has a distinctive personality partly due to quick, bird-like movements, and should readily win many friends.—S. S.

"The Milky Way"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Charles Puffy is the star of this Bullseye Comedy, which was directed by Richard Smith and supervised by Z. Myers. The cast includes Mildred June and Billy Engle. The story deals with the love of a wealthy fat man with the daughter of a milk man. Puffy milks the cows and sells the milk, outdoing competitors by giving away a photo of himself with each quart. The villain unhitches Puffy's horse from the milk wagon and substitutes a race horse which leads Puffy a wild chase until boys stretch a tape across the road. True love as exemplified by Puffy's labors wins the fair maid's hand. The subject is of average interest.—S. S.

"Beware"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Jack White Production has Lige Conley in the principal part and a supporting cast consisting of Otto Fries, Estelle Bradley, Bobbie Burns and Peg O'Neill. Quoting an early subtitle, "An eminent composer from Dixie visits the Swiss Alps to inject a few yodles into his mammy songs." Most of the action is based on the "Castle de Switzo," which has been turned into an inn to save the family fortunes. There has to be a chase of some sort, and in this subject a tiger does the chasing. That might be anticipated, for a dark man is in the picture. A skeleton also does some pursuing. All in all, it ought to please slapstick audiences, with its chases and trap doors and characters hiding in armor.—S. S.

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Cliff Bowes, Virginia Vance, Eddie Nelson and Zelma O'Neal are the principal players in this Cameo Comedy directed by Albert Ray. The opening scene is the fitting room of Pierre's modiste shop where "gowns make blind men discontended," then the action switches abruptly to "Suicide Alley, so hardboiled the chickens lay cobblestones." Here Spike Dugan and Cabbagehead Murphy engage in a battle with bricks. Next the hero impersonates a dummy and is lugged around the shop. The fun is certainly of the burlesque sort, with many tumbles and other mishaps, and it will make burlesque audiences uproarious.—S. S.

"Short Pants"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Most of the series of "Sweet Sixteen" comedies produced by Universal has been good laugh-getters with amusing situations that appeal particularly to the growing generation, and while this one is not the best of the series, it is above the average. The gang goes on a picnic. Arthur falls off the truck into a mud puddle and they wont let him get back on. Arriving at the girl's home her mother comes to the rescue and gives him a suit that is too big. While changing clothes the gang surprises him and he runs around in his underwear. Finally he corners Marcelline and starts to propose. She eludes him and a cow takes her place and he kisses the cow much to the amusement of the gang.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 31

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"The Indian Cathedral," an old Spanish mission in Arizona; chapter nine of "The Origin of Man" series called "The Treasure Hunt," and "Rochester, the Flour City," one of the Pathecolor "Visiting Our Own America" series, make up this issue of the magazine. All are hugely interesting, with the reviewer inclining especially toward the unearthing of mastodon bones in Mongolia. Pictures of the cathedral are works of photographic art.—S. S.

"Innocent Husbands"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

As an innocent husband Charley Chase takes the cake. It is a good role that Hal Roach has given him in this comedy and the situations and his acting result in one of the best Chase vehicles yet supplied Pathe for release. In fact, it's a humdinger. Katherine Grant is excellent as the jealous wife, and efficient support is given by Lucien Littlefield, Jane Sherman, William Gillespie, Kay De Lys and Jimmy Finlayson. Leo McCarey directed. The story has to do with a party across the hall from the Chase apartment. Mrs. Chase is at a spiritualistic meeting inquiring about hubby. The meeting adjourns to the Chase apartment just after Chase, a friend and two women hide in it. Their problem is to escape without being seen by Mrs. Chase, and this they accomplish by posing as ghosts called forth by the spiritualist. It must be admitted that in this story there are the germs of many familiar comic situations, but it must also be said that few other comedians would have extracted so much, hilarious, wholesome fun from them as has Charley Chase. —S. S.

"Paging a Wife"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Al Alt is the star of this Century Comedy with Hilliard Karr as his pal. Karr bids goodbye to his wife at the station and proceeds to step out. He picks up Al in his car and soon the speed cops are after them. Al is persuaded to pose as a doctor rushing to attend a sick mother and child. The cop is suspicious and goes with them. Al poses as the mother but the cop demands the presence of both together, so Al rushes out and persuades a flapper to aid him. About this time wifie returns and there is great excitement until wifie discovers the flapper is a friend of hers. The cop returns and takes them all to jail. A slapstick comedy of average amusement value.—C. S. S.

"The Fighting Schoolmarm"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This is another western starring Josie Sedgwick. In the title role she has charge of a small school of which Hooper, a skinflint who seeks to buy her mothers ranch, is the trustee. His son Willie is a presumptuous kid and a tattletale, while his older son Jeff is in love with Josie. Cliff, a stranger is hounded by Hooper and takes refuge in the school. Josie aids him and loses her job. Willie climbs to the belfry and smokes a cigarette. The school catches on fire and Josie saves the boy with the aid of Cliff. It develops that Hooper wants the farm because he believes the land contains oil and Cliff saves it from his grasp and wins Josie. Hardly up to the standard of the earlier issues in this series.—C. Warners' Genius for Organization Overcame Serious Disappointments

No Conflict of Authority, No Overlapping of Effort Allowed—Perservered Despite Many Early Difficulties

ANNOUNCEMENT of the 1925-26 production schedule, which in extent, range and appeal of subjects and in eminence of stars and authors, brought general recognition that it marked the high water so far attained by Warner Bros. By various stages the Warner program has been enlarged from a single outstanding offering to a formidable list of forty specials. And all this has been accomplished in eight years, which justifies the use of the adjective "meteoric" in describing the organization's rise.

Yet there are substantial reasons for this advance. A summary of the forces which have contributed would, of course, include will power, business acumen and, of marked importance in an industry devoted to entertainment catering, close study and acquaintance with the public which the company serves. But if any one factor is outstanding it is, perhaps, the Warners' genius for organization.

Harry M. Warner, eldest of the four brothers, remarked recently that one thing the brothers had to learn through the years of their business association was the part each was best fitted to play. It was a case of "A place for every man and every man in his place." Each brother is in his place, now, with the result that there is no conflict of authority, no overlapping of effort.

Thus Albert and Sam Warner devote themselves largely to supervision of the work at the home offices, though Albert is now in Europe inspecting the foreign theatre situation, and Sam keeps in close touch with the exchanges throughout the United States and Canada. Jack Warner spends his entire time on the West Coast as general supervisor of studio activities, while Harry divides his attention between New York and Los Angeles, making frequent cross-continent trips.

It was back in 1903 that the Warners opened a ninety-seat theatre in Newcastle, Pa. In the next year they launched into film distribution, forming the Duquesne Amusement & Supply Company to serve that territory. For a time this enterprise flourished, but when, six years later, its supply of product for distribution was cut off by the organization of the General Film Company, it was forced to sell out at an extremely low figure.

Four months after this set-back the Warners contracted with the Film Sales Company for the right to establish a distributing agency for its pictures in the Pittsburgh territory. Unfortunately, the films were frequently late in arriving and proved of a quality inferior to that they had expected, so once again they had to dispose of their business at a loss.

But they remained an undaunted crew—this quartette of brothers. They decided that if they couldn't obtain the kind of ready-made productions they wanted they would do their own producing. Accordingly they transferred their activities to New York and established Warners' Features. Their "Redemption," "The Glass Coffin" and "Perils of the Plains," which formed the original Warner schedule, were welcomed by picture fans and won recognition for their sponsors. Still, as events proved, they were not yet fairly launched on the road to success. Their ignorance of corporation matters proved costly, so costly that, in spite of a brave struggle, the brothers lost control of their company.

There was just one thing left to do—to start all over again—and that they did. This time they organized on a more complete and elaborate scale, determined, after a careful study of business methods and conditions, to overlook no safeguard needed to insure permanency. They formed Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., with the production unit in Los Angeles and the distribution unit in New York., and Warner Brothers' "Classics of the Screen" came into being.

It was back in 1917 that the new company first did "something really big" and it was "My Four Years in Germany" that put the Warners on the map. At first James W. Gerard, who had been Ambassador to Germany at the outbreak of the war and was author of this work, was sceptical respecting the screen possibilities of the book. But when, the Warners having prepared a scenario, submitted it for his inspection, he gave his consent. The production was made and proved a big winner.

This success was followed by others, such pictures as "Lost City," "Why Girls Leave Home," "School Days," "Rags to Riches," "The Beautiful and Damned," "Heroes of the Street," "The Little Church Around the Corner," "Brass," "Main Street" and "A Dangerous Adventure," each scoring a hit with both exhibitors and the general public.

The purchase of the Belasco plays for screen reproduction proved another winning move. By 1923-24 the Warner schedule had grown to eighteen pictures, including such big ones as Belasco's "Tiger Rose" and "Daddies," and Clyde Fitch's play, "Beau Brummel," starring John Barrymore. These were received with enthusiasm all over the world.

Last year's schedule, with twenty features, was not only the largest but the most successful schedule which had been prepared so far. And now comes the 1925-26 program—a leap from an even score to the "Warner Forty," a line-up which gives assurance of triumph with a big "T."

An outstanding move of the last few months was the acquiring of a complete and extensive branch exchange system, by which the company is now serving exhibitors directly instead of through franchise holders. This, apparently, was all that was needed to round the organization into perfect form.

Fair treatment and the utmost consideration for exhibitors have been the constant care of Warner Brothers.

Full Line-up of Warners' Forty Constitutes Notable Achievement

Brilliant Stars, Popular Authors, Capable Directors All Combine to Attract Showman and Fan Alike

THE list of the "Warner Forty" forming the production schedule for 1925-1926 reads like a catalogue of wonders. Warner Bros. confidently believe that no producing organization ever had greater justification for pride in offering a year's program to exhibitors and the public than have they in presenting this array of attractions.

That this confidence is not misplaced is demonstrated by the considerable number of showmen who already have booked the entire list for their theatres. As in thousands of houses a run comprises an entire week at the minimum, this means that many exhibitors will depend upon Warner product almost exclusively during the coming year.

In fact, one influential Broadway exhibitor has signed a contract with Warner Brothers, binding himself to show the offerings of no other producer at any time during a term of fifty-two weeks. It was Lee A. Ochs, managing director of the Piccadilly Theatre, New York, who was so impressed by the Warner product that he determined to give his patrons no other.

Half a dozen factors combine to make the new schedule a truly notable one. A brilliant company of stars has been assembled. The works they are to interpret are the classics of well known and popular authors—writers who already have "sold" themselves and their works to the public. The directors have been chosen with as meticulous care as the stars and vehicles, and the players appearing in the productions so far made or for which preparations are well under way are a guarantee that supporting casts will be up to the highest possible standard.

The subjects treated in the productions cover a wide range, giving every picture fan assurance that among these forty his particular preferences, whatever they may be, will be met more than once. Most picture lovers, however discriminative they may be, are pretty certain to be attracted by the entire double score of offerings.

Six of the productions are frankly melodramas. Slightly more than a dozen are comedies or comedy dramas, although the Warners have arranged to distribute a list of comedies independently of those on this list. The remaining attractions cover the whole gamut of human emotions, supplying adventure, mystery, romance—every form of dramatic entertainment.

Herewith is a list of the Warner Forty, arranged, as nearly as is possible thus early, in the order of their release:

"The Limited Mail," from Elmer E. Vance's thrilling play, starring Monte Blue, with George Hill directing from a scenario by Darryl F. Zanuck.

"The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted," a domestic drama by Gertrude de Wentworth-James, starring Irene Rich. James Flood will direct from scenario by Bess Meredyth.

"Bobbed Hair," from the widely read novel which was the composite work of twenty popular authors. Marie Prevost will have the principal role and Alan Crosland will direct. The scenario is by Lewis Milstone.

"Three Weeks in Paris," a Gregory Rogers comedy, will be interpreted by Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore, with a carefully selected cast. Roy del Ruth is the director and Darryl F. Zanuck the scenarist.

The melodrama, "Below the Line," by Charles A. Logue, will feature Rin-Tin-Tin, the famous dog actor. The author is his own scenarist and Herman Raymaker directed the production.

Bradley King's "Satan in Sables" has been selected as Lowell Sherman's first starring vehicle. Miss King has prepared the scenario and James Flood directed.

"Syd" Chaplin will star in Harold McGrath's comedy, "The Man on the Box," with Charles Francis Reisner directing. Charles A. Logue and Mr. Reisner prepared the scenario.

Patsy Ruth Miller is starred in Kathleen Norris' "Rose of the World," which was directed by Henry Beaumont from the scenario by Julien Josephson.

Monte Blue and Patsy Ruth Miller will be seen in the comedy-drama, "Hogan's Alley," directed by Roy del Ruth.

Oscar Wilde's most celebrated drama, "Lady Windermere's Fan," is to be picturized by Ernst Lubitsch, an all-star cast appearing in the production.

"Red Hot Tires," an adventure drama starring Monte Blue, was directed by Erle C. Kenton. E. T. Lowe, Jr., wrote the script from the work of the author, Gregory Rogers.

Irene Rich will star in Arthur Somers Roche's well known novel, "The Pleasure Buyers." Hope Loring and Louis Lighton wrote the scenario and Chester Withey is directing.

Lewis Milestone's drama, "The Easiest Road," will have Marie Prevost in the leading role. Mr. Milestone will direct from the scenario which he and Darryl F. Zanuck prepared in collaboration.

The Matt Moore-Dorothy Devore combination will appear again in Harry L. Wilson's comedy, "His Majesty Bunker Bean," under the direction of Harry Beaumont. Julien Josephson was the scenarist.

Charles A. Logue's "The Clash of the Wolves" is Rin-Tin-Tin's second attraction on the schedule. H. Raymaker will direct from Mr. Logue's scenario.

"The Love Toy" will be the second production starring Lowell Sherman. E. T. Lowe, Jr., is the scenarist and James Flood will direct.

John Barrymore's first picture will be "The Sea Beast," from Herman Melville's celebrated epic of the sea, "Moby Dick." Millard

Warner Exchanges in World-Wide System

A LONG step forward in the perfecting of their organization was taken by Warner Bros. a few months ago in acquiring an extensive system of branch exchanges throughout the United States and Canada, as well as the British Isles, the continent of Europe and Africa.

Theretofore, the distribution of Warner product had been through franchise-holders. Under the arrangement now prevailing, the company, through duly-accredited representatives, comes into direct contact with the showman. Exhibitors hailed the change with enthusiasm, for the operation of the branch office system permits a degree of cooperation impossible under other conditions. This is in line with the long-established policy of Warner Bros. to hold the wants of the exhibitor paramount to any other consideration.

When Warner Bros. decided to operate an exchange system it took over twenty-nine established offices on the American continent, in addition to twenty in Europe and Africa. It has since added several to the list, to make certain that the entire exhibition field will be adequately covered. As illustrating the calibre of the men in the field organization, it may be stated that among the twenty-nine branch managers first signed, the average of service with a single company was an almost even six years. This is admittedly a remarkable showing in the picture industry.

Samuel E. Morris, general manager in charge of distribution, is the general actively in charge of this vast field force. From his office in New York he directs the work of the entire field organization, using not only the mails but the telegraph wires and the cables in keeping in touch with every important move.

Occasionally, also, he enters the field himself, conferring not only with his staff of captains and lieutenants in their several sectors, but meeting personally the army of exhibitors whom they serve. It is believed that no man in the industry enjoys a wider or closer personal acquaintance with showmen than Mr. Morris.

The exchanges now maintained by Warner Bros. in the United States and Canada, with the branch managers in charge of each, are as follows:

Albany, N. Y., S. N. Burns; Atlanta, Ga., Ira P. Stone; Boston, Mass., Chester W. Sawin; Buffalo, N. Y., C. W. Anthony; Charlotte, N. C., E. P. Pickler; Chicago, Ill., John A. Webb will direct from Bess Meredyth's scenario.

Patsy Ruth Miller and Kenneth Harlan will star in William McLeod Raine's "The Fighting Edge."

Ruth Cross' novel, "The Golden Cocoon," is to be interpreted by an all-star cast. Millard Webb directed and Hope Loring and Louis Lighton are the scenarists.

Another starring vehicle for Monte Blue is "The White Chief," by Bess Meredyth.

Beatrice Burton's "His Jazz Bride" will be the work of an all-star cast.

Jay Gelzer's "Compromise" will have Irene Rich as the central figure, Chester Withey directing from a scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr.

Marie Prevost is to star in Catherine Brody's "Why Girls Go Back Home." James Flood is to direct from C. Gardner Sullivan's script.

In "The Sap," from the famous play, the inimitable comedy team, Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore, will appear again on the schedule.

Rin-Tin-Tin's third melodrama will be "The Night Cry," Herman Raymaker directing.

The tile of a second Ernst Lubitsch production, with an all-star cast, is to be announced later.

"Syd" Chaplin is to star in "The College Widow," from the novel by Frank Howe, with Charles Francis Reisner directing the production.

Patsy Ruth Miller and Kenneth Harlan will interpret "Broken Hearts of Hollywood," by Gregory Rogers.

"Hell Bent for Heaven," the famous prize play by Thatcher Hughes, will star Monte Blue, William Beaudine directing from Julien Josephson's scenario.

Rex Beach's "The Vengeance of Durand" will have Irene Rich as star. Bess Meredyth is the scenarist.

E. Phillips Oppenheim's "The Passionate Quest" will star Marie Prevost, James Flood directing from Bess Meredyth's scenario.

The Matt Moore-Dorothy Devore team will star in the famous musical comedy, "The Honeymoon Express," from the scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr.

Rin-Tin-Tin's next offering is to be "A Hero of the Big Snows."

Patsy Ruth Miller and Kenneth Harlan will be co-starred in Gelet Burgess' "The Cave Man."

Rex Beach's "The Barrier That Was Burned" will have Monte Blue as its star.

Irene Rich will be the central figure in Charles K. Harris' "Silken Shackles."

The star of Charles Hanson Towne's "The Gay Ones" is Marie Prevost. Millard Webb will direct.

Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore will appear in E. Phillips Oppenheim's "The Inevitable Millionaires," with Roy del Ruth directing from Darryl F. Zanuck's scenario.

Patsy Ruth Miller and Kenneth Harlan are to interpret "The Social Highwayman," by Elizabeth P. Traine.

A special all-star cast is scheduled to appear in the comedy drama, "The Little Irish Girl."

It is an interesting fact that already 25 per cent of this production schedule has been completed. It is believed that never before has such a large number of attractions on a program so ambitious been finished thus far in advance. The studios are busier than ever before, with six companies now at work and four others actively preparing to begin early production activities.

Warner Bros. Three Studios Ready To Produce 40 or 400 Productions

WITH three large studios, two in California and one in Brooklyn, Warner Bros. own complete and extensive production facilities. The central plant in Hollywood, covering thirteen acres, an entire block in the very heart of the city, not only is one of the show places of the "movie" capital, but a marvel to every one interested in the film industry. A vast community in itself, it is fitted throughout with the most modern equipment to meet every conceivable demand of picture production.

With their several studios, Warner Bros. are placed in a position to make 40 or 400 pictures.

Jack L. Warner is the master mind in charge of all production activities. Every department of the central plant in Hollywood is under his constant supervision and every detail of operation receives his personal attention or that of Bennie Zeidman, who is associate executive to Mr. Warner.

Within the main studio building on Sunset Boulevard are four stages having a combined floor area of 85,000 square feet and capable of accommodating from twelve to fifteen companies at one time.

The second Warner studio in Hollywood is equipped with three open-air and four closed stages, covering an area of 97,525 square feet.

Housed on the Warner lot, within or adjoining the main building, are a lumber yard, an iron mill, a blacksmith shop, a garage, a camera repair shop, drapery shops, property rooms, an aviary, a menagerie, a huge laboratory, an architectural department and cutting and projection rooms. Herein are facilities to satisfy any requirement which could possibly arise.

The laboratory where the film shot by the various Warner producing units is developed and printed is a huge affair, capable of handling 2,000,000 feet of film every twenty-four hours.

Expert cutters and film editors are occupied constantly in the twelve cutting rooms. The projection rooms also number twelve, four of these being used by the inspectors, who view every foot of film before it leaves for distribution throughout the world.

The main electrical power station is sufficiently large to supply the needs of a city of 60,000 population. To pour a flood of light over the largest of sets, 131 overhead pieces are used. Generator sets, two of which are the largest of their kind ever made, are mounted on nine motor trucks, to furnish artificial lighting wherever required, on locations or elsewhere.

The Warner Bros. radio station, KFWB, from which programs are broadcast daily with Warner stars serving as announcers, is an interesting and helpful feature which has been added recently.

The Warner Bros. studio in Brooklyn is a pioneer among picture making plants. Its two stages are not now in use, for all Warner production is being carried on at the West Coast, but the laboratories are scenes of much activity.

The perfection of their production facilities shows that the physical requirements for picture making have been met by the Warners exactly as has the human element—by securing the very best obtainable. The studios are big in the sense of excellence as well as in number and extent.

Warner Publicity Reaches Every News Outlet All Year Around

KEEPING the public advised of the activities of a producing organization and of picture stars is of vital importance because it carries a world of help to the exhibitor. And picture publicity, to be everlastingly effective, must be incessant.

A periodic spurt, an occasional drive won't do. The story Warner Bros. have to tell is an all-the-year-around story. Progress is being made, there is some new development of interest and importance every day. And the exhibitor rightly demands and must receive constant, uninterrupted service.

So it is not an accident that in every hamlet that boasts a picture theatre—and that means nearly every settlement, wherever located—some information having to do with Warner Bros., their productions and players, is always being placed before the public.

At work all the time on the home office is a staff of trained writers—specialists in the preparation and dissemination of publicity.

A majority of these papers have, too, their own staffs of writers, but it is one part of the mission of the publicity department in New York to see that they are never lacking for fresh material, for tips on stories and for the weapons, photographic and otherwise, to put stories across in the most appealing and effective form.

Here is a summary of some of the services which are being supplied constantly and systematically.

500 of the best newspapers in the United States receive special articles from the Warner offices every week in the year.

2,000 newspapers receive a regular Warner news service twice monthly.

A special woman's page, carrying a particular appeal to mothers and daughters—and they constitute the bulk of motion picture fans—is used by 500 newspapers every month.

Several hundred newspapers receive and take advantage of a regular illustrated mat service.

Every newspaper which has facilities for handling features in rotogravure—pictures of stars and of scenes in Warner productions—constantly is supplied with material.

Several important syndicates, serving hundreds of thousands of readers, are regularly publishing special stories furnished by the Warner publicity department.

More than one hundred of the best known and most widely circulated newspapers of the country make regular use of a special Sunday feature service.

A daily bulletin service, calling attention to the highlights in Warner activities, is supplied—and use is made of it—to newspapers

Warners' "Bonded Advertising" To Appear in 1,100 Newspapers

WARNER BROS. are about to launch what they believe will prove the most gigantic and comprehensive national advertising campaign in motion picture history. The purpose is to call the attention of the public to the Warner product, thereby backing up the exhibitors who play these pictures.

Not only will the campaign be notable because of the vast field to be covered, the extraordinary number of publications to be reached and the vast amount of material published, but it will be unique in the fact that the advertising will be bonded advertising.

Exhibitors will receive certificates which will be, in effect, gilt-edged pledges that Warner Bros. will make good their promise to advertise exactly in accordance with every feature of the plan as outlined to them in advance. These certificates will be an essential part of the contract between the company and the exhibitors to whom Warners sell their "Forty."

All details of the campaign were worked out by Myer Lesser, president of the Blaine-Thompson Advertising Company of Cincinnati, who has taken a desk in the Warner Bros. offices in New York and will personally direct every move in the drive until its completion. The campaign is set to start between August 10 and 15.

The campaign is to be carried on progressively. In the beginning approximately 100 newspapers in forty-five leading cities—key centers—of the country will carry the opening messages. About ten pieces of advertising copy, some of them filling an entire page each, will be placed in each of these publications. These advertisements will have to do with Warner Bros.' product in general and with personalities.

The presence in the Warner line-up of such a world famous star as John Barrymore, such a celebrated director as Ernst Lubitsch and the famous Warner Bros. stock company will be impressed upon the minds of the theatre goers of the country.

As the next move, advertising bearing directly on individual pictures on the 1920-26 schedule will be carried in approximately 6,000 daily newspapers not included in the original list. Each will print about thirty pieces of copy of column length. This advertising will be timed to coincide with the run of a given picture in each city and will appeal particularly to picture fans.

Impressive and all-important is the fact that the campaign contemplates advertising, as Mr. Lesser expresses it, not to the exhibitor but for him. It is believed that such an example of service and co-operation was never before given. As an example, there is about to be issued an elaborate Sales Help Book, of forty-eight pages, crammed with information showing the exhibitor exactly what Warner Bros. purpose doing and in what respects it is to his advantage to grasp the opportunity offered him.

Meanwhile, the very essence of motion picture fandom will be reached through page advertising to be run through a year in five of the leading fan magazines of the country. These are all publications of more than nation-wide circulation.

Supplementing the advertising campaign is the publication in leading newspapers of serializations of many of the most appealing stories picturized for release on the coming year's schedule. This service is to be given the publications absolutely without charge, and assurances already have been received that 1,000 newspapers will take advantage of it. It is certain to be a powerful aid to the exhibitor in "putting over" a production in his town.

"The launching of this campaign on an unprecedented scale," said Mr. Lesser, "is justified by the superior quality and the vast quantity of Warner Bros. product. For the same reason we are enabled to extend to the exhibitor lavishly liberal facilities, such as were never offered him in the past.

"In advertising for him, not to him, we are giving a practical demonstration of the time-honored Warner Bros. policy, which makes the welfare of the exhibitor the company's chief concern. We do not pretend to believe, of course, that all the benefits accruing will be enjoyed by him alone, for whatever helps the exhibitor is certain to help the producer and distributor also.

"The fact remains, however, that despite sometimes extravagant representations, no other organization has ever dared to offer a service which meant anything like so much in beneficial results to the showmen.

"Bonded advertising, too, is something entirely new in the motion picture industry. Too often in the past have some producers and exhibitors given intimations that they would back up the exhibitor with extensive advertising, only to fail him when put to the test.

"The certificate we shall issue will preclude the possibility of failure to make good our word. It will be as much of a contract with the exhibitor as a contract for one of our productions. It is Warner Bros.' bond, guaranteeing our sincerity of purpose and rendering impossible the cancellation of any part of the advertising promised.

"We believe this campaign will mark an epoch in motion picture advertising for the exhibitors and shall be disappointed if one of its lasting effects is not the perfecting of a closer bond between the producer and the exhibitor."

To Direct Beach Drama

William Beaudine has been engaged by Warner Bros. to direct "The Vengeance of Durand," Rex Beach's stirring drama of American life in which Irene Rich, the star, has a powerful, emotional role.

Warner Brothers Star Stock Company Possesses Formidable List of Names

THE first task of a motion picture producing company or distributor is, of course, to provide winning entertainment. Many other factors are influential in governing the relations of a producer and the army of exhibitors he serves but, however high a company's reputation for fair dealing and however perfect its facilities for distribution, without attractive product the machinery would amount to nothing.

"Who are your stars?" is the first question asked by the showman and the fan alike. The list of names in the Warner Bros. aggregation is one of the most impressive in the picture world. The Warners are, indeed, in the fortunate position of enjoying the confidence of both the exhibitor and the public, not only because of the service they extend and the standard of their business dealings, but because of the consistently high quality of the entertainment which they provide.

The Warner stock company is a much admired aggregation. The Warners scoured the theatrical and picture worlds to obtain its stars and featured actors. Merit and the reputation based upon it were the sole demand made in their selection. Only the best was good enough and no effort or expense was too great to line up the persons who were wanted.

The name of every artist in the list of twenty-seven is known wherever motion pictures are known or true art is appreciated. Showmen have learned through actual profitable experience that each of these twenty-seven is a winning box-office bet in himself. for every one of them numbers a host of devoted admirers and enthusiastic champions among regular attendants at picture theatres.

Because these artists are known universally and because their individual records of achievements are so formidable, extended comment on any one name would be superfluous. It may be of special interest, however, to speak of just three, in particular, whose world-wide prestige is notably high.

Any company having as stars John Barrymore, Lowell Sherman and Syd Chaplin—or any one of the trio—might be said to be "made," so far as its standing as a purveyor of entertainment is concerned. In enlisting all three under its banner, Warner Bros. not only demonstrated anew their determination to give exhibitors and the public the superlative best, but performed a stroke of enterprise which, in itself, was an extraordinary and memorable achievement.

In artistry, Barrymore, Sherman and Chaplin each occupies a unique field of his own, though the appeal of each is universal. A glance at the entire Warner list will, in fact, reveal that in the selection of every individual star and stock company member, the utmost care was taken to recruit at least one person truly representative of one particular department of dramatic endeavor. In the ensemble, therefore, the Warner list "has everything." Whether the demand is for a tragedian, a comedian, a juvenile or an ingenue, or for one whose abilities cover the entire range, that demand can always be supplied.

Lowell Sherman Will Appear in Warner Bros. 1925-26 Forty

TO obtain the best the stage had to offer in the way of stars whose popularity would prove a sure box office asset as well as contribute to the screen unusual talent and personality, Warner Bros. reached out recently and put under a limited contract Lowell Sherman, an artist whose successes in roles that caught popular fancy, has won for him thousands of admirers and the approval of a critical press.

LOWELL SHERMAN

Mr. Sherman will appear in productions of the Warners, which they believe will stand out prominently in the 1925-26 Forty, and create a new demand for more of this artist and his pictures.

The first of these is "Satan In Sables" by Bradley King under the direction of James Flood, and those who know Mr. Sherman will find that the story fits him like a glove.

The picture to follow with Mr. Sherman as a star is "The Love Toy," a sensational story of New York's Greenwich village, by an anonymous author which has proved to be one of the sensational novels of the year.

This artist is not new to pictures although this is the first time he has appeared as a screen star in his own right. Those who remember D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" will recall the fine performance of the villain in that remarkable production. The part was played by Mr. Sherman.

Scenario Staff Regarded One of Best

WARNER BROS. boast a scenario staff which is comprised of many prominent writers. The work of its individual members speak for itself.

Possibly Bess Meredyth's most ambitious script was that for "Ben Hur," though she has been the scenarist of all the Fred Niblo productions. The scenarios of "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted" and "The Sea Beast," in which John Barrymore is to star, are by Miss Meredyth.

Julien Josephson has to his credit the scenarios of "Main Street" and "Brass," among Warner productions, and he will be represented on the 1925-26 program by "His Majesty Bunker Bean," to mention one attraction.

C. Gardner Sullivan needs no introduction for he has been with many producers and prepared the scenarios for a host of screen successes. His first picture on this year's program will be "Why Girls Go Back Home."

Bradley King, writer both of original stories and adaptations, was scenarist for Thomas H. Ince many years. She is author and scenarist of "Satan In Sables," Lowell Sherman's starring production for Warner Bros.

The outstanding work of Edward T. Lowe, Jr., to date, is "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," though his list of achievements is an extended one. He has lately signed a contract with Warner Bros. and his first work for Warners will be "Red Hot Tires."

Among other continuities which were prepared by Sonya Levien were "The Top of the World," "The Snow Bride" and "First Love." Her wide experience covers magazine editing and the authorship of fiction, as well as continuity writing.

Well known among both scenario writers and directors is Charles A. Logue, who adapted "My Four Years in Germany." Besides his work as scenarist he was written several original stories for Rin-Tin-Tin.

The name of Lewis F. Milestone is another which appears also in the list of authors. "The Easiest Road," on the new Warner schedule, is an original story by him and Darryl F. Zanuck, and he is directing the production.

C. Francis ("Chuck") Reisner, gag man for and co-director with Charles Chaplin, is at once an author, actor and director. With Charles A. Logue he prepared the scenario for "The Man on the Box" and then directed it.

Darryl F. Zanuck was the author of "Find Your Man," "The Lighthouse by the Sea," "The Broadway Butterfly" and "On Thin Ice," all Warner Bros. successes, and among the stories which he adapted for screening was "Eve's Lover."

Well known among teams in "movie" circles is that of Hope Loring and Louis Lighton. "The Woman Hater," on the Warner 1924-25 schedule, was their work and, among other, the scenarios of "The Golden Cocoon" and "The Pleasure Buyers," on the new schedule, are from their pens.

Warners to Re-issue Semon Comedies

Twelve Larry Semon reissues, two-reelers which played a conspicuous part in raising this laugh-provoker to his present high position among featured comedians, are being distributed by Warner Bros., and are going fast according to reports.

They are typical Semon comedies, destined to demonstrate to young persons who never saw him in pictures before very recent years that the inimitable Larry always was chockfull of fun and from the start of his screen career has been stirring the risibilities of all onlookers.

The titles give a good indication of what is contained in the plots. They are: "Bears and Bad Men," "Frauds and Frenzies," "Humbugs and Husbands," "Scamps and Scandals," "Reaps and Tangles," "Pluck and Plotters," "The Grocery Clerk," "The Fly Cop," "School Days," "Solid Concrete," "The Stage Hand," "The Suitor."

Box-Office Records of Warner Directors

IT is one of the many proud boasts of Warner Bros. that they possess, as they confidently believe, the greatest staff of capable directors to be found with any producing organization. As in the case of their stars and featured players, every name in the Warner list is one of importance. Proof, if proof were needed, is to be found in the productions they have made.

Possibly the average fan takes little thought of the man behind the megaphone. He likes the star or he doesn't. The general impression created by a given picture is or isn't favorable. But exhibitors know that many an otherwise good film has been marred by indifferent or incompetent direction.

It is manifestly impossible to determine the exact value of the director's work in the making of a picture—with relation to the work of other contributing factors—but that it is tremendous no one having the slightest acquaintance with production will dispute.

Warner Bros. were early to recognize this. Hence they exercise the same careful attention in the selection of their directors as they give to stars, casts and stories. And—results tell. In the Warner list are directors fitted for the handling of any theme, of any type of picture. They are alike in their wide experience and their ability.

To the credit of Ernst Lubitsch are such outstanding pictures as "The Marriage Circle," "Three Women," and "Kiss Me Again," and to him has been entrusted the making of Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan," on the 1925-1926 schedule.

Among Harry Beaumont's great achievements are "Beau Brummel" and "Recompense," the success of which won for him the assignment to make also "Rose of the World," "His Majesty Bunker Bean" and other important pictures.

William Beaudine's "The Narrow Street," "How Baxter Butted In" and other Warner attractions so impressed Mary Pickford that she borrowed his services for the production of "Little Annie Rooney." He will start work soon on the Warner "Hell Bent for Heaven."

Millard Webb is the youngest of the directors, but a brilliant future is predicted for him. His work thus far has been so favorable that he has been selected to direct John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast." Among his best last year were "My Wife and I" and "The Dark Swan."

"The Man Without a Conscience" and "The Woman Hater" are among James Flood's outstanding successes. He has lately finished "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted" and is now directing Lowell Sherman in "Satan in Sables."

"Eve's Lover," one of the great successes on the Warner 1924-1925 schedule, was a tall feather in the cap of Roy del Ruth, who has recently completed "Three Weeks in Paris" for the coming year's program. This is to be followed by "The Inevitable Millionaires."

Herman Raymaker directed Rin-Tin-Tin in the big triumph, "Tracked in the Snow Country," and among the Rin-Tin-Tin pictures he will make on the new schedule are "Below the Line" and "The Night Cry."

Such productions as "Enemies of Women" and "Under the Red Robe" are among the past achievements of Alan Crosland. He has just finished "Bobbed Hair," the picturization of the current successful novel by twenty famous writers.

George Hill, who enjoys a wide reputation as a premier melodramatic director, with such works as "Get Your Man" and "While the Devil Laughs" to his credit, has lately finished "The Limited Mail" for the coming year's schedule.

Chet Withey, who directed "Romance"; Dorothy Gish in "The Hun Within" and John Barrymore in "On the Quiet," has just completed "The Pleasure Buyers," and will start work on "Compromise" soon.

Erle C. Kenton, recently signed to a long time contract, made "Tea with a Kick" and "The Leather Pushers," among other successes. His first picture for Warner Bros. is "Red Hot Tires."

Noel Smith, signed by the Warners because of the long line of successes he has made, is at work now on "The Clash of the Wolves," in which the dog actor, Rin-Tin-Tin, is featured.

Charles (Chuck) Reisner co-directed with Charles Chaplin "A Dog's Life," "The Pilgrim," "The Kid," "Shoulder Arms" and "The Gold Rush." He will be represented in the new Warner schedule by "The Man on the Box" and "The College Widow."

Lewis Milestone, who wrote the scenario of "Bobbed Hair," has just finished the direction of "The Easiest Road," the story and scenario of which he wrote with Darryl F. Zanuck.

Scenes in "The Pleasure Buyers," the Warner Brothers picture in which Irene Rich is starred. Others in this exceptional cast are Clive Brook, June Marlowe and Gayne Whitman.

"Man on the Box" a $2 Picture, Says Warner of Chaplin's First

IT was generally conceded that Warner Bros. captured a comedy star of the first magnitude when they signed "Syd" Chaplin. That this opinion was correct is evidenced by the following telegram received at the New York office from H. M. Warner.

"Just saw Syd Chaplin's picture 'The Man On The Box.' If this isn't a $2.00 picture, there never was one and no picture ever will be. It is a rare production. To my mind it surpasses 'Charley's Aunt.' Just imagine this picture included in our Forty."

Here is a telegram of good news to exhibitors. In a line or two, Mr. Warner tells exhibitors "The Man On the Box" surpasses "Charley's Aunt," one of the big laugh hits and money getters this season. And that is not all that Warner Bros. expect to deliver exhibitors from "Syd" Chaplin. His next production will be the famous "College Widow" adapted from the novel by Frank Howe. He will have with him Charles Francis (Shuck) Reisner, the same director who has just finished "The Man On The Box."

"SYD" CHAPLIN

Warner Bros. Add First Vamp to Stock Company

For her excellent work in "Satan In Sables" with Lowell Sherman, Warner Bros. have just signed Myrna Loy, known as "a new type of vamp," to a long term contract, making her the twenty-seventh member of their stock company. She is the only vamp in the Warner featured player line-up, and the company intend to cast her in important roles.

Miss Loy is a graduate of the Ruth St. Dennis School of Dancing and first attracted attention when she appeared in several of Sid Grauman's prologues at his Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood. She attracted the attention of Henry Waxman, the well known photographer, and through him she obtained a part in "What Price Beauty." This was followed by a prominent role in "Pretty Ladies." Her engagement for "Satan In Sables" followed.

Injects Own Personality Into Players, Says Critics of Lubitsch

COMING to America from Europe, and entering upon screen work after a successful stage career, Ernst Lubitsch brought to picture direction a world-wide outlook and an experience covering every field of dramatic effort. Critics regard as one of his strongest points the fact that he is able to inject into every player whom he directs his own personality and emotions, while his residence on two continents, equips him to adapt himself to whatever situation is demanded by a given script.

It will be years before "The Marriage Circle," a Lubitsch production for Warner Bros., is forgotten. Of the many lists of "Ten Best Pictures of the Year," compiled by reviewers in every section of the country, not one failed to contain the name of this special. "Three Women," a drama of another type, also won for Warner Bros. and Mr. Lubitsch as well as the players participating, unstinted praise.

When "Kiss Me Again" appeared, comparison with "The Marriage Circle" was inevitable, and, following the rule in the consideration of Lubitsch offering, most critics declared this superior to the former triumph. Although "Kiss Me Again" is yet to have its first New York run, so enthusiastic was the dramatic editor of a leading New York newspaper, who had a pre-view, that on two successive Sundays in recent weeks he has devoted his lead article to appreciations of the production and its director.

ERNST LUBITSCH

This brilliant director will announce several future features shortly, through Warner Brothers.

Warner Bros. Accessories Are Known for Box Office Pull

IT is generally conceded that the success of Warner Bros. pictures at box-offices has been due to the high grade advertising accessories which this company makes a practice of providing for each release. Warner Bros. believe that no product is so good that it cannot be made even better by intelligent advertising presentation.

While the so-called mechanics of production of Warner Bros. advertising accessories are important, the general excellence of the posters, heralds, window cards, etc., provided for each Warner Bros. release is accomplished through the method used in creating the basic idea on which the advertising accessories are built.

No individual piece of advertising literature used by Warner Bros. is a "one-man job." The one man whose job it is to see that the posters, the heralds, the window cards, or what not are ready for exhibitors when they want them is only the "engineer." A dozen others, representing the combined showmanship sense of the entire Warner Bros. organization, give material help on everything that is produced.

In discussing this matter of the careful preparation of advertising accessories in its relation to the Warner Bros. 1925-26 product, Sam E. Morris had this to say:

"We have always been extremely particular in the matter of selling our pictures to the public through the medium of the exhibitor's advertising on billboards, in his lobby, etc. In moving the 1925-26 product we are going to be even more careful. We have bigger and better product to sell and, with a national advertising campaign on in important newspapers throughout the country, it is only reasonable that this other form of advertising intended to accomplish identically the same results as the newspaper advertising should be given the greatest possible care."

Serials Based on New Warner Pictures Now Appearing in 1,100 Newspapers

THE most stupendous publicity campaign ever successfully undertaken by Warner Bros. to promote public interest in motion pictures stands back of Warner Bros.' 1925-26 Forty. Read these facts:

One thousand newspapers are publishing every day in the year serial novels from which the great Forty have been produced.

The circulation of these publications, according to the certified statements, amounts to the amazing number of 10,000,000 buyers. According to advertising experts, five persons read every copy of a daily newspaper, making more than 40,000,000 readers who see every day Warner Bros.' stories.

The space gladly allotted to these novels by the newspaper editors reaches the astounding total of more than 250,000 columns of type.

Exhibitors cannot afford to pass lightly by this extraordinary effort at popularizing Warner Bros. pictures. Ready-made audiences are waiting for the big Forty. Among the novels which are being serialized are:

"The Limited Mail," by Elmer E. Vance.

"The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted," by Gertrude S. Wentworth-James.

"Bobbed Hair," by twenty famous authors.

"Satan in Sables," by Bradley King.

"The Golden Cocoon," by Ruth Cross.

"Why Girls Go Back Home," by Catherine Brody.

"The Gay Ones," by Charles Hanson Towne.

"The Pleasure Buyers," by Arthur Somers Roche.

"His Jazz Bride," by Beatrice Burton.

"Rose of the World," by Katheleen Norris.

"The Inevitable Millionaires," by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

The pulling power to the box office of this continuous daily presentation of Warner Bros.' Forty before the reading public, the men and women who buy motion theatre tickets, cannot be underestimated. It means dollars in increased attendance.

Signing John Barrymore a Master Stroke

WARNER BROTHERS never made a more enterprising stroke than when they signed John Barrymore. Perhaps the greatest of American stage actors, Barrymore is regarded by many as the premier screen star also. Warners' success in obtaining him to make big pictures for them was a triumph achieved in the face of strong competition, for there is not a producing company which would not glory in having him for a star.

For the coming season's work, Barrymore proceeded to Hollywood early this summer almost immediately upon his return from London, where, during a season in "Hamlet," he elevated the reputation abroad of American dramatic art to a new high level. His work was a revelation to the discriminating London critics, who joined in acclaiming him one of the greatest interpreters of Shakespearian roles of all time.

However, both on the stage and the screen John Barrymore has demonstrated his extraordinary versatility. There is scarcely a role in any department of dramatic characterization which he cannot interpret in a manner equal to the very best, while in most fields he is without a peer.

His "Beau Brummel," a Warner Brothers triumph, proved not only the outstanding picture of the year in which it made its premiere, but one of the greatest screen attractions of all time. Moreover, Mr. Barrymore's individual performance won for him the Valentino Medal as the most nearly perfect of the year.

JOHN BARRYMORE

This year Mr. Barrymore has made a still more radical departure in selecting "The Sea Beast," based on the celebrated whaling story, "Moby Dick," as the first of his productions. This epic of the sea—specifically it is a highly colorful tale of the New Bedford whaling industry—contains action sufficient for half a dozen pictures.

The selection was approved in response to Mr. Barrymore's request for an adventure story, in which he should appear in a truly masculine role in a virile, moving story. Elaborate preparations are being made for this production and predictions are ventured by many picture lovers that Mr. Barrymore's work in it will raise him to new heights.

As a box office attraction this star is almost without a rival. The name Barrymore has, of course, been a drawing card to American theatres for generations. The children of Maurice Barrymore are upholding the traditions established by their distinguished father, and in pictures, as on the stage, John has established for himself a prestige that few men have enjoyed.

"Eddie" Bonns to Inject "Selling Punch"

AMONG the big plans under way by Warner Brothers as exhibitor aids is a nation-wide exploitation service which will take in districts from coast to coast and is aimed to help sell the picture to the public for the local exhibitors.

As rapidly as possible capable exploitation men will be engaged; men experienced in newspaper work, theatre management and who are proven showmen. One of the important bits of knowledge they must have is territorial information. They will not tell the exhibitors what to do, but will go out and do it.

Campaigns on all Warner pictures are now being laid out at the New York office by "Eddie" Bonns, who is in charge of national exploitation, and showmen who know "Eddie" are aware that he generally puts his exploitation over with a punch that gets across to the public.

Although the exploitation men in the field will be under the supervision of the home office, their work in localities will be guided entirely by the branch managers and the requirements of individual exhibitors. In other words, the men will work in districts instead of individual branch offices, and will be sent to the spot where aid is especially needed, so that exhibitors can call on the Warner local exchange for help any time and be sure that there are exploitation men in the district to give it to him.

According to Bonns, there are big exploitation plans for trans-continental outdoor stunts, and especial attention will be paid to newspapers and the radio. The radio, reaching the large field of motion picture fans that it does, will be widely used, and several stunts are under cover to use this medium for selling the Warner product to the public.

Among them may be mentioned a travelling radio exploitation man, whose business it will be to go into cities and towns and talk about Warner Brothers pictures playing the locality at the time. There can be no surer way of letting the public know what pictures are playing local theatres than by telling them directly.

Exhibitors who play Warner Brothers' pictures during the coming season will be backed up with exploitation that really exploits.

Christie Scenarists Busy On Script of "Madame Lucy"

THERE is a great whirr of activity in in the little "private" offices at the Christie studio where McGrew Willis and his staff of "laugh manufacturers" are now busy making the adaptation of Jean Arlette's French farce "Madame Lucy."

The production will go into work this week under the direction of Scott Sidney and the adapters are staking their reputations on giving the director a "sure-fire" script.

Following the usual conference custom at Christie's, half a dozen brilliant creators of laughs are taking a hand in the preparation of this story.

Midnight oil is burned while Al Christie, Scott Sidney, F. McGrew Willis, Norman McLeod, chief of the gag staff, and others, consult over each sequence as it is prepared for shooting.

"Madame Lucy" is called "a sister to 'Charley's Aunt,'" because the story, while much different in episodes from the famous English classic, will present the hero, Julian Eltinge, in a wild scramble in feminine clothes.

Christie has lined up a great cast for this picture, which includes beside Eltinge, Ann Pennington, the Follies star; Lionel Belmore, Hallam Cooley, Jack Duffy and Lilyan Tashman.

Goldwyn's "Stella Dallas" Is Moving Fast In Production

WITH the definite announcement that Samuel Goldwyn's screen version of Olive Higgins Prouty's novel, "Stella Dallas," will be released through United Artists Corporation, comes the added news that production work on this feature is progressing rapidly, and interest in the film is increased with the assurance that it will be ready for early fall distribution.

Vera Lewis is announced as the latest addition to a cast of well known players, which is headed by Belle Bennett in the title role.

Others in the supporting cast for Miss Bennett are Ronald Colman, who will be seen as Stephen Dallas, Alice Joyce as Helen Morrison; Lois Moran, who has been characterized as an "unsophisticated and unmodernized" child wonder discovery of Samuel Goldwyn, making her American debut in the role of Laurel, the daughter; Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in the juvenile lead opposite Lois Moran iin the role of Richard Grosvenor; and Jean Horsholt as the riding master.

The scenario is by Frances Marion and Henry King is the director.

Ascher Bros. Circuit Books Gold Bond Films

J. J. Sampson, branch manager of Film Booking Offices' Chicago exchange, announces that he this week closed a deal with the Ascher Brothers Circuit, Chicago, for the entire array of F. B. O. Gold Bond productions, to be made and released during 1925-26.

The Gold Bond pictures will play the following theatres on the Ascher circuit: Calo, Columbia, Commercial, Crown, Frolio, Portage Park, Vista, Lane Court, Metropolitan, Oakland Square, and Terminal, Chicago.

Added to Cast

Gladden James has been added to the supporting cast for Leatrice Joy's next starring picture, "The Wedding Song," shooting on which starts soon at the De Mille Studio, under Alan Hale's direction. James, always in demand, is one of the busiest free-lance players in motion pictures.

Bachmann on Tour

Distribution Head of Schulberg Productions Goes to West Coast

J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution of B. P. Schulberg Productions, Inc., will leave New York Saturday with the Preferred studio in Hollywood as his immediate destination.

The purpose of Mr. Bachmann's trip is to formulate a production and release schedule on the entire program of eighteen new Preferred Pictures. His arrival has been timed to see two of their biggest stories put into production. These are "The Plastic Age" by Percy Marks which Wesley Ruggles will direct and "Lew Tyler's Wives" by Wallace Irwin to be filmed by Marcel De Sano.

Mr. Bachmann will also assist in planning two spectacular Preferred Pictures, Bronson Howard's celebrated play "Shenandoah" and "The Biography of a Race Horse" adapted from the Saturday Evening Post novel, by L. B. Yates, the latter picture to be released under the title of "Horses and Women."

Before returning to New York Mr. Bachmann will visit the Schulberg exchanges on the Pacific coast. He will be absent from the home office about six weeks.

Fitzgerald Engages Short

Gertrude Short, who has scored so heavily in "Beggar on Horseback," one of James Cruz's productions for Famous Players-Lasky, has, according to a telegram received at the home office of Arrow Pictures Corporation, from Dallas M. Fitzgerald, been engaged by Mr. Fitzgerald for an important role in "Tessie," the first Dallas M. Fitzgerald Production to be released by Arrow.

The others in the cast—which is headed by May McAvoy—are Bobby Agnew, another Famous Players-Lasky player, Lee Moran, and Myrtle Stedman.

"Tessie" is by Sewell Ford, author of the "Torchy" stories, and was published originally in the Saturday Evening Post.

Author to Adapt for Screen

Donald Ogden Stewart, rapidly becoming one of the most prominent figures in modern American literature, has been engaged by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer corporation to adapt his novel "The Crazy Fool" to the screen. The purchase of this book was announced recently.

This will be Sewart's first affiliation with motion pictures, and will open up an entirely new field for his humor.

Scenes in the William Fox Special, "Greater Than a Crown," starring Edmund Lowe.

Hart Offers Trophy

Bronze Statue of "Two-Gun Man" Given for Rodeo Event

William S. Hart, two-gun man of the screen, has contributed a $1,500 bronze statue of himself in Wild West costume, as a trophy for one of the events of the Cheyenne Frontier Days to be held July 20-24. This big affair will bring together the world's most famous riders, ropers and exponents of western skill with horse, rope and steer, it is said.

Hart plans to be working on his first screen production for United Artists Corporation release, "Tumbleweeds," at the time, so will not be able to attend the celebration, but has shown his interest by sending the statue, the work of C. C. Cristadoro, and is one-half life size.

A cast from the original model also has been sent by Hart to New York and will be placed on exhibition in a few days in the foyer of the Mark Strand theatre, Broadway, where "Tumbleweeds" has been booked even thus far in advance of production completion.

Ray Finishes "The Winner"

Charles Ray has completed "The Winner," his second rural comedy drama for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, which will be released on November 15. Ray's first production for Chadwick "Some Pun'kins," will be released on September 1st. Jerome Storm, who has directed both these Ray pictures, and the star will start preparations immediately for the filming of his next production. The cast of "The Winner" includes Gertrude Olmstead, Gertrude Short, J. P. Lockney, Frank Austin, Jack Clifford and Sybil Johnson. The production was personally supervised by Joseph de Grasse.

Starts on Conrad Story

"The Silver Treasure," an adaptation from Joseph Conrad's world-renowned novel, "Nostromo," is the latest of the forthcoming Fox supreme attractions to be put "in work" at the West Coast studios of that company.

Rowland V. Lee has been selected to wield the megaphone over the filming of the Conrad story, which is scheduled to be released to exhibitors in December.

To play the leading role Mr. Lee picked George O'Brien. Inez Rene is the stellar performer selected to play opposite O'Brien in the leading feminine role of Giselle Viola.

Changes Picture Title

"The Lure of the North" is the new title which Columbia Pictures has selected instead of "The Lure of Broadway," originally selected. This production will be released later in the year. One of the best known screen dogs is to be featured with a cast of feature prominence, according to production manager Harry Cohn.

Universal Has Sixteen Westerns in Work; Record, Say Officials

SIXTEEN productions with western locales are now in production or preparation for Universal, with at least three of them being made on an unusually elaborate scale. This is a studio record for westerns, Universal officials say.

Hoot Gibson, with an army of players, cameramen, cowboys and technical workers, is in Canada, filming two pictures at once. One, "The Calgary Stampede," is being made with the famous Rodeo as its background; the other, "Chip of the Flying U," is being filmed on the ranch of the Prince of Wales in Alberta, Canada. Herbert Blache is directing both pictures.

"On the Frontier," an epic of the West, with American history as a background, will go into production shortly, under the direction of Edward Sedgwick, who wrote the novel from which the story is adapted. Norman Kerry and Dustin Farnum have been elected for two of the principal roles.

Cliff Smith is directing Art Acord in "Sky High Corral"; Robert North Bradbury is filming "Slipper Tongue," with Jack Hoxie as the star; while William Desmond and Eileen Sedgwick are busy on a ten-episode serial, "The Winking Idol" with Francis Ford at the megaphone.

Other westerns in action are: "Montana of the Range," starring Josie Sedgwick; Edmund Cobb in "The Thrill Hunter," directed by Ernest Laemmle; Fred Humes in "The Call of Hazard" and "Ike's Holiday," starring Gilbert Holmes and Men Corbet. Stories in preparation are "The Rustler's Secret," "The Emergency Man," "The Fighting Fool," "Gun Shy," and several others.

UFA Signs to Release 40 M-G-M In Its European Theatre Circuit

FREDERICK WYNNE-JONES, managing-director of UFA-USA, has returned after a five weeks' trip to Berlin, with the announcement that UFA had signed with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to release forty pictures in the UFA circuit of theatres in Central Europe.

Mae Murray has been engaged to make pictures in Germany for one year, beginning September 1. Her first picture has not yet been decided on. Other American female stars have been engaged. UFA is looking for an American male star to work at the UFA studios at Neubabelsberg.

UFA will make 36 pictures in Germany this year, of which twenty will come to America. Among the first to reach this country will be "Tartuffe," based on Moliere's comedy, with Emil Jannings, Lil Dagover and Werner Krauss in the leading roles, directed by F. W. Murnau, "Variety" with Emil Jannings and Lya de Putti, directed by I. A. Dupont; "The Way to Strength and Beauty" and "Siegfried," which opens at the Century theatre August 23.

UFA has built a new indoor studio at Neubabelsberg, 385 ft. long and 120 ft. wide, which can be divided into four, three or two studios with soundproof doors separating the companies.

UFA controls over three hundred theatres in Central Europe, 126 of them first run houses, the largest in each city, and which charge a higher admission than similar theatres in America.

C. G. Baker With Inspiration

C. Graham Baker, for many years editor-in-chief of the Vitagraph scenario force, and more recently connected with the William Fox Company, has been engaged by Inspiration Pictures, Inc., to aid in the picturization of their forthcoming releases.

Baker, who is one of the best-known scenarists in the country, brings to Inspiration Pictures a wealth of experience both as a scenario expert and as a film editor. The script of practically every Vitagraph special up to a few months ago was prepared by him. He recently edited and titled "Captain Blood," "The Clean Heart," "The Redeeming Sin," and others. For the Fox organization he picturized "The Kreutzer Sonata," Sir John Galworthy's play, "Loyalties," and A. E. W. Mason's novel, "The Winding Stair."

Maloney Ready to Start

Advices from Leo Maloney on the West Coast state that he has completed his last picture for William Steiner and that he is now ready to start his new series for 1925-26 which will be distributed by Weiss Brothers under the Clarion Photoplays, Inc., trademark.

His contract with Weiss Brothers calls for eight five-reel features and under its terms Leo Maloney will take with him, intact, the same organization that surrounded and helped him win the success that he gained while he was making his two series for William Steiner.

The first three pictures in the series will be as follows: "Win, Lose or Draw," "Luck And Sand," "The Blind Trail," in the order named.

Cutting De Sano's First

Camera work has been completed on B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Picture, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," This production, adapted from the sensational English novel by Gertie D. Wentworth-James, is the first release to be made by Marcel De Sano, the new director "find." According to telegraphic word received from Mr. Schulberg by the New York office, the rushes indicate that De Sano is an extremely significant addition to the industry's directional ranks. The release of "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" will follow "Parisian Love," the first on the new program.

"Perfect Clown" Progressing

Fred Newmeyer is making rapid progress with "The Perfect Clown" starring Larry Semon, which he is making for Chadwick Pictures Corporation. It is expected that this picture will be completed in about three weeks.

"The Perfect Clown," which is being made on the same lavish scale as "The Wizard of Oz," is an original story, written especially for the star. Dorothy Dwan and Oliver Hardy, who supported Semon in "The Wizard of Oz" are in the cast of the new production. Other well-known players are Stuart Holmes, Kate Price, Otis Harlan, Alice Fletcher and Sam Allen.

Sartov Signed M.-G.-M.

Henrik Sartov, formerly in D. W. Griffith's camera department, has been signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to photograph Lillian Gish in "La Boheme," upon which King Vidor is shortly to begin work. Sartov was considered the finest still photographer in the industry until, a few years ago, he deserted this branch of photography and took up moving pictures. John Gilbert plays opposite Miss Gish in "La Boheme," which has been adapted to the screen from the Henri Murger classic by Mme. Fred Degresad and continuitized by Edmund Goulding.

Barrymore in California

Lionel Barrymore, Chadwick Pictures Corporation star, has recently arrived in Los Angeles, where he will soon start work on his first picture to be made in a Hollywood studio. All of this star's former productions have been made in New York City, as he had never before consented to forsake the stage for so long a period as one of his special productions requires.

ALBERTA VAUGHN

This scintillating star will be "Maisie," in the F. B. O. picture, "The Adventures of Maisie"

De Mille Signs Jean Acker

The signature of Jean Acker is the latest addition to the collection of famous autographs now owned by Cecil B. De Mille, for Miss Acker, formerly Mrs. Rudolph Valentino, has affixed her name to a long-term contract to appear in De Mille productions.

For the past year, Miss Acker has been featured in vaudeville in a skit entitled "A Regular Girl," but was conspicuously successful in screen work before her season behind the footlights.

Miss Acker has been loaned by De Mille to the Metropolitan Features to appear in "Simon the Jester," but is soon to be cast in a De Mille production.

Introducing—Miss Upton!

Lucille Upton, beautiful young sister of Peggy Hopkins Joyce, is to play a flapper in "The Pace That Thrills," which an Earl Hudson unit is producing for First National, with Ben Lyon and Mary Astor in the co-featured roles. Lucille is bound to make a name for herself other than "Peggy Hopkins Joyce's sister" for, according to Director Webster Campbell, the girl has not only the personality and pulchritude, but ability as well.

Brandt Writes a Special

President Joe Brandt of Columbia Pictures has written a special story which will be produced as a Columbia release some time this year. Mr. Brandt is in Hollywood at present discussing production matters with production manager Harry Cohn who likes the story. A title is yet to be announced, according to Brandt, as well as the details of this popular film executive's literary effort.

Buys for Europe

The Hi-Mark Film Sales Corporation of No. 220 West 42nd Street, through Nat Nathanson, general manager, announces that they have bought the entire production output of the Truart Film Corporation for Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania.

Play Up Warner Product

Of four exclusive first run theatres devoted entirely to motion pictures, in Oklahoma City, three played Warner Bros. productions during the week of July 5. This is believed to be a record for one producing company in a city of 110,000.

The feature pictures shown during what might well have been called Warner Bros. Week, were "Eve's Lover" at the Criterion, "Steele of the Royal Mounted" at the Empress, and "The Unknown Lover" at the Liberty.

Only a few weeks ago "Wildfire" played the Liberty Theatre and "Recompense" the Capitol, simultaneously. Both are Warner pictures.

New Leonard Picture

Pending completion of the designs for both sets and costumes which Erte, internationally famous artist and delineator of fashions, is creating for "Paris," the Carey Wilson story which Robert Z. Leonard is producing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with Lew Cody and Pauline Starke in the leading roles, Director Leonard will produce Richard Connell's "A Little Bit of Broadway," a story of theatrical life in New York which has been adapted to the screen by Jessie Burns. Pauline Starke will have the leading role of Pansi Delaney, a Broadway chorus girl who learns that a little bit of Broadway goes a long way.

"Wreckage" Nearly Complete

In a telegram received from Henry Ginsberg, who is now on the coast, he makes the prediction that "Wreckage," the second of Banner productions, will prove one of the most pretentious pictures of the year. The picture is practically completed except slight editing corrections and prints are expected in New York very shortly.

The production adapted from Izola Forrester's "Salvage" is replete with dramatic scenes, especially the storm at sea and the sinking of the ocean liner being masterpieces of screen realism.

Completing "Live Wire"

C. C. Burr reports that in the five weeks since he began filming Johnny Hines' first production for First National release, "The Live Wire," from Richard Washburn Child's novel, "The Game of Light," photography has been nearly three-fourths completed. Filming is expected to be concluded by the first of August.

"The Live Wire" entails a heavy production schedule due to the big circus sequences which give the star, Johnny Hines, unusually effective opportunities for displaying his gifts for breezy comedy acting.

Making "Souls for Sables"

Jack Bellman, manager of the New York Exchange of the Renown Pictures, Inc., announces that the Tiffany Production, "Souls for Sables" based on the book "Garland & Co." by David Graham Phillips is now being filmed with a cast of prominent screen players.

The cast of players include Claire Windsor, Eugene O'Brien, Ethel Clayton, Anders Randolph, George Fawcett and Taylor Holmes. "Souls for Sables" is scheduled for release on the Renown Program on September 1.

Grainger, Back From Tour, Believes Coming Season Will Be the Greatest

BACK at his desk at the home office after having completed a tour which took him to all of the branch offices in the United States and Canada, James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, is in an exceedingly optimistic frame of mind over the prospects for a big season in the motion picture industry and more particularly for the company which he represents.

"Indications point to the biggest season motion pictures have ever known," said Mr. Grainger. "I have made a careful survey of business conditions in all big cities of the United States and Canada and as a result of this survey I do not hesitate to make the prediction that the season of 1925-26 will be the greatest in point of business the motion picture industry has ever known. One reason why I feel so optimistic is that everybody seems to have plenty of money and willing to spend it. Another reason is that the finest picture yet produced will go into the motion picture theatres during the coming season. Competition has been exceedingly keen during the past few years and the larger producers of pictures have come to a realization that they must bend every effort towards superior production. While more money is going into pictures than ever before. I believe the vast amount of capital is being expended more sanely and more wisely.

"Speaking for Fox Film Corporation I have it from scores of exhibitors themselves that the Fox line-up of productions for the coming season far exceeds anything we have ever attempted before. That these same exhibitors are sincere in their expression of opinion is borne out by the fact that Fox Film Corporation has more accepted contracts in the home office than ever before at this stage of the selling season. The time for putting anything over on the wise exhibitor has passed. He has a pretty fair idea of what he is going to do as soon as he has analyzed and digested the annual announcements of the more important corporations. When they read the Fox announcement which was published in the trade papers and later sent to them direct from the various branch exchanges, in which their theatres are located, they were no doubt impressed with the calibre of product Fox was going to offer them. Without going into extensive details or endeavoring to put over a sales talk at this time, it is evident the impression they gained was deeply set, for many of the larger circuits and individual exhibitors in both the United States and Canada have already placed their signatures on the dotted lines for Fox product during the coming season.

"Among those are Finkelstein and Rubin of Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth; Ike Libson of Cincinnati, Dayton and Louisville; Dolle and Sterle of Louisville; Rowland & Clark of Pittsburgh; the Butterfield Circuit of Michigan; L. H. Abrams of Canton; the Hoblitzelle Circuit of Dallas, Fort Worth and Birmingham; the Ascher Bros.' thirteen Chicago theatres; William James' five theatres in Columbus, Ohio;; Mandelbaum of Toledo; Yamin's Circuit, Fall River, Mass.; Toohey Bros., Sioux Falls, S. D.; Harry Goldberg, Omaha; John McLay, Duluth, Minn.; J. S. Newman, Newcastle, Pa.; H. S. Himmlea, Sandusky, Ohio; Arthur G. White, Amsterdam, N. Y.; Peterson & Woods, Jamestown, N. Y.; Harry T. Knowles, Creeling, Colo.; James N. Robertson, Detroit; Dye, Ford & Rodgers, Wichita Falls, Texas; W. F. Boxs, Waco, Texas; E. F. Albee, J. J. Murdock for Keith's Palace, Cleveland, and for the Albee Theatre and Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I.; William Berenstein, Elmira, N. .Y; Mike Commerford for the entire circuit of over fifty theatres in Pennsylvania; A. Hyman, Huntington, W. Va.; M. E. Riley, Richmond, Ind.

"In addition to these and of great importance was the sale of our picture, "The Iron Horse" to the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, New York City; the seven Tom Mix productions to the Rialto Theatre; "Lightnin'" to the Strand Theatre, New York City and Strand Theatre, Brooklyn; and "The Iron Horse" to the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn. This is only the beginning, but it being the best in the history of Fox Film Corporation, I feel that when the 1925-26 selling season is over we will have established a new high record for revenue, also for class in superior productions."

Mr. Grainger has made a number of important changes in the selling organization since he became general sales manager, it being his desire to surround himself with a most capable and efficient selling organization in the industry. He expects to devote considerable time to covering the principal selling points in this country and Canada several times before the first of January.

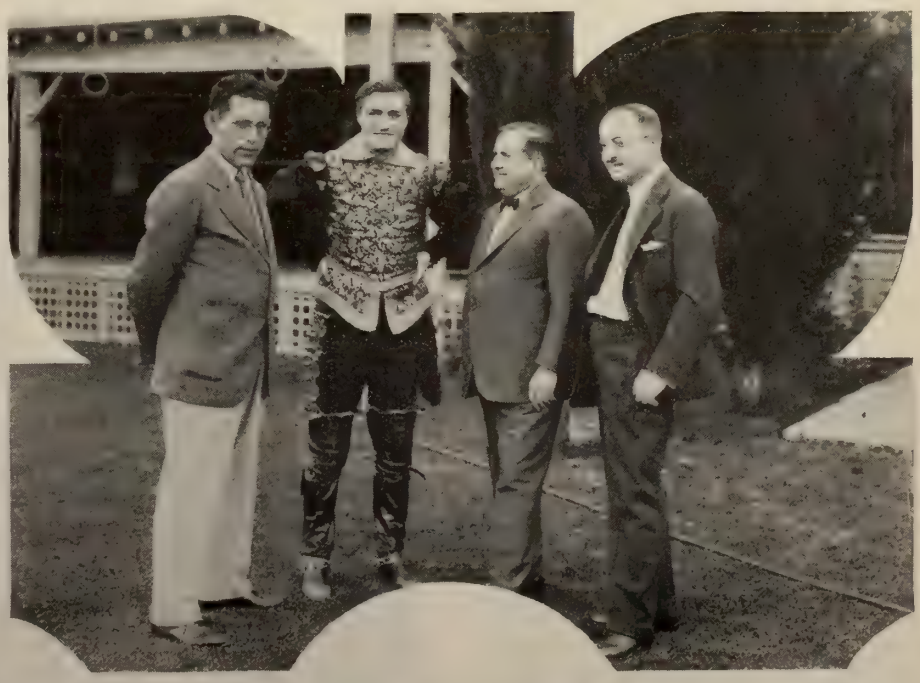
Big Box-Office Names in "Simon the Jester"

FOLLOWING the completion of "Without Mercy" the first Metropolitan production through Producers Distributing Corporation, George Melford is now busy selecting the cast he will direct in "Simon the Jester," the first Frances Marion production on the Pro-Dis-Co program.

"Simon the Jester" is rated as one of William J. Locke's finest stories. It was adapted to screen presentation by Frances Marion who claims its picture values rate even higher than any of the other splendid stories that Locke has given to the screen.

Lillian Rich and Eugene O'Brien will be featured at the head of a big all-star cast that includes Henry B. Walthall.

William Sistrom producing executive at the Hollywood studios says William J. Locke, Frances Marion and George Melford on the producing end lends three big box-office names to "Simon the Jester" that supplement the drawing power of its real all star cast.



A JOLLY GATHERING OF GOOD FELLOWS

Scenes in "Pretty Ladies," a Monta Bell production for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer program, featuring ZaSu Pitts and Tom Moore, with a remarkable supporting cast that includes leading Metro stars in comparatively obscure roles. At the New York Capitol, last week, this picture scored a tremendous success.

"Pretty Ladies" Sensational Hit at Capitol, New York

FEW pictures have met with as much enthusiastic acclaim from the Manhattan critics as has Monta Bell's "Pretty Ladies" on opening at the Capitol Theatre in New York, last week. This new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production is a stirring picturization of the Adela Rogers St. Johns story, featuring ZaSu Pitts, Tom Moore, Ann Pennington and Lilyan Tashman, while Norma Shearer, Conrad Nagel and George K. Arthur appear in bits. Alice D. G. Miller made the screen adaptation.

"Monta Bell has done it again," exclaims Harlow J. Peters in the New York Morning Telegraph. "Which means that in 'Pretty Ladies' he has turned out a picture of remarkable entertainment value. With Adela Rogers St. Johns' story of the trials and tribulations of a 'Follies' star to work with, he has evolved a beautifully balanced and continually interesting film. It gives ZaSu Pitts the best role she has ever had; it contains some of the best natural color scenes yet made, and it dares to give frank information about some features of chorus girl life. Miss Pitts is superb in the leading part."

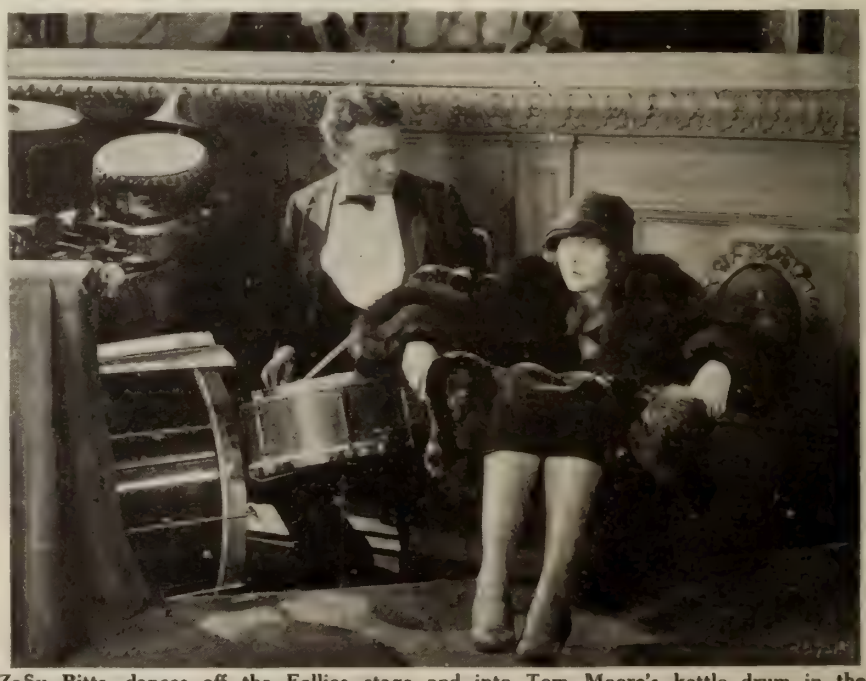
"If I had a hat on," declares the New York Evening Journal, "I'd take it off to Monta Bell, who directed 'Pretty Ladies.' It's one of the best pictures of the season. Monta Bell directs a picture like a painter paints one. He takes an idea and presents it with such deftness that it leaves an impression beyond mere visual entertainment. Some musical comedy producer should urge Bell to come to New York and stage a revue. There are gorgeous scenic effects, a clever house-fly scene that would be a sensation on the stage, beautiful chorus girls and a living chandelier, with some of the scenes done in color. It's a great picture. Don't miss it."

"One good turn deserves another," writes Mildred Spain in the New York Daily News. "After years of glorifying the American girl, Mr. Ziegfeld and his 'Follies' come in for a large portion of glorifying in the movies. Monta Bell is the bright boy who did it. And he did a neat job! There's a glamor about the piece that holds one until the fadeout. The color scenes of the 'Follies' and the gorgeous girls are distinctly lovely. 'Pretty Ladies' is a darned good show. Don't say that I didn't tell you to see it."

"'Pretty Ladies' is a pictorial gem," remarks Dorothy Herzog in the New York Daily Mirror, "resplendent with gorgeous scenes, beautiful girls and superb acting by ZaSu Pitts. It offers the kind of entertainment for which one ordinarily pays $5.50 and checks up another directorial triumph for Monta Bell. Drama and humor and pathos swirl around the whimsical Maggie Keenan, played by ZaSu Pitts. The atmosphere of the 'Follies,' the lavish settings and the little game known as 'ace of hearts,' is woven into this picture with a convincing, a cunning, a sympathetic touch. Be sure and put 'Pretty Ladies' on your MUST list. It is the kind of picture you'll enjoy seeing more than once."

"You'll want to see 'Pretty Ladies' at the Capitol," observes Regina Cannon in the New York Daily Graphic, "and when you've seen it our bet is that you'll want to see it again. For 'Pretty Ladies' is the best back-stage picture that has ever been put on. Mr. Bell knows as much about directing as a fish knows about swimming—and that is everything. Each shot of this film is interesting, unique and to the point. There's everything in the picture that goes to make an hour's entertainment perfect. The stage shots are gorgeously colored, and alone are worth the price of admission, and if you think beauty isn't cheap out Hollywood way just take a look at those 'Pretty Ladies.' It has all the charm of the stage 'Follies' with the movies thrown in for good measure. Ann Pennington is in the picture, doing the dance that the tired business man pays $5.50 to see at the New Amsterdam."

"'Pretty Ladies,'" reports the New York Herald-Tribune, "is an intelligent, effective and frequently impressive screen drama which depicts with surprising authenticity a section of life which the average photoplay maligns absurdly. Monta Bell has something of the factulty for telling a story and for creating believable character through the camera that belongs to Von Stroheim. He has a touch of Lubitsch's gift for suitable and ironical detail and more than a trace of Chaplin's genius for significant indirection. All of these qualities joined to a shrewd use of artistic photographic composition go to make 'Pretty Ladies' an important picture."



ZaSu Pitts, dances off the Follies stage and into Tom Moore's kettle drum in the orchestra pit, in a scene in "Pretty Ladies," the Monta Bell production for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer program. With this "fall" the romance begins.

F. B. O. Sets Releases on Program for September

THE increased activity on the F. B. O. lot for the last three months, both of the F. B. O. production forces and the other units working there, resulted in an unusually heavy releasing schedule for the month of September. The distributing company boasts no less than 13 productions on its chart, eight of which are feature pictures and the remaining five short subjects.

The September program is headed by the first of the Tom Tyler western pictures, as yet untitled. Tom Tyler is the "surprise" western star, who, as recently announced by F. B. O. will make a series of eight action western pictures for the releasing company. Tom Tyler No. 1 will, appropriately, be distributed on September 1.

September 6 is set as the release date for "If Marriage Fails—?" an F. B. O. Gold Bond production, which recently played B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre, New York, to capacity audiences. The photoplay was written and produced by C. Gardner Sullivan, with Jacqueline Logan and Clive Brook sharing starring honors, and Belle Bennett, Jean Hersholt, Cissy Fitzgerald and Mathilde Comont in support. John Ince directed this gorgeously dressed and lavishly mounted society drama.

"High and Handsome," in which Maurice B. "Lefty" Flynn plays the role of a fighting cop, will be shown on September 13. The story is an adaptation by Rex Taylor of the magazine story by Gerald Beaumont. Supporting the former Yale luminary in his latest comedy drama are Kathleen Myers, Lydia Knott, Tom Kennedy, Ralph McCullough and Gene Perry. Harry Garson directed.

"Three Wise Crooks," Evelyn Brent's next vehicle, will be released on September 14. The story is by John Brownell and Fred Kennedy Myton and the continuity by E. Richard Schayer. "Three Wise Crooks," as its title would indicate, takes Miss Brent back into the crook characterizations for which she has become famous.

The eighth Texas Ranger production starring Bob Custer, as yet untitled, is set for September 20, while "Parisian Nights," the second Gold Bond production on the F. B. O. program, will be distributed on September 27. "Parisian Nights" began its meteoric career at the Capitol Theatre, New York, world's largest playhouse. It is a drama of the Paris underworld, and co-stars Elaine Hammerstein and Lou Tellegen with Renee Adoree, Gaston Glass, William J. Kelly and Boris Karloff in support. Al Santell contributed of his directorial genius, based on the story by Emil Forst.

"The Wall Street Whiz" gives Richard Talmadge an opportunity to jump through six reels of fast moving comedy drama, and is also set for September 27th release. The story and continuity come from the pen of James Bell Smith.

Dick is supported by Marceline Day, Lillian Langdon, Dan Mason, Carl Miller and Belle Bennett in his latest stunt drama. Jack Nelson directed.

Still another September 27 release is "Riding the Wind," the title of which will probably be changed, in which Fred Thomson and his wonder horse, Silver King, will dash through many whirling sequences.

The short subjects are headed by the first of the "Blue Ribbon" comedies which Joe Rock is producing for Standard Cinema Corporation and F. B. O., in which Chester Conklin will be featured. Jay A. Howe is directing the entire "Blue Ribbon" series. "Blue Robbon" No. 1 will be released September 6.

On September 13 "Amazing Mazie," No. 1 of F. B. O.'s new series, "The Adventures of Mazie" will be ready for exhibitors. "The Adventures of Mazie" come from the pen of Nell Martin, well known short story writer, and appeared as a series in Top Notch Magazine. Alberta Vaughn will be starred, with Larry Kent, F. B. O.'s new juvenile find; Al Cooke and Kit Guard in support of the star. Doris Anderson is adapting the stories for the screen, and Ralph Ceder has been selected to direct the entire series, which will consist of twelve two reel episodes.

The first of the new Standard Fat Men Comedies, which Joe Rock is also producing for Standard Cinema Corporation and F. B. O., featuring "Fat" Carr, "Tiny" Alexander and "Kewpie" Ross, the most famous fat men on the screen, whose total weight is over half a ton, will be released on September 20. James Davis is scheduled to direct the entire Fat Men series.

The same day will see the distribution of the first of the new Bray cartoons, a one reel novelty, which Walter Lantz is now preparing, and on September 27 the second episode of "The Adventures of Mazie" will be released.

RENEE ADOREE

The popular Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player is scheduled for excellent roles in "The Exquisite Sinner" and "The Big Parade," released by the Metro-Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

LARRY KENT

One of the purveyors of humor in F. B. O.'s star comedy cast of "The Adventures of Maisie."

Studio Work Completed on Five New Gotham Pictures

SAM SAX, producer of Gotham productions and president of Lumas Film Corp., wires from Los Angeles that camera and studio work on the fifth Gotham production, "The Part Time Wife" was completed this week and that the picture is now in the final process of cutting, editing and titling. Mr. Sax also advises that the negative and prints of the first of the new pictures featuring "Thunder," the Marvel Dog, and entitled "His Master's Voice," have been shipped East ready for forwarding to exchanges.

This puts the producer and distributor of the Gotham product in the enviable position of having completed and delivered about fifty per cent. of the scheduled program six weeks before the opening of the Fall season.

Mr. Sax is now arranging for the sixth Gotham production which is to be a new type of racing drama entitled "Racing Blood." Production work on this picture is scheduled to start at once, and the complete cast will be announced next week. Sam Sax will remain in California for several weeks to complete final details for the production of the remaining Six Gothams and also to prepare preliminary work for the big comedy special "McFadden's Row of Flats" which is scheduled to be one of the season's outstanding film farces.

The five Gotham productions already completed are "The Overland Limited," "The Police Patrol," "A Little Girl in a Big City," "His Master's Voice" and "The Part Time Wife."

Hurray! Here's another season announced which will be part of the activities of Greater Movie season. It's Al Christie's Greater Laugh Season. The comedians lined up for it (reading from left to right) are: Bobby Vernon, Walter Heirs, Jimmie Adams, Neal Burns, Billy Dooley, Jack Duffy, Eddie Baker and Bill Irving. The side-splittin g antics of these comedians will be distributed by Educational Pictures

"Wizard" and "American Pluck" Listed by Chadwick for August

CHADWICK PICTURES CORPORATION which has announced seventeen productions for the coming season, will release two, "The Wizard of Oz" and "American Pluck," in August.

"The Wizard of Oz," which is scheduled for release on August 1, is Larry Semon's first offering of the new season. Based on the well known book and play of the same name by L. Frank Baum, "The Wizard of Oz" is a spectacular, fantastic comedy.

In its several pre-release showings in New York, Los Angeles and other key cities, this production has been acclaimed by the critics. In addition to Semon, the cast includes several other players of stellar rank. Dorothy Dwan plays the leading role opposite the star, and Bryant Washburn essays the character of Prince Kynd. Others are Charles Murray, Virginia Pearson, Mary Carr, Josef Swickard, Otto Lederer, Oliver Hardy, "Fatty" Alexander and G. Howe Black.

"American Pluck," which will be released on August 15th, is the first of a series of six modern action romances, which George Walsh will make for Chadwick this year. "American Pluck," which was directed by Richard Stanton, is Ralph Spence's adaptation of "Blaze Derringer," the popular novel by Eugene P. Lyle, Jr. The cast of this picture includes, in addition to George Walsh, Wanda Hawley, Tom Wilson, Leo White, Frank Leigh, Wilfred North, Sydney De Grey and Dan Mason. The production, which is typical of the action stories for which Walsh is noted, is said to provide the star with many opportunities to display his unusual aptitude for athletic stunts.

Wesley Ruggles Signed to Direct for B. P. Schulberg

B. P. SCHULBERG announced the signing of Wesley Ruggles to direct the screen version of Percy Marks' novel, "The Plastic Age," which is one of the outstanding works of popular fiction to be filmed during the coming year. The story will be released as one of the Preferred Pictures on the new season's program. Plans for the making of this important property are quickly taking shape on the west coast where camera work will start shortly.

"The Plastic Age" is the record of the moral development of modern boy and the part that home influence and college life play in moulding his character. It caused sensational comment in every section of the country upon its publication by the Century Company last year, with the result that it lead the best-sellers list for ten consecutive months. More recently it has reached a tremendous audience through syndication to many newspapers such as the New York Evening Journal.

The cast for "The Plastic Age" is now being assembld by Mr. Schulberg. Donald Keith who made a signal hit as the juvenile in "The Boomerang," is to have the leading role of Hugh. Cynthia, by whom Mr. Marks has typified the modern girl, will be portrayed by Clara Bow. Other players will be chosen in the course of a few days.

According to releasing plans recently announced by J. G. Bachmann, "The Plastic Age" is scheduled for the first week in November.

Walsh Signs Contract

Following a pre-view of "The Wanderer" by Paramount officials, Raoul Walsh, who directed that photoplay, was signed to a long-term contract by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

New Stromberg Picture

Producer Will Do Race Track Special for Chadwick Pictures Corporation

Hunt Stromberg, who has recently completed the direction of "The Romance of an Actress" for Chadwick has contracted to direct "Winning The Futurity," another special production for the same company. The production will be released about December.

"Winning The Futurity" is a stage play with two generations of unbroken success behind it. The screen version will follow closely the original play, which is considered one of the classic dramas of the turf. The production will be elaborate in setting and treatment. Several of the race track scenes for this picture, which have already been photographed, were made during one of the biggest races of the season.

Broadway Books Columbia

The first of the Columbia 1925-26 productions, "The Danger Signal" considered to be a worthy successor to Columbia's previous season's hit, "The Midnight Express," opens this week at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre at Times Square, and will play for the entire week.

Jane Novak heads a large cast which includes Dorothy Revier, Robert Edeson, Gaston Glass, Robert Gordon, Lincoln Stedman, Mayme Kelso and Lee Shumway, under Earle C. Kenton's direction. Douglas Z. Doty wrote the story. Prints of this production were in every Columbia exchange early in June.

Fox-O. Henry Ready

Daniel Keefe, recently promoted to the directorial staff of the West Coast Studios of Fox Film Corporation, has completed camera work on his initial production, "Shoes," based on several pen sketches written by O. Henry. While the film is still in the first stages of assembly, reports coming from the cutting room indicate that "Danny" has hit the mark with his first film. "Shoes" is the first of a series of pictures based on the celebrated stories of O. Henry, and was directed under the supervision of George Marshall, who oversees also the Van Bibber, and the Helen and Warren stories.

Trackless Train Reaches Chicago on Way from New York to Los Angeles

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S Trackless Train, whose successful trip across the continent from New York to Los Angeles continues to arouse extraordinary interest, has reached Chicago and has been accorded an ovation by the Windy City equalling in enthusiasm the tumultuous receptions given it by New York, Philadelphia, Buffalo and Detroit.

The special's first stop in Chicago was in the exchange district in Wabash Avenue, where it disorganized the entire district. The train then proceeded down Wabash Avenue and turned into Madison, the heart of the loop district. At the corner of State Street and Madison, Chicago's busiest intersection, thousands upon thousands of people milled about the train, while newspaper men took photographs of the transportation surrounded by the throngs.

A tour was then made of the Loop, the special proving an enormous sensation. It was later parked in Hearst Square before the offices of the Chicago American and the Chicago Examiner. Multitudes congregated about the train here, and new photographs were made. A second tour of the Loop, made in the afternoon, was applauded by new thousands.

Since leaving Kalamazoo, Mich., the train's progress has been a triumphal tour. Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti, Pontiac, Flint, Saginaw, Lansing, Grand Rapids, Holland, Saugatuck, South Haven, Benton Harbor and St. Joseph were among the Michigan towns which turned out in full force to cheer the arrival of the special. In Grand Rapids it was inspected by the Mayor of the town, while Young Stribling, the fighter, was photographed on the observation platform.

Equally enthusiastic were the receptions accorded the train by the Indiana towns where the train made stops. South Bend, Elkhart, LaPorte, Michigan City and Gary staged public demonstrations in honor of its arrival. Exhibitors throughout the country are congratulating Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on the success of the Trackless Train, which continues to be characterized by the press as "a greater attraction than a circus parade."

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is sponsoring the train's historic trip across the continent from New York to Los Angeles in the interests of better roads and better motion pictures. 2.—The Trackless Train, photographed in front of Ford's offices in Detroit, Michigan. 3.—The Mayor and city officials of Toledo, Ohio, photographed aboard Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Trackless Train. The special is being met everywhere with enormous interest and enthusiasm. 4.—Toledo found the crowds so great that a special convoy of motorcycle cops was detailed to help the Trackless Train in its efforts to keep out of traffic jams. 5.—In Youngstown, Ohio, the train stopped in front of the Liberty Theatre, where an enormous crowd had awaited its arrival. The congestion was so great that mounted police had to straighten out Youngstown's traffic. 6.—In Kenton, Ohio, the crowds expressed great interest in the Trackless Train. The city officials, as in other cities, motored through the streets in the magnificent observation car. 7.—The ten special motorcycle policemen in Toledo had to clear a path for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer "special" in order to allow it to stop in front of the Valentine Theatre. 8.—This view of the Kenton, Ohio, crowds indicates the delay to traffic caused when the M.-G.-M. train entered the city to call on the Mayor.

M.-G.-M. Has Four Pictures For Greater Movie Season

AMONG the most important contributions to Greater Movie Season are Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's releases for the month of August.

Four epoch-making pictures have been lined up for release by this organization for the forthcoming 30-day motion picture carnival: Monta Bell's "Pretty Ladies," scheduled to reach exhibitors on the first of the month; Tod Browning's "The Unholy Three," to be released on the sixteenth; "Romola," starring Lillian Gish, scheduled for release on the twentieth, and Hobart Henley's "A Slave of Fashion," to be released on the twenty-third.

A preview showing of "Pretty Ladies" at the Capitol Theatre in New York has been met with enthusiastic acclaim by the Gotham critics, who have endorsed it as "a directorial triumph for Monta Bell" and "the kind of entertainment for which one ordinarily pays $5.50." This extraordinary tribute has been earned by the gay and swirling scenes reproducing the New York "Follies," in which Ann Pennington plays herself against a decorative background made up of what is said to be the most beautiful chorus ever assembled for a motion picture. Much of the film has been photographed in technicolor. Tom Moore, ZaSu Pitts and Lilyan Tashman have the featured roles in this film, while Norma Shearer, Conrad Nagel and George K. Arthur appear in bits. "Pretty Ladies" tells a soul-stirring and engrosing story of theatrical life in the metropolis.

Tod Browning's "The Unholy Three," featuring Lon Chaney and Mae Busch, is a mystery melodrama in which mystery and suspense and fear have been grotesquely interwoven with pathos, humor and romance, with the result that this picturization of the Tod Robbins story is one of the most profoundly fascinating stories of the underworld ever screened. A sinister ventriloquist, played by Chaney, a malignant dwarf played by Harry Earles and a giant played by Victor McLaglen comprise the evil trio suggested by the title, while Matt Moore has a sympathetic and honest role opposite Miss Busch in this gripping photoplay. Waldemar Young has adapted the story to the screen.

"Romola," the Inspiration production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer release, photographed abroad by Henry King, is one of the most movingly beautiful screen presentations ever made, and presents Lillian Gish, foremost actress of the screen, supported by a perfect cast of players which includes Dorothy Gish, who is featured, and Ronald Colman. This artistic triumph has played throughout the season at George M. Cohan's Theatre on Broadway at advanced prices. "Romola" is an elaborate picturiztion of the George Eliot classic.

Norma Shearer is featured opposite Lew Cody in "A Slave of Fashion," a Samuel Shipman story directed by Hobart Henley from the screen adaptation made by Bess Meredyth. William Haines, Mary Carr, James Corrigan, Vivia Ogden, Miss Dupont, Estelle Clark and Sidney Bracy comprise the unusually strong cast of this swiftly-moving and thoroughly modern story. Miss Shearer, whose meteoric rise to stardom has been a sensational feature of recent screen history, has made the most of her many opportunities in this eagerly awaited production. A number of elaborate scenes in technicolor are a feature of the film.

Goes to Cecil B. DeMille

I. S. Liner to Be Unit Manager for Various Companies

The addition of I. S. Liner to the business staff of the De Mille Studio is announced by General Manager Fred Kley.

Liner goes to De Mille with a reputation built up largely by his expert handling of the colossal task of managing the location company in the production of "The Ten Commandments." Thousands of men, women and children, and hundreds of animals were encamped on this location, and Liner was in complete charge of the entire company.

In his new position Liner will act as unit manager for various production companies, his first work being scheduled in handling the business details of "The Wedding Song," Leatrice Joy's second starring vehicle.

"Kivalina of the Ice Lands" Wins High Praise from Metropolitan Reviewers

"KIVALINA OF THE ICE LANDS," Earl Rossman's romance of the Arctic regions, which Pathe will release on August 9th, received superlative praise from the New York newspaper critics during its week's showing at the Mark Strand on Broadway.

"As an antidote to the sultry weather, 'Kivalina of the Ice Lands,'" the principal attraction at the Mark Strand this week, undoubtedly served a purpose yesterday," declared Mordaunt Hall of the New York Times, "as for more than an hour one felt all the cooler for centering one's attention upon a frozen background with scenes of the 'restless Arctic Ocean, silenced by the grip of the deadly winter.' One of the most stirring chapters is where Aguvaluk is caught in a terrific blizzard, and to save himself he has to construct an igloo in great haste. There is a deal to be learned from this picture, and much credit is due Mr. Rossman for his courage and energy in putting forth such a production."

"'Kivalina of the Ice Lands' is a distinct screen achievement," enthused George Gerhard of the Evening World. "It is one of the most interesting and informative pictures seen on Broadway in months, and, coming as it does so soon after the return of Amundsen, it is bound to exert a tremendous appeal wherever it is shown. Earl Rossman, big game hunter and explorer, is responsible for this excellent effort. He spent two long years with the Eskimos at the northermost tip of the North American Continent, and has turned out a strikingly vivid picture of the manner in which these natives wrest a precarious living from a storm-tossed world. The story is profoundly dramatic. Interwoven through it is a pretty little Arctic romance, with untrained Eskimos portraying all the characters, and an appealing thing it is, too. Breath-taking Arctic scenery is just crammed into every scene of the picture and its contents will prove a boon to students of Eskimo life. No wonder that every Boy Scout in New York City has been urged to see it—he certainly will learn a lot about scoutcraft by so doing. Toward the end there is a colored picture of the Aurora Borealis. It is awe-inspiring."

"No more wonderful picture of the Arctic has ever been filmed, not excepting 'Ranook of the North,'" declared Regina Cannon of the Evening Graphic. "Probably the most wonderful scenes of the Arctic region ever photographed are displayed. 'Kivalina of the Ice Lands' is not only an entertaining picture but an educational one. You cannot afford to miss it."

"Every now and then a human interest cinema document of much beauty and interest reaches the silversheet," stated Dorothy Herzog of the Daily Mirror. "The Mark Strand offers such a production this week in Earl Rossman's 'Kivalina of the Ice Lands.' The film, which required two years to shoot, is rich with gorgeous photography, thrilling reindeer scenes, and entertaining human touches. Of particular interest is the first picturization of the Aurora Borealis in natural colors. The picture opens and closes with thse shots, showing magnificent beams of colors shooting through the sky forming a kaleidoscopic maze of melancholy beauty. You'll revel in this magnificent adventure romance of the Arctic regions, if films of this nature intrigue you at all."

"Here is one of the most interesting and unusual films to grace Broadway in a cinema season," declared the Daily News' critic. "The cast is capable and interesting to behold. And the colored sequences showing the Aurora Borealis—this must positively not be forgotten —are gorgeous beyond words. Everybody interested at all, in anything having to do with people whose lives we little know, will be wholly appreciative of this delightful production. Don't let it get by without seeing it."

Buck Jones and Elinor Fair in "Gold and the Girl," a William Fox special.

"'Kivalina of the Ice Lands' is a wholly admirable offering," declared the Sun's critic. "Its chilling scenes are excellent antidotes for summer weather. In its reels one may see reindeer round-ups, caribou hunts, seal hunts and whale hunts. The film depicts the barren, frozen life the Eskimos lead and is a picturesque successor to 'Nanook of the North.' It is a wholesome diet for those who are fed up with the trivial stuff of the films. It is real."

"One of the most fascinating of all the screen novelties is on view at the Strand this week," said the Morning World reviewer. 'Kivalina of the Ice Lands' presents a play by Eskimos, the entire action of the drama taking place in the bleak and merciless coldness of the Arctic. If for no other reason than that it brings to every man's home town a reproduction in faithful pictures of a land few of us will ever see, it is a valuable and interesting document. But 'Kivalina' is much more than this. The scenes in full color of the Aurora Borealis are magnificent. In the race of Kivalina's sweetheart over the expanses of ice and snow in which he sets out to win her hand by his resourcefulness and courage, beset by fearful storms and ravaging of hunger and desolation, there is drama such as few Hollywood studios are capable of grinding out."

"One of the most absorbing dramas that Broadway has seen for many weeks. For two years Earl Rossman lived in the Arctic regions, studying the ways of its people," stated the New York American critic. "Slowly he gathered mtaerial for his film. Actors he selected from among the villagers. They knew nothing of acting, they had never heard of movies, but they were willing to continue their usual mode of living while the handle of the strange black box continued to turn. And their usual mode of living contains enough thrills for twenty pictures."

"I only regret that I have but one hat to take off to Earl Rossman, who produced 'Kivalina of the Ice Lands,'" stated Dorothy Day in the Morning Telegraph. "The scenery is, to say the least, awe-inspiring. It is a truly gorgeous picture, refreshing and clean, and, despite all lack of 'sex appeal,' it ought to appeal to almost everyone."

Harry Is a Mean Man

That Villain, Semels, in Pathe's "Play Ball," Has a Record

Harry Semels, screen villain, plays one of the "meanest parts of his career as a conspirator in pursuit of helpless heroines in the new Patheserial "Play Ball." John J. McGraw, manager of the Giants, wrote this story which Frank Leon Smith adapted for the screen. Allene Ray is the star. In addition to his many Pathe pictures, Semels has been seen in D. W. Griffith's "America" and with Gloria Swanson in "Wages of Virtue." Before entering pictures, he appeared in musical comedies with Fritz Scheff, Rock and Fulton, Hattie Williams and Sam Bernard, and in dramas with Ellen Terry and Mrs. Leslie Carter.

Roach in Leading Comedy Role

Bert Roach, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player who has ranked as one of the screen's foremost comedians since his sensationally funny work in Rupert Hughes' "Excuse Me," has been given the leading comedy role in "Dance Madness." Production on this original screen story by S. J. Kaufman under the direction of Irving Cummings is to begin next week at the Culver City studios. Aileen Pringle and Lew Cody appear in the featured roles.

MacLean's First for F. P.-L.

Douglas MacLean's first comedy for Paramount will be a picturization of George M. Cohan's great stage success, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," it was announced. The director and the cast for "Seven Keys to Baldpate" will be selected immediately and production will start at once.

Harold Lloyd at Work

Popular Comedian Starts on His First Production for Paramount

"Who's Who in America" will be well represented in the background of Harold Lloyd's first comedy for Paramount distribution, for some of the more important scenes will be shot on the grounds of the Hotel Ambassador, and other fashionable places around Los Angeles and Beverly Hills. The Lloyd company is now working on the grounds of the Ambassador, with the famous natatorium of the big hotel furnishing the "setting" for a number of comedy scenes. With the details of his new story now virtually worked out, Lloyd expects to move ahead rapidly in his production schedule, and if everything continues smoothly he expects to complete his first Paramount by December.

Present plans of the Lloyd corporation call for the completion of two pictures by next May, in order to give Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd an opportunity to take a long planned trip to England and the continent.

Jobyna Ralston, will again be seen opposite the bespectacled funster in his current production.

The next Lloyd story is a tale of a carefree, rich boy, who drifts into the slums of a big city, becomes interested in missionary activities; working out the salvation of souls.

Morgan Signed by Paramount

Byron Morgan was signed to a long-term contract by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. All of the literary product of the popular author of romantic, fast-moving stories about dashing young American men and lovely girls will be used by Paramount exclusively for a period of years.

Praises Music Cue Sheets

Isadore Schwiller, leader of the orchestra at the Rialto Theatre, London, England, also in charge of musical settings for the Universal Film Corporation's productions in Great Britain, recently paid a pisit to M. J. Mintz, president and general manager of the Cameo Music Service Corporation to voice his praise of the Thematic Music Cue Sheet. The English musician related many instances where he was compelled to give important premiere showings on short notice, and in every case the aid given him by the Thematic Music Cue Sheet was considerable.

"Fighting Youth" Booking Fast

"Fighting Youth," first of the Perfection releases featuring Pauline Garon with William Fairbanks under Reeves Eason's direction, has been the reason for the solid booking of the entire Perfection series of six 1925-26 pictures, exchangemen from all over the country report. This picture is a rapid-action story of a two-fisted society sportsman, and it teems with thrilling episodes of proven audience appeal.

Truart Official on Tour

John N. Weber, assistant general manager of the Tiffany-Truart Productions left for Chicago where he will consult with Jerry Abrams, district manager of the Renown Pictures, Inc. in establishing a new Renown branch office in Indianapolis.

After an office has been located in that city, Mr. Weber will make a trip through the Middle West visiting the various Tiffany-Truart Franchise Holders.

"They're Off!"

Eighteen Pupils Begin Studies in Screen Acting at Paramount's Long Island City Studios—Jesse L. Lasky Advises Enthusiasts

A REVOLUTIONARY step in the history of motion picture making began on Tuesday, July 21, with the formal opening of the Paramount Picture School, Inc., when eighteen of the finest screen possibilities selected from 30,000 applicants representing all sections of the United States assembled in the Astoria, Long Island City, studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, where classes will be held.

Of those chosen for the first term of the school, which will last for six months, nine are young women between the ages of six-men, between eighteen and thirty.

First announcement of the winners in the most comprehensive search for beauty, personality and acting talent ever conducted in America, follows:

Josephine Dunn, Robert Andrews, Greg Blackton, Charles Brokaw, Claud Buchanan, Walter J. Goss, John Luden, Ethelda Kenvin and Mona Palma of New York City; Lorraine Eason, Wilbur Dillon, and Laverne Lindsay of Hollywood, Cal.; Irving Hartley of Culver City, Cal.; Marian Ivy Harris of Atlanta, Ga.; Harriett Krauth of Medford Hillside, Mass.; Dorothy Nourse of Roxbury, Mass.; Thelma Todd of Lawrence, Mass., and Charles E. Rogers of Olatha, Kan.

Appropriate exercises launched the new school, which it is hoped will supply some of the future stars of the cinema. Adresses were made by the Rev. Dr. John Haynes Holmes and Adolph Zukor, President of Famous Players.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president in charge of production, who is in Hollywood, Cal., prepared an address, which was read. In part, Mr. Lasky said:

"On this, the opening day of the first term of the Paramount School, it is a matter of profound regret to me that I am unable to be present and to extend my personal greetings to the faculty and students. However, I want to assure every one of you that I am with you in spirit, and I shall watch your progress with an interest that springs from a great personal enthusiasm for the school, its purposes and accomplishments.

"The Paramount Picture School is a project that is very close to my heart, as you will appreciate when I recount the reasons back of its formation and the hopes we have founded on its ultimate success. For you must know that the School was inspired by conditions which had their germ back in the days when the motion picture, as we know it today, first came into existence.

"When I first interested myself in motion pictures, more than a decade ago, it was only the man of great vision and great courage who could discern in the motion picture infant of that day the great screen giant of today.

"Up to that time the players in motion pictures, save for a few brilliant exceptions, were unknown. They had had little or no experience on the speaking stage; and their efforts toward expression on the screen were not taken seriously, and, for the most part, were obscured in anonymity. At about that time, some of us conceived the idea of bringing well known stage performers to the screen.

"You see, we looked up to the stage as the screen's big brother—and rightly so, in those days. But how the younger brother has grown in these few crowded years!

"This move was as successful as it was revolutionary. Soon the motion picture, shouting the names of well-known stage stars and famous stage plays, made itself heard throughout the land. The screen took on new dignity; it was lifted by the force of higher aspiration and it grew swiftly in its power to entertain the great American public with great plays enacted by famous artists.

"But as it grew, the motion picture began to prove to its own leaders that it was not the little brother of the sage. It was an entity of its own, with its own problems and its own technique, both of writing and acting. And while the artists from the stage had been of great help in bringing public dignity and favor to the motion picture art, it was upon the men and women who had grown up in the studios that the screen chiefly depended.

BETTY BRONSON
Featured with Ricardo Cortez in Paramount's "Not So Long Ago."

"Amid all the clamor of the motion picture's early industrial growth, they had stuck to their tasks in the studio, and slowly, after many stumblings and much groping in the dark, they had evolved the art of acting before the motion picture camera—an art as distinctive from stage acting as the stage play, presented within three walls, is as distinctive from the photoplay with the whole world as its backdrop.

"All honor to this splendid company of men and women players of the screen; they found the motion picture a toy and made it an art that today shapes the thought of nations and brings happiness and education into the lives of all mankind.

"But only a few years ago the feature picture as we know it now was a rarity—or, at best, was few in numbers. Today, however, there are nearly 600 motion pictures of feature length produced each year in the United States alone.

"This swift development of the motion picture's popularity long ago brought about a serious situation. The producers, despite the march of an army of aspiring young actors on Hollywood, found themselves facing a scarcity of good actors and actresses, men and women who combined the skill of their craft with that elusive personality that endears the great stars to the public. All the producers realized the problem, but the search for new personalities was for the most part haphazard and ineffectual.

"Just as it was Paramount that years ago brought the stars of the stage to the screen and lifted the motion picture out of the bog of mediocrity, so it is Paramount today that is trying to solve this problem. About a year ago we conceived the idea of forming a school wherein would be trained those young men and women who gave promise of being successful on the screen. All over this vast land of ours thousands of boys and girls have left their homes and stormed the studios of Hollywood. There in the rush of picture making, nobody could find the time from his studio work to hear them, judge them and give them an opportunity. Out of the countless hundreds, only a few, through lucky opportunity, found their way through that camel's eye that is the door to screen success. But in that army of the unsuccessful surely there must have been some of the very people that the studios were begging for.

"Therefore, the Paramount School, while performing the selfish function of providing additional players for the screen, also opens the door to the young men and women of America who seek their fame and fortune in the motion picture.

"And you are the first to enter that door! Before you stretches a golden avenue of opportunity. At the end of that avenue dwells Success, and in its home some of you will find wealth and fame and, above all, the opportunity to bring high adventure and happiness to millions throughout the world. Truly yours is a glorious heritage.

"But it is a heritage that must be won by work, hard, unremitting work—work of body, work of mind and work of soul. Never forget that. This is an opportunity that millions have sought. Be sure you measure up to your great chance.

"I shall not speak of your studies. The courses will be outlined to you by others. I merely wish to remind you that these courses have been chosen out of our long experience as those most essential to a screen player and that they will be given by men and women who stand at the top of their various lines of endeavor. Whether you ever are great stars or not, you will be better men and women, better citizens, better equipped to live, for having studied them.

"But I do want to talk to you of your responsibility. I speak from fifteen years' experience as the active producing executive of the biggest studio in the world. I have seen players come and go. I have seen extra girls rise to the dizziest heights of stardom, and I have seen the brightest stars lose their luster and pass into obscurity. Therefore, my dear young ladies and gentlemen, at the risk of being a bore, for the moment I am going to be fatherly and give you some advice about the responsibility which the screen places on your shoulders. I am going to show you the other side of that great shining light which we call public favor.

"The public is lavish to its favorites. Wealth, fame and happiness are showered upon the lucky mortals who win its smile. But while it

Hunt Stromberg Completes Three Feature Productions

THAT the Hunt Stromberg organization is working at top speed on the Producers Distributing Corporation releases is indicated by the official report that three productions were fully completed this week and the negatives with sample prints are now on the way east.

The productions include "The Bad Lands," the last picture in the current series of Harry Carey westerners, and "The Prairie Pirate," the first Carey in the new series for the 1925-26 season, and "Off the Highway," a Hunt Stromberg special production with an all star cast.

"Off the Highway" is the production originally scheduled to be produced by Thos. H. Ince and which under Stromberg's supervision was elaborated to a point where an increased exhibition value was made necessary. But under a recent ruling by Producers Distributing all exhibitors who signed contracts for this subject as an Ince production will be given the option of showing the picture at the original booking price or canceling.

"The Prairie Pirate," the first picture in the new Harry Carey series is an adaptation of W. C. Tuttle's story "The Yellow Seal," in which Stromberg will again present Trilby Clark as the star's leading lady. Edmund Mortimer directed with George Benoit in charge of the picturesque camera work.

Balanced Cast Selected For "The Wedding Song"

CASTING of Leatrice Joy's second starring vehicle, "The Wedding Song," which will be released through Producers Distributing Corporation was practically completed this week with the selection of Robert Ames to play opposite the star, Louis Natheaux for the heavy, and Ethel Wales and Rosa Rudami for featured roles.

Rosa Rudami is the olive skinned Sicilian beauty whom De Mille signed after noting her work in several foreign productions. In "The Wedding Song" she will make her debut in American pictures.

The selection of Ethel Wales, whose work in "The Covered Wagon" won nation-wide recognition, lends particular strength to the cast. In her four years of screen effort she has achieved unusual success in the portrayal of character roles.

Robert Ames is already established as one of the foremost leading men and Louis Natheaux has come rapidly to the front as a suave heavy in several of De Mille's previous pictures.

Clara Bow and Donald Keith, B. P. Schulberg stars, in "Free to Love."

Buck Black plays the role of "Buck" in "The Bad Lands," Hunt Stromberg's current Harry Carey feature for Producers Distributing Corporation.

Picture in Service Again

"The Sea Hawk" Released Again For First Runs in September

"The Sea Hawk," which First National took out of service at the end of May, for three months, has been released again for first run showings beginning Sept. 1.

The first of the new first run showings has been contracted for by Thomas Spry, branch manager in Boston, for the week of September 6th, at the Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I.

"The Sea Hawk" had a first run of two weeks to enormous business in Providence last season. Many other new first run bookings on this special have been made, but the Providence showing is the earliest in date. Exhibitor interest in "The Sea Hawk" remains unabated and E. A. Eschmann of the First National organization reports that it will receive a very large number of return first runs in the important key city points.

"The Wedding Song"

The famous "Ship's Graveyard" of San Francisco, scene of many Jack London tales, will form the background for initial scenes of Leatrice Joy's second starring vehicle, "The Wedding Song," which starts next week. Pearls, crooks, romance, southern moons—all these are in this number by Ethel Watts Mumford. Alan Hale will direct the production under the supervision of Cecil B. De Mille. Robert Ames, Rosa Rudami, Clarence Burton, Gertrude Claire and Ethel Wales are in the cast. It will be a Producers Distributing Corp. release.

Cowboys and Cowgirls Here

The Wild West Show and Rodeo on the athletic field at Luna Park, Coney Island, has several noted rodeo contestants, including "Bridle Bill" Selman, probably the most noted cowboy and roper in the country, who has lately been featured in the "movies." Bill Gorman, a noted cowboy, who has lately appeared in several Paramount pictures, has just joined the rodeo, as has Miss Rose Herlin, a dainty cowgirl, who is well known to motion picture fans. At the close of the Coney Island season, the motion picture element at Luna Park will return to Hollywood.

Smashing Campaign on Wm. Fox Special, "The Iron Horse," at Keith's Cleveland

JOHN R. ROYAL, manager of Keith's Palace, Cleveland, inaugurated the new policy of that theatre, and incidentally opened the Greater Movie Season in Ohio with a smashing publicity and advertising campaign on the William Fox production, "The Iron Horse." The fact that on the opening day many thousands were unable to secure admission justified his campaign and repaid him for his efforts.

An outline of Royal's campaign, which he secured from the press book, follows:

Starting two weeks in advance, he opened his newspaper campaign by runnning a half-inch slug, scattered over different pages of the local papers, reading "The Iron Horse Is Coming." Then on Sunday he ran a display "ad" 5 inch, 2 col. reading "Thundering Into Cleveland Next Sunday." This was illustrated with a line cut from the press book.

This ad was alternated with others, all taken from the campaign book, and with a series of bulletins giving facts about "The Iron Horse," opinions of the New York reviewers, and other information regarding the making and presentation of the picture.

On Saturday, the day previous to the opening, Royal ran a large display "ad" running the depth of the page by 2 columns in width, announcing the opening on the following day.

On the opening day, Sunday, he used the same number of lines, but spread it into 4 col. by 11 inches, heading the "ad" with the announcement, "Never Before A Success Like This," following this up on Monday with another 20 inches by 2 col. smash, reading "It Crashed Through To Success Yesterday."

In addition to this he was compelled to run another "ad" on Monday, an apology to those who were turned away on the opening day.

Commencing on Tuesday, the third day of the engagement, a series of advertisements appeared in the dailes, each day quoting a prominent Clevelander's opinion and praise of the production.

Many Columns of Publicity

Using the material contained in the campaign book furnished by the William Fox Exchange, he was able to secure many columns of advance publicity in the Cleveland dailies. Because of the unusual appeal of the subject, and the nation wide interest in the picture itself, "The Iron Horse" was given much more space than is usually allotted to advance readers.

In addtiion to this, the Cleveland News ran a front page special on Sunday, the opening day, devoting half the page to a colored pictorial layout, composed of stills from the picture and original drawings in cartoon form. Needless to say this added to the already great interest in the picture.

The reviewers were quite fulsome in their praises of The Iron Horse as the follow excerpts from their reviews testify: "'The Iron Horse' is a good story of the early west, and is recommended."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"About everything you could ask for is in 'The Iron Horse.' It moves faster and more interestingly than the 'Covered Wagon.'"—Cleveland Press.

"A wonderful piece of screen engineering—about the greatest mile and three-quarters of celluloid that has passed this way in a long while."—Cleveland News.

Thorough Exploitation Campaign

No exploitation angle was overlooked in bringing "The Iron Horse" to the attention of the theatre goers of Cleveland, with the result that the message of the picture was carried to them in a most effective and thorough manner. There were many store window tie-ups which because of their dignity and appeal were placed in high class stores, that never before had permitted their windows to be used for this purpose. This was accomplished by using the framed enlargements in quite a few cigar stores and drug stores.

The leading book stores made special displays in their windows of the novelization of the "The Iron Horse." In these displays were included a generous assortment of black and white stills and some framed enlargements of scenes from the photoplay.

All of the window displays included a good sized card bearing the name of the theatre and the play date.

Train in Lobby

From the passenger office of the Erie Railroad, Royal secured the loan of a miniature practical working model of a complete railroad train, including the engine and tender. This was enclosed in a large glass show case which was placed in the lobby of the theatre a week before the picture opened and remained there throughout the entire run. It was illuminated by small electric lights placed inside the cars.

Novel Street Ballyhoo

A street ballyhoo which attracted attention was a large float, the sides of which were masked with grass mats and bore banners reading "This Week, B. F. Keith's Palace, 'The Iron Horse'". The front end of the float carried a life sized papier mache horse, painted with bronze to resemble iron. The rear end held a trappers' hut or log cabin, on the outside walls of this cabin were other banners announcing the engagement. Spotlights were placed on the float so as to play on the horse and the cabin as it was driven through the principal streets at night.

Public Library Helps

The Cleveland Public Library placed in the main entrance an attractive display of the novelized version together with an attractively lettered card recommending "The Iron Horse" to its readers. It also distributed ten thousand book marks advertising "The Iron Horse" engagement at Keith's Palace and a list of books dealing with that particular period of American History.

Railroads and Unions Also Assist

In all places where their employees could see them such as official bulletin boards, stations, shops, rest room and waiting rooms the railroads posted five hundred one sheets reading smiles, it also demands the strictest obedience to its laws; and disobedience brings punishment that is as swift as it is terrible.

"Never for one moment forget this responsibility. If you win great material success in your new profession beware of the temptations which follow in the wake of your victory. Constant pitfalls lurk in the path of the successful, no matter what profession they adopt. They are no more numerous in motion pictures than in any other line of endeavor, and character and sensible, wholesome living will make you prevail against them here as well as elsewhere. But when you are a motion picture player you are a public character, and your actions and your conduct are a matter of public concern. You must govern yourselves accordingly, and let nothing you do bring the slightest smirch upon the profession which today is accepting you as one of its members.

"Illusions? Why, of course! But when you are older you will know that there is nothing more precious in life than illusions—not even life itself.

"So, in your own life, in your own conduct, do nothing that will affront our most prized dreams. Be honorable, be loyal to your teachers, loyal to your company, loyal to the best in your profession and, above all, be loyal to that great multitude of your friends, the public."

Tom Terriss, the director, who will be the principal of the school, also spoke.

Following a studio luncheon, a faculty reception was held.

In addition to Mr. Terriss, the faculty will consist of George Currie, pantomime; H. M. K. Smith, modern attire; Hal Clarendon, period costume and make-up; Morgia Lytton, period costumes; Virginia Terhune Van de Water, etiquette; John G. Toomey, physical training; Lee Tover, photographer, and Randolph Rogers, business manager.

Members of the school will be taught everything that a finished motion picture actor needs to know. All those displaying suitable ability will be offered contracts to appear in Paramount pictures. These contracts will be for one year but will carry an option for five more years. All who complete the course satisfactorily, however, will be given a certificate by Mr. Lasky which will serve as a recommendation for work with other movie companies.

Attractive Theatre Front

The marquee and front of the theatre were tastefully decorated with banners. At each side of the entrance were placed railroad cross tree warnings reading "STOP, LOOK AND LISTEN," together with several framed enlargements. Inside the lobby there was a display of black and white stills, colored 11 x 14 photos and one sheet posters properly framed.

"Seven Days" to Inaugurate "Greater Laughter Season"

COINCIDENT with the industry's Greater Movie Season drive, the Christie producing forces are instituting an independent movement to create a "Greater Laughter Season" to begin with their Greater Movie Season contribution, "Seven Days."

Director Scott Sidney has finished camera work on the Mary Roberts Rinehart-Avery Hopwood stage success "Seven Days" and Al. Christie's entire force of editors and cutters are now making every effort to whip this new feature into form for special preview showing at the beginning of Greater Movie Season.

"As far as our organziation is concerned," sail Al. Christie, "we are going to try to make Greater Movie Season mean "Greater Laughter Season" with feature comedies of hilarious entertainment. That is why we selected "Seven Days" for the first feature length comedy to be released during "Greater Movie Season."

On the stage it was a wonderful laughing hit, confirming the success of its original version in Mary Roberts Rinehart's book under the title "When A Man Marries." With this material to start with, Scott Sidney has directed another big feature that fully upholds the reputation he made in directing "Charley's Aunt."

The Christie staff is publicly previewing "Seven Days" while the cutting and editing is being done, eliminating or amplifying scenes according to actual audience reactions. The previews are put on unannounced before widely varying types of audiences so that the best material can be kept and the least laughable sequences cut down or eliminated. Quite a sizeable jury sits every night while this important work is being done including Al. Christie, Scott Sidney and his assistant, James Clemens; Frank Roland Conklin, the continuity writer; Norman McLeod, gag man, and F. McGrew Willis, who is writing the titles.

Lillian Rich heads the cast of "Seven Days," with Creighton Hale, Lilyan Tashman, Eddie Gribbon, Mabel Julienne Scott, Hal Cooley, Tom Wilson, Rosa Gore, Charles Clary and William Austin. "Seven Days" is a situation farce comedy and those who saw the stage play will remember that it is based on the idea of several adopted couples, a fussy old maid aunt, a burglar, a policeman and others being marooned in a home for seven days because of a smallpox scare. The resulting situations lend themselves excellently to farcical treatment and prolonged laughs.

"Seven Days" will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation; probably in seven reels.

"Pony Express" Cast Complete; Cruze Special for Paramount

A NOTABLE cast has been assembled for James Cruze's forthcoming big special, 'The Pony Express," for Paramount.

Betty Compson has been selected to play the leading feminine role, Molly Jones, a girl of the pioneer life of Julesburg, Colorado, in 1860.

Ricardo Cortez will appear as Jack Weston, a pony express rider and a strong supporter of the Union cause in California in the dark days just preceding the Civil War.

Ernest Torrence, the beloved guide of "The Covered Wagon," also appears in "The Pony Express," as "Ascension Jones," a blacksmith and religious fanatic plying his trade on the frontier.

Wallace Beery's part in "The Pony Express" is "Rhode Island Red," a lovable vagabond and soldier of fortune, stranded in California but hopeful always of getting back to his native state of Rhode Island.

George Bancroft, veteran character actor, is taking the villain part, Jack Slade, Superintendent of the Overland Stage in Julesburg.

An interesting characterization is that of the half-breed Indian, Charlie Brent, played by Frank Lackteen, John Fox, Jr., who has grown considerably since he played the part of the tobacco chewing boy in "The Covered Wagon," also has an important role.

Al Hart is playing Senator Glen, William Turner, the part of William Russell, and Rose Tepley is the aunt.

Walter Woods wrote the screen play from the story by himself and Henry James Forman

Sign With William Fox

Walter McGrail and Lou Tellegen, celebrated actors of stage and screen, have just signed long term contracts to appear exclusively in Fox Film Corporation motion pictures. Announcement that the two versatile Thespians had been engaged by Fox followed their successful portrayal of villain roles in "Havoc" and "East Lynne," two Fox supreme attractions to be presented during the coming season.

To Play Gen. Custer

Dustin Farnum, recently signed to play in "On the Frontier," Universal's big western spectacle, will impersonate the character of General George A. Custer, one of the most romantic figures in American history. In addition to General Custer and Sitting Bull, other historic figures will appear.

"WE DIDN'T DO IT!"

So when "Little Annie Rooney" pleads with the sergeant in the police station, her "gang" get off free. This is a scene in "Little Annie Rooney," starring Mary Pickford, a United Artists release.

Scenes in the current "Our Gang" comedy, "Boys Will Be Boys," released by Pathe, in which the famous kiddies create their own "Coney Island" effect.

Carl Laemmle Felicitated on Fine Quality of "Home Maker"

"THE HOME MAKER," a King Baggot-Universal Jewel Production, adapted from Dorothy Canfield's popular novel, with Alice Joyce and Clive Brook in the featured roles, has arrived in the East and is acclaimed by Universal officials one of the best all around pictures ever produced. It is a Second White List production and will reach the screen late in the Fall.

The most striking reports on this picture come from T. F. McCoy, manager of the Florence Theatre, Pasadena, Cal., where a pre-view showing of the production recently was held, and from Dr. C. V. Cowan, of the Board of Review of Pasadena.

In forwarding Dr. Cowan's report to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal organization, McCoy wrote as follows:

"I am enclosing a letter I received from the Board of Review of the City of Pasadena, after the president of this board witnessed the pre-view of King Baggot's latest picture, 'The Home Maker.' The letter speaks a language that you can understand, and a lot of other producers will learn to understand sooner or later. And that is this—from now on pictures must come to the public clean and devoid of sex appeal and salaciousness.

"I believe Universal stands in a class by itself.

"You are in a position to take the lead in this industry for you have the right idea about what is right."

Dr. Cowan's letter, referred to by McCoy, was as follows: "It was an occasion of great delight for our board to be in attendance at your preview of 'The Home Maker' on Thursday night and note with what interest and applause our people received that good and entertaining 'home play.'

"The heroic sacrifice therein displayed on the part of the parents, and ready response of the children to kind treatment, could not help but have a lasting impression upon both parents and children present.

"If it be true that the home is the foundation of our government, then let us have done with so many pictures that display the unnatural sexual life, and marriage and divorce scenes."

Cincinnati First Run Theatres Continue To Feature the Pathe Two-Reel Comedies

Pathe two-reel comedies are the vogue with Cincinnati first run theatres. Following two successful, consecutive weeks with two-reel comedies, the B. F. Keith, Strand, Family and Palace Theatres have signed up with the local Pathe exchange for more of this popular screen entertainment to be played during three additional consecutive weeks. These bookings follow immediately after the first two weeks' showings making a total of five consecutive weeks of big representation of Pathe two-reel comedies in this Ohio city.

The week of July 12th, the bookings were:

Strand Theatre: "Our Congressman," a Will Rogers comedy made by Hal Roach; Family Theatre: "Dog Days," an "Our Gang" fun-film; B. F. Keith's Theatre: "Giddap," a Mack Sennett comedy with Billy Bevan among the fun-makers; Palace Theatre: "Wild Papa," a "Spat Family" two-reeler from the Hal Roach Studios.

The week of July 19th, the bookings are:

Strand Theatre: "The Big Town," an "Our Gang" fun-fest; Family Theatre: "Water Wagons," a Mack Sennett film with Billy Bevan and Madeline Hurlock in the cast; B. F. Keith's Theatre: "Are Blond Men Bashful?" a Hal Roach comedy with Arthur Stone; Palace Theatre: "The Reel Virginian," a Mack Sennett film with Ben Turpin.

The week of July 26th, the bookings are:

Strand Theatre: "Horace Greely, Jr." a Harry Langdon comedy produced by Principal Pictures; Family Theatre: "The Love Bug," an "Our Gang" comedy; Palace Theatre: "Daddy Goes A' Grunting," a Hal Roach comedy with Glenn Tryon.

Big One for Denny

"Skinner's Dress Suit," Purchased by Universal as Starring Vehicle for Comedian

What is expected to be the greatest Reginald Denny picture ever made was forecast this week by officials of the Universal Pictures Corporation when it was announced at the Universal Home Office, 730 Fifth Avenue, that screen rights have been obtained for the world famed Henry Irving Dodge novel, "Skinner's Dress Suit."

"Skinner's Dress Suit" is an amusing story based on the theme that clothes make the man, and is regarded as an exceptionally suitable vehicle for the Universal star.

When negotiations were first instituted by Universal looking towards the purchase of this story, it was intended to produce it as a Jewel feature for the Third White List, to be released during the 1926-1927 season. Since the purchase, it has been decided to put it into immediate production, so that it will be ready for release during the coming season, 1925-1926, as a part of the Second White List.

"Winner Group" Goes Big

First National Productions Are Contracted for Quickly by Exhibitors

First National's Winner Group of pictures for the coming year is living up to its name; it has won the body of exhibitors on the box-office performance of First National pictures in the past and on the line-up of story material, players and directors.

Out of 255 key city points of 25,000 population and over, in the United States and Canada, the Winner Group of releases has already been sold to a representative first run theatre in 212 of the cities.

In the cities of 5,000 to 25,000 population in the United States and Canada, contracts have been closed for a first run showing of the Winner Group in 629 out of the 1,231 cities with that range in population. This gives a percentage of sales of 51.08 i ntowns under 25,000.

Mary Astor in "Scarlet Saint"

Mary Astor, now working at First National's New York Studios in "The Pace That Thrills," in which she is to be co-featured with Ben Lyon, will start work in "The Scarlet Saint" as soon as the present production is completed, according to an announcement by Earl Hudson, head of First National's Eastern production units.

"The Scarlet Saint" is an adaptation of Gerald Beaumont's successful magazine story, "The Lady Who Played Fidele."

Alice Day's Star Comedy on Pathe Program for Aug. 2

ALICE DAY'S first two-reel comedy starring vehicle, a Charley Chase two-reeler and the third chapter of the Patheserial "Play Ball," written by Manager John J. McGraw of the New York Giants, are highlights of the Pathe short subject program for the week of August 2nd. On this schedule are also listed one of the "Aesop's Film Fables," "Topics of the Day," a Pathe Review and two issues of Pathe News.

Dainty Alice Day makes her debut as a star in two-reel comedies in a fun concoction entitled "Tee for Two," from the Mack Sennett Studios. In this comedy, Alice appears as a little Scotch girl who attempts to find her way about America as a maid of all work, and as the title implies the business-man's sport—golf—provides a locale for plenty of action. Raymond McKee, Thelma Parr, Eva Thatcher and Wm. McCall, support this new Sennett star and the direction is by Eddie Cline.

Charley Chase stars in a Hal Roach two-reeler entitled "Innocent Husbands," which is a delightful domestic situation fun-fest. Katherine Grant, in the role of Chase's wife, summons a medium to tell her what her husband is doing when she is away from home. Suddenly she decides that she would like to continue the seance at home and then things happen for the husband. Lucien Littlefield, Jane Sherman, William Gillespie, Kay De Lys, and Jimmie Finlayson are in the cast. Leo McCarey directed this Roach comedy.

"Betrayed!" is the title of the third chapter of the Patheserial, "Play Ball," written by Manager McGraw of the New York Giants. In this episode, Jack Rollins is discovered to be the son of Senator Hornell, who is conducting an investigation against Thomas W. Sutton, father of the heroine, Doris Sutton. Allene Ray is Miss Sutton and Walter Miller plays Jack Rollins. Others in this episode are J. Barney Sherry, Mary Milnor, Wally Oettel, Harry Semels, and numerous ball players. Frank Leon Smith is the adaptor of the story and Spencer Bennet is the director.

Pathe Review No. 31 presents: "The Indian Cathedral," an old Spanish mission in Arizona; Chapter VII of "The Origin of Man" series entitled "The Treasure Hunt"; and Rochester, the flower city, one of the Pathecolor "Visiting Our Own America" series.

Completing the Pathe schedule of August 2nd are "A Yarn About Yarn," one of the "Aesop's Film Fables"; "Topics of the Day"; and two issues of last minute news events in Pathe News Nos. 64 and 65.

Alfred Goulding Signed by Mack Sennett for Comedies

MACK SENNETT has again added to his personnel engaged in the production of comedies for Pathe release. In pursuance of the policy of increased production Sennett has added a director, a beautiful girl and a child actress. He has also obtained a trained canine actor.

Alfred Goulding is the latest directorial addition. He is one of the most popular comedy directors of the day and recently finished several feature-length comedies at the Metro-Goldwyn Studio. His most notable success was "Excuse Me," from the pen of Rupert Hughes. Goulding's first assignment is a new comedy featuring Alice Day. Danny O'Shea, Eugenia Gilbert, and Barney Hellum have important parts in this new Pathe fun-film.

Ruth Hiatt is the latest beautiful girl to affix her name to a long-term contract with Sennett. She first came to the producer's attention when he was looking for a leading lady for Harry Langdon's first feature comedy, "His First Flame." Ruth won the part with Langdon, and has since played the lead with Raymond McKee in "Smith's Baby" and "Smith's Vacation" under the direction of Eddie Cline. Miss Hiatt will now be seen in Sennett comedies for Pathe for the next two years.

Two-year-old Mary Ann Jackson is the child actress who has been engaged by Sennett. She is probably the youngest actress in Hollywood, at least the only baby to boast of a real contract. Mary Ann was discovered on the set one day when she came to the studio to watch her brother work. An added scene in the picture called for a baby to walk through some custard pies on a table. Mary Ann got her chance, and never were custard pies trod upon with such dignity and poise. So Mary Ann will be a Sennett starlet for some time to come. She is the sister of Peaches and Bobby Jackson, well-known screen children.

The new canine actor at Sennett's is "Cap," the grandchild of old "Teddy," the great Dane made famous by the comedy produced five years ago. "Cap" is eight months old and already is three inches higher than "Teddy" was. He is spotted black and white and known as a Harlequin Dane. The clever dog has played prominent parts in "Smith's Baby" and "Smith's Vacation." "Cap" will be a member of the Sennett stock company for the next few years.

Del Lord has completed a barber shop comedy for Mack Sennett and has taken his family to Oceanside on a camping trip. Billy Bevan, Madeline Hurlock, and Andy Clyde are featured in Del Lord's new comedy, for which Felix Adler is writing the titles.

Mrs. William Fox, after christening of Fox News airplane at Fox News Hangar, Curtiss Field, Mineola, L. I., with the pilot, Lieut. George A. Weis, Jr., who will drive Fox News plane, and Edmund Reek, star aerial cameraman of Fox News New York staff.

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Piteure World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

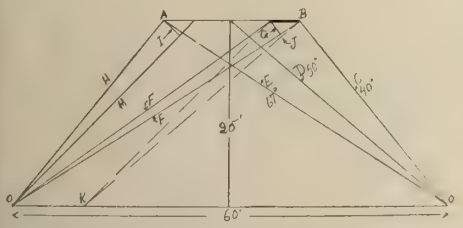
PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

As to Screens

From South Dakota comes a letter from the manager of what seems to be an enormous auditorium which is to be used for motion pictures, or is now so being used. It is advertised as the largest, finest auditorium in the mid-west. Advice is wanted with regard to the screen. The information is that the present picture is 19 feet wide. The projection distance is 142 feet. The auditorium is 150 feet wide. There is a balcony. Distance front row of seats to screen 25 feet. Screen to rear row of seats 91 feet, whch is to be increased by 38 feet additional seating space. Seating space is 60 feet wide throughout its entire length. Screen sets on stage, seven feet above main floor. It is twenty-four feet square—a plastered surface.



As you may see by consulting the drawing I have made, there are two problems involved, viz, diffusion and distortion. The drawing is not precisely accurate, but is plenty close enough to serve the purpose for which it is intended. Its scale is ¼ inch equals one foot.

I do not like to be unduly critical, but may I ask why the man in charge of projection in this theatre has not given his Manager the information I am asked to set forth. Any projectionist of today ought to understand such simple projection problems as this. I presume, however, the man is a "moving picture machine operator," and of course "running a machine" does not include projection problems. I will say, however, that inasmuch as this theatre apparently is a rather large undertaking, it would seem the part of wisdom to place a motion picture projectionist in charge—a man who thoroughly understands motion picture projection, which includes such simple matters as these, as well as many others not so simple, but just as important, to good and efficient work, and uniformly high class screen results.

Examining the drawing, you will observe that A B and O O are respectively the front row of seats, 60 feet wide, and the picture, 19 feet wide, the two spaced 25 feet from each other and the front row of seats, spaced 25 feet from each other.

At the extreme right end of the front row the man who bought the ticket which drew that seat will have a 40 degree viewing angle of the right side of the screen, a 50 degree viewing angle of the center of the screen and a 67 degree viewing angle of its left edge. He will therefore, in the nature of things, have what we might call progressive distortion, in an aggravated form.

Distortion

For a moment imagine this patron to have moved to the extreme left side and seat of the front row. Suppose the heavy black mark at the extreme right hand side of the screen to be an object four feet wide. Remember the drawing is made to scale, hence what you see is, aside from the possible slight inaccuracies spoken of, exactly what actually does happen. Lines F F show what he actually sees, or rather line G does, for he will see the four-foot-wide object as of a width exactly the length of line G, which is approximately two feet and four inches long. At the other edge of the screen, however, his distortion won't be quite so fierce. He will see any object four feet wide, which may be located there, as of a width equal with the length of line I, which is approximately three feet. Dot J is the length of line I, and shows you that the distortion on one side of the screen is reduced by about one-half as against the distortion on the other, as viewed from the end front seats.

Should the patron now change to the seat represented by point K, the distortion would be reduced, as shown by the broken lines, but it still would be midway between that at either side of the screen when viewed from the end seats, though from point A of the screen it would be unobjectionable.

The answer to all this is that the front side seats are unfit to be sold to your patrons. You can yourself lay the matter out on paper and decide what seats produce objectionable distortion, but the better way is to just sit yourself down in the end seat of the front row and note the pretty awful effect, especially on the side of the screen farthest from you. Now move over from seat to seat until you reach a point where you consider the distortion unobjectionable, whereupon eliminate all seats outside a line from the farthest side of the picture, through and on past the seat you are in. So much for that, except to say that it should be done out of courtesy to your patrons. It is hardly the thing to sell a seat which you yourself know the buyer cannot get good service from.

Again examining the end front seats, we find (right hand side) that the patron in the end seat will have a fairly heavy angle of view of the right side of the screen (40 degrees), and the literally terrific angle of the left side of sixty-seven degrees.

This means that for excellence of service you are limited to a screen having a high power of diffusion. Plaster is most excellent in this respect, but its reflection power is relatively low. Were it not for the peculiar condition (an auditorium 150 feet wide) I would say cut down the picture size some, but that, I think, would hardly do.

Assuming that there is plenty of potential patronage—patronage which can be had if the show is satisfactory—I would, if I were in your place, coat that plaster surface with shellac, and then paint it with zinc white mixed "flat." That is to say, I would have a good painter give the surface about three coats, the last one very "flat." He will know how to mix it and tell him "whiten" the last coat with "ultramarine blue." Impress upon him that you want it as white as it is possible to get it.

I would then outline the light with about three feet of steel gray, letting it extend inside the light by an inch or an inch and a

Bluebook School

Question No. 336—Describe the method by means of which current generation is started in a self-exciting dynamo.

Question No. 337—Suppose you have charge of a motor generator which vibrates considerably. Where would you seek the cause? In other words what thing or things might cause a motor generator to vibrate or shake?

Question No. 338—Tell us all you know about the brushes of a motor generator set and their operation.

(Note: I am breaking the rule this time and only giving you three questions, because at least two of them will take considerable thought and writing to answer fully. I would suggest that before tackling the brush question you give the matter some thought. The brush operation of a D. C. dynamo is a very important item in efficiency. I'm not asking about the care of the commutator now, mind you, except insofar as it may be necessary to touch upon that in dealing with brushes. That will come later.)

half. I have always advocated dead black for a screen border, but I now believe a dark steel gray is perhaps better.

I would then instal, if you have not already put them in, 120 ampere high intensity arcs, and a projectionist who knows his business thoroughly.

I am telling you what I would consider BEST, under what I understand to be your conditions. You can of course, do part of it, or none at all, as best suits you. If you don't like the painted screen, then you can put in any high powered diffusion screen.

The screen you have is, as I have said, all right as to diffusion, but it is relatively low in reflection power.

Common Sense

I received a surprise today. A letter came from Ansonia, Connecticut, and I of course supposed it was from John Griffith. Imagine the jolt I got when I read this:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: My dad is going to try to make a motion picture projectionist out of me, and has instructed me to get busy on the bluebook questions. Here, therefore, is my first attempt, embracing questions 311 to 315." Signed John Griffith, Jr.

Well I'll be da—rned! Last time I saw that young squirt he was just knee high to a grasshopper, and now he's a young man and starting to learn the thing he proposes to make his work in the days to come.

Well, young feller, I think between your Dad and I (for you'll certainly have any help I can give you) we can manage to make a motion picture projectionist out of you, PROVIDED you do YOUR part. Success does not come easily, however. It is not plucked from a bush, like a rose, or from a tree, like an apple. You have to get down and DIG, and keep right on digging as long as you live—that is to say if you really want to be a real success in anything. If you want to be just one of the crowd, that's easy. If you want to be a SUCCESS in the affairs of life, that's work, WORK and then some more W*O*R*K.

Study and Work

But gosh, my boy, the man who amounts to anything, or ever will, by any possible chance, make a real success, is not afraid of work, provided it be something constructive. Such a one wants to get ahead—to forge forward—to EXCEL. If he starts using a No. 2 shovel you will find him studying how best to accomplish his task, and before long you will find he is the boss of a gang—later he will be much higher than that. If he is a motion picture projectionist he wants to be THE BEST PROJECTIONIST IN THAT NECK O' THE WOODS. He is not discouraged because he makes no visible progress in a month, a year, or even in three years. He just keeps plugging along, trying to improve himself, remembering that the young medical student who "gets ahead" in his profession in ten years thinks he has done exceedingly well; that the locomotive fireman "fires" for from five to six or eight years before he makes any progress—gets on the other side of the cab.

Your Dad has showed that good sense I have always conceded to him, when he said "get busy on the Bluebook questions." You could enter no better preparatory school, and surely even the greatest doughead of them all will admit that your Dad knows as to that.

Unions might have done themselves and the motion picture industry a great service, had they officially recognized the importance of the Bluebook school and obliged their apprentices, and even their members to take it up and carry on through the entire course. When it is finished they would have had a very complete technical knowledge of about all things pertaining to motion picture projection. You are welcome to the "school," John, Jr., and I wish for you all possible success for all the future of your days upon earth.

What Keeps Him in

T. Edgar Beard, Coalville Opera House, Coalville, Utah, says:

"I like the Projection Department. It is the projection end of things which keeps me in the game—not the dollar, as that last 'animal' is hard to find motion picturally in a town of this size.

"Here is my layout: One Power 6 A and one Power 6 B improved, Mazda equipped. Bausch and Lomb Cinephor condenser and No. 2 Projection lens. Argus beaded screen, 8% (I think you must have meant 8 degrees —Ed.) slant. Projection distance 90 feet. Black border painted around the screen and a black canopy over its top and side to hold light. I shall be glad to receive any suggestion for improvement."

For a small town you seem to have excellent equipment indeed. I cannot offer suggestions, because I don't know some of the essential things. For instance, while you say you have a "black border painted around the screen and black canopy over it," you do not say how wide the border is, or offer any explanation which tells me what the necessity is for a black canopy over it. "To hold the light," you say. Well, brother, what light is it that needs to be "held"?

You say you have a Bead screen. Now if I knew the exact dimensions of the auditorium and its seating arrangement I could immediately tell you whether or not that screen is suited to your theatre. It is a narrow angle screen, hence is suitable only for use in a long, narrow theatre, unless there be a good distance between it and the front seats, or the front rows of seats be themselves quite narrow.

"Guessing"

There was a time when a man gave certain information, and we then answered by "guessing" he needed this or needed that. That time is, praise be, passed and gone. We now ask for full, detailed information, and when we have it we are able to give pretty close to scientifically correct answers to most projection problems, except such things as may depend to a greater or less extent upon individual ideas, such as, for instance, the choice of different types of light source, where one exhibitor may prefer a soft-toned light and another a very brilliant dead white screen, with many possible preferences between.

In order to pass judgment upon the suitability of any screen surface for any particular theatre it is ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY that we know in how wide an angle it is necessary that the light be reflected in order to serve patrons seated in all the seats.

Recently, in a pamphlet issued by a manufacturer, I saw a statement to the effect that, insofar as concerns "fade-away," some of the extreme front side seats might be disregarded.

While I understood the idea in the mind of the writer of the pamphlet, and that he intended no wrong, still I question the rightness of that statement. I have never yet seen the theatre where any less price is charged for the "extreme front side seats" than for any other seats in that section of the theatre. This being true, does it not follow that just as much attention should be given to providing that the view from those seats be as good as it can be made, as is paid to making the screen view good from any other seats?

I of course know there is the argument that by disregarding these extreme seats the view can be improved (more brilliant picture) from other seats. Well, granting the truth of that, does not common honesty demand that those extreme seats should be removed from the theatre, or the price charged for them reduced?

On the whole I hold that every possible effort should be made to give the best possible screen view from every theatre seat sold, or held for sale. If the seating at the front of the auditorium is such that a wide viewing angle is set up—which carries with it a heavy distortion as well as fade away—then it is up to the management to provide a screen surface having wide diffusive power, providing necessary brilliancy by increase in screen illumination.

The Trouble

The trouble mostly is that instead of having a projection engineer lay out a projection working plan BEFORE the ground is turned over to the architect, and the architect instructed and ORDERED to plan to accommodate that projection plan (a PERFECTLY FEASIBLE PROPOSITION by the way), things are almost invariably gone at backwards. The architect, who usually knows little or nothing about projection problems and the things allied thereto, is told to cover ground of certain dimensions with a theatre, keeping within a certain limit of cost. That is about what his instructions amount to in most cases. The architect then proceeds to plan as "beautiful" a building as he knows how, ALONG WELL RECOGNIZED LINES. But "well recognized lines," as a general proposition, gives small heed to either efficiency or excellence in projection, so the architect PERPETUATES THE NOW-GETTING-HOARY PERFECTLY NEEDLESS PROJECTION MONSTROSITIES OF THE PAST.

Faults

There is distortion due to excessive projection angle, no matter what seat of them all the screen be viewed from. There is sometimes an added enormous distortion from a very considerable number of front, side seats. There is light waste due to the abnormal lens system compelled by the excessive projection distance—though of late we are overcoming this to a considerable extent by improved condensers (cinephor). There is more or less damage to definition because of the excessive viewing distance forced upon the projectionist, and there are other bad effects which are the divided result of such IDIOTIC procedure.

Well, friend Beard, I have let my mind wander into channels not contemplated by you when you wrote the letter. Forgive the sermon. One thing just led to another in my thoughts, and it all "fits in."

I will close by saying that if the narrow angle bead screen "fits" your auditorium, then it seems to me from what you have said, that your conditions are good.

From Arizona

From R. A. Hooker, Globe, Arizona, a small mining town located in the desert mountains, comes a letter, the front part of which recites some most excellent human philosophy, but which has no bearing on projection, except that the man who lives in accordance with what is there set forth should be a good citizen and a good man in whatever calling in life he may choose. Hooker then comes down to projection matters and says:

Everybody seems to want to tell how they make their cue sheet, and so do I. Long ago I learned not to place my trust in the projectionable condition of films received from the average exchange. I found the only safe way was to examine the films before attempting to project them. Rewinding slowly I find and repair all loose splices and other serious faults.

The following is a cue sheet I made for "The Charmer," featuring Pola Negri. The second figures are the number of scenes after the sub-title which follows. Remember, this is the work of a man who has always been in a small town, and don't be too hard on it. It really works well, and is all done on the rewind table, before projection. If there are too many scenes I take some action that stands out more than the rest, and not more than ten scenes from the end. If the last scene is a long one I pick out some action the best I can at the bench to let me make a good change, the first time and then correct the sheets after the first projection.

I don't quite "get" the good brother's meaning, I am afraid. I think he must mean "frames" when he says scenes, though that doesn't seem to work out either. Here is the cue sheet:

Reel 1-3 Mariposa—fadeout.

Reel 2-6, Why you not tell me thees North America. Fadeout.

Reel 3—Isn't that the dancing girl we saw? Change of subtitle.

Reel 4-4—I hear what you say but don't believe. Fadeout.
Reel 5-2—I'm sorry you didn't listen to me. Fadeout.
Reel 6—Mariposa, I'm going to be frank with you. Change on title.
Reel 7—The end.

This probably is an excellent cue sheet, provided one understands it, but your explanation is not at all clear. Take Reel 2, for instance. Surely you cannot mean that you fade out at six frames (six pictures) beyond the subtitle! And six scenes might be anything from a hundred to 500 feet of film.

I'm NOT saying this to criticize you, friend Hooker, but to point out to you and to others how necessary it is to explain your meaning clearly. YOU know exactly what it is all about, hence it is all very clear to you. Often I write answers to questions myself which I tear up and rewrite for the simple reason that when I see that while what I have said is almost childishly clear to me because I understand the whole thing in minute detail, still to the fellow who doesn't understand, my answer would be just plain Greek. Don't be discouraged because of this adverse criticism of the way you have set your ideas forth, but try again and see if you can't make the matter clear to us.

A Complaint

F. H. Moore, Projectionist Casino Theatre, Taunton, Mass., pertinently remarks:

Have waited, before writing, to see if the other departments of the Moving Picture World would not wake up, adopt modern nomenclature and stop prattling about "Machine" and "Booths," etc.

Whenever these departments speak of new theatres, for instance, and the projection room or projectors, they become, in the hands of the editors of those departments, "Booths" and "Machines." Also these other departments more or less use the worn-out names of the past, thus discrediting us, our department and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers which has officially stamped the modern names as proper and correct.

Seems to me, Brother Richardson, that "habit" is a mighty poor excuse, if it is any excuse at all for one department discrediting the constructive work of another department of the same paper, particlarly when the department thus scoffed at is many times older than even the eldest of them, except that of Sargent, and is much older than even his.

Friend Moore is right in every particular. This department has put up a fight for improved, advanced nomenclature which has been sufficiently vigorous that it has secured the backing of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the backing of a large number of locals of the I. A. to the extent of officially adopting at least one of the new names into their constitution and by-laws and into their stationery, though they have no official right to do so and faced the possible displeasure of their international officers for so doing, though the said international officials saw the wisdom of the change and exhibited good judgment and sense by raising no objections.

Even great states and Canadian provinces "saw the light" and adopted the new nomenclature into their laws, BUT that is more than my own paper did, as is properly set forth by Brother Moore.

As Moore says, "habit" is a poor excuse. I hold that it is the DUTY of those who write for this paper to break bad habits which interfere seriously with the work of another department, and even cause many to smile with derision when I ask THEM to discard "machine," "booth" and "operator." Many times have I had the fact flung back at me: "What are you talking about! Why can't I use 'em when your own paper does—all except your own department. So that's that! The writers in question, like many others of and not of the writing trade, don't know much about projection, and see no reason why names should make much if any difference. They don't really mean to fight me in our own paper. They just don't see or know that THE NAMES "MACHINE," "BOOTH" and "OPERATOR" constitute one of the greatest preventatives of the securing of really high grade projection possible.

They do not understand such matters. They have not studied them, and think Richardson just a well-meaning crank, whom it is well to humor if and when they happen to think of it. They don't see that "Booth," as applied to the projection room, cheapens the whole thing. It sets up the unconscious idea of a "BOOTH"—a small, unimportant place which is merely a necessary nuisance. PROJECTION ROOM SETS UP AN ENTIRELY DIFFERENT IDEA. When one speaks of projection room one just naturally and automatically thinks of a decent ROOM—not a little, cramped-up hole called a "booth."

When one speaks of a "Machine" (which is entirely meaningless because they usually are at least two widely different types of machine in the projection room and thousands of them outside projection rooms, by the way—an organ is really a wind machine, but you try calling it a machine once and see what happens to you—one just automatically VISUALIZES PROJECTION AS A PURELY MECHANICAL OPERATION, whereas the mechanical part of it is the LEAST PART OF IT, and the least important part, too. Also given a "Booth" and a "Machine," the theatre manager's reaction to that combination is a CHEAP MAN OR BOY TO "RUN THE MACHINE," and that's that. To deny that this is true is akin to denying the sun rises in the east. You may "deny" it, but the sun rises there just the same.

Mistaken Procedure

Out in a small town in Illinois a young chap held a position as projectionist in a little theatre. He was not very well posted, as is evidenced by a letter I received from him, BUT he was willing to learn and was trying to do so; also he was making progress.

This little theatre, which presumably supplies all the theatrical amusement that that community enjoys, is owned and managed by a woman, and this woman unfortunately has adopted what we hold to be an enormously mistaken policy, as follows: She gets pictures which are, for a small town, excellent. She takes great pains with the furnishings of the theatre, and with everything connected with it, until it comes to the ONE THING SHE HAS TO SELL, viz.: the picture on the screen.

Arriving at that point, bang! on goes the expense lid, and it is clamped down hard and tight The projectors are old type and in a wretched state of repair This promising young projectionist she has fired, and has emplyoed a man at one dollar and a whole half dollar besides, per night—the other man got twice that. She uses A. C. at the arc.

In other words she has intrusted the presentation of the only thing she has to sell, to a man who is only able to earn that pitiful sum per day, or else he works days and projects pictures nights, in which event we may certainly conclude that he is not going to have much time to study and improve his knowledge, and thus be able to present a picture which will bring the box office receipts up to the highest possible point and keep them there, or to be able to present a picture efficiently as to projection.

I wonder if the time will ever come when theatre managers as a whole will learn that it is something very much worse than folly to have anything but the BEST one can get in the projection room, regardless of whether it be a large or a small theatre?

The fact remains, however, that RELATIVELY they can have it. The small theatre CAN have two good, relatively late model, rebuilt second-hand projectors, and its manager CAN pay a projectionist sufficient to encourage him to improve his knowledge, and strive to fit himself to give both efficient and high-grade projection. The manager of the small theatre CAN provide the theatre with a Bluebook of Projection, and INSIST that his or her projectionist study it and make use of it. The manager of the small theatre CAN absorb the simple, easily understood proposition that it is utter foolishness to rent a high class production, paying a substantial sum of money for it, and then by projection room economy (?????) make it utterly impossible to place that production before the audience in a way that makes the most of its worth.

Good projectors in perfect repair, the correct lens system, sufficient electric power to illuminate the screen with at least a fair degree of brilliance, and a good projectionist in charge, are all absolutely essential to high grade results on the screen and a maximum box office income. This is true of ANY theatre, big or little, either on Broadway or in the smallest village in the land. The theatre MANAGER understands this, and adheres to it religiously. The others plug along, "saving" nickles in the projection room of losing DOLLARS in the box office.

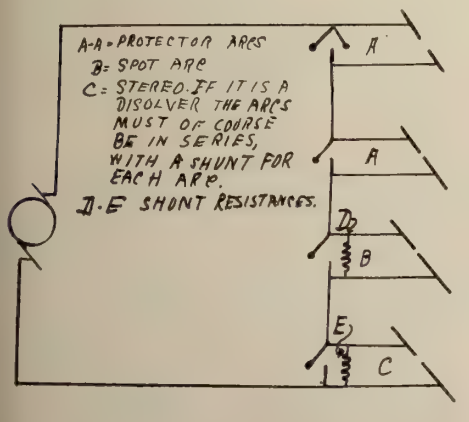
Note: A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey, sent correct, and in the main, excellent answers to the last series—301 to 306—which were displayed. Apologies to brother Fell.

Question No. 306—If you were using a Transverter, or other series arc type machine of, for example, 75 — 75 ampere capacity, and there was no other source of current supply available in the projection room, how would you proceed in the matter of showing slides, such as slides for illustrated songs, to avoid excessive breakage?

This one proved rather a poser. Arthur Gray, Boston, Mass.; Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; C. M. Bender, Minneapolis, Minnesota, and John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut, were the only ones who pulled through with what I would call right answers, though Harry Dobson, Toronto, Ontario, proposed using the field resistance, to which Griffith agreed, though the latter made good by suggesting the method of shunt resistance.

The thing might possibly be done Dobson's way, but I personally would not consider it as practicable. As the question is put, we have the right too assume that no other projection will be in progress, since it would not be expected that a stereo and motion picture would be in progress at the same time, and while this eliminates the necessity for a second well-burning arc, still I don't believe the field resistance plan is a good plan, or even a practical one.



So well am I convinced that this is the case that I am making the following the first of the second series of questions following the issue this appears in: "Do you consider it practicable to reduce and regulate the current output of a series arc type motor generator (when it is either necessary or unnecessary to burn one of the motion picture projector arcs at the same time or if the M. P. Projector be used for slide projection, than to burn both projector arcs simultaneously) by means of the generator field rheostat. In this we will arbitrarily assume that the necessary reduction in amperage will be from 75 to 30, and that the machine is a 75 — 75 ampere capacity one.

Even Doe, of Chicago, Guimond, of Mobile, Ala., and Colby, of Santa Fe, N. M., who have been sending in almost uniformly correct and excellent replies to the various questions, stubbed their toes on this one.

Here is Gray's reply, which, believe you me, is a darned good one:

The question, boiled down, amounts to this. "How to connect resistance for use with the stereo arc, in order to obtain the required low amperage under the outlined conditions of current supply." While the designation 75-75 would seem to me to indicate a 75 volt constant potential generator with a capacity of 75 amperes, the statement that same is a series type machine indicates a 75 ampere constant current outfit, and I think this is what is intended for discussion. (You knew that very well; darn you.—Ed.)

Any number of arcs may be connected in series with the circuit of a constant current generator, and be so arranged, with individual short circuiting switches, that any one of the arcs may be burned continuously, or any two arcs burned for a limited period of time. The arcs being connected in series, they will all burn at the same amperage. The Transverter is delivering a current of 75 amperes, and while this is the amount of current required for the projection arcs, it is too high to be practicable to use for the projection of slides, or for use with the spot lamp.

If any added resistance is introduced in series with any one arc, it will also be in series with all of them, hence will affect the entire circuit. It will have the effect of causing an immediate rise of voltage in order to force the current through the increased resistance, and the current in the circuit will be of the same strength as before. Thus, we establish the impossibility of introducing series resistance with the stereo or spot lamp arcs to reduce them to the desired amperage.

It might be well to explain here that a constant current generator is provided with a field rheostat which may be used to regulate the relative intensities of the armature and field, thereby varying, within a certain limited range, the strength of the current output. Its function, primarily, is to aid in maintaining a constant current strength by compensating for variations in the arc potentials, and while this function may be extended to include the raising or the lowering of the current to quite a few amperes more or less than the rated normal capacity of the machine, it cannot be expected to perform over such a wide range of amperage as is here involved, which let us arbitrarily assume is 75-30 amperes.

Now if we shunt a resistance across the stereo arc, or arcs, (the resistance must be so arranged that it can be short circuited along with the arc when the arc is not in use) we will have provided two paths at this point for the current to divide and flow through. Current—as much of it as can—will flow through the path of least resistance, and in this case part of the current will flow through the arc, and part through the shunted resistance. The proportionate amount of current that will flow through these two paths will be in exact relation to the proportionate amount of resistance in the two paths. The resistance of the shunt must be just enough to allow approximately 45 amperes to flow through this path, allowing the other 30 amperes to flow through the arc.

This resistance should be variable, and may be obtained from the manufacturers of these machines, and at least one manufacturer, calibrates their resistances directly to show in amperes, what the current strength of the arc will be when the leads are connected to the respective contacts.

In the foregoing, I have elected to explain things in detail, so far as I understand the subject, rather than to attempt an explanation by means of a diagram. This, because I personally think the reasons and causes in this subject are as important and interesting as the effects, the results, or even the method.

Thoreau and Clark illustrate their answer by a drawing. They say:

The accompanying diagram shows a parallel or shunt resistance connected across the arc. As current will aways flow through parallel paths in exact proportion to their respective resistances, it is possible to connect a shunt resistance path as indicated, the path to have sufficient resistance to permit of any desired proportion of the total of seventy five amperes to flow through the arc.

Dobson says:

If a regular dissolver is in use, it should be connected in series just the same as an ordinary arc lamp and should be operated in the same way.

Assuming that we are going to use the motion picture projector arcs to show our slides, and that these slides will be shown at the conclusion of a reel of film, I would light up the arc that is not in use, get it settled down nicely and have the slide in the carrier all ready and centered on the screen, so that at the finish of the reel of film I could show the slide on the screen.

As soon as the slide is showing on the screen, use the field rheostat to cut down the amperage to about 40 amperes, this can be done quite easily if a little time and patience is used, and care is taken to nurse the other arc along at the same time.

Both projectors can be used at the same time, and good dissolving effects obtained. With reasonable care, song slides of the newer type, (single glass only) can be projected with out breaking a single one.

Question No. 307—How would you arrange to use a spot lamp off a Transverter or other series type motor generator used for motion picture projection?

Answered in reply to 306.

Question No. 308—If you have a 75 ampere high intensity lamp and are using a full diameter lens, the feature is dense or medium, but the comedy and news reel thin, or mostly so, how would you manage to overcome the glare and flattening of photography due to excess in illumination, without deduction of your projection lens diameter?

Griffith says:

In such a case I do not think the light source ought to be tampered with. When the light beam is obstructed at or near the condenser plane, no shadow of such obstruction will show upon the screen. It therefore follows that the amount of light reaching the screen may easily be regulated by partially closing the regular dowser, though if an iris dissolver were installed at or near the condenser plane, a big improvement in depth and definition in cases where the full light is not needed on the screen would be noted. In very many cases light scenes are literally murdered by too much light. I'm going to bed now. Maybe if I feel ambitious I'll tackle the next one when I hoist myself out of the hay.

Evidently he felt ambitious, for he tackled the next one. I wasn't expected to print that line, but y' never c'n tell wat'll happen, John! And anyhow I doubt your scheme of partially closing the dowser. Pin-hole experiments apparently show that each pin point of the surface of the converging condenser lens sends its rays forward to a certain, definite place on the screen.

Now, John, I'm admittedly a bit rusty on this dope, as I have done no active work on such matters for several years. Maybe you're right. I know the shadow really does not show, as you have said, when some obstruction is placed in the beam at or near the condenser, but I doubt its not showing if the thing were carried to the extent of partly closing the dowser—closing it as much as would be necessary in some cases of this sort.

And if it is true that it won't then what about, for instance, figure 39, page 169 of the Bluebook, in the making of which you yourself had a hand, in my basement over in Brooklyn? Also notice figure 38, page 168. In this matter seems to me figure 39 is a case of one and one make two! Get out your explainer, John, or else go way back 'n sit down.

Thoreau and Clark say:

Reduce free diameter of converging condenser lens by means of an Iris shutter. Enlargement of spot or reduction of amperage would ruin tone of light with high intensity.

Doe says

You cannot reduce the amperage materially, if for no other reason than that a high amperage arc must operate practically at rated amperage in order that the light be of good tone; also reducing amperage would alter the crater size, and increasing it would necessarily alter it again. It would take time for a crater to adjust itself to change of amperage, and such changes would just serve to gum things up and produce a worse effect than the one it is sought to avoid.

There are two methods I would favor. I am not certain which is better. One is to install an Iris dissolver just in front of the face of the converging lens of the condenser. The other is an Iris installed at the front end of the projection lens.

Re-reading the question, however, I see that the projection lens Iris is "out", as it (the question) provides against reduction of projection lens diameter

Gray suggests two revolving shutters with varying width of blade, but in this I think he pulled a flivver. Probably did not stop to consider the matter from all its angles. He suggests changing shutters when the news and comedy come on, but this stunt ought to be available for light scenes in a production—available at all times and instantly.

Another thing: by changing shutter blade width you would be monkeying with flicker tendency. No, Brother Gray, I think you pulled a boner that trip, but we'll have to accept your 'umble apology, because I've pulled many a one myself.

Somehow I'm not altogether satisfied with this matter. To my way of thinking the question—which was, I believe, one propounded by Thoreau and Clark, eliminated the one best way, probably in order to test the ingenuity of us in finding another way. I hold, however, that the Iris on the front of the projection lens is best.

Question No. 309—What is the difference between A. C. and D. C.?

Gosh all hemlock! Only one (1) answer gets itself published, and that's Gray's. Where in H——eck did you dig up all that anyhow? Maybe you flivvered on 308, but you landed on 309 with both feet and all ten toes, I'll tell the waiting world. Here is his "brief" answer:

In discussing the difference between alternating and direct currents it would seem as if their common characteristics should be considered, as well as the dissimilar ones, if a comprehensive understanding of the subject is to be attained. Furthermore, the functions and the effects produced by the two kinds of current are so closely allied to, and dependent upon their respective characteristics of flow, that it seems advisable to consider both phases as being of equal importance, and as within the scope of the question.

Alternating and direct currents are both a flow of electricity, and have the power of producing generally similar magnetic, thermal and chemical effects, although each kind of current has properties that will produce certain phenomena that cannot be reproduced by the other. A direct current maintains a constant direction of flow, which may be either at a steady continuous pressure or in the nature of a rapid succession of surges that fluctuate in pressure, but are constant in direction. An alternating current reverses its direction of flow in a periodic manner, rising from zero to maximum strength, returning to zero, and then going through similar variations in strength in the opposite direction.

Generally speaking the properties of A. C. are more complex than those of D. C., the magnetic effects produced are of far more importance and several factors not incidental at all to the flow of D. C. become of prime import when considering the action of A. C.

Both currents are subject to Ohm's Law, but whereas in D. C. the opposition to its flow is solely dependent upon the conductive properties of the material of which the circuit is composed, a different condition exists with an alternating current where, in addition to the ohmic resistance of the circuit, there arises another form of opposition to the flow of current that occurs because of peculiarities in the action of the current itself.

In applying Ohm's Law to an alternating current it is necessary to determine the entire opposition to the current flow and this is expressed in the form of impedance, and is calculated upon the relative existent values in the circuit of ohmic resistance, and inductive and capacity reactance.

The property of inductance has many valuable applications in various phases of electrical work, and makes possible the transformation of an A. C. of stated voltage to one of higher or lower voltage, with the incidental loss of but little energy. An example of a commercially valuable utilization of this property is the method by which long distance transmission of heavy voltage alternating currents can be efficiently and economically effected.

It is quite the opposite with D. C., where, if the voltage of the circuit is greater than that needed for the operation of an appliance or apparatus connected to the line, then the difference of potential must be wastefully dissipated in the form of heat by means of a rheostat or similar resistance. The two currents also differ widely in their respective applications to projection work. A. C. is preferable for use with an incandescent filament light source, because of the economical method by which the line voltage can be transformed down to the amount required across the terminals of the filament. The factor of economy is the important consideration in this case because the actual heating of the filament can be accomplished equally well with either kind of current. On the other hand, D. C. is preferable for an arc light source, primarily because of its positive-crater-forming characteristic, and incidentally because this direct current crater produces not only a more desirable and steady projection light, but because the light intensity in screen foot candles is higher per arc ampere than with an A. C. arc.

Both kinds of current will flow through, or along, the same kinds of conducting material but whereas the flow of a direct current is apparently evenly distributed throughout the entire cross sectional area of the conductor, an alternating current has a tendency to flow along, and over the surface of a conductor, rather than through it. The higher the frequency the more pronounced becomes this effect, and on very high frequencies it becomes decidedly advantageous to use a stranded conductor in order to obtain an aggregate greater surface area than exists on a solid conductor of equal circular mills area.

A difference also exists in respect to the manner in which a current of one kind lends itself to the process of conversion into a current of the other kind. Thus, an alternating current can be rectified into a pulsating, direct current by several methods, i. e. mechanical vibrating rectifier, mercury arc rectifier, or a rotating electrical convertor such as the Wagner, etc. A reverse adaptability does not hold true and the only manner in which a D. C. can lend itself to the generation of an A. C. is by having its electrical energy applied through some intermediate means, to drive the armature of an alternating current generator or alternator.

The armature of a generator, from the very nature of its construction, action and location in a magnetic field, generates alternating current, but the kind of current that is transmitted through the external circuit may be optional, and is D. C. if commutated, and A. C. if the innate alternating surges are transmitted, unaltered in character, by means of so called collecting rings.

A flow of current generated wholly or in part by chemical methods, such as a storage battery or a wet or dry cell, is a direct and continuous current. Direct current has the property of effecting chemical changes in certain metals and materials that is not possessed by alternating current, and this property is utilized in the processes of charging storage batteries, electroplating, refinement of certain metals, etc. There are other differences in the characteristics of the two currents, and even differences in the characteristics of low and high frequency alternating currents, such as the use of the latter in medical research work, but I am already afraid of being ruled out because of undue length. The foregoing is somewhat lengthy, but I think it to be all germain and within the scope of the subject. It is an interesting and important subject, and cannot, in my opinion, be casually dismissed in one or two paragraphs. That's my excuse, Mr. Editor. Laugh that off.

Hurlbutt, of Oshkosh, Hanover, Doe, Thoreau and Clark, Guimond, John Griffith, Dobson, Colby, Bender and Budge all made acceptable answers, but none of them could even touch Gray's effort, so that's that.

Question No. 310—How would you calculate the capacity of any round copper wire?

Dobson, Hanover, Gray, Doe, Bender, Hurlbutt, Guimond, Budge and Colby all made acceptable answers. Dobson says:

The quickest way would, of course, be to use a reliable wire gauge and then consult any correct wire capacity table for the safe rating for a wire of that size.

To calculate the capacity, first ascertain the exact diameter of the round wire under consideration. This may be done with either a wire gauge or a micrometer caliper. If the diameter is obtained in the fraction of an inch, this measurement must be divided by 1,000 to reduce it to mils. Having ascertained the diameter in mils, we "square" the diameter by multiplying it by itself. The result will be the area of cross section, in circular mils, whereupon we consult a wire capacity table to ascertain the number of amperes a wire of that area of cross section will safely carry.

Fox example. Suppose our wire is 1/8 of an inch in diameter. Since there are 1,000/1,000ths in an inch, the diameter of the wire would be one eighth of 1,000, or 1,000 divided by 8, which is 125. Our 1/8 inch wire then is 125/1000 or .125 of an inch, or .125 mils in diameter. We then "square the diameter" by multiplying 125 by 125, which gives us 15,625 as the circular mil area of cross section. Consulting table No. 1, page 70 of the Bluebook, we find that a No. 10 wire has 10,380 C. M. area of cross section, a No. 8 has 16,510 and a No. 6 has 26,250. Our wire then is closer to a No. 8 than any other, and a No. 8 may carry 35 amperes, if rubber covered.

A Little Stunt

Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia, in writing of other matters say:

Here is a little stunt we have found valuable. As you know, the high intensity positive carbon contact pits and burns. We ordered two spares and one guide plate and support for same. The old contacts we had built up and milled out. The machinist had our spare guide plate and support, hence was able to make the contacts line up correctly.

We have used them three weeks, and find them to stand up just as well, and to give just as good service as the new ones. The job cost us five dollars a pair.

Not so bad! As I understand it, the boys had them "built up" by the spot welding process. I don't believe the resistance of the metal would be materially increased, and if that is true there is no reason apparent to me why the built up parts are not fully equal to new ones.

"At first motion picture theatres featured only motion pictures. Then they introduced orchestras, divertissements, lighting effects, and vaudeville numbers. And now they point with pride to their cooling systems.

"We stopped in the Capitol the other day and found the theatre so delightfully cool that we went down into the basement to investigate. It was thoroughly explained, but, all we remember is that there were large motors and condensers, twelve thousand feet of cooling pipes, and six thousand feet of condensing coils. Water is pumped through the roof, thereby cooling off the theatre. We also registered little gasps of astonishment at the huge machinery and the compressors, but can't recall whether our guide said the water was taken from gas, or gas taken from the water. Anyway, the theatre is refreshingly cool."

—ROSE PELSWICK, N. Y. Ev. Jour.

THE CAPITOL THEATRE has just completed the installation of the largest theatre cooling plant in the world. The problem of cooling the air of the world's largest theatre was a particularly unique one, because of its enormous size and seating capacity. After an extensive study of the various types of refrigerating plants, Major Edward Bowes, managing director, arranged with the Helmer Air Conditioning Company for the construction of a special type of plant which will meet the required conditions. This cooling plant is the largest installed in any theatre in the world and has a capacity of 400 tons of refrigeration.

WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

IT started about six weeks ago. One of the reviewers entered our office and declared himself:

"When you get around to Universal in your 'Looking 'Em Over' series be sure that you have already seen Reginald Denny in 'I'll Show You the Town'—it will give you an idea of what this boy is apt to mean as a drawing card before the next season is over."

So we journeyed to Broadway to view "I'll Show You the Town." And we are glad we did. Now we are waiting anxiously for "California Straight Ahead." Put this chap Denny in ANY of your calculations for next year.

A FEW weeks later another of the reviewers stepped up to the desk. He didn't know about the first one's approach so he repeated the introduction.

"You can't be fair to Universal and exhibitors in your 'Looking 'Em Over' series until you have seen the picture that was just shown for review. 'Siege' is the name, Sven Gade directed, and I am here to say that we have a new name to take into account when considering the front rank directors.

"I never saw a roomful of blase critics so tightly held—'Siege' will be Universal's biggest this year and as big as any that anyone will offer."

TUESDAY of this week the same critic came in to apologize. "I was wrong about 'Siege,'" he started. "It is all that I said it was—except that it won't be Universal's biggest this year.

"Wait until you see 'The Homemaker!' King Baggot has made a masterpiece. This is without a doubt the—etc., etc., etc.,—" and on and on he went. We'll let you read the continuation of his remarks in the review section of this issue. There are physical limits to this page.

So, we ask you, how is a humble editor going to attempt the role of prophet when an organization keeps pushing the goods out so consistently as to relegate him to the less dignified role of reporter?

There is no need to go any further. Carl Laemmle hit the line pretty steadily in his First White List—just now day to day happenings are showing that he is able to maintain the pace.

Incidentally, sympathy has so often been extended to poor Carl on his production and studio problems, that we feel it apropos to mention that if our personal information is correct it was Carl Laemmle's faith—plus some opportune encouragement by William A. Johnston—that finally brought "The Homemaker" to the screen. Like all the great successes it seems to have passed through the embryo stage where it was nearly pro and conned to oblivion.

An Industrial Saga

AT the first flush of America's industrial development, Ida M. Tarbell wrote a classic of fact literature in telling the story of Standard Oil and the rise of the Rockefeller fortunes. And in so doing established her own firm place in the world of letters.

Opportunity beckons to the writer with the facilities and the ability to depict the amazing expansion of Famous Players—with human interest coloring given to the recital by the story of Adolph Zukor and Sydney Kent.

The current items of the news columns give only a faint impression of the real story. There is a deep, underlying, big story of epic proportions—an industrial saga.

Opinions may differ, as they have in the case of Standard Oil, as to the ultimate effect on an industry at large and on the public, of development on such a gigantic scale. But they can in no way detract from the story as a story, nor lessen the height of the figures involved in the drama.

Adventure, daring, vision, resourcefulness, and patient upbuilding of a remarkable machine are the ingredients of this Romance of Today.

Page a successor to Ida M. Tarbell.

Europe's Chief Enemy— The Tax Burden

By W. Stephen Bush

PROMINENT representatives of the motion picture industry in every country on the European continent are realizing that their great enemy is not the film imported from the States, but the staggering burden of domestic taxation. In Germany, France and Italy there is an organized effort to fight this evil. The press and other factors within the various countries are wisely employing their energy to battle against excessive taxation instead of indulging in more or less sentimental denunciations against "foreign films." In Germany alone picture theatres are being closed at the rate of about one a day for the last six months simply because the owners are unable to pay the taxes and make their livelihood at the same time.

The New York representative of the UFA company, Wynne-Jones, took pains on his arrival in Berlin to clear away the foolish prejudice of European producers against the American attitude toward foreign films. He made it plain to the reporters that no prejudice exists in the States against films merely because they are foreign. It is only a matter of suiting the taste of the American public. He deplored the talk heard in Germany of a boycott against American films in retaliation for America's refusal to accept foreign-made films indiscriminately. As for methods of disposing of foreign films in the American market, Mr. Jones said that the best plan was to treat each feature as a separate entity and to get the most advantageous terms wherever they could be found. Tying up to one concern for all productions was, in his opinion, not the wisest course to pursue.

The Theatre Owners Society of the Italian Kingdom held its annual convention in Rome the last week of June. Their deliberations lasted for three days. It was the first time in the history of their organization that a journalistic representative of the country which furnishes them with most of their films attended their convention. The greetings and good wishes of Moving Picture World were well received and attested, in the opinion of the delegates, the truly international spirit which animates the world of the screen.

Three distinct and different currents of opinion were represented in the attitude of the delegates. While all of them agreed "that something must be done to rehabilitate Italian production," they disagreed as to the means and methods. A majority probably was in favor of raising the tariff on foreign films, others thought that the excessive governmental taxation of picture theatres ought to be remedied as the first step toward a permanent improvement, while a minority expressed the opinion that the whole system of production in Italy must be thoroughly re-organized on the basis of fewer and better pictures. An element of humor was injected into the debate by one delegate who said that in many respects the Italian films were even now much better than the American.

Having attended one previous convention of the Italian theatre owners, I was impressed by the great improvement in the personnel of the convention and by the intelligence and clear business vision of most of the delegates. The Italian press takes a very lively interest in every attempt to revive the Italian picture industry; not only the trade press, but all the great dailies of Rome, Naples and the populous cities of the North. The editors are under no delusions. They advise the convention not to put its trust in resolutions.

The comment of one editor is worthy of being reproduced here as it seems to be addressed to all Europeans who still think that quality in films can be fought with import duties and resolutions: "The trouble with our motion picture folks in Italy has been too much flamboyant advertising to justify it; general incompetency from the lowest up to the highest; a refusal to spend money in order to produce results; the lack of good taste and the fierce opposition to any radical reform and proper organization."

The theatre owner's real paradise just now is the doughty little Kingdom of Holland. There are just a little less than 200 theatres in Holland and about fifty film exchanges. Even the Dutch, generally slow in perceiving the humor of a situation, cannot help smiling. There would appear to be happier avocations than that of a film salesman in Holland. Holland uses American films almost exclusively. They are generally sold outright to a native exchange.

The tidal wave of European production, lately at its crest, has receded rapidly. Looking over the market in the principal producing countries, one cannot find anything that looks to have any value beyond the borders of the producing country. Looking at the programs of ten large houses in Berlin, not counting the theatres owned by UFA, the American films have an even break with the native productions; in ten theatres in Paris the American films have a slight lead over all others; in London the programs are almost 100 per cent. American.

Features Stars In Short Subjects

R. E. CHARLES, manager of the new Everett Theatre, Everett, Wash., has had a wealth of experience managing various houses in the Pacific Northwest. Mr. Charles is thoroughly sold on the strong appeal of the novelty short reel of today. His complaint is that there are not enough of these to supply his needs along these lines. He presents these with an excellent musical setting, playing them up in slides on his preceding bill.

Comedy and other short slides are used at each show, giving them an even break with features on this type of exploitation. He uses such mats as are available on short subjects in his newspaper advertising, giving from one-eighth to one-fourth of his newspaper space to the short subject announcements and always using the brand name.

Mr. Charles believes that the brand or star's name sells the short subject to the public as readily as the star's name in a feature. Comedies help to build up an excellent matinee trade in his town, as the children attend the daytime shows. This is where slides bring repeats for the next program change.

Mr. Charles cuts his news weekly, stressing certain of its items in his publicity. He carefully fits his short subjects to his features. At the present time he has built up an excellent and well sustained interest in the song films, for which the appropriate musical score is always rendered.

Playing Up Short Subjects Is Just Horse Sense

By E. H. Mayer

"WHAT would be your reaction if you were thoroughly enjoying a delicious meal at a good hotel, and were served with a dessert so terrible that it almost turned your stomach and you walked out on it? You'd probably figure that you had had a mighty poor run for your money. Wouldn't the dessert that crabbed the meal be remembered long after the excellence of the other food had been forgotten? And, really, would you be entirely justified in taking a chance at another meal at that hotel, or recommending the place to your best friend? Neither would I.

"Well, when it comes to short subjects on a picture program, the exhibitor, unless he watches his step, is placed in much the same position as the pastry cook. No matter how good the main meal has been, the entire effect will be utterly ruined, and the patron dissatisfied to the point of never coming back, if the dessert is wrong."

Thus spoke John C. Schumacher, who looks after the Jewel Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, and who, incidentally, manages to maintain a pleasant disposition while sweltering under a load of some two hundred pounds avoirdupois, with the thermometer hovering around 95 in the shade. Schumacher is comparatively new to the film game, as age is reckoned among the old-timers, but he has very clearly demonstrated by his past performances that his mind is not a single track affair, neither has it become warped by precedent in the matter of booking.

"Almost any damn fool can book pictures, if he can read and write," he continued, "but to properly book and put over short subjects is something which cannot be done by mere guesswork. It requires thought, study and sometimes scheming, for the wrong short subject, even if it be in the right place, or the right short subject in the wrong place will kill your program mighty quick, and if you repeat this sort of thing too often your patrons are not slow in getting wise to the fact that something is radically wrong, and your business will soon hit the toboggan.

"People watch the short subjects more closely now than they ever did before. I have had patrons come to my house to see a certain short subject who did not care to remain for the feature, ascertaining in advance just when the particular subject would be on. This refers particularly to comedies, and when I say comedies, I mean good, consistent ones, and not the slap-stick, pie-throwing variety.

"My opinion is that people generally are passing up the grotesque, ridiculous and silly stuff which has too long been masquerading under the guise of comedy, preferring the higher-class comedies in some of which the technique, acrobatics and general business are superior to the much-flaunted full-length features. Just as many persons prefer to read short stories in newspapers and magazines rather than read an entire book, just so are people becoming educated to the short subjects on the picture program—something they can 'get' quickly and without too much strain or effort.

"Very often the very feature on my program which I expect to go over with a wallop will prove a darb, but the comedy invariably comes to the rescue at the eleventh hour simply because I exercise as much care and foresight in booking my short comedy as my main feature. When it comes to news reels, I, for one, am a strong advocate of showing these on every program, provided, however, they contain live, current material, otherwise an exhibitor is better off without a news reel, for it is just as much an insult to a patron's intelligence to show a news reel after it becomes history as it is to offer him a newspaper to read that is thirty days old.

"Educational subjects have their place on the program, too, if they do not deal with high brow matters which are liable to bore the average patron. Technical subjects should be avoided, but industrial subjects, if they deal with the manufacture of objects in everyday use, are both interesting and enjoyable to young and old. Travel pictures also are desirable, if properly selected. One of my rules is to show snow and kindred pictures in summer and tropical pictures in winter, as far as it is possible to do this. In other words, I try to book only such short subjects as I consider have the greatest appeal, of course taking into consideration the nature of my feature."

Asked concerning exploitation and advertising of the short subject, Schumacher said:

"I was just coming to that phase of the proposition. There certainly are no hidden mysteries nor secret formulas when it comes to making the short subjects pay big dividends at the box office. It's merely a matter of using a little common horse sense. Not only do I play up my short subjects to the skies in my billboard and lithograph advertising, I also drive them home in my slide announcements, etc.

"But the most important, and perhaps the most effective, is the newspaper space. I figure that the full-length feature on my program should have not more than 60 per cent. of my newspaper space, while the 'additional features' (never billed as 'short subjects') should occupy the remaining 40 per cent. of my space and should be properly illustrated.

"What is the psychological effect? Many persons, you know, shop for their moving picture entertainment just as they shop for anything else. If at home, they naturally look up the advertisements. If the feature occupies practically all the space, and the short subjects only a line or two at the bottom, the short subjects are overlooked, or, if seen, they make very little mental impression.

"Alternatively, if the space is divided as I have stated, and the shopper sees a well-balanced advertisement, he involuntarily concludes that the program is a well-balanced and diversified one. In other words, he is sold on your entire program in advance and enjoys it more; otherwise, the short subjects are more or less unexpected and the patron unconsciously feels that they were either thrown in for good measure or used to pad out the program, and it sometimes leaves a disagreeable aftertaste. Let the public in on your entire menu. Play up your dessert as strongly as you do our main meal. Then your patrons know what's coming and will be eager to see it. I have found that by doing this I have not had to use red ink in the box office for a long time."

Arbitration-Contract Situation Arousing Country; Seider-Pettijohn Clash Openly

Lawyer Denies That He Substituted for Hays in Quizzing of Exhibitor Head—Seider Rejoins M.P.P.D.A. Camp Fears Airing—Rembusch Calls Letters "Pettijohn Poison"

By Tom Waller

JUST before he stepped aboard the train for Detroit, Joseph M. Seider informed the writer that one of the most important things the national directorate will do at its second major session in Michigan on July 30 will be to concentrate the power of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America into something which will spell finality and solution for the apparent chaotic state of the industry's contract formula and arbitration system.

The chairman of the national committee on contract and arbitration upon whom the eyes of the industry have been centered, especially during the past few months, stepped further into the limelight this week when he was unexpectedly precipitated into a red hot debate with Attorney Charles Pettijohn of the Hays organization.

The controversy between Seider and the Hays forces, details of which first appeared in Moving Picture World type, has led to this publication receiving a literal maze of statements. In most of these are incorporated suggestions, the utilization of which, the various writers maintain, would tend to relieve, if not solve, the present condition. Conspicuous among these are twenty leads from Frank J. Rembusch, president of the Indiana theatre owners, who terms the eighty letters, mostly approving the Film Boards of Trade, now filed in Pettijohn's desk as "Pettijohn Poison Propaganda." Another is from Sol Raives who suggests that the M. P. T. O. A. appoint a knowing traveling representative who should impart his knowledge to the various arbitration boards throughout the country.

Finally comes a report from the World's Canadian correspondent that the Dominion's new arbitration clause for film contracts has just been announced effective for October 1.

The outstanding sensation in the arbitration and contract sphere was the tilt between the producer attorney and the exhibitor chieftain. Seider had been invited to address members of the A. M. P. A. When he arrived at their noon-hour conclave he found in attendance Courtlandt Smith and John Pettijohn, both of whom are members of the advertisers association. Seider's denunciation of Pettijohn's recent statement that 95 per cent. of the country's exhibitors approve the present system under which the Film Boards of Trade are conducted, together with the meeting for the first time since that utterance of these two men, immediately sensed the atmosphere of the White Horse Tavern with the tensity of expectation.

The storm broke shortly after Seider had launched into his scheduled talk when Pettijohn secured the permission of the organization to question the speaker in his capacity as one of its members and not as a part of the M. P. P. D. A.

The fact that Seider's open door challenge to debate Will Hays on the subject of contract and arbitration had just been printed also further augmented an undercurrent which already was running high immediately prior to Pettijohn confronting the speaker.

When Pettijohn insisted upon an immediate debate with Seider the question arose in the minds of some in the audience as to whether the lawyer was answering the challenge to his superior by substituting for Hays.

In order to clarify any such impression the World got in touch with Pettijohn just before this issue went to press.

"Mr. Hays reads his own mail. The challenge was to him, not to me."

"I am aware of that," the interrogator persisted, "but were you by any chance substituting for Mr. Hays on this occasion?"

"Pinch hitting?" the lawyer rejoined.

"That's the word," we replied.

"Mr. Hays is able to do his own batting. He has never needed a pinch hitter. No, I didn't do any pinch hitting for him at that A. M. P. A. luncheon. Seider simply made a few remarks which I thought should be explained to the boys, so I took the floor for a few minutes."

Seider when approached after the debate told the writer: "Mr. Pettijohn represented the Hays organization at the A. M. P. A. meeting, his statement to the contrary notwithstanding."

The New Jersey president said that up to then he had received no reply from Hays in answer to the challenge and that it was his opinion that it would be ignored because "the Hays organization is afraid of baring the inner facts to the public."

Seider was fully confident in his expressions at this time that he had scored over Pettijohn in the verbal wrangle. He commented:

"The fact that Mr. Pettijohn diligently avoided going into the facts and debating the merits of the contract and arbitration system as practised in this industry is conclusive proof that the Hays case on these matters is very weak. Mr. Pettijohn resorted instead to personal attacks."

ATTORNEY CHARLES PETTIJOHN

The national director was of the impression that a defeat for Apollo Exchange in its suit against Wellinbrink, New Jersey exhibitor, will establish:

"That the arbitration clause is illegal; that the contract is inequitable; that the fact that the theatre owner was forced to sign this contract under the penalty he would not receive film from any member of the Film Board of Trade is. duress."

The precedent which this case should thus establish was made obvious by the speaker. An array of noted legal talent is being retained by his state organization, Seider said, to defend Wellinbrink. The suit will make its bow in a New York County court on the morning of July 31. It will be ushered in by a preliminary motion with the case calendered for a speedy trial thereafter.

The full text of the debate before the A. M. P. A. with the questions put by Pettijohn and replied to by Seider is in substance as follows:

Mr. Pettijohn: I have a few questions to ask.

Mr. Seider: I am perfectly willing to answer any questions that you put.

Mr. P.: Are you a theatre owner?

Mr. S.: Yes, but will you answer in which way this is material.

Mr. P.: We will come to that later. Did you buy any film in the last six months?

Mr. S.: No.

Mr. P.: Would you care to state the name of theatre or theatres which you own or control?

Mr. S.: I would not, and I can give you very good reasons therefore.

Mr. P.: The answer is sufficient. I do not care for the reasons. I just want to point out Mr. Seider has no right to represent anybody.

Debate Now Marks Wide Open Conflict

Mr. S.: The constitution of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey provides that a person must be a theatre owner in order to hold office therein, therefore it is evident by the fact that since I am President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey that I am a theatre owner. Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America adopted my report on the contract and arbitration rendered by the Milwaukee Convention. The Board of Directors at New York unanimously elected me chairman of the arbitration and contract committee of the M. P. T. O. A.

Mr. P.: Whom do you represent?

Mr. Charles Barell, chairman of the A. M. P. A. meeting, interrupted the question at this point, stating that there were other speakers and the argument had to be limited to two minutes. Other members claimed that all the time necessary be allowed and Mr. Seider be permitted to decide whether he cared to continue the argument as he was a guest of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers and perhaps Mr. Pettijohn was taking an unfair advantage since his presence at the meeting was unexpected.

Mr. S.: Our cause is right. I am ready to answer anybody, at any place, at any time. I represent, as the President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, the theatre owners of New Jersey; and on arbitration and contract, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as chairman of its contract committee.

Here again there was an interruption, and it was suggested that the entire of next week's session of the A. M. P. A., be handed over to Messrs. Seider and Pettijohn to continue their discussion. Mr. Pettijohn demurred that he was a busy man and that some people with whom he was associated would be unwilling to let him speak; that he wanted to continue right then and there and would take but three minutes. The chairman, Mr. Barell, pointed out that Mr. Seider had been invited to address the body and not to enter a debate. This the members overruled. Mr. Seider stated that he refused to go into anything else but the contract and arbitration problems as he was a poor politician and he did not want to be forced into a corner where he would have to discuss other subjects on which there were men more capable than himself in the M. P. T. O. A,. qualified to speak.

Mr. P.: Have you had any difficulty with the Film Boards of Trade?

Mr. S.: No sir.

Mr. P.: Then how are you qualified to take care of this matter?

Mr. S.: This is just it. I am qualified because I have nothing personal involved. Because we are fighting for a cause and there is no personal motive behind my activities whatever.

Mr. P.: We have satisfied Film Boards of Trade in New York, Albany, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Dallas, (Mr. P. continued to call off all the Film Board centers.); and yet there is no complaint whatsoever from any theatre owner. They are all satisfied with the arbitration system.

Mr. S.: We are satisfied with arbitration. We are not opposed to arbitration, but we want fair arbitration predicated on a fair contract. There are four lawsuits pending in every part of the country. There were six hundred theatre owners in the convention hall at Milwaukee; all six hundred unanimously voted against the present contract and your arbitration system. The statement you have just made is just as true as your previous statement that 95% of the theatre owners of the country are satisfied with your Film Boards of Trade and arbitration. You mentioned the city of New York as a model. Sol Raives, the chairman of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce Arbitration Committee, stated at the New Jersey Asbury Park Convention, clearly and distinctly that it is only because of the extraordinary efforts of the exhibitor-arbitrators, that the exhibitor does not realize more fully his danger under the present system, and that very much better arbitration would result on the establishment of a fair contract.

Mr. P.: There is one in Texas that is settled and there is one in Ohio. There is no other case.

Mr. S.: Don't you know of the Wellinbrink case, and have you forgotten the Samuelson matter?

Mr. P.: Oh, the Wellinbrink case is only an Apollo and the Samuelson case has been pending two and a half years.

Mr. S.: Mr. Samuelson says that you have delayed the trial.

Mr. P.: I am ready to try it tomorrow at 9.30. I personally think that the contracts are legal, and if you want to determine the legality of the arbitration clause or whether or not there is restraint of trade, bring an action,—go to court,—go to it.

Mr. S.: I will tell Samuelson that you will not delay any further the trial of his action. You, an exponent of arbitration, tell us to go to court. You have left us no other alternative. We have already done so.

Mr. P.: Are you responsible for the article in the Times?

Mr. S.: Yes sir.

Mr. P.: Now, gentlemen, you are the future mouthpieces of the industry. Right here and now we should debate this matter. Joe Seider has gone into this thing for personal publicity and advancement. Nothing can be tried out in the press. Nothing should be spoken about in the press. He has hurt the industry. Right here is the place to settle. Seider says to straighten things out within the industry. The press is not the place to straighten out differences.

Mr. S.: So you fear the public's knowledge of these matters. It isn't a fact, Mr. Pettijohn, that we have written a letter to Mr. Hays asking him to debate these questions in an open forum before an unbiased tribunal, and Mr. Hays has not even extended to us the courtesy of a response.

Mr. P.: The letter was acknowledged and the letter was forwarded to Mr. Hays.

Mr. S.: No sir, I did not receive any answer.

Mr. P.: The answer was sent by Miss Kelly.

Mr. S.: I did not receive an acknowledgment from anybody.

Mr. P.: Didn't we have a continuing committee, and didn't we try to get together. You sat in for two days and we were getting along.

Mr. S.: Mr. Pettijohn, who appointed this continuing committee?

Mr. P.: We did—that is, we requested Mr. O'Toole, President of the M. P. T. O. A.; Mr. O'Reilley, President of the T O. C. C., and Mr. Beachle, a square man, President of the Theatre Owners of Kansas.

Mr. S.: You will note, Mr. Pettijohn, that all these gentleman with the exception of Mr. O'Toole (in his place Mr. Commerford), are on the committee elected by the theatre owners organization. Won't you concede that a committee elected by the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A., is a committee representing the theatre owners even more so that a committee appointed, as you admit, by your organization—a producers organization? You know our objections to the present contract. Why have you not continued with this committee or submitted to them a draft of a new contract acceptable to you, that could be accepted by the theatre owners?

Mr. P.: The finance committee or some other committee engaged Mr. Burkan and Mr. Burkan took it up with our office. He went to Europe and Mr. Hess is on a vacation, and that's the reason nothing was done.

Mr. S.: I cannot speak for finance committees and about what they did. That is another subject. As to Mr. Burkan, however, permit me to inform you that he has written a letter to four others and myself, in which he stated that Mr. Hess refused to consider the contract submitted by Burkan and informed him that the theatre owners have practically agreed to a new contract. You know that this is untrue, Mr. Pettijohn, because you know that we did not agree on a contract and that we did not include our negotiations. Mr. Burkan further wrote me and, quoting Mr. Burkan, You can see by this that we did not get very far with them. Mr. Burkan has told me personally that Mr. Hess claims that a buyer has no right to request a form of contract; that in every other line of business the seller dictates the form of contract and the buyer must either take it or leave it. It was only after receiving this information that we sent our invitation to Mr. Hays to debate.

Mr. P.: What was the date of this letter?

Mr. S.: My conversation with Mr. Burkan was on July 1st; the date of his letter was on July 13, and received by me on that date.

Mr. P.: Gentlemen, I do not think that Mr. Seider knows that there were 1400 pieces of adverse legislation introduced and that it was our efforts that saved the theatre owners; that I have personally travelled at my own expense and worked with the theatre owners throughout the country.

Rembusch Wants Light on "Dirty Linen"

Mr. S.: I do know, Mr. Pettijohn, that a bill sponsored by you in New Jersey, Assembly Bill 438, was up for passage and did not pass because it affects us, and you people sponsored the bill without consulting us.

Mr. P.: What bill was that?

Mr. S.: The bill relating to inflammable film.

Mr. P.: We had nothing to do with that bill.

Mr. S.: Mr. Pettijohn, you know that you told me in the presence of Mr. Woodhull and Mr. Rosenthal that you had been asked to speak to me about this bill and that you had not had the time, and that you further told me that the bill should not have been opposed by us, and that I told you that if you wanted us to support a bill in New Jersey that it was necessary for you to go into the merits of the bill with us. Any bill affecting us should not have been sponsored by you without first taking up the matter with us.

Mr. P.: I did not send for you, I never will send for you, I never will have anything to do with you.

Mr. S.: Why should you say this? What have I ever done to hurt you? With whom, inside or outside of this industry, have I been anything but fair, frank, earnest and honest?

Mr. P.: I am out of the shell, they wanted me out of the shell, but I am speaking for myself. My organization probably will not stand for my talking. I may be censored for what I am saying, but I am speaking for myself only.

Mr. S.: What I am saying, I am saying with full authority and the responsibility for what I am saying is mine.

Mr. P.: Oh, I know the contract could be improved upon, arbitration could be improved upon. Why, we can get together on this, we can talk about it. Where is your committee? We can talk this thing over and it can be solved. Everything can be improved upon. Seider is here and he did not write his speech. I know the man who writes his speeches, the man is here and will send copies to the papers who are not here. I know the man who sends out his photographs. I do not recognize Seider as a spokesman. This is my reason for not having anything to do with him.

Mr. S.: Mr. Pettijohn, you are untruthful in this as you have been untruthful in everything else. Nobody writes a word of copy for Joe Seider. Why don't you say that my answers to your questions today have been written for me?

Mr. P.: That's why you made a rotten speech today.

Mr. Pettijohn was then interrupted and a motion was made to adjourn with thanks to Mr. Seider for his attending and address. Mr. Pettijohn seconded this motion. Mr. Eberhard stated that he hoped that Mr. Seider was not offended and thanked him for the interesting views he had expressed.

Mr. Seider concluded with the statement that he was not offended; and that Mr. Pettijohn's attitude reflected the weakness of his arguments against the theatre owners' cause.

Heartily approving Seider's plan of debating the issue on contract and arbitration, Frank J. Rembusch submits a list of leading questions. These interrogations are compiled for any in the industry who are interested as well as the principals, according to Rembusch's letter to MOVING PICTURE WORLD. For their reason the writer of this communication states:

"If we are going to wash dirty linen, let's put it out on the line in the daylight so all can see where the dirt comes from. Let's have the following questions washed up and answered and see if arbitration is Godly or Satanic."

The questions are as follows:

If the Film Board's arbitration system is so good, why does it need a defense of eighty letters?

Why don't the names of those who wrote the letters appear, because if the Film Board is so virtuous, those who are defending it should be willing to make a signed statement so we know who is giving praise to its work?

How many of these letters were written by persons affiliated with the Hays-Pettijohn organization?

How many of them were written on the solicitation of the Hays-Pettijohn organization?

FRANK REMBUSCH

Will Mr. Pettijohn deny that he has requested certain persons to write letters in favor of the Film Board? WE KNOW PETTIJOHN TECHNIC AND COULD GUESS THAT MUCH BUT IN THIS INSTANCE WE HAVE SEEN THE LETTER.

Will Mr. Pettijohn deny that these persons who wrote these letters mostly received special favors from the Hays-Pettijohn organization?

I asked the local Film Board "just how does the Film Board function" and got the reply, "It is none of your damn business." Why should not the President of the Indiana Exhibitors know what is going on at the Film Board meetings?

What other reason could there be for the operation of the Film Board except to raise the prices of pictures and control the film market? (Our legislature in Indiana will not meet again for two years.)

Why do we need the Film Board at all in Indiana? Is it not a fact that these meetings are contrary to law and have injured theatre owners to such a degree as to cause the Department of Justice to take a hand?

Why not publish the list and details of the theatre owners who have been injured by the Film Boards of Trade? There are eighty times eighty of them. Is Pettijohn willing to print the specific case of oppression of Ella Coffman from Will Hays' own town in Sullivan, Indiana?

Hundreds more can be given. My case of $60,000.00 because I refused to appear before the ALMIGHTY SUPREME COURT OF THE MOVIES is the limit.

Why not publish the opinion of our attorney who quotes "the uniform contract as the most one-sided document the ingenuity of man could invent, lacking every element of fairness and mutuality?"

Why is the Hays-Pettijohn organization trying to prevent the Department of Justice from carrying on their investigations?

Why were records of the Film Boards destroyed so that the Department of Justice could not see them? Why the pussyfooting?

How can Mr. Hays create a system of oppression and despotism on one hand, then say, "We would not think of being responsible for any decision of a local board"? Is Mr. Hays unwilling to be responsible for his own creation? Did Pettijohn remit an award of $800.00 for a friendly exhibitor? How many of the exhibitor members of the arbitration boards were suggested and practically appointed by Pettijohn? (Mostly.)

Is it not a fact that every one who takes part on the arbitration board, whether he be Exhibitor, Producer, or Distributor is liable to civil and criminal prosecution? (Ask Mr. Dennis O'Brien of United Artists. He knows. United Artists don't seem to need an uniform contract to do business.)

Why was Sydney Cohen, who has been the Commander-in-Chief of the Theatre Owners for five years, let the Hays organization get away with all of this unless he is allied with Hays?

If Sydney is a saviour, why not do some saving? If he is Moses to take us out of the BULLRUSHES into the Promised Land of equity and right, why does he allow the Red Sea to drown us?

Why has he, during his administration allowed marketing conditions to get in a shape so that a Theatre Owner cannot book, buy, cancel, or contract for a picture unless he allows Hays-Pettijohn to put a rope around his neck? Sydney should get in action or get out.

Mr. Seider, of New Jersey, is right. Let us debate the question. Defy the Hays-Pettijohn group and their eighty letter writers to show in a debate, in person or through the trade journals, whereby or how the Film Boards and Arbitration Boards are good for either the Producer, Exhibitor, or Distributor. If I were a Producer, I would sell them on merit or shelf them. No good pictures need a uniform contract to enforce play dates.

Without the uniform contract a lot of pictures would never have been shown and business ruined. Competition—Pictures of Merit—makes good business.

If there is one good thing in the Arbitration, uniform contract, etc., we should like to discover it. The more we investigate, the more we hold our nose.

Sol Raives, well known member of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of Greater New York and a student of arbitration, suggests, among other things, that the arbitrary medium in the film industry might be benefited if the M. P. T. O. A. designated a "traveling representative." This man should essentially be well versed in arbitration matters and would impart such knowledge to the various boards in his swing about the country. Raives writes to MOVING PICTURE WORLD:

"After noting the controversy now existing in the various trade papers regarding the uniform contract and arbitration I would like to express my views regarding the latter.

"I have been interested in arbitration work in New York city for the past three years and have taken an active part in the work. While I am not qualified to discuss out of town boards I have a complete knowledge of the workings of the N. Y. C. board.

Raives Advocates Traveling "Arbitrarian"

"Notwithstanding the fact that the uniform contract itself could be improved upon I am convinced that arbitration work can very easily be made to function on a fair and just basis.

"The proof of this is the record of the N. Y. C. board for the past three years. I am sure that any exhibitor or exchangeman who had occasion to use our board will agree that they received fair, just and honest treatment, our records bear out this statement. If these results can be attained in N. Y. C., why not all over the country?

"I would suggest that the M. P. T. O. A. appoint a representative who is versed in arbitration work and let him visit the various boards throughout the country when they meet and give them the benefit of his experience and knowledge, somewhat after the manner of the Hays organization who send a man out in their behalf.

"It seems strange to me that out-of-towr exhibitors and exchangemen cannot see the benefits of an arbitration board that functions honestly. It is wonderful work especially so for our business where so many petty disputes arise. Think of the time and money it would cost if these cases had to go through the regular courts.

SOL RAIVES

"As I said before strenuous efforts should be made in behalf of arbitration by everyone connected with our industry as it is now one of the most important factors in our business.

"Constructive suggestions and honest criticisms will help arrive at an amicable solution of this matter much quicker than the petty bickering that now exists."

Canadian Clause

The new arbitration clause for film contracts, as drawn up by the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, will be effective in all contracts in Canada by October 1st, according to the official announcement from the headquarters at Toronto, Ontario, of the Canadian association. A considerable number of the chief film exchange companies of the Dominion have already incorporated the arbitration clause in their rental contracts and the few remainder are expected to adopt it in their printed agreements before the end of September, it is stated. The new arbitration clause is operated under the laws of the Province of Ontario, in which Province there is a statute which provides for arbitration operations between buyers and sellers, this having been intended primarily for grain growers and milling companies, but which is applicable to the film business.

The arbitration clause is carried out in conjunction with the Film Boards of Trade which are being established in key cities of Canada, the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada having already organized such boards at Toronto and Montreal.

Questions referred for arbitration are considered by a Board of Trade and the latter is empowered to render judgments according to the evidence. A distributor may require an exhibitor to make a payment of from $100 to $500 to cover any possible loss or possible damages designated by a board. If the exhibitor refuses to make such payment, it is provided that the distributor may notify the exhibitor within seven days in writing that further film service will be discontinued.

When a distributor is found to be at fault, the board's decision must be obeyed by the exchange or the exhibitor can cancel his contracts with that exchange and the exchange is denied the privilege of redress on this or any other questions before the Film Board of Trade until the board's instructions are followed out.

Seider Says McKay-Schenck Confab Averted Investigation

"GENERALLY modern motion pictures are of high character and quality. Their tendency is for an influence equal to the press, over the welfare of the community. In the four years that Isadore Hirshblond has been showing pictures in Toms River it has been only on very rare occasion that the pictures shown there could be subjected to criticism," thus spoke the Rev. Dr. Rowland Nichols following an address by President Joseph M. Seider to seventy-five Kiwanians and the board of directors of the Motion Picture Owners of New Jersey at Toms River last Tuesday.

Seider described the mechanics of the motion picture industry, the exhibition branch in particular. He pointed out that the impressions generally held by the public that Mr. Will H. Hays represented the entire industry was erroneous. He described the activities of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the New Jersey organization along public and community service lines. One of the highlights of Seider's address which decidedly stirred his audience was his revelation that an investigation had been contemplated by the New Jersey State Legislature into the alleged practice of some New York theatres in relation to protection over theatres located in New Jersey. In this respect Seider made known that the investigation had been averted through a conference between State Senator McKay of Ber-

President Seider concluded his address with the offer of local screens for the meritorious local work contemplated.

The hospitality so characteristic of the South was greatly surpassed by Director I. M. Hirshblond. Following the Kiwanis meeting the directors held their first session since the Asbury Park convention.

At this meeting Sidney Samuelson was elected chairman of the directorate. A business matter of such importance was taken up that it was found necessary to call a special meeting for Tuesday of next week in New York City.

Proceeding this meeting the directors adjourned to the home of Mr. Hirshblond where they were royally entertained.

At seven o'clock the next morning the New Jersey board ascended the gangplank of a Toms River steamer. The power rates, Sunday opening legislation and the reduction in insurance rates were among the chief subjects discussed.

President Seider rendered a very enlightening report which was unanimously endorsed. This covered the recent state convention at Asbury Park, the latest developments in the arbitration and contract situation, financial expenditures engendered by the convention at Asbury Park and the organization's stand to aid Wellinbrink in his fight against the Apollo Exchanges.

The resignation of Henry P. Nelson as secretary was accepted with regret. His successor will be elected at Tuesday's meeting.

President Seider was given a further testimonial of the high esteem in which he is held by his organization when the M. P. T. O. of N. J. as a unit presented him with a beautiful diamond ring. This marks the second ring that Mr. Seider has received since the Asbury conclave. At the Hotel Monterey he was the recipient of the first precious stone from his board of directors.

The directors attending the meeting at Toms River included: President Seider, Vice-Presidents Chas. Hildinger, Peter Adams and Louis Rosenthal, Leon Rosenblatt, William Keegan, Sidney Samuelson, I. M. Hirshblond, Benjamin Schindler, I. A. Roth, Jacob Fox. The invited guests were: Ray Swain, superintendent of the tenement house department of the State of New Jersey; Attorney Norman H. Samuelson, Martin J. Star, Al Hodes

African Business

Nairobi, Africa, has two moving picture theatres, and Mombasa has one, that gives performances nightly, except Sunday. The larger Nairobi theatre, the "Royal," has two cinematographs and the others each have one machine. The theatres are only partially filled for single performances on Monday and Saturday nights, and other nightly performances do not have sufficient audiences to pay for the electric current consumed. The reason for this is the scattered European settlement on farms throughout the Colony, and the indifference of the greater number of the 4,000 townspeople to cinema attractions.

Business Manager's Status May Be Deciding Point in National Crisis

M. P. World's Story Official Record

Moving Picture World's story of the New Jersey convention in Asbury Park appearing in the July 11 issue has been adopted by the organization's board of directors as the official record of the affair, acknowledged to be the most important in exhibitor history in that state.

This is one of many flattering testimonials the World is constantly receiving, not only from exhibitor organizations but from producers and individual readers. The latest illustration speaks best for the World's decided supremacy over the nearest of its competitors and testifies for the stability of its slogan—"First in the Field."

KANSAS CITY PROJECTIONISTS

The annual controversy with the operators' union now is confronting Kansas City exhibitors. This year the operators are demanding an increase of 30 cents an hour—from $1.45 to $1.75. Several increases have been granted the operators in the last few years, but this year sentiment among exhibitors is decidedly against the increase. A meeting between exhibitors and operators probably will be held in a few days.

Future of M. P. T. O. A. Hinges on Directorate's Action in Detroit—Richey, Month Late, Not Yet in New Job—Full Attendance Assured

By Tom Waller

"WE'RE all going out tonight. No statements."

That was Sydney S. Cohen's reply today, July 29, to Moving Picture World's query:

"How about Detroit?"

The meeting of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be getting underway at the Hotel Wolvertine, Detroit, at one o'clock tomorrow, July 30, or just about the time the presses are being oiled to get out this issue. Thus the futility of even generalizing at this time.

It is confidently expected that every director, thirty in all, will be in attendance at Detroit. It is also understood that the unfinished business of the first meeting of the new directorate, held in Manhattan in June, will come up for a further grilling. Therein would seem to lie the future status of the national organization—whether it will remain undivided or whether the pre-convention groups will be revived.

The assurance of a complete attendance speaks volumes. We are informed that about 22 of the 30 directors responded to the roll call at the Hotel Roosevelt.

In New York after the first meeting there were received reports that Al Steffes, chieftain of the former mid-west insurgent group, had very strenuously pushed ex-Governor Preuss of Minnesota for the job of general director, or generalissimo of the exhibitors at a salary of $25,000 per annum. It was then gleaned that action in the filling of this reported position had been postponed. At about the same time the news came out that H. M. Richey had been appointed to a newly created and lesser job, that of business manager, at a salary of $17,500.

Richey, it was then said, was to take up his new duties with the M. P. T. O. A. about July 1 of this year. The fact that he had been mentioned, at least, was corroborated by the statement of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan, congratulating Richey in jumping from $10,000 to $17,500 and stressing the point that his old job with their organization was open to him any time he wanted to return.

July 1 did not find Richey in M. P. T. O. A. headquarters at 25 West 43rd street, Manhattan. Neither was he behind a desk at that address on July 29. There were on other dates in July reports that Richey would not come to New York in the new capacity until after he had put over Greater Movie Season in Michigan, which commences August 3.

The Detroit meeting tomorrow may find Richey one of the main subjects for discussion. Preuss, also, judging from Al Steffes' reported manifestations at the New York session, should afford the conventionees with verbal material.

The settlement of these two propositions, especially the lesser job, seems to hold the keynote to the outcome.

Board of Trade and Commerce Puts Over Independence Week

THERE was a meeting of the Committee of the Board of Trade and Commerce on Wednesday, July 29, at which Nathan Yamins of Fall River, Mass.; A. Julian Brylawski of Washington, D. C.; L. M. Sagal of New Haven, Conn.; Sydney S. Cohen of New York, members of the Committee of the Board of Trade and Commerce affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were present. Members of the Committee representing the Independent Motion Picture Association of America and on the Board Committee in assembly also were Frederick H. Elliott, general manager of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, W. E. Shallenberger, A. Carlos, J. Bellman and Harry Thomas.

The Committee endorsed the various activities carried out by the Committees in charge in connection with Board of Trade and Commerce functioning. The producers stating that the results of the formation of the Board were actually in operation and were of a most gratifying nature. Independent product was getting its chance; and the inroads of monopoly upon this industry were being slowly but surely checked.

A resolution by the Committee inaugurating an Independent Week, beginning Sunday, October 18, across the American continent, was unanimously adopted; and this Committee immediately precedes its Independence campaign by zoning America into six districts, to which will be sent special sales and publicity men, augmented by auxiliary staffs furnished by the Independent producers to make Independence Week known to the peoples of America and register for the theatre owners and producers during that week a record week's business.

Preceeding Independence Week the public will be introduced to the Cause and Purpose of Independence, to the Independent theatre owners backing Independence and to Independent product and their producers.

Each theatre in each of these zones will be visited many times and Independent product offered the theatre owner together with the greatest publicity campaign, national and local, to make the theatre owner in our industry independent, and to thereby assure for the people of America that their screens shall remain free for them to control through the patronage of what they desire upon their screens.

Independent producers promise that the theatre owners shall be given product of such quality and importance for presentation during Independence Week, that no longer will the theatre owner question the marketable value of Independent product.

The public will be told that it is the Independent product which has always furnished them with the entertainment they still talk about in pictures.

QUIETS PORTLAND AUDIENCE

Asa Leaming, film operator in the Rex Theatre, Portland, Oregon, proved himself a hero this week when a fire broke out in the booth. He calmly asked the audience of 150 persons to file out quietly, when fire broke out in one projection machine while Leaming was oiling the other. He was severely burned about the face and hands. The loss was about $1,000.

LOEW'S BOSTON FOUNTAIN

A miniature reproduction of a Venetian fountain has been installed in the southeastern corner of the main lobby of Loew's State Theatre in Boston. Its cost is estimated at more than $5,000.

President Coolidge Writes Hays Endorsement of Movie Season

IN a letter written from Swampscott, Mass., to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., President Coolidge declares:

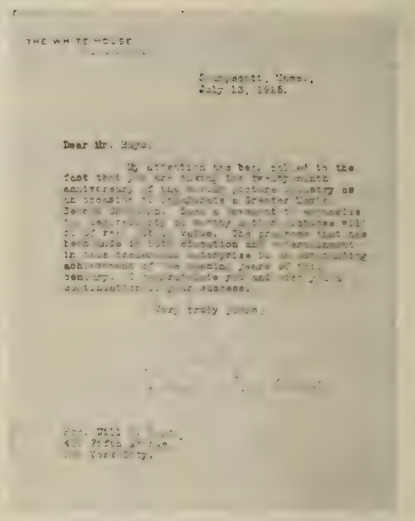
"My attention has been called to the fact that you are taking the twenty-ninth anniversary of the moving picture industry as an occasion to inaugurate a Greater Movie Season Campaign. Such a movement to emphasize the desirability of worthy motion pictures will be of real public value. The progress that has been made in both education and entertainment in this tremendous enterprise is an outstanding achievement of the opening years of this century. I congratulate you and wish you a continuation of your success.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) Calvin Coolidge.

Thirty newspapers with an aggregate daily circulation of 3,049,000 are now conducting the Greater Movie Season essay contest that has a trip for two around the world on the Red Star liner Belgeland and vacations for two in Los Angeles and Miami as the principal national prizes, the Hays organization also announces.

As a feature of the general opening celebrations, Monday, August 3, the latest announcement makes known, a radio pageant linking east and West has been arranged. From 10.15 P. M. to midnight, station WEAF (New York) will broadcast a special program to which famous artists of stage and screen and the combined orchestras of the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto and Piccadilly Theatres will contribute Hook-ups with distant stations will carry this program as far west as Davenport, Iowa, while on the same evening filmfolks have arranged an aerial demonstration from Los Angeles with radio greetings for the fans from their favorite players as an additional attraction

Naval co-operation secured at the commencement of activities has already gone into effect with the result that 6,500 Navy boards occupying picked street-locations throughout the country carry the Greater Movie Season poster that the U. S. Navy prepared.



THE WHITE HOUSE

Swampscott, Mass.,
July 13, 1925.

Dear Mr. Hays,

My attention has been called to the fact that you are taking the twenty-ninth anniversary of the moving picture industry as an occasion to inaugurate a Greater Movie Season Campaign. Such a movement to emphasize the desirability of worthy motion pictures will be of real public value. The progress that has been made in both education and entertainment in this tremendous enterprise is an outstanding achievement of the opening years of this century. I congratulate you and wish you a continuation of your success.

Very truly yours,

Farley Announces Big Schenectady Deal With Famous

Announcement by W. W. Farley, of Albany, N. Y., during the past week, that he had virtually completed negotiations with the Famous Players-Lasky Company, by which he would dispose of one-half of his holdings in four theatres in Schenectady, which he lately acquired, and two houses in Catskill, came as a veritable bombshell to other exhibitors in the Capital District during the past week. It is understood that the deal has been pending for some little time, and in fact the rumor to the effect that Famous Players would either build or buy in Schenectady, started soon after Mr. Farley bought the interests of William Shirley and William Rafferty in the State, Strand, Albany and Barcli Theaters in Schenectady. Previous to taking over these houses, Mr. Farley had also secured the Community Theatre in Catskill as well as the Smalley house there, these two being included in the group which has been sold to Famous Players.

Coincident with the announcement of Mr. Farley's successful negotiations with Famous Players, came another report to the effect that the company would either build or buy in Albany in the near future. This is of particular interest, in view of the fact that the Strand interests have just purchased a site in Albany, upon which to erect a $500,000 house at once.

During the past week, Famous Players also took over the Robbins chain of houses in Syracuse, Utica and Watertown, three of the leading upstate cities, Watertown with a population of about 30,000 having some of the most beautiful theatres in all northern New York, and being generally regarded as one of the best motion picture cities in the entire state.

Elliott Predicts Full Membership Of Independents Within Sixty Days

WITHIN sixty days, virtually every reputable independent producer, distributor and exchange in the country will be a member of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, according to Frederick H. Elliott, general manager of the organization. He bases his forecast on the number of new members recently elected and upon reports from seventeen Regional Directors who have been making a survey of the situation under his direction.

Since the election of Elliott as general manager June 15, thirty-five new members have been added to the organization, which now includes twenty-six producer-distributor members and sixty-four exchanges, a total of ninety organizations. The association has representation in every key center. New members taken in since July 15 include: First Graphic Exchange, Albany; Franklin Film Company, Boston; Franklin Film Company, New Haven; Progress Pictures, Inc., Charlotte, N. C.; Progress Pictures, Inc., Indianapolis; Progress Pictures, Inc., Oklahoma City; Skirboll Gold Seal Productions, Inc., Cincinnati; Renown Pictures, Buffalo; Independent Films, Inc., New Haven; American Feature Films, New Haven; Celebrated Players Film Exchange, Indianapolis; Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, Indianapolis; Pen and Pencil Films, New York; Imperial Pictures, Philadelphia; Astor Productions, Inc., Boston. Erwin S. Kleeblatt Press, Inc., N. Y., Associate members.

Elliott declares that the product being offered by the members of his association compares favorably with any which is being marketed to exhibitors for the new season.

"Our members," he declares, "realize that without good product they cannot hope to for play dates, regardless of how well disposed towards them exhibitors may be. Consequently they have gone to extraordinary expense in procuring suitable stories, stars and directors for their programs.

"The Independent producer, distributor and exchangemen all feel that this is to be their big year and they have spared no expense in making their pictures par with the best of them. I do not think anyone can dispute the fact that independent pictures for 1925-26 season are bigger and better than at any time."

BEIER NAMED MANAGER

Samuel E. Morris, of Warner Brothers, announced the appointment of Nat Beier as manager of the New York exchange. Mr. Beier was named a few weeks ago to have charge of New Jersey territory. In his new position he will continue to exercise supervision over that field. As New York manager he succeeds Robert S. Horsley, resigned.

British Unite

The formation of Cinema Productions, Ltd., in London this week is generally regarded as the initial move of the British film industry to strenuously contest the virtual American monopoly of their market by American distributors. This new organization will be the holding company for the participating companies, which continue their separate businesses. The chief figure behind the Cinema Productions is Sir Oswald Stoll. Americans will recall that, not long ago, he failed in an attempt to invade the United States market with British pictures.

In advocating this new British attempt to regain control of their own market Stoll has said that if the new company could be assured of 270 theatres in Great Britain a big studio could be supported. Now that the company has been formed it seems likely that he has nearly that number of theatres tied up.

Dispatches mention the formation of a similar company on the Continent but do not give its name. The possibility is that a working agreement is being made between Cinema Productions in England Ufa in Germany and Ober in France to exchange pictures and together "fight the American picture menace."

Canada Now Has Its Composers' Unit to Push Law

A new trouble now appears in the offing for Canadian exhibitors through the formal announcement at Toronto, Ontario, of the formation of the Canadian Performing Right Society, with headquarters in Toronto and H. T. Jamieson, a chartered accountant of that city, designated as president of the Canadian society to control the operations in Canada.

This announcement has been made by John Woodhouse of London, England, who is the director of the Performing Right Society of England. Woodhouse, incidentally, has just paid a visit to the headquarters at New York of the American Society of Authors and Composers for the purpose of seeking a co-operative working agreement with the American controlling body. He has announced that his society has just completed the establishment of a branch society in South Africa.

The object of the society is to protect and enforce the rights of composers and authors and other copyright owners in the Dominion, as they are protected and operated in Great Britain and other countries. Woodhouse states that the Canadian Copyright Act is reciprocal with the British Law in regard to the performing right in music and that it is the intention of the Canadian society to establish agencies for the purpose of collecting fees for the performance of music comprised in the extensive repertoire it controls, both in British and foreign music.

The Performing Right Society is very much in favor, he says, of the amendments which came up before the last session of the Canadian Parliament giving composers authority to collect royalties on copyrighted music presented in theatres of Canada. This did not actually become law but the Performing Right Society can go ahead with its own list, it is intimated. It is proposed to collect a flat royalty for the presentation of its controlled musical compositions in the theatres. Organized exhibitors in Canada are giving the matter their serious consideration.

Incorporations

A real midsummer slump made itself apparent during the past week in New York State in the number of companies incorporating in the erection of new theatres or in the motion picture business generally. All told, there were but four, and these, aside from one, carried low capitalization. The number is the smallest in months. The four, with capitalization and directors, follow: Arthur Kober, Inc., $15,000, Arthur Kober, Henry I. Myers, New York; Ruth Tree, of Hollis. Manlove Amusement Corporation, $15,000, Benjamin and Jennie Guttman, Brooklyn; Israel Sablove, New York City. Mineola Theatre, Inc., $150,000, Ralph W. Latham, Alexander D. Latham, J. Alfred Valentine, of Mineola. 2404 Amusement Co., Inc., capitalization not specified, Max Sheinart, Brooklyn; Frieda V. Goldstein, Tessie Goldberg, of New York City.

Recent new Massachusetts corporations are: Apollo Theatres, Boston; capital $150,000; John Henes and Christos Henes, both of Revere, and Triantos Rodes of Winthrop. University Theatres, Inc., Cambridge; capital $100,000; president and treasurer, Charles E. Hatfield of West Newton and Henry L. Whittlesey.

Miles Plans Six in Detroit

THE announcement of last week, to the effect that Charles H. Miles will erect six new theatres in Detroit, beginning immediately in the downtown section with the building of what will be known as "The New Miles" forms the most important bit of news in the Michigan territory since the amalgamation of the Kunsky theatres with Balaban and Katz about one year ago.

Detroit dailies devoted first page space last week to Mr. Miles' plans. The program has for its aim, according to Mr. Miles, the placing of a Miles theater within easy reach of every neighborhood in the Motor City. On top of this an additional seating capacity of 20,000 seats will be added to theatres already operated in Detroit by Miles. These include the Ferry, Field, Regent and Miles.

First of the group to be built has been tentatively named "The New Miles." It will be situated on Adams Avenue West, opposite the Hotel Tuller and in the immediate neighborhood of the present Kunsky theatres and those under construction. It will seat 3,500. That, it is planned, will be the only downtown unit in the new group. None will seat less than 3,000 and two will be designed to seat 4,000 persons. All will be devoted to motion pictures, some, however, sharing their programs with vaudeville.

Miles opened his first Detroit Theatre, the Miles, in 1910.

Atkinson's New Affiliation Is Officially Announced

AS was published exclusively in Moving Picture World a month ago, William E. Atkinson has resigned a vice-presidency of Metro-Goldwyn to become associated with Arthur H. Sawyer, Herbert Lubin and S. L. Rothafel in "the erection of a circuit of mammoth motion picture theatres in Greater New York."

In an official announcement of this change, made during the past few days, Atkinson is credited with stating:

Reason for Change

"On my return to New York from an extended vacation, Sawyer and Lubin invited me to become associated with them in their undertaking with Mr. Rothafel. While I naturally regret severing a business relationship which has lasted almost eleven years and which has been a source of great pleasure to me, due to the excellent men with whom I have been associated, a careful study of the enormous theatre project planned for, influenced me to tender my resignation as Vice-President and General Manager of the Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. I expect to take up my new work in August.

"It is my sincere belief that the erection of the "Roxy" at 50th Street and 7th Avenue, the world's largest motion picture theatre as the first link in the circuit of Roxy houses to be placed in carefully chosen locations in New York, Brooklyn and the Bronx, will revolutionize motion picture theatre history in the outlying districts of New York, at the same time bringing to the great host of local screen followers the type of entertainment which in some sections they have long been denied.

Lauds "Roxy"

"With Mr. Rothafel presiding as director for this circuit of huge capacity houses, his genius in matters of atmosphere, presentation and original entertainment will be given a scope heretofore impossible and never before attempted by those who supply diversion to the motion picture going thousands. The importance of a circuit of beautiful motion picture theatres, each one offering in its particular locality an original and distinctive style of entertainment conceived and personally sponsored by Roxy, is self-evident. Plans for the erection of the "Roxy" at 50th Street and 7th Avenue are rapidly being pushed, and we will have in our hands this week the first architectural sketches of Walter W. Ahlschlager, internationally famous specialist in the designing of modern theatres. Upon Rothafel's return from Canada where he is at present enjoying a vacation as a guest of the Canadian Government, details will be at hand concerning many of the original and remarkable features which he intends to incorporate in this huge theatre."

WILLIAM E. ATKINSON

Ruben Adds Thielens' Chain to His Circuit

Frank Thielens' vaudeville and picture theatres were sold this week. Jules J. Ruben bought the chain to combine it with the Ruben Circuit. The picture policy will be booked out of Balaban & Katz Midwest Agency, while the vaudeville will be continued to be looked after by the Western Vaudeville Managers Association.

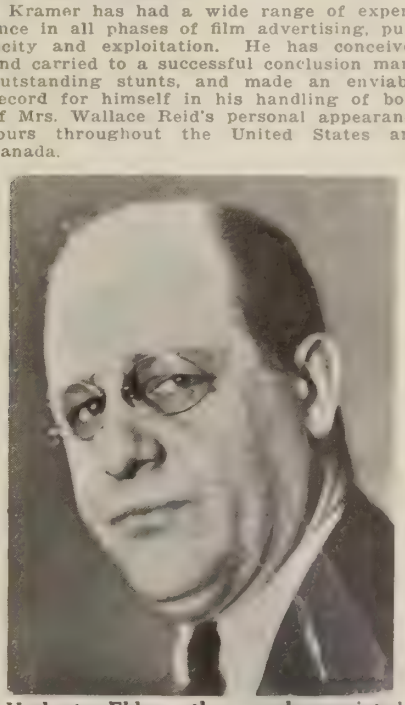
It is said Thielen received over $1,000,000 for his 50 per cent. interest. It was a cash deal, outside of about $400,000 in real estate. Thielen with the money, it is reported, bought the real estate on which the theatres are located. The lease to Ruben on the circuit is for fifteen years, with no raise in rentals over what Thielen has been paying. It is said Thielen will devote his entire time to the Central States Fair and Exposition located in Aurora, of which he is president.

The deal takes in the Strand, Fox, Rialto and Star in Aurora; Rialto, Crocker and Grove in Elgin; Orpheum, Princess, Crystal and a new theatre under construction in Joliet; Majestic, Bloomington; Orpheum, Galesburg, and Thielen's interest in the Lincoln Square in Springfield and his Midway in Rockford. Jules Ruben will be general manager of the entire circuit.

LOU KRAMER GETS BIG JOB WITH LUBLINER-TRINZ

Louis P. Kramer, chairman of the publicity committee of the Chicago "Greater Movie Season" campaign, has resigned from Universal to become director of publicity and advertising for Lubliner & Trinz. He will have charge of the exploitation of more than twenty-five big houses, including some of the finest in America.

Kramer has had a wide range of experience in all phases of film advertising, publicity and exploitation. He has conceived and carried to a successful conclusion many outstanding stunts, and made an enviable record for himself in his handling of both of Mrs. Wallace Reid's personal appearance tours throughout the United States and Canada.



Herbert Elder, the newly-appointed Southern division manager for Warner Brothers.

Philadelphia Exhibitors All Set for "Birdie"

The Philadelphia territory is to have a golf tournament, the first ever held by the motion picture industry there. The date has been set for August 18, at the Green Valley Country Club, and the tournament will be followed by a dinner dance in the evening.

Trophies to the value of $1,000 have already been contributed to the tournament by the following: Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America; M. E. Comerford; Wilmer and Vincent; Carr and Schad; Frank Buhler, managing director of the Stanley Company of America; Joe Snellenburg, manager of the Stanley Company's theatres in Atlantic City; Harry Jordan, manager of the B. F. Keith interests in Philadelphia; Adolph Zukor; William Fox, Carl Laemmle, Richard A. Rowland; Elmer R. Pearson; Oscar Neufeld, president of the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade; Len L. Berman, Independent Pictures; Dr. Walter G. Steumpfig of the Germantown theatre, and "The Exhibitor."

A committee on arrangements has been appointed composed of Dr. Walter G. Steumpfig; Jack Greenburg, secretary of the Film Board of Trade; Joe Cunningham (Roofus McGoofus); William Doyle, of the Universal Exchange; Paul Green, sports editor of "The Exhibitor," and George Griffin, the Green valley "pro."

ROTHSTEIN OFF ON HOLIDAY

Nat. G. Rothstein, director of publicity, advertising and exploitation for Film Booking Offices, leaves on Friday, July 31, for a four weeks' holiday at Cobbossee Colony, Maine. Mr. Rothstein will concentrate on golf during his sojourn in Maine, and expects to return to the directorial desk on September 1.

Coming and Going

Colvin W. Brown, vice-president in charge of distribution of Film Booking Offices, left on July 24, for brief tour of the exchanges at Chicago, Minneapolis and Detroit.

Abe Stone, of the Delaware and Arbor Hill Theatres in Albany, is back home after a 1,000-mile automobile trip to New York, Atlantic City, Washington, as well as the battlefields of Gettysburg.

Claude S. Jensen arrived in Seattle this week with his bride. The Jensens are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Von Herberg, Mr. Jensen's business partner.

Harold Mercer, of Rowland and Clark's Publicity Department, has departed for a two-weeks vacation, which he will spend camping near Auburn, N. Y.

A. C. Bromberg, president of the Progressive Pictures was an Oklahoma City visitor the past week, en route home from California.

Among the out-of-town exhibitor visitors to Pittsburgh during the past few days, were Charles F. Silveus, Eclipse Theatre, Waynesburg; Mr. Baer, Colonial, Altoona; Adolph Farkas, Rialto, Johnstown; Mr. Anton, of the Anton Theatre, Monongahela and Mr. Murray, of the Cambridge Springs Theatre.

L. W. Ramey, district manager for Fox was an Oklahoma City visitor the past week.

Edgar B. Hatrick, vice-president and general manager of International Newsreel and Cosmopolitan Productions, left this week for California in the interest of both organizations. He will be absent from New York about four weeks.

E. J. Smith, appointed Eastern sales manager for Warner Brothers.

E. J. Smith Is Made Warner's Eastern Sales Head

Five important announcements of additions to the field organization of Warner Bros. were made this week by Sam E. Morris, general manager in charge of distribution. Districts in the east, the south and the west are affected.

E. J. Smith, one of the best known sales executives in the industry, becomes eastern sales manager for Warner Bros., with headquarters in New York. Smith was with Universal many years. He organized the English offices for that organization and afterwards became sales manager. More recently he has been eastern district manager for F. B. O.

Elder in South

Herbert Elder is the new Warner southern division manager, with office in Atlanta. He has been with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation many years, occupying a post in the home office recently. He is thoroughly conversant with conditions in the South and enjoys a wide acquaintance with exhibitors.

George H. Dumond, who has been in the picture industry twenty-one years, becomes general manager of the theatres controlled by the Warner organization. For two years, up to about a year ago, he was with the Warners as home office representative. Recently he has been managing the State Theatre in Cleveland and had charge of production for all the Loew houses in that city. At one time he was general manager of the W. H. Clune interests in Los Angeles.

H. O. Martin, a veteran branch exchange manager, has been appointed manager of Warner Bros.' exchange in Washington. He formerly was manager of United Artists' office in Chicago and previous to that was Pathe manager in that city.

Another new member of the Warner organization is M. A. Hullings, who becomes branch manager at Los Angeles. Hulling also has had wide experience as a salesman and executive and he is familiar with Warner product, having been with a Warner franchise-holder several years.

New England Chain Planned by Friend

Arthur S. Friend, formerly associated with Famous Players, heads a New York syndicate that is reported as planning the establishment of a chain of large film and vaudeville theatres in New England and which has started the second of its enterprises at New London, Conn. At a cost of $650,000 Friend has acquired property on Main street, in the business section of New London, and there contemplates the erection of a large office building in which will be located a motion picture theatre.

A building such as the one planned for New London now is being erected in New Haven under the direction of Mr. Friend.

SANCTIONS COLORED SEGREGATION

Compelling negroes to go to the balcony of the New Palace Theatre, 1310 Franklin avenue, St. Louis, complies with a provision of the lease on the house that it shall play to "mixed audiences," Circuit Judge Miller ruled in refusing an injunction sought by the Franklin Amusement Company et al against the Little Theatre Corporation, lessee of the New Palace. The plaintiffs sought to compel the defendants to admit negroes to any part of the house.

Jersey Moves

Headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey on August 1 will remove from 727 Seventh avenue, New York City, to the sixth floor of 745 Seventh avenue, corner of 49th street. The new telephone numbers are: Circle 6625-6.

Shallenberger Says Exhibitors Pay the Producers' Overhead

ON the final analysis in the determining of price values which every exhibitor must take into consideration in order that he may establish the danger line between expense and income, the one item over and above all others is not so much the overhead of the theatre which he is managing, but the overhead the picture producer has to add on his product in order to make ends meet and insure a profit on his investment," W. E. Shallenberger, President of the Arrow Film Corporation, and one of the leading forces among the Independent Motion Picture Producers, said, when discussing the independent situation this week.

"As has been proven in many instances, no one producer has a monopoly in the making of good pictures. Today, as a result of experience and observation, the independent producer is employing the best brains and talent in turning out a product that will stand the acid test of public approval. He can sell his pictures for far less money and still make a legitimate profit because he has no carrying charge of inflated executive expense and home office maintenance to add to the cost of his releases. The average cost of distribution of pictures, it has been learned, runs between thirty and forty per cent of the gross income for the big combinations. This cost is double and triple what it costs any other large industrial organization to carry on its business.

"Who pays the freight? The question almost answers itself. In fact, there is but one answer. The exhibitor! It is he who guarantees this expense. The public only pays a certain stated admission fee. The cost of product to the exhibitor can only come down when the exhibitor picks and chooses his pictures instead of buying in block. Every condition in the industry is susceptible to betterment and every individual exhibitor is the best doctor for the ailment.

"Present day conditions are not creatures of a moment. The cancer that is slowly but surely eating into the vitals of the exhibitor began its deadly course years ago until now, through the indifference or apathy of the exhibitor, it has reached a point where the surgeon has to cut deep and quick to save the patient. The Declaration of Independence which sounded the death knell of tyranny and oppression to the Colonies, and resulted in the establishment of the Republic of the United States, was not a document created by the inspiration of the minute. On the other hand, years of suffering and threatened annihilation, political and financial, brought it about.

"It is the same story with every man who operates his theatre that he bought and owns as a result of toil and savings. If left to follow the course laid out for the motion picture industry by the monopolistic octopi, there will be no independent exhibitor in five years from now. The producer will operate your theatre and maybe, if you are lucky, you can get the job of janitor."

HOWELLS BUY IN DALLAS

Two of the Foy neighborhood houses in Dallas, Texas, the Colonial and Parkway, have been purchased by S. G. and H. O. Howell.

Ten-Year Fight

Despite the protests against the erection of a theatre at Harvard Square, Cambridge, for more than ten years, Mayor Quinn has stated that he will issue a permit after the playhouse has been built and has been approved by state authorities. An operating company, to be known as Cambridge Theatres, Inc., will conduct the theatre. County Treasurer Charles E. Hatfield is head of the enterprise.

Films Wall Street's Latest Toy, Chadwick Tells Independents

DECLARING motion pictures the new plaything of Wall Street, I. E. Chadwick, president of the Independent Motion Picture Association, asserted in an address to members of the assocation at a meeting in the Hotel Astor on July 29 that production, distribution and exhibition of films are being made secondary considerations.

"The main idea of the manipulators today is rigging the stock market," he said. "The whole thing is a repetition of what happened in the steel business, the automobile industry and in other lines where the American ideal of industrial combination and centralization lent itself to the purpose of money power. Steel, automobiles and the other big industries have been stabilized and standardized and so Wall Street needs a new toy.

"Motion pictures supply that need, so they are going about the work of playfully rigging the market for an overnight rise of anywhere from ten to fifteen points. In order to do this, they have to have something to build on and theatre control satisfies that necessity. It is all being done to create a structure on which they can sell stock issues to the public, thereby rigging the market.

"It stands to reason that men who can make millions simply by rigging the stock market do not care about the relatively small profits to be made out of legitimate picture production, distribution and exhibition.

"Out in Los Angeles, where picture production is the main thought, they believe that the picture is the thing. They know nothing whatever of the distribution or exhibition phases which, in the final analysis, are the really important ones. For no matter how good a picture may be, unless it is distributed and exhibited it is worthless. And these producers who are making pictures and turning them over to the big companies honestly believe they are creating fine things, individualistic and artistic.

"As practical picture men and business men, we know that this is not true. Already the dominant forces of this industry have standardized picture production to the point where individuality no longer counts. It is a repetition of what happened to the individuals in steel and automobiles. They simply become spokes in the big wheel of centralization, from the highest to the lowest among them. And the same thing is becoming true in the picture production field.

"It is a regrettable thing that such things are permitted to happen in this country, for industrial combination and centralization stifle the opportunity and individuality of our children and the future generations. And some day we will pay heavily for it.

"The independent steel companies and the other industries which were the playthings of Wall Street lost their individuality because they did not fight—and the success of the independent picture industries, production, distribution and exhibition, depends entirely on the amount of fight they put up. I cannot too strongly urge upon these elements and especially the members of this association the necessity of meeting the opposition with the same weapons they use against us. We must meet them with the same forces and our forces must be equal to theirs in numbers and intelligence. It is a game in which we must have the same number of players as they have and it is up to us to get them.

"To do this it will be necessary for us to make sacrifices, to forget selfish interests and to put all of our power into the punch for defense and independence."

Truly Obstructed!

The Castle Creek Theatre, La Voye, Wyoming, has been reopened by C. H. Reeder. Mr. Reeder was ordered, along with the rest of the town of La Voye, to move. The order was given by Judge Kennedy of the U. S. District Court of Cheyenne as the result of a petition filed by an oil company stating that residents of La Voye were occupying their lands. All the buildings of the town were moved for a distance of three miles. Reeder moved his theatre building along with the rest of the structures.

Seider Tells M. P. T. O. Exhibitor Requirements

What exhibitors need in the way of advertising and publicity helps from producers and distributors was outlined to members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their weekly luncheon on July 23 at the White Horse Tavern, by the speaker and guest of honor of the day, Joseph M. Seider, president of the New Jersey M. P. T. O. Mr. Seider was introduced by John Spargo of the Exhibitors' Herald, the guest "barker" for the occasion

Mr. Seider told the advertisers that exhibitors want more publicity stories on the pictures and not so much on the stars and the players. He also described some of the wrongs which he said the exhibitors suffered, stating that in many instances it was impossible to get their grievances heard and adjusted.

At the close of his speech, C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays organization took issue with Mr. Seider and the inability of exhibitors to get their grievances adjusted and a heated argument ensued

F. Wynne-Jones of the UFA was introduced to the motion picture advertisers as the speaker at the next weekly luncheon.

It was voted to change the meeting place from the White Horse Tavern to the new Hofbrau House at Fifty-second street and Broadway, which can furnish more ample space for the meetings.

Vice-President Charles Barrell presided.

HARRY M. WARNER RETURNS TO NEW YORK

Accompanied by Mrs. Warner, Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, returned to New York last week from Hollywood, where he had been inspecting production work on the attractions to be released on the company's 1925-26 schedule.

Skouras' Six Months Net $126,193

Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., during the first six months of 1925 had net earnings of $126,193.67 before deducting federal income taxes but after making allowances for interest, depreciation, expenses, etc. On July 3 quick assets totaled $426,596.17 including $310,051.50 in cash and current liabilities but $116,544.67. The net worth was placed at $2,111,159.44.

The Board of Directors July 24 voted a dividend of 40 cents per share on the Class B stock in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents a share on outstanding A stock. The dividends will be paid August 1 to stockholders of record July 25. Net earnings for the first two quarters of the year were: First quarter, $58,979.17; second quarter, $67,214.50. The outlook for the last six months is very good. A stock reached a new high record July 25 closing at $43 per share.

Building Competition Tense in Kansas City

Hardly had the announcement of the complete rebuilding of the Warwick Theatre, large suburban house of Kansas City, been made then construction of a 3,000-seat motion picture theatre, to cost more than $200,000, is announced, the location to be within one block of the Warwick—at Thirty-ninth and Main streets—making the seventh new theatre within two months planned for Kansas City.

The new house is being promoted by George Trinastich, who will operate it, and R. L. Willis, owner of the property. The house will be patterned after the Isis Theatre of Kansas City and be somewhat larger. The theatre will have a 65-foot frontage and be 165 feet deep. Trinastich, president of the Blackstone Amusement Company, which operates the Isis, will take a 25-year lease on the new house. Construction of the theatre will begin in twenty days, it is said, and will be open on New Year's Day. The theatre will be under the same management as the Isis, Jack Roth being managing director of both houses. The new house will maintain a first run policy. Plans for the building include a cooling system, inside lobby, nursery, smoking rooms for men and women and a large check room.

Thirty Try

The state assembly chamber at the Capitol in Albany was the scene during the past week of civil service examinations in connection with the later appointment of reviewers to the New York State Motion Picture Commission. More than thirty men and women took the examination. The position pays $1,600 a year in the upstate counties and $1,800 in the metropolitan district, traveling expenses, of course, being allowed.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Rural New Yorker Lets the Fans in on "Economy;" "Pans" Free Show

Suppose that you were running a theatre and getting 25 cents admission, that someone inquired just how many reels he could see for 15 cents, and that after permitting him to witness the entire show, hear him remark that it had been rotten? Wouldn't you feel justified in committing murder and then later on look to the jury to acquit you? That is the belief of John Mattice, who with his brother Manley runs the Novelty Theatre in Middleburg, a town of 900.

Mr. Mattice was along Film Row during the week and told of the rather unusual occurrence. It seems that Mrs. Mattice looks after the ticket booth, with either Manley or John keeping track of things inside. A young stranger approached and asked how much the admission was. Upon being informed that it was 25 cents, he inquired how many reels he could see for 15 cents. Mrs. Mattice suggested his entering and inquiring of her husband inside. This the young fellow did, slipping quietly into a seat and coming out an hour or so later, turning to Mrs. Mattice and saying, "Rotten show."

Pictures will continue at Harmanus Bleecker Hall throughout the fall and winter, according to an announcement made during the past week, denying a report that stock would hold forth at the theatre during the fall, following its closing at the Capitol Theatre.

County fairs aren't what they used to be, according to Jake Rosenthal of the Rose Theatre in Troy. He knows what he is talking about when it comes to county fairs, for in the dim and distant past, when dollars were few and far between, Mr. Rosenthal worked at many a county fair and slept on the ground at night with newspapers as his only covering. He isn't a bit ashamed of the fact and whenever he becomes a bit reminiscent he indulges in stories of the times when he sold matches on the streets of Troy or worked an entire day for something like 50 cents.

Many improvements are being installed at the Gateway in Little Falls these days. A brand new electric sign was placed during the past week in readiness for the reopening of the house on August 1. Bob Wagner, who handled the house before it was acquired by the Schines, is still busily engaged in getting outstanding stock, having bought something over 700 of the 750 outstanding shares.

According to a report that has reached Albany, the Schine brothers, with headquarters in Gloversville and who now have about sixty-five theatres in New York State, are planning to create divisions of from twelve to fifteen theatres, these to be under the direction of a district manager who will be held responsible for the business done by the houses. L. J. Carkey, who has been handling the three Schine houses in Carthage, has just been appointed a district manager for the Schines and will be located hereafter in Little Falls. George J. Carkey will succeed him as manager of the Carthage houses.

W. W. Mase has a 150-seat theatre in Prattsville which is now running one day a week with admission prices of 25 and 35 cents. Mr. Mase was in town during the past week and said that while his theatre was not keeping him very busy, fortunately he had a garage and what he lost in the summer from the theatre he more than made up on the automobile traffic.

Ben Apple, former manager of the American and King theatres in Troy, is looking for a position as manager of some picture theatre and may leave Troy permanently. Mr. Apple is one of the old timers in the game, knowing the business from start to finish, and will no doubt locate with some chain in the near future.

Unless you know Walter Roberts well, and Mr. Roberts, by way of introduction, is manager of the Troy Theatre in the Collar City, don't attempt to borrow his umbrella on a rainy night. The umbrella is one of Mr. Roberts' most treasured possessions, having been presented him by employes of his theatre some time ago. Whenever Mr. Roberts loans the umbrella, he even has to secure the consent of Mrs. Roberts, which isn't the easiest thing in the world, at least so far as the umbrella is concerned.

The Majestic in Elmira, which has been closed for the past month or so, is scheduled to reopen the first week in August with Benjamin Berinstein still looking after things generally.

Jimmy Rose, who has just taken over the King Theatre in Troy, must have been indulging in a flight of temperament when he ordered the signs that have just been placed in the lobby. Right over the exit there appears one sign which reads: "Enter the realm of joyousness and happy moments." Someone inquired of Mr. Rose if the sign was intended for those leaving the theatre. Another sign reads: "Keep posted. Watch our business grow."

Lew Fischer of the Bradley Theatre in Fort Edward has started making expensive repairs to the house, having let a contract for a new lighting system as well as the redecorating of the interior. The old seats have been taken out and are to be replaced by fine leather upholstered ones. In connection with pictures, vaudeville is also to be shown.

As Exhibitor Tweedy of Mechanicsville was talking last week to Harold Filkins, a salesman for F. B. O. out of Albany, the latter was stricken with an attack of appendicitis, so acute that it became necessary for Mr. Tweedy to rush him to his home in Albany. A doctor was called and after diagnosing the case, Mr. Filkins was hurried to a hospital and operated upon.

Buffalo, N. Y.

Perhaps the biggest news of the week is that Charlie Bowe, veteran theatre man of Buffalo, where he now manages the Frontier, is to be married this fall. The news has "shocked" both exhibitors and exchange men, but it only goes to prove that you can't keep a good man down. Charlie was "on the job" 'way back in the days when they used to show films of speeding trains in stores in lower Main street.

H. P. Lally of the Regent and Capitol in Dunkirk, N. Y., is down in Florida taking a peek at that much boosted real estate.

Capacity houses were the order of the first week of the new Palace Theatre in Lockport, N. Y., and Manager George T. Cruzen was showered with compliments on the splendid staging of the program. It was Old Home Week in the Lock City and there were thousands of visitors in town, all of whom were enthusiastic over the splendid temple of amusement.

The musicians' union in Jamestown, N. Y., has started something. The men have been receiving $45 for a seven-day week. Now they want the same amount for a six-day week and $9 extra for the seventh day. The exhibitors will fight the move.

Vincent R. McFaul, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, has returned from a motor tour to the Thousand Islands and is all set for the busiest season in the history of the big Buffalo house.

The Regent Theatre in Corning, N. Y., which has been closed for some time, is being renovated for formal opening some time in September. The house is to be operated by the J. Meyer Schine Theatre Corporation, which also controls the State and Princess in the same city. The house will be under the direct supervision of Charles J. Rose, district manager.

The mayor and members of the city council of Buffalo have been served with an order directing them to show cause in Supreme Court why they should not be compelled to issue a permit to the Riverside Amusement Company for a picture theatre at 822-824 Tonawanda street. The council has refused the permit. Property owners near the site objected to the house.

Pittsburgh

In the current issue of "Barney's Blue Book" Carl Maple's house organ in the interests of his Barney's Theatre, Point Marion, Pa., Carl devotes a front-page editorial to his testimony that he is enjoying good business this year because, instead of going to Canada and letting his theatre run into the ground with any old show as he did in former summers, believing there was no business, this year he stayed on the job, made the shows even better than in the cold weather, paying special attention to cooling the theatre, etc., and as a result the people of Point Marion have even increased their attendance during the hot weather, as those he has talked to have told him that Barney's Theatre is really the nicest place there is in Point Marion in the hot weather.

Louis K. Sidney, managing director of Loew's Aldine in Pittsburgh and also Loew's State in St. Louis, made one of his hurry-up trips to the Missouri town during the week of July 20.

Mr. Underhill, who conducts an airdome at Clayville, was in town recently and imparted the information that he is contemplating the erection of a new picture theatre in that town, which he expects to have ready for opening when the cooler weather comes.

Walter Caldwell, resident manager of Loew's Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, recently made an automobile trip from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh which kept him on the road for forty-eight hours, due to tire trouble and other grief.

Russell Bovim, assistant manager at Loew's Aldine Theatre in Pittsburgh, is in Harrisburg presiding as manager of Loew's Regent Theatre while the resident manager, Sidney Gates, is vacationing.

W. C. Ballard, owner of the Pictureland Theatre, Jane Lew, W. Va., is erecting a new 300-seat theatre which he expects to open late in August, at which time he will discontinue the operation of his present house. A name for the new house will be selected via the contest route.

Albany, N. Y.

All Glens Falls is looking forward to a battle royal which is promised as soon as Fred Mossert opens his new theatre. The work is progressing satisfactorily, the past week having seen the completion of the balcony.

A new theatre is assured for the village of Coxsackie. Ground has already been broken and the house will be rushed to completion.

Although L. L. Connors will retain the theatre which he has been running for some time past in Cambridge, he will leave the management almost entirely to Mrs. Connors and the boys. Mr. Connors has just become associated with the local F. B. O. office and as a salesman will cover the section north of here.

Mike Kallet, who runs the Strand in Rome, is enjoying himself these days at his summer home in Old Forge. Harry Lazarus of the Auditorium in Kingston may not have a summer home, but you can bet your bottom dollar that he will have two enjoyable weeks this month with Mrs. Lazarus and their 4-years-old son at Lake George.

Exhibitors, film salesmen and in fact everyone connected with the business is to receive an invitation to the Film Board of Trade outing which will be held on September 15 at Luther's Hotel at Saratoga Lake. It is expected that about thirty automobiles will leave this city on the day of the outing. There will be a baseball game between the exchange managers and the salesmen. Gene Tunney, the fighter, will be in training at Luther's at the time, and will go several rounds for the entertainment of representatives from Film Row. The entertainment committee consists of J. H. MacIntyre, Jack Krause, Leon Medem and Herman Stearn.

Jake Rosenthal is putting on professional try-outs each Friday night in Troy and packing his house to the very doors. Everyone is called upon to chalk down 15 cents admission, even the children. Although Mr. Rosenthal's house is ordinarily classed as a 10-cent one, he is now getting 15 cents four nights a week and will probably make it a straight week soon.

When Tom Bush and F. A. Sullivan, owning a theatre in Middleburg, appeared before the Arbitration Board here last Monday, they took no chances and were accompanied by a lawyer. The men have leased the theatre to Robert Fleck and are now engaged in handling a garage. After explaining matters to the Arbitration Board the dispute was smoothed out to the satisfaction of all.

Mrs. Francis McGraw, long the proprietor of the Gem Theatre in Little Falls, will not lose her position even though the Schines have taken over the house. The theatre is still running and the Schines have engaged Mrs. McGraw to remain at the helm.

Sam Hochstim, a well known exhibitor in Hudson, may some day become a producer. His brother Edward is employed in one of the local exchanges. He admitted the other day that such was the aim of both himself and his brother, and then cited the Warner Brothers as an example. The two Hochstims are certainly hustlers and the dream of today may eventually become the reality of tomorrow.

Massachusetts

A strike of union employes is in progress at the Strand Theatre in New Bedford. Injunction proceedings have been instituted by the operating company to prevent picketing.

George Elmore, popular New England exhibitor, now is in charge of Gordon's Central Square Theatre in Cambridge.

Kansas City

Louis Charninsky is a much occupied man at the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City. Besides directing the orchestra Louie has been appointed temporary manager to succeed W. L. Fenny, who resigned. Louis also sings a funny song in connection with a stage number, attends to buying the first-run pictures and looks after things in general. Fenny has not announced his plans for the future.

A fourth arrest in the bombing of the World-In-Motion Theatre, Kansas City, last February was made in Kansas City last week. G. F. Bunker, former picket at the theatre shortly before it was wrecked and a member of the Kansas City Motion Picture Operators' Protective Union, was arrested and held for preliminary hearing.

The New Theatre, one of the oldest buildings in Salina, Kans., will give way soon to a seven-story hotel structure.

Fred Sears, who for several years has managed various theatres on the Columbia Amusement Circuit, has been appointed manager of the Empress Theatre, Kansas City. The Empress is operated by the Columbia Amusement Circuit.

Harry Kieffer now is with the Midland Theatre Circuit, operating the Midland and Royal theatres in Hutchinson, Kans., while G. C. Craddock, formerly with First National, has taken over the Macon Theatre of Macon, Mo. I. Wienshienk, former owner of the Penn Valley Theatre, has joined the First National force, being in charge of the accessory department.

H. L. ("Shake") Davidson of the Burford Theatre, Arkansas City, Kans., exceeded even his own expectations the other day in attempting to exploit "The Spirit of the U. S. A." The "plot" was to have several army "75s" drawn through town, heavily placarded, but an hour before mounting the signs the horse ran away and scattered signs for eight blocks. "As far as attracting attention is concerned, I probably would have been arrested had there been any more attracted," said "Shake."

R. Schuster, manager of the Opera House, Green Springs, Ohio, who suffered painful injuries because of a can of gasoline exploding in his hand while on a recent camping trip, is reported well on the road to recovery, although still confined to the hospital. The Opera House was closed on account of the accident, but present indications point to reopening during the early autumn.

William M. Brown, who has been manager of Keith's 105th Street Theatre, Cleveland, ever since the house originally opened in 1921, has quit the game to look after other interests in the East. Frank Hines, who has been assistant to Manager John F. Royal at Keith's Palace, Cleveland, is in charge of the 105th street house.

The new Ritz Theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, was formally opened late in July and the event was marked with unusual celebrating throughout the city. Bombs were exploded in the air shortly after 7 p. m., and there were other manifestations of various kinds in celebration of the event. Harry ("Tim") Roberts owns the new house.

The Toledo Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, is to be practically rebuilt, according to Ed Sourbeir of Indianapolis, who owns the house. The entire interior is to be torn out, and within the four remaining walls complete remodeling is to take place, including the very latest in equipment and decorations. The seating capacity will be increased to 1,200. Plans call for completion of the job by September 1, at a total cost of $100,000. The house, when opened, will be looked after by Howard Feigley, who has been in charge of the Rivoli, Toledo.

The Majestic Theatre, Sidney, Ohio, which has been in the hands of a receiver for some time, is to be sold, according to an order from the court.

The Marlow Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, is now under management of Leo Gardner, who was originally connected with one of the film exchanges at Washington, D. C., but more recently in charge of a house in Tennessee.

Howard Betz, who pilots the destiny of the Dreamland Theatre, Minerva, Ohio, is enjoying a fishing trip in Canadian waters. Another exhibitor who is trying his hand with the rod is George Moore, who owns houses at Bucyrus and Belleview, Ohio, while Bert Botzum of the Strand Theatre, Canton, and the Orpheum, Akron, is breaking in on the fishing game, having recently purchased a summer cottage on the shore of one of the lakes in the vicinity of Akron.

Denver

The Colorado Theatre has opened with a premiere showing of "The Scarlet West," a Colorado-made picture produced by Frank J. Carroll. There is more interest among local exhibitors over this picture than has been evidenced for a long time, especially over on the western slope of Colorado where the picture was made. At Mancos and Cortez, just a few miles from where many of the scenes were made, the picture has been booked solid for two weeks. These towns have a population of about 500 each.

Mrs. Lena Roth, mother of Joe Roth, manager of the Isis Theatre, submitted to a serious operation last Monday. Her condition at the present time is reported to be very serious. The attending physicians hold little hope for her recovery.

Max Schubach is back after a pleasant vacation in California. Max is associated with the Midwest Theatres Company, operating a chain of theatres in the Denver territory.

Among the exhibitors visiting Denver during the past week were I. C. Floersheim, Pastime Theatre, Springer, N. M.; Paul Dunn, Jewel Theatre, Valentine, Neb., and R. V. Mallory, Rialto Theatre, Brighton, Colo.

Patrons attending the Ogden Theatre, the largest suburban house in Denver, are commenting on the wonderful "new organ" just installed. Jacob Eppler, the manager, announces that it is the same organ they have been listening to for years but that the entire instrument has been overhauled and a new console installed. The organist, Carlos Hahnewald, now has an instrument which will convey to his listeners music commensurate with the ability he possesses.

The Victory Theatre has made a change in policy. Rick Ricketson announces that the Victory will show only the very best pictures available, each picture running for a period of several weeks. The new policy started with "The Ten Commandments," which will be followed by the latest United Artist releases.

O. J. Thomas, theatre owner of Raton, N. M., has returned after his first trip as sales representative for Film Booking Offices. Mr. Thomas reports his new experience as very interesting and satisfactory. He has proven to the boys his ability to sell as well as he can buy, which is going some.

Chicago

The status of the Lynch theatre circuit and Lubliner & Trinz affiliation is that the papers have been drawn up, according to an executive of the circuit, and await the final signatures of the principals of both circuits. A few minor points are being ironed out and it is expected that within the next few weeks the latest acquisition to the Balaban & Katz interests will be approved.

No arrests have been made in the Stratford Theatre robbery of the Cooney circuit. Manager Joe McKeown and Miss Elizabeth Kelly, cashier of the house, were taking the money to the office of the theatre from the box-office when three young bandits stuck guns at them, grabbed the money bag from Miss Kelly, ran downstairs to the street and made their escape in a motor car.

Herman Stern and Barney Balaban of Balaban & Katz have returned from a business trip to New York where it is reported that the negotiations with the Paramount interests over the Chicago situation are in progress, with rumors that the B. & K. circuit will soon put over a working agreement with Famous Players-Lasky.

Balaban & Katz will soon open the Uptown Theatre, their big new de luxe house on the North Shore, on August 3 and the merchants of that district will have a week's celebration beginning the same day, with parades, shop decorations and electric illuminations in honor of the event. "The Desert Flower" is the tentative selection for the opening bill. The house personnel will be announced in a few weeks. The house will seat 5,000, being the largest of the Balaban & Katz houses.

Lubliner & Trinz announce the work on the four new houses going up for the circuit as progressing satisfactorily and it is expected they will be finished within the scheduled time set for the house. The Harding Theatre on the West Side will be ready this fall, as will the new Belmont on Belmont avenue. The State on the West Side and Tower on East 63rd street will not be ready until in the spring of next year. When these are completed the circuit will have twenty-three houses.

U. J. Hermann, manager of the Cort, has returned from Hopedale, Labrador, where he left the Donald McMillan Polar expedition.

Will Singer, manager of the State Lake, and Mort H. Singer, Jr., son of the manager of the Orpheum Circuit, are in Wisconsin on a fishing trip. Floyd Stokes came up from the Rialto at St. Louis to look after the business for Mr. Singer while he is away.

Another new movie theatre for the Northwest Side will go up soon at 3163 to 3177 Elston avenue, as contracts have been let for a house to cost $250,000 and seat 1,000. A. Shatz will build the house and has leased it to G. A. Stathis, William Alexander and Alexander Geranios.

Aaron Jones of Jones, Linick & Schaefer has returned from an extended sojourn in the East where he was the guest of Adolph Zukor.

S. R. Claggett, manager of the Calo, will spend two weeks of his vacation touring the East with Mrs. Claggett.

but she will never become a favorite here. Some of her former pictures are foolish but this one will please the average audience. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

IN HOLLYWOOD WITH POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (6,750 feet). Star cast. Personally think this better than the first Potash and Perlmutter picture; cast is perfection itself, and Constance and Norma Talmadge have bigger parts than expected. Had I known this, would have said something about them in the advertising. But I'm sorry to say that our people can't appreciate this type of picture, so we lost money. Tone, okay. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

LOVE'S WILDERNESS. (7,057 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Very good picture. Interesting. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw merchants and farmers, town, widely scattered, 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

NEW TOYS. (7,811 feet). Stars, Richard Barthelmess, Mary Hay. Good program attraction, but not up to Dick's standard. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw conservative class, city of 22,000. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

ONE WAY STREET. (5,600 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Pretty good program picture. Nothing big, however. The cast really made it. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. This is a good kid picture but for adults it isn't very much. It's a good comedy picture. Good tone. Draw all classes, town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valiant, Oklahoma.

PERFECT FLAPPER. (7,000 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Just as good as "Flaming Youth." Contains more comedy than "Flaming Youth." Draws merchants and better class of people. Appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. F. L. Wadsworth, Jr., Airdome Theatre (350 seats), Tuskegee, Alabama.

TALKER. (7,861 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Very nice picture and pleased well. Drew very good against hot weather and carnival. Lewis Stone in any picture gives assurance of at least satisfying quality. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

Fox

MAN HUNTER. Star, William Farnum. An old re-issue. Will get by and that is about all, if you have it bought. It will not create any excitement when you run it. If you have not bought it, let it alone. Tone, yes. Not much appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

OH YOU TONY. (6,802 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Mix is always good drawing card for me here and this is one of his best. O. G. Odell, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

RAINBOW TRAIL. (5,251 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Patrons enjoyed it—it was really good; but why don't someone give Tom Mix a few lessons on how to dress for his parts? People are getting thoroughly disgusted with the way their favorite western star dresses as a "dude" cowboy. We hear their comments as they come out. Yes for appeal, Sunday and as special. C. E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre (600 seats), Kalispell, Montana.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (5,578 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Four days to big business. Picture liked by all. Best Mix in a long time. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A good western that lives up to the standard of 1925 Jones pictures. Tone okay.

VAN.

Appeal 85 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw masses, city of 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A fine western with all the action one could desire. All you have to do is say Buck Jones and then stand back and watch them pile in. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

VAGABOND TRAIL. (4,502 feet). Star, Buck Jones. This is a real virile western that will be eaten up by any crowd of western fans. Seemed to please very well; however, didn't think it was as good as previous films. Good tone. Appeal 85 per cent. Sunday or special, no. Draw working class, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WARRENS OF VIRGINIA. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Showed on the Fourth of July and fitted nicely to that date. It is okay. Good tone. Appeal, 85 per cent. No for Sunday, yes as special. Draw miners, few farmers, town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WARRENS OF VIRGINIA. (6,000 feet). Star cast. A mighty fine picture of the Civil War times. Special, yes. O. G. Odell, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

WINNER TAKE ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Here is one that makes them sit up and take notice; this is a pip of a good picture. Lost money, but it was no fault of the picture but because the exchange failed to send us any paper. Tone, okay. Appeal a hundred per cent. No for Sunday. Draw small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

Metro-Goldwyn

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Four days to fair business. Picture well patronized by the kids. A different Coogan story. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

NAME THE MAN. (8 reels). Star cast. Good. Pleased. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. J. J. Parker, Cozy Theatre (200 seats), Merom, Indiana.

NAVIGATOR. (5,600 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Very good picture; good stunts, plenty of laughs. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw farmers and merchants, town 1,650, widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

NELLIE THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Good. Tone, no. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. College, resort and farmer class town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. J. J. Parker, Cozy Theatre (200 seats), Merom, Indiana.

OUR HOSPITALITY. (6,220 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. A fair comedy; but I have seen better ones. Tone none. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers, town 750. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (360 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

PRAIRIE WIFE. (6,687 feet). Stars, Dorothy Devore, Herbert Rawlinson. We were surprised to see how this picture came back for second night's run: The name had a drawing power with us and yet picture is not bad. Dorothy Devore put a nice angle in it. Good Saturday night show. Tone Okay. Appeal 80 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

RED LILY. (6,975 feet). Star, Ramon Navarro. Most people thought this would be another Apache picture and stayed home. Turned out fine with a ghost of an original idea in the sewer dodges through the underworld of Paris. Not bad. Tone, punk. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

REVELATION. (8,732 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A very nice little picture that pleased the majority. The story is good and so is the acting. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. D. C. Smith, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Fordyce, Arkansas.

SINNERS IN SILK. (5,750 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Played to two days good business. A very fine show that was liked by all. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

TRUE AS STEEL. (7 reels). Star cast. Fine. Drew a big crowd and pleased them. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. J. J. Parker, Cozy Theatre (200 seats), Merom, Indiana.

WAY OF A GIRL. (5,000 feet). Star, Eleanor Boardman. This will please because it has a very unusual plot and also some very good trick photography. Because of its unique features it will be very acceptable to your audience. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

WILD ORANGES. (7 reels). Star cast. A fair program picture especially for the place where action is wanted. Good tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Special no. Draw miners, few farmers, town 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

A MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Just ordinary picture as we could see it. Dix deserves something better. I'd like to see him in a real big picture. Believe me he could put it over. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

ADVENTURE. (6,602 feet). Stars, Tom Moore, Pauline Starke. A very pleasing and entertaining adventure picture. Lots of humor in it and holds together nicely. Kind of a picture that every one likes. Advertising on it is not good; too many black natives. Work of Beery and Raymond Hatton is fine and causes lots of amusement. Good tone and appeal. Draw general classes, city 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

ALASKAN. (6,758 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. James Oliver Curwood and the Paramount trademark drew a particularly good crowd to see "The Alaskan." The picture did the rest. Consider this a one hundred per cent. program picture having a good moral tone that is suitable for Sunday but is not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

BIG BROTHER. (7,080 feet). Star, Owen Moore. Here's a good picture and has a fine appeal. Moore and Bennett the kid are real good. Fine tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Johl C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

CALL OF THE CANYON. Star cast. One of Zane Grey's stories and it was sure fine. Good for two days in any town and it will stand all of the advertising you can give it. O. G. Odell, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

CHARMER (6,076 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Think that this is the best that Miss Negri has appeared in for a long time. Several of my patrons told me that this was a good one —something very unusual for them to boost this star. Small town patronage. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777 feet). Star cast. Very good production. Tone and appeal good. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farmers and merchants, town 1,650, widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Another story of a man gone wrong made to go right. Meighan always pleases here. Nice comedy mixed up in this, which helps any picture. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sundays, no as special. Draw all classes, town 600. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

CONTRABAND. (6,775 feet). Stars, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery. Good production. Tone and appeal good. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw merchants and farmers, widely scattered town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Stars, Bebe Daniels, Tom Moore. Pleasing program picture; nothing to get excited about, but it will get by all right. I had no bouquets, but as I had no cabbages either, I assume that it passed along all right. Moral tone good. Sunday yes. Special no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star cast. Not so good. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. All classses town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. J. J. Parker, Cozy Theatre (200 seats), Merom, Indiana.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star cast. Truly a good picture, but title does not draw well, but with lots of exploitation you should be able to make some dough on this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. D. C. Smith, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Fordyce, Arkansas.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). DeMille production. A fine society drama with a superb cast. DeMille draws a good crowd always so his pictures must have that elusive "something" that makes the public like them. This is very good. Moral tone good. Sunday and special yes. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. We all thought this picture good; had no kicks on this one as it seems to please all classes. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, town 600. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Stars, Antonio Moreno, Jacqueline Logan. As an interesting picture this is good and the forest fire scenes are better. Was a picture that every one seemed to like. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, town 600. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

FORTY WINKS. (6,203 feet). Stars, Viola Dana, Raymond Griffith. A big melodramatic comedy in which Griffith is better than lots of the Harold Lloyd stuff. If they like the foolish stuff with lots of laughs very well done—this is it. Griffith looks to me to be the best comedy bet of the year! Draw general closs, city 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

FORTY WINKS. (6,203 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Good comedy-drama. Good tone and appeal. Sunday and special, yes. Draw farmers and merchants, town 1,650, widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

GARDEN OF WEEDS. (6,250 feet). Star, Betty Compson. About the same as all Betty's pictures. They are all pretty good but for some reason or other she does not mean a great deal to me as a drawing power. Tone, oka. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A fair picture for its kind. Nothing to brag on. Moral tone, none. Appeal 70 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers, town 750. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (360 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Can only voice the same on this as the other brother exhibitors, as this picture has been in a good many times before. It is good and I got the first raise out of my fans that I have had for a long time. Fine comments on the war scenes. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw all classes, town 600. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

LOCKED DOORS. (6,621 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Considered a fair picture, but the weather was so unmercifully hot that I ran it at a loss. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

LOST A WIFE. (6,420 feet). Star Adolphe Menjou. Our patrons were very much pleased with Greta Nissen's first starring picture. Plenty of pretty clothes, and that is what the ladies like. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Residential appeal. Town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. James N. Fisher, Lyric Theatre (250 seats), Versailles, Kentucky.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A few said they liked it; others said "nothing to it." Gloria draws here so I had a fair turnout; but personally would not call it a small town picture. Fair tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. Henry D. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Fair picture. Slow moving drama that tried to be comedy frequently but didn't make it here in the sticks. Tone O. K. Appeal 48 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Clever comedy drama that was very good entertainment for the masses. Light but not objectionable. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

DOLORES COSTELLO

who is to play the leading woman role opposite John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast" which Warner Bros. will release.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,867 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Absolutely no excuse for making this one, not even a good program offering. Poor tone. Appeal none. No for Sunday or special. B. Jaffe, Norwood Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Very light, but very good entertainment; seemed to please here. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. There's always something of the child in all of us and therefore this picture appeals to all. Betty Bronson is truly great in this. Excellent tone. Appeal a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw average American citizens, town 500. Admission usually 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre (250 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

Pathe

CALL OF THE WILD. (5 reels). Star, Buck, dog. A very fine picture from every point of view. The snow scenes were fine throughout. Every one pleased with Buck. Good tone. Fine appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers, town 150. Admission 10-25. Jack Snyder, Casino Theatre (310 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

HOT WATER. (5,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A good picture. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw widely scattered merchants and farmers, town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. (5 reels). Star, Lila Lee. Won't ever turn any one's box office receipts into a pot of gold. An average audience picture. Neither good nor bad. One might like it better after seeing it a couple of times. General class city of 25,000. Admission 20-30. F. J. Framer, Empire Theatre (1,100 seats), New London, Connecticut.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet). Stars, Florence Vidor, Edmund Lowe. Very, very good picture. It drew well in extremely hot weather and pleased ninety-five per cent. Many people came to see "Barbara Frietchie" who are not "Movie Fans" and they waited to tell me how much they enjoyed the show. This sort of picture means new friends for the movies. Moral tone good. Yes for Sunday and as special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

CRIMSON RUNNER. (4,775 feet). Star. Priscilla Dean. A very good program picture which centers around the Apache quarters. Good story, direction, and plot, plenty of action with a beautiful ending. Play it. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Carey has some friends here; his pictures are going good in all the small towns. This one is not at his standard but it seemed to satisfy. Good tone. Appeal 85 per cent. Questioned for Sunday or special. Draw miners and few farmers, town 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5 reels). Star, Harry Carey. A good program picture that is good for Saturday. I featured Bret Harte as Carey is not well known here, and drew a fair crowd which seemed to like the picture. Moral tone good. Sunday no, special no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy Devore. Also Walter Hiers and Tully Marshall in a fast moving comedy that takes away one's breath in spite of the advice to "hold" it. Very good program picture. Moral tone good. Sunday yes. Special no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester Vermont.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy Devore. A whiz of a picture. Thrills and action, romance, lots of it. Something different. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety-eight per cent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (300 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

United Artists

MARK OF ZORRO. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A very fine picture and one that will take with any audience and the same with "Loving Lies" with Monte Blue as the star, but "Garrison's Finish," Jack Pickford star, not so good, yet a fairly good picture. Not a special. O. G. Odell, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). Star cast. Picture is fair but quite too long. Name means nothing. Wouldn't advise even as a program for the footage is too long to make any money out of it; has no drawing power. Tone Okay. Appeal, none. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

WAKING UP THE TOWN. (4,987 feet). Star, Jack Pickford. Poor picture; name indicates a live one, but no action. Nobody liked it. Jack is about dead with us and this one carried the last shovel of dirt. Tone Okay. Appeal, none. Yes for Sunday. No as special. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

Universal

BUTTERFLY. (7,472 feet). Star, Laura LaPlante. Lots of stars but not enough places to use them. Not a picture for general patronage. We couldn't put it over and lost money by running it. Tone Okay. Appeal fifty per cent. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

FAMILY SECRET. (5,076 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. Good program picture. Should please any audience. Tone and appeal good. Yes for Sunday. Special, no. Draw merchants and farmers, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HURRICANE KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. Two days to ordinary Gibson business. I think it is a good show. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

HURRICANE KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. An extraordinarily fine picture, brought them in and pleased after they were in. Give us more like it. Tone and appeal yes. Yes for Sunday. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN. (7,400 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. An excellent comedy-drama. As good as any Lloyd. Pleased everybody and only adverse comments were made by a couple of lady admirers who said Reggie was getting too heavy around the waistline. Fine tone. Appeal excellent. Sunday and as special, yes. Draw mixed class, town 1,200. Admission 10-25. John A. McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

JEWELS. Carl's Jewels are weak in our house; we can't make them draw and on second night's run we completely break down. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

SADDLE HAWK. Star, Hoot Gibson. This is the last review I will write on the Universal western dare-devils Gibson and Hoxie. Why they make pictures I don't know and I detest them so badly that I won't give my opinion of their pictures. Our people usually wink and stay at home when they see the names on the boards. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SADDLE HAWK. Star, Hoot Gibson. A good little western. Although there is nothing big or unusual about it, still it will go over. Hoot is becoming quite a favorite here. Keep him in westerns. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SIGN OF THE CACTUS. Star, Jack Hoxie. Usual western with very little action and no thrills at all. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

Vitagraph

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,710 feet). Star, Marguerite DeLaMotte. Very good mining camp story. Some good scraps. Plenty of action and I believe that is what the average movie fan wants. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,008 feet). Stars, John Bowers, Alice Calhoun. A very good western with a title that means money at the box office in small towns. Otis Harlan furnished plenty of laughs. Miss Calhoun was her own charming self, and John Bowers had the best part he has appeared in in this town. Lot of favorable comment and no complaints. Moral tone so-so. No for Sunday or as special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Star, John Bowers. Everybody who saw this one liked it. Had no kicks on it. Did fair business on it. Good tone and appeal. Yes as special. Draw all classes, town 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valiant, Oklahoma.

EMPTY SADDLE. Star, Pete Morrison. A fairly good picture. I think this series will be fairly good. Sunday, no. Special, no. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. D. C. Smith, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Fordyce, Arkansas.

MAN FROM BRODNEY'S. (7,100 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. A good program picture. Paid too much for it, so didn't make any money. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. F. M. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. A fairly good sea story. Cullen puts a few punches of action in it. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. D. C. Smith, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Fordyce, Arkansas.

NINETY AND NINE. Star cast. A fair program picture that failed to draw or to excite much comment. Colleen Moore and Lloyd Hughes head the cast. Very good fire scenes save the picture from mediocrity. Sunday yes. Special no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

WILDFIRE. (6,550 feet). Star, Aileen Pringle. Drew well, and crowd seemed satisfied. A few remarked that the picture did not bring out some of the strongest parts of the book. Have not read the book myself, so cannot judge. Tone all right. Appeal good. Yes for Sunday. Maybe as special. Draw mixed class, town 1,200. Admission 10-25. John A. McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

Warner Brothers

AGE OF INNOCENCE. Star cast. Rather slow. Didn't find much success with those who came and not many came. We blame the hot weather though. Special, no. General class city of 25,000. Admission 20-30. F. J. Framer, Empire Theatre (1,100 seats), New London, Connecticut.

AGE OF INNOCENCE. Star, Beverly Bayne. A fair picture with a title not appropriate. Not a small town picture. Tone medium, appeal fair. Yes for Sunday. No as special. Draw mixed class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

BROADWAY AFTER DARK. (6,300 feet). Star, Norma Shearer. Good picture that pleased fairly well as a program feature. This picture probably made a hit on Broadway as a good many legitimate stage stars were introduced in the first reel, but out here in the jungles, most folks didn't know what it was all about. Story was interesting though. Tone, fair. Sunday, possibly. Special, no. Fair appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MARRIAGE CIRCLE. Star cast. A picture that lives up to its reputation as one of the ten best. A story for high-class, critical audiences who can get the subtle stuff. Adolphe Menjou puts over a very clever performance in this. A special that gives a few twists to the marriage question. Draw general class, city 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Comedies

A FAT CHANCE (Educational). Star, Walter Hiers. Had some good laughs in it. Hiers is NOT a knockout in our house. He had slim attendance and it takes a crowd really to laugh at a comedy. Good tone. Fair appeal. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

CHASED BRIDE (Educational). Star, Neal Burns. A good one, and got a lot of laughs. However, Burns isn't a real comedian and doesn't always get across. Good tone; yes for Sunday. Draw farmers and merchants, town 450. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

COURT PLASTER (Educational). Star, Neal Burns. This one had some good gags in it that brought forth hearty laughter from every one in our audience. A good Christie comedy. Tone O. K. Good appeal. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

EDUCATIONAL COMEDIES. These are good comedies but I have been showing one every week and that is too much. Draw miners, few farmers, town 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

FEET OF MUD. (Pathe). Star, Harry Langdon. This very much overrated comedian has a dandy comedy in this. His stunt and gag workers were doing overtime on a polo game that gets lots of laughs. I believe a half dozen other comedians could have done the same stunts and gotten more laughs. Draw general class, city 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

FIGHTING FLUID. (Pathe). Star, Charles Chase. A single reel subject that is very good and contains many funny gags. Tone, good. Appeal, good. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, Union, Maine.

HARRY LANGDON COMEDIES (Pathe). These comedies are all good and sure pull up a weak program. Good appeal and unusually clean. Draw farmer class, town 412. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES. (Pathe). Have been playing these for some time and they are very popular with everybody. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

GIBBONS-TUNNEY FIGHT PICTURES (Pathe). Our first experience with fight pictures, and our last. Have had several requests for fight pictures and this was an opportune time to try them out; but they failed dismally. The pictures were clear and distinct, and where one has a sporty element among his patrons, ought to go good. It seemed, though, that they were too fast although we slowed down as much as possible. Fair appeal. No as special. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 10-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

GO-GETTERS (F. B. O.) Stars, Alberta Vaughn, George O'Hara. These are good, entertaining pictures but I notice some of the fans are getting tired if they see too much of them. Good tone and yes for Sunday. Draw miners, a few farmers, town 2,000. Admission 10-25. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

GO-GETTERS (F. B. O.) Stars, Alberta Vaughn, George O'Hara. It's a knockout. Don't pass it up, for it's a good one. Don't need any comedy with it. Good tone, appeal a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday. Draw all classes, town 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valiant, Oklahoma.

Independents

BRINGING HOME THE BACON. (Artclass). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. Only a fair program western which lacks direction. The negro comedian is exceptionally poor. Tone good. Appeal 70 per cent. Sunday yes. Special no. Draw masses, city 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

DESERT HAWK (State Rights). Stars, Yakima Canutt, Ben Lyon. All right for western audiences, but nothing extra. Good tone. Sunday yes. Special, no. Draw conservative class, city 22,000. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

DUPED (State Right). Stars, Desmond, Holmes. A picture of the program type; not a knockout but will entertain the majority and they will go out satisfied. Tone okay. Appeal sixty per cent. No for Sunday. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

FIGHTING THE FLAMES (Columbia). Stars, Haines, Devore. Could not class this as a special even though I bought it for one and the producers call it one; it is a program feature and that is all. Tone okay. Appeal fifty per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

FULL SPEED (Artclass). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. A bang-up comedy western, lots of comedy and action that sure pleased the fans. Bring on some more! Tone and appeal okay. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-20. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LOVELESS MEN. (State Right). Star, Neal Hart. Just a fair western. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MIDNIGHT EXPRESS. (State Right). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Play this one if you have to shelve something else. Will stand an extra ten cent raise and pleased them one hundred per cent. Wonderful scenery. Scenery, action, and story great. Wish I could have more as good. Tone, good. Special, yes. Good appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, (250 seats), Union, Maine.

ONE GLORIOUS NIGHT. (State Right). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. While this was a rather dark print in first two reels, balance was good with good plot and story that pleased my people. A good program picture. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

RIDERS OF MYSTERY. (State Right). Star, Bill Cody. A western program picture that did a very nice business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

RIP ROARIN' ROBERTS. (Artclass). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. A dandy picture for any day of week. Thrills and action galore. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Middle and working class of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

TAINTED MONEY. (State Right). Star, Eva Novak. Fair picture with plenty of action. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Middle and working class of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

H. M. Addison Will Include Chautauqua In His Theatre Plans for Next Season

LAST spring we told of the experiment of H. M. Addison, of the Binghamton Theatres Company, in using Chautauqua lecturers in conjunction with his film programs. We also reported the successful issue of the first experiment.

Now that the season is over, Mr. Addison has been good enough to give the results of his observations. Three men were tried in the Spring and the best commentary is found in the fact that the bookings for the coming season will include from four to six lecturers. Six men of national prominence have been approached, and all will be used if they can be induced to accept the proposition.

Mr. Addison finds that they are a success, but only if they are presented to the public in a properly dignified manner. He writes:

Like a Concert

"Chautauqua lecturers are a big success either in conjunction with Vaudeville or Moving Pictures if propertly exploited. It must really be handled from the concert angle.

"By that, I mean in a high class, dignified manner. It would seem a non-profitable proposition unless the local manager had the fullest co-operation of the newspapers. It should not be tied up too closely with the feature or entertainment presented in the house.

"Care should be taken in the selection of the calibre of entertainment presented at the time with the lecture. The regular routine should be used advertising the regular attraction playing and separate ads and notices should be used on the lecture with a tag line at the bottom reading:

"'Dr. So-and-So will appear in conjunction with the regular theatre program.'"

Watch Your Program

"These lectures draw a class of patrons to the theatre that is unusual. Many are not interested in your theatrical entertainment and come solely for the purpose of hearing the lecturer. And getting them into your theatre would seem to have a tendency to create new theatre-goers but after all the only thing that counts is the gross that night.

"We tried out three different men in Binghamton last season and intend to have four to six men the coming season. Experience has taught me however, that ministers should be eliminated as ministers naturally are interested in religion and some of them overdo the religious end of it which may perhaps be objected to by the regular theatre-goers.

Plans for Six

"Our plans for the coming season include men nationally known in affairs of the National Government. Brigadier General Hugh A. Drum, Secretary Jardine and several senators have been asked for engagements in our theatres next year. The fact that a man of international fame appears at your theatre will create attention, get publicity and bring the crowd.

"However, the plan is one that depends entirely upon the manager and the way it is handled."

And we would particularly emphasize Mr. Addison's warning regarding the proper film program. Look over every item of your proposed program to assure yourself that the pictures and other features will match up to the dignity of the occasion. Don't try to mix a statement and a jazz picture.

Red Eyed

J. Wright Brown's best bet on The Monster at the Egyptian Theatre, Greenville, S. C., was the monster himself.

Brown reproduced the giant shadow, as found on the six sheet, in a shadow box in his lobby, but he gave the shadow an eye of red tissue paper and had a red tissue title. A flasher set helped to get attention. Stressing the mystery angle in his newspaper work, he sold the picture to unusual advantage and pleased the customers. It was the best date the house has had since hot weather.

Beat the Circus

If you can play to standing room with the Ringling Circus in town, you can figure you are doing something.

That's what Tod Browning, of the Olympia Theatre, New Haven, did recently.

Absolute standing room in July with the circus in town.

He put on a kiddie revue with 123 youngsters and had a week of capacity business. And the circus days were just as good as the rest of the week. He sends in a photograph with 84 children on the stage.

Don't cuss bad business. Turn to local acts and make money.

A dummy bride and groom in front of an improvised altar was the lobby display on So This Is Marriage devised by Earle M. Fain, of the Vendome Theatre, Nashville, Tenn. The marquise was dressed with crepe paper bells and other wedding accessories.

For a special they used a man in evening dress with "Ladies see my back" stenciled on his shirt front. His back told them not to miss Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel in the picture.

THE NEW YORK DISPLAY FOR BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK

How they worked it for the Criterion Theatre. The letters are orange and canary on a blue ground. The screen in the lower left hand corner is swung out at night and scenes from the play are projected from a booth on the right. The orchestra is cutout.

John Rosenfield Is Amusement Editor

John Rosenfield, who was Claud Saunders' assistant in the Exploitation Department of Paramount for several years, is now the Amusement Editor of the Dallas News and is putting his inside knowledge to good use in telling the Texans all about it.

He is getting out a very good page with a couple of ideas that might interest your own dramatic editor. For example, he prefaces his criticisms with a three to five line condensation of the story that the man in a hurry can read with speed. In the same line he runs four lines of explanation in his "Where to Go" column instead of merely listing the houses and titles.

It all helps to make his page the local authority on amusement, and he is putting it over with the same thoroughness that marked his work up here.

Sun Takes Record With Six Weddings

Most managers point with pride when they can accomplish a stage wedding to put over a marriage story, but the Sun Theatre, Omaha, has set up a mark to shoot at that will stand for a long time. It had one wedding a night for the six day run of Cheaper to Marry. Laugh that off.

The Bee was tied to the quest for bridal couples and took a lot of space the ten days in advance to tell all about it. It ran stories daily and encouraged the local merchants to kick in with presents until about $600 worth of gifts had been accumulated.

In addition each couple received $25 in cash from the house, the ring, the license and the minister, while a local company took them to and from the theatre in one of its cabs and a florist presented each bride with her bouquet.

The ceremonies were performed by the Rev. Henry De Long, of Council Bluffs; just across the river, who has a record of 1,627 weddings in his long ministerial career.

Even in summer the stunt drew an enormous business.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Five stage presentations and the Mark Strand Topical Review made up the accompanying program with "The Lady Who Lied," the First National attraction with Lewis Stone and Virginia Valli. Two hours and five minutes were consumed by this show, of which time the feature photoplay took up one hour and twenty minutes. This left eight minutes for the Topical Review and thirty-seven minutes for the five presentations.

Von Suppe's "Light Cavalry" was the overture played by the Famed Mark Strand Orchestra, running eight minutes. Lights: Foots and border of large stage in blue; two orange Mestrum floods of 150 amperes from the dome on the orchestra; spangled purple draw curtains closed over production stage and lighted by green foots, two lemon arch spots and two straw arch spots; mirror mosaic vases in transparent windows at either side of stage lighted by green and pink spots.

Harry Breur, xylophone virtuoso of the orchestra, played his own special arrangement of "Kitten on the Keys," in three minutes. Lights were the same as for the overture with the exception of an orange flood, which was spotted on the soloist.

Stage presentation No. 3 marked the return of Carlton Gerard, basso, after a European tour. In typical Southern negro make-up he sang "Old Black Joe" and "Carry Me Back to Ole Virginny." The painted back drop represented cotton fields, with a transparent moon in the center. A set fence-row ran across in front of the drop and a property log cabin was to the left. A bench was outside the door, the singer standing for the first song and sitting on the bench for the second. All lights on the set steel blue, with purple floods on the orchestra from projection room. Blue foots and borders on large stage.

After the Topical Review came Carlo Ferretti, operatic baritone, who appeared on the apron of the large stage in conventional concert attire. He sang an aria from Planquette's "Chimes of Normandy," and as an encore used "Mattina." Mettaline draw curtains closed over production stage, lighted by blue foots and two light blue Mestrum floods from the projection room which also covered the musicians. Orange spot on singer from the dome. Seven minutes.

"Smiles" was an elaborate presentation in a garden set, with painted back drop of garden and brick wall, and with property arbors, benches, bird baths, etc. The selections were: "A Smile Will Go a Long, Long Way," by soprano; "The Sunshine of Your Smile," tenor; "Smiles," danced by six members of the ballet, and "Smiling Thru," by soprano, tenor and the ballet. Twelve minutes.

Safety First

Harry Hardy tied Life Savers to Dangerous Innocence when he played the picture. One was fastened to each card reading "Take a life saver and get aboard ship with Eugene O'Brien and Laura La Plante in the breeziest, snappiest, most refreshing romance you ever saw." There were three more lines of selling talk and the information it was to be seen at the Alhambra Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., on Monday and Tuesday.

Hung Them

Realizing that The Shock Punch was pretty much like one of the old Harold Lloyd comedies, W. Murray, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, used the same advertising idea. He suspended two dummies from steel beams on the roof of the theatre, and a lot of people came in to see how good a climber Dix is. This was just before school closed and Mr. Murray further swelled the audience by giving out children's tickets which let them see Dix and the first of the Pace Makers series.

HOW THEY PUT OVER TWO COLLEEN MOORE PICTURES IN DUBLIN DAY AND DATE

So Big was at the Metropole and Sally at the Scala. The latter used burnt cork men with "No wonder I look black, I cannot see Sally, etc.," while a man "so big" and another "so small" put over So Big at one-fourth the investment in man power. They made up in idea what was lacking in numbers. Both pictures went over to unusually good business because they helped each other.

PARADED THE MODELS TO PROVE IT WAS A REAL SHOW

Harry Gantz used the girls from his stock tab company to stage a fashion show at the Globe Theatre, Philadelphia, borrowing the car for a screen slide. The costumes were obtained from a local store and were real Fifth Avenue Models.

Paraded His Models for a Fashion Show

Harry Gantz, of the Globe Theatre, Philadelphia, maintains a permanent stock company for his tabloids, so it did not cost him anything extra to stage a fashion show in conjunction with the showing of Fifth Avenue Models since the local stores were glad to supply the dresses in return for the advertising.

To assure his public that the models really were "in person," Gants got a car from a local agency in return for a screen slide and paraded the chorines up and down Market Street at times when they were not required at the theatre. The only cost was for the signs and they cost very little. The costumes came from a nearby store, which might be expected to profit, and not from the larger "downtown" stores.

To further business he also obtained loving cups, four of which were voted to the most popular women in the audience. Tickets were votes and he gained a strong ticket sale.

Al Feinman, of Universal, helped him to put the ideas over.

Selig Lions Saw Lost World Films

Copying somewhat similar stunts, Fred McClellan, who was putting over The Lost World at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, had a special showing of the films for the animals at the Selig Zoo. He got a nice layout of the lions springing at the dinosaur and similar more or less imaginary poses that gave him a five column layout in the Examiner.

Another god stunt was the plantnig of a dino skeleton in a city park where the fossilized remains of a prehistoric monster had been found some time ago. This was not a dog story, for the bones were clearly labeled as from The Lost World, now showing at Grauman's, but it got attention.

A tie-up was made with the toy dino in the ever-willing Owl Drug Company's stores, (we don't know what the L. A. agents would do without the Owl,) and the stills of Lewis Stone smoking a certain style of pipe was good for 20 cigar store windows while the typewriter shown in a couple of scenes was good for three windows.

For a bally two men were made up as Stone in the play and worked the downtown streets, staring into the sky with binoculars and then distributing advertising novelties to the crowds they collected.

Supplied a Card

To keep the idea to the fore, Charles R. Hammerslough, of the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, N. V., supplied a card for reply when he used the "origin" contest for The Goose Hangs High.

The question was asked on one side of the card, (slightly larger than a postcard), and lines were provided on the back for the reply. The best ten replies were rewarded with seats for Mme. Sans Gene, and gave this attraction a little advertising, too, though the main idea was to help put over the Goose title.

Passed Sallys

Realizing that it is still a good stunt, Guy Kenimer of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, announced that all girls named Sally were on the free list when he showed the Colleen Moore picture. Of course the Sallys did not come alone, and the others had to pay. He bettered business and landed a special story in the paper on the number of Sallys in Jax that got other people interested in the play.

For New Toys, G. A. Cross, of the Garden Theatre, Battle Creek, persuaded a local store to fill a window with toys and let a couple of youngsters play with them. They were even better than the toy train for getting business.

Free Drinks

Something different in exploitation was worked by Harry Long, of the America Theatre, Denver, on I'll Show You the Town. He gave 10,000 paper cups, printed for the Denny picture, to a bottled water company for distribution to its patrons. Denny was talking to the hard drinkers in every office building in town.

Windshield stickers with "I'll show you the town" were carried by both passenger and private automobiles and 10,000 folders were used in hotel mail boxes reading in part, "After you've seen Colorado's glorious parks and drives I'll show you the town."

This helped to get the tourists in, and Denver exudes tourists in the summer.

Remember September is coming and you will need to pull them back.

INEZ BROUGHT HER BAGGAGE WITH HER TO NASHVILLE

Matching up the cutout, Dewey Mousson used real luggage from a local store, with a credit card to defray the cost. The actual baggage was so out of place in the lobby that it attracted more than its normal share of the attention.

Jay Emanuel Used Compo Board Tent

Launching The Great Circus Mystery at the Ridge Avenue Theatre, Philadelphia, Jay Emanuel had a compo board front made to stand at the top of the flight of steps leading into the theatre. This is more easily put up and taken down than a cloth front, and after the serial has run out Jay can have it repainted and used for something else.

No kids can crawl under Jay's tent, but he provided for this by hooking to a locality paper, the Ridge Avenue Economist, which was permitted to print a coupon giving any child under sixteen a free admission to the first chapter. Jay figured that he could clean up on the rest of the chapters and make the newspaper give him all sorts of advertising in return for the privilege. It did. It gave him a three column spread.

Them Were the Days!

There was a time Jasper was a regular contributor to this department, but he seems to have gone sour in his old age. His memory is failing, too. We'll bet he has entirely forgotten that he promised six years ago to come over "soon" and take us out to lunch.

JAY EMANUEL'S IDEA OF A NIFTY CIRCUS OUTFIT

Jay used a compo board front for The Great Circus Mystery at the Ridge Avenue Theatre, Philadelphia, and got something he can put up easily with each chapter showing. No kids are going to crawl under the canvas with Jay around.

Police Assist in Boosting O'Malley

Roger Ferri, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Providence, got a special showing of The Making of O'Malley for the police heads in advance of the opening, and this brought him a lot of concessions.

For one thing he was permitted to put a banner across the street reading "Public cooperation with the Police of Providence makes for 100 per cent. efficiency. The Making of O'Malley proves it. Help the poliece help you."

In addition to this Roger got four cutouts at prominent traffic points reading "Help the traffic police and see The Making of O'Malley at Emery's Majestic Theatre."

And the Superintendent wrote a strong letter, which was made into effective newspaper copy.

The banner was strung from the theatre to the mosque of Palestine Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and as Shriners make crippled children their especial charge, a crippled children's matinee was arranged which got space in all of the papers. It was Shrine news and not theatrical copy and it got good position.

Sporty

An exhibition of fancy diving at a local bathing beach was a bally for The Sporting Venus at the Strand Theatre, Evansville, Ind. It got the crowd where it could be talked to, and sent a lot of business to the house.

Animated Swan is Nice Lobby Seller

Tied to a Local

Recently the police department of Galveston held a benefit with a bloodless bullfight as the chief attraction, the performers being Mexican experts. Eddie Collins had The Spaniard booked for the Queen.

It took him less than thirty seconds to decide to tie in to the benefit and he spattered the town with the bull ring stills and the advice to see the bloodless battles at the benefit and compare them with the real thing in The Spaniard. It made business for both shows.

Told Why

An effective advertisement for Abraham Lincoln at the Palace Theatre, Petersburg, Va., was an open letter from Manager W. F. Harris telling why he had booked the picture. It helped to deaden some local prejudice.

THE NEW YORK SKYLINE SOLD LADY OF THE NIGHT

This may not be a very accurate picture of the most famous skyline in the world, but it was effective in selling tickets to the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., and R. T. Newton was satisfied. It was posted on the side wall of the house.

Different Crossword Won Place in Paper

Because the crossword puzzle craze is on the wane, it is not as easy to unload these on the newspapers, but the crossword puzzle on Lady of the Night paid its way in Little Rock, Ark., where the newspaper ran it with the remark that "Here's a corking good crossword puzzle, much out of the ordinary, furnished the Daily News by Bill May, assistant manager of the Little Rock Amusement Company, and has to do with a picture now showing at the Capitol Theatre. It's got some advertising value for the Capitol and the picture in question, but it's so darned good that the Daily News decided to use it just the same."

This was a three column mat with a clock face on a black ground, with the inevitable skyline lightly indicated. There were thirty divisions around the clock and five rings, providing for vertical and circular words. It had the title across the top in such a shape that it could be sawed off, but the News let it run, title and all. That's the sort of press book aid that brings real results.

R. T. Newton, the manager, repeated the skyline idea with a painted poster on his side wall, which fronts the main street, and he backed this with cutouts and miniatures in the lobby in advance of showing.

A real novelty was the adaptation of the old idea of tagging stores on a holiday. Five of the leading shops, which close at six, showed large cards on their doors reading: "Closed. We have all gone to the Capitol to see, etc." Where a sufficient number of cards can be placed, this is even better than the doorknob from which the stunt was derived. Being inside the glass, it denotes store cooperation.

Fans printed with the statement that it was not too hot to see Lady of the Night at the Vendome Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., were so popular that Earle Fain could have gotten rid of twice the three thousand he had printed.

They were given out at luncheons to women's clubs, at the ball park and car transfer stations and on the street; the distribution being limited to women.

Put a Half Wall On Love's Wilderness

Arthur Swanke sends in a design on Love's Wilderness that is one of the best things he has done in a long time. He writes that it helped give the Rialto Theatre, El Dorado, Ark., a nice four day business with Corinne Griffith. She is popular with Rialto patrons, but a hot wave hit the town with the opening and might have hurt had the lobby been less inviting.

The design is done in black and white, star and title outlined with yellow. The wall is lavender where the stone is suggested, with yellow highlights. Two profile trees, which barely show in the cut, were set against the rear wall of the lobby to heighten the suggestion of entering a garden and cool colors were used for the night illumination.

The design is so good that it can be used repeatedly and with real or artificial foliage could be made a standing decoration for the Summer weeks. Mr. Swanke's foliage is painted in, but for longer use we think that artificial vines would well repay their cost, if they are not in stock. It will help a lot to drape these loosely along the top of the wall and keep them in motion with concealed fans, showing so that the breeze goes over the top of the wall.

Loaned His Theatre for College Affair

Greeley, Colroado, has a college and the Summer School course is opened with a reception to the students. Appreciating the local interest taken in the affair, E. T. Perrin loaned the auditorium of the Sterling Theatre for the event.

This was timed for the second night show on the last day of Welcome Home, and while it cut the receipts a trifle, it made for a crowded house on the first showing, so the loss was not as large as might be expected, and this slight loss was more than made up in the good will engendered, not to consider the favorable introduction of the students to the theatre.

From this angle alone he made a handsome eventual profit, but this was merely supplemental to the good will of the townfolks, all of whom regard the annual influx of the Summer student as a local event.

A number of addresses were interspersed with entertainment features, everything being arranged by the municipal authorities, and each speaker paid a neat tribute to the generosity of Manager Perrin.

If eventual gain means more to you than an immediate loss, you will find these stunts well worth while. It's even worth while to manufacture an opportunity if none presents itself.

Three years ago John D. Jones, of the San Angelo, (Tex.,) Amusement Co., had his safe blown and the contents abstracted. He sent the box to the prop room and has been using it ever since on crook plays. The busted safe has come close to bringing back the stolen funds in its exploitation value.

It's last use was for the Universal production of Raffles with a card explaining that this safe might have been blown by Raffles. That's a libel on Raffles, who was far too slick to descend to "souping," but it got the crowd in.

A SUMMERY DESIGN FROM SWANKE ON LOVE'S WILDERNESS

This gives a big effect without entirely enclosing the lobby, making for the suggestion of coolness. This is suggestive of the old Smilin' Through gates, but is more summery. Mr. Swanke writes that it helped to hold up hot weather business.

Here's an All-Type from the Valentine

Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, does some of the worst hand lettering for its Sunday ads that can be found anywhere, and the funny part is that it can do good type work. Here's a three tens that is readable in every line.

YOU CAN READ THIS

Compare this with some of the all hand lettered examples we have been running. This Jackie Coogan can be read. When they can do as well as this, it seems strange that they should let any hand work in, but probably the management imagines that hand work lends distinction or gives prominence or something. There is a good idea at the bottom of this space, the "old time" week, with three one-reelers. We hope they threw in an illustrated song with some old slides, to make it complete. This is a good summer novelty, for it will create a lot of talk and the reels will not cost much.

Seattle Changes Its Ad Layouts

Lately the Strand Theatre, Seattle, has changed over from the long and narrow space to the cross page style, to the decided improvement of its displays. For years the Seattle spaces were three or four columns wide running pretty well down the page. The eye had to run up and down the space to get the effect. Now the drop is a seven or eight across the page, and the result is uniformly better. There is a greater chance to display the titles, and the eye takes it all in at a glance. This display is for A Thief in Paradise, at the Strand. The title would have to be doubled up for a four column layout. Going across the page it can be read in a single line and at the same time the eye will get the kiss, particularly as the lower part of the cut is broken into the panel. Getting this far, it is only natural to read the rest of the type and the sale is clinched, if it has not already been made. If you have been wedded to the long and deep style, look at this display, and then do a little experimenting. You do not have to go across the page, but you will find that many titles can be displayed to greater advantage in a layout in this form. You may have to crop some of the cuts, but a lot of cuts would be better from some trimming.

Double Showing is a Help to Zander

Both the Century and Parkway Theatres, Baltimore, played Zander the Great for its first run, and the fact that it is showing in two houses is a help, since the double showing suggests a picture too big to be given a single house. There is a moral effect to the double run that makes for moral effect. The top lines are particularly well displayed. It gives just the appeal that will reach a lot of people who have been surfeited with the historical and costume plays in which Miss Davies has appeared; indeed we think that it would have been well to have given additional emphasis to the fact that the star was appearing in a strictly modern story. This is shown in the cut material, but type would have helped to emphasize the fact. A lot of persons do not think. They do not deduce. You have to tell them in so many words that this is a story of today, or they will look at the purely modern cuts and still think that it's "another of those costume pictures." Often a copy writer gives his readers credit for too much sense. It's better to come right out and tell them in type.

Too Much Boldface Impairs Legibility

This 75 by 2 from the Strand Theatre, New Orleans, carries a pretty heavy load of copy for a space little more than a double five, and it would have ridden better had the bold face been discarded in favor of a regular Roman in six and eight point. It takes nerve, perhaps to use Roman in a display advertisement, but bold face is too heavy for the contracted space and a lighter face would have been very much easier to read. The silhouette and the reverse title could have been looked to for the display, and with light Roman instead of bold, these would have been more prominent. his part well, but whoever marked the type did not realize the value of contrast. You don't put a red letter against a red ground to get contrast. You use a yellow ground, if you do not use white. It is the same idea here. A heavy frame and title slug does not gain contrast from heavy letters, even though those letters, be small.

is from the press book, and is used without change, though mortising the lower space and setting the same statement in type would have given added value. Realizing that this hand lettered stuff will not show up well, the house repeats in a type bank in the upper left hand corner. The drawing is much better than a halftone would have been. There is strength to the sketch that no halftone possesses, for there is more contrast in the strong blacks and whites than in the more uniform graduations of the halftone and the cut is better fitted to this type of story.

Plenty of Sales in Small Single

This advertisement from the Kinema, Salt Lake City, is original size, a three inch single. It gets plenty of display, three sales lines, two stars and a "now playing" in that space. You could ask no more from twelve inches instead of three. Much of the display value in this comes from the white above and below the title, due in part to the oversize 5 to the left, his part well, but whoever marked the type did not realize the value of contrast. You don't put a red letter against a red ground but in default of a figure or large initial the space could be used, through proportioning. The main point is that there is nothing to detract from the title, and so this commands attention. This is the essence of the good small ad. Only one attractor line and some white space will put over a three or even a two to good effect, where a too heavy larger display will be just a blur without distinction.

The rest has been put in wherever space permitted, and it looks a bit crowded, but there are so few long lines that the effect is much better than it would have been with longer banks. In the circle the star names detract a little from the title, but in general the effect is excellent and the cut works in very well.

Gets Big Display in His Two Fives

Here's another Cliff Lewis ad from the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, in which a two fives tells all that a three or four tens could, and at a smaller cost. Cliff has packed an unusual amount of copy in this ten inch space, but with six point readers he gets ample display for the stars in a twelve point, and if you can get display in that size, it is foolish to use a thirty-six. Even Cliff does not get as much into a space this size as a rule, though he is one of the best little type-packers in the game. He tells a lot and yet the space never seems to be crowded. Look this over and see what you can do. If you can do as well, please send it in.

Gave Prize Tickets to Want Ad Writers

With the idea of training the public in the uses of want ads, the Syracuse Herald has been running a series of contests for the best written ads. It was not required that these advertisements be inserted in the paper. The idea was not to get immediate revenue, but to put over the idea.

Each day a picture was shown, and an advertisement had to be written around the picture. One day it was a furnished room for rent, another dealt with the disposal of old furniture while a third called for an advertisement for a position as stenographer.

Each day an outline of how to frame the advertisement was given, varying with the subject.

The prizes were $5, $3 and $2 in cash and twenty theatre tickets, the latter supplied by the Strand Theatre, in return for mention in the papers announcements, and because Cliff Lewis, publicity winner for the tion in the paper's announcements, and beleft out of any of the Herald's stunts.

The idea seems to be copyrighted, but there can be no copyright on an educational campaign for better written advertisements, and you may be able to interest your local paper if you have worked the old classified schemes to a finish.

Your patrons like pictures but it takes more than a cut to sell your titles.

News, Comments of the Week and Guide to New Material

EVOLUTION IN PRACTICE

EVOLUTION means Progress. It means advancement and development. The motion picture industry itself is a sufficient example. We believe in progress, in listening to the other fellow's idea provided it is a step ahead, and we know by cooperating and giving the other fellow what he wants which will help him in his work, we are in the line of the progressives. This is true of our Department. We are inaugurating a few features this week which we will add to the service we are already rendering the First Run managers and producers. This page will be devoted to news, comments, personalities, market suggestions, tips on new ideas and equipment and other information which we find worthy of passing along.

BON VOYAGE "S. L."

IT it with a note of regret to learn that "Roxy" leaves the Capitol before the first of the year, but this week marks his farewell. It seems that Rothafel and the Capitol Theatre, New York City, are synonymous. During his five years as presentation director he has contributed vitally to the advancement of this art. Within another year he will be in his own theatre, and possibly at the head of a chain of New York theatres. We have every reason to expect that during the year in which he will be at liberty to travel and develop new ideas, that his programs will mark a new era in the presentation art, because he is a developer of new ideas and has the ability to sell them to the public.

STAGE FOR "ROOKIE MANAGERS"

IT has been announced that one of the features in connection with the activities of Paramount's theatre managers training school, will be a fully equipped stage in which the young managers-to-be will be introduced in the mysteries, tricks, limitations and possibilities of the area in which prologues, presentations and other stage features are presented. The stage is to be installed on the fifth floor of Loew's New York theatre building

RIVOLI RADIO WEEK

A PROGRAM novelty marks Radio Week now current at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City. Dr. Riesenfeld arranged a program of particular interest to radio listeners, which included the jazz orchestra at the theatre and augmented by the personal appearance of many microphone favorites. The announcers who appeared are, Joe Barnet of WOR on Monday evening; Thos. Cowan of WNYC, Tuesday; "Bugs" Baer on Wednesday; Major Andrew White on Thursday; Niles T. Grantland on Friday.

PLUNKETT PREPARES SPECIALS

WITH a galaxy of the leading pictures booked for the new season at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York City, Joseph Plunkett has announced that he has several spectacular presentation features in the course of preparation to accompany the various featured pictures. Mr. Plunett's prologue-presentations for "The Sainted Devil," "Monsieur Beaucaire," and "The Swan" are still the talk of patrons, and with the present program as outlined for next season these excellent productions and evidences of good showmanship will be surpassed.

FLAME-PROOF SATINE

WE have learned that a reputable firm that specializes in theatrical fabrics have developed a special processed flame-proof satine for scenic purposes with the luster retained. This material can be had in all the leading shades. This prepared material should be popular as heretofore it has been found that the luster of satine is lost after flameproofing.

LUMINOUS PAINT OFFER

ANOTHER firm has made us an offer of luminous paint. Four ounces of assorted colors can be purchased for ten dollars. The paint can be applied to beaver board surfaces and painted in flower designs which are effective on dark backgrounds when the vi-lite effects are used.

U. F. A.'S PRESENTATIONS

ALEXANDER OUMANSKY, who was identified with the Capitol Theatre, New York City, for more than three years as its ballet master, and more recently in a similar capacity at the Famous Players houses in Los Angeles, has been engaged by U. F. A. of Germany as production manager. Mr. Oumansky will sail shortly for Berlin, where he will have charge of the presentations at the leading motion picture theatres in Germany. It is his plan to cooperate with the German film interests in their endeavor to introduce into presentations the artistic quality that now prevails in the United States. In a sense, he will be a pioneer in this work and his efforts will be viewed with great interest by motion picture theatre managers and producers both here and abroad.

SILKOLETTE

A FABRIC which will prove popular is named Silkolette and is an Oriental pattern about nine inches in width, picturing an Oriental scene of various types. The figures, scene and characters are engraved in gold on a background of lustrous satine which has the appearance of heavy satine. It can be secured in any desired color, being particularly effective in jade or black, with the gold engraving. This fabric can be used for costumes, drapes or hangings, and costs One Dollar a yard with a width of 36 inches. Sample sent on request.

STAGE SET MADE OF CREPE PAPER

AN interesting experiment is being made by Max Manne, director of effects at the Rialto Theatre, this week, who has created an entire stage setting in crepe paper. The imitation of painting is so well done that it is almost impossible to detect. Mr. Manne originated the idea and is enthusiastic over the fact that Managing Director Riesenfeld was himself deceived. The setting in question is used in connection with one of the Classical Jazz specialties and is a source of interest to New York's scenic artists.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Complete working plans of the presentation suggested herewith, including blueprints, color charts, costume plates, music cue sheets, and other necessary information, are prepared for each subject. The folios are available for IMMEDIATE DELIVERY without charge to any producer or exhibitor engaged in actual production work, and desiring to avail himself of the Colby Harriman suggestions.

"RECOLLECTIONS"

Haunting Memories of Old Melodies

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Devised by Colby Harriman

THERE are so many good musical compositions which dominated the seasons in the past and left an indelible memory. With a suggestion such as we are offering this week we feel confident that the producers will receive a surprise at the cordial reception given the presentation of some of the songs from musical comedies or the popular songs of yesterday.

The effect which lends a novelty to this suggestion is one which is simple to construct, yet gives a logical reason for the introduction of various singers or dancers dressed in the costumes of the character or singer related to the particular song. The routine, which is simple, depends entirely upon the various song numbers.

At the rise can be seen the form of an old musician seated at a piano, the pianist and the instrument in bold silhouette against a large window. The lighting treatment suggested herein is generally subdued and as the introduction of a song is played by the musician a character is suddenly revealed standing on the cover of the piano, and as the song begins comes down invisible steps to the stage, renders the song with the attendant action and disappears in the hazy recesses right or left.

The entire setting is simple to construct, and its beauty rests greatly upon a correct manipulation of the lighting equipment, and the gradual ascendancy in the popularity of the numbers. Three or four numbers will be sufficient. One of the numbers could be a duet with a dance specialty. One could represent a well-known character of the yesterdays. The last character might use a group of songs which could be put over in such a way as to end the act with the audience joining in the choruses. One will be surprised at the readiness with which audiences the country over join in singing the old favorites which dominated the musical shows a few years ago.

Ground Plan—Fig. 2

A platform wide and long enough to hold grand piano and still permit sufficient space to give the effect of a music room should be placed at center of the downstage and flush with the velvet curtains hung in one used to carry off from the opening. Three steps should be placed leading from the platform to the stage. At the opposite side of the platform a large window running the entire height of the opening should occupy at least a third of the area. Two black plush legs can be used to mask and carry off, the sides of the plush adjoining the window caught back at the bottom in a drape effect. A black plush leg tied to a cyc arm and attached to the battan holding the black plush legs at the upstage side of the platform should be placed at the right end of the platform; at the left end it is suggested a flat piece with a flipper running on stage as indicated should be placed and covered with black plush. This can be hung if desired, although a flipper will be necessary to mask the opening and eliminate the visibility of such an opening from the opening. Between the flipper and the left plush leg a runway attached to a platform off stage at left should come on a direct line with the end of the grand piano, and narrow steps leading from the platform to the floor. This should all be covered with black plush, a heavy plush throw being used over the end of the piano. A tab sky drop can be used as a back for the window. A gauze should be hung in folds over the window, which will soften the outline of the framework and permit a softer tone from the background. Two gauze legs hung right and left in the opening directly back of the plush returns hung down in one—they should be brought on to a direct line parallel to the window. This will permit a hazy effect to be achieved. At the rise a very good effect may be had by having the gauze cover the entire opening, and as the lights are brought up the gauze gradually drawn apart until they reach a given line leaving the open space whereby the musician will be visible. The various characters coming downstage enter through the gauze opening down the steps and work in one.

Construction Data

Fig. 3 is an elevation sketch showing the arrangement of the platform leading to the piano, and the steps (IV) leading to the platform (III) to the stage. It is suggested that this be constructed about 2 ft. wide and high enough to be on a level with the top of the piano; the steps can be the same width. Covtring the platform and steps with black plush will render them invisible from the audience as this corner of the stage must be in shadows. The plush leg at left (I) must be hung on a straight line and running off sufficiently to mask the opening between this leg and the flipper. The flat with flipper (II) is placed directly in front of the runway so that characters entering appear through an invisible opening. The window opposite can be constructed of lathe or narrow strips for the framework and strips of wide tape can be used to form the various pane outlines.

PRODUCERS!

ATTENTION!

Each week we are running valuable information on new materials, equipment and other valuable aid.

Let us help you save money and cut down your costs.

Scenic and Lighting Treatment

The entire setting is dominated by shadows and a manipulation of the lighting equipment to highlight certain zones of the set. Use black plush for the entire treatment in the alcove. The window frame should be painted dark brown. Red plush can be used down in one as the returns. The platform should be painted dark brown with a dark rug placed upon it; the steps should be painted dark with a runner rug thrown across the center. The backing should be painted light blue with a deeper blue and green for stipling. Use deep blue or green transparencies. At the rise the blue foots and first borders are brought up about half way. A green strip on the stage floor back of the window set to tone the bottom of the backing with the blue borders on to flood the top of the backing and blend with the green from below are brought on gradually as the blues are brought in on the foreground. As the gauze opens at center a spot hung on a battan in two highlights the surface of the chandelier hung center and also outlines the head and shoulders of the pianist, seated at the piano at center. This should be in amber. Spots should be placed down in one right and left to highlight the folds of the returns and also outline the furniture placed to dress. It is suggested that red from left blend with a deep blue from right. Two spots should be set down in one to be brought on and off as the various characters appear and work. The amber mediums masked down to eliminate any spill light on the returns and to be wide enough to cover an area permitting freedom of action to the artist. A spot should be placed directly over the runway which leads from left to the corner of the piano and this should be controlled with a dimmer. It should be set so that the characters standing on the cover of the piano will be highlighted, and it should be angled to spill on the downstage side of the steps and not on the stairway or the platform, in order to give the illusion of the character walking down an invisible stairway; in other words, a suspension effect. The chandelier should be toned orange amber at the base with a deep blue green at the top. The chandelier can be constructed as indicated in Fig. 4. The top should be two large hoops covered with muslin, the surface covered with strands of tinsel; the pendant portion of the chandelier can be a muslin bag, the top of which can be attached to the lower hoop, the surface covered with silver spangles, the small discs which can be sewn to the muslin. The bag is covered with a circlet of tinsel and tipped with a large tinsel-covered ball upon which are sewn spangles. A very inexpensive chandelier and the spangles and tinsel making it as effective as though crystals were used.

Costumes

The pianist should be dressed in dark clothes and wearing a gray wig. It is suggested that if the make-up resemble one of the old music-masters it would be suitable. Costumes of the various singers depend, of course, upon the numbers selected, but they should be colorful and if a character from a play is used, such as "The Yama Yama Girl" or "The Merry Widow," the costumes should be as worn in the play, and if it is to be a period such as the early 90's the costumes should correspond.

NOTE: A series of weekly reviews on valuable books for producers and musical directors. We shall be glad to put you in touch with the publishers of these excellent aids.—Harriman.

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MUSIC FOR PICTURES by Erno Rapee, is one book which should be in the possession of every musical director engaged in motion picture theatre work—presentations or scoring of pictures. We were amazed as we have looked thru the book, noted its practical form, and found that at last something had been compiled to be of the utmost value in the work of the musical director.

Mr. Rapee, who is one of the leading musical directors in the motion picture business, has spent over three years of untiring efforts in association with the publishers to arrive at a point permitting the publication of the book. It is complete in every detail, and is a "Webster," a reference book, to the musical profession. No matter what the subject or the character of the scene may happen to be, this book will offer a suggestion for the selection to be used to lend a musical background.

The arrangement of the book is very well done, making it simple to use. If you desire music for bird scenes, look up the heading, "birds"; if you have a sea picture, look under "sea music," "nautical." In fact, it would be difficult to conceive of general things which might happen on the screen for which a multitude of compositions suitable for that particular purpose have not been mentioned.

The title of every musical number is accompanied by the name of the composer and its publisher. Over ten thousand compositions have been classified under over five hundred atmospheric headings with hundreds of subdivisions and explanations. After every classification, additional space has been allotted for the purpose of enabling the musician to add new works or permit him to reclassify such compositions he desires. Another important feature is a space noted with dotted lines preceding the title of each composition for the purpose of enabling the musician to check the numbers contained in his own Library or probably mark his Library number into the book.

We earnestly recommend the purchase of this book. The cost is Eight Dollars but its value is far in advance of its cost. We congratulate Mr. Rapee and his publishers. This book is really worth while.

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Never The Twain Shall Meet" (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Music Features

Overture "William Tell" by Rossini. Umberto Corrado, First Trombone player with Capitol Grand Orchestra renders "Thoughts of Love," Pryor.

Presentations include two features:

1. Caroline Andrews

This singer renders the "Shadow Song" from "Dinorah" by Meyerbeer. The set consists of a cut wood drop hung in two representing the trunks of large trees in a forest. A foilage border cut and draped in folds is hung in one. A black plush is used for background. Green flood used on entire set highlighting foliage border; red and blue from sides blending to form a purple tone, highlight the cut drop. Light green from spots right and left in one highlight the singer who appears dressed in characteristic costume of the opera.

2. Ballet Divertissements

(c) "Gallop." The Capitol Ballet Corps dressed in short red costumes appear before the silver cutains which are flooded green and tinted canary, blue and rose from the sides highlight the folds of the curtains. Amber foots used on the dancers in one. Gambarelli enters for the finale dressed in white.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Half-way Girl" (First National)

Music Features

Overture "Carneval," by Dvorak.

Presentations include two features.

1. "Melodie"

A cut drop with sapling birch trees, light trunks and yellow and brown foliage is hung in one over light blue transparency which is tinted rose at the base. A blue flood tones the drop and upper part of transparency. Black plush for backing. Two singers, dressed in 1860 costumes, enter and sing "Song of Songs," Moya. As they exit the red foots and blue flood are dimmed down as the lights back of the transparency are brought up revealing Klemova and Daks dressed in white ballet costumes rendering an interpretation of "Valse" by Chopin. White spots from right and left highlight the dancers who work in two. The foreground is in silhouette, the black plush used for the backing. At the end of the dance the lights are dimmed back of the transparency as the lights are brought up on the foreground on singers entering for the finale.

2. "Mound City Blue Blowers"

This popular quartette of musicians returns after successes in England.

The set represents the backyard of a tenement district. Set buildings are placed right and left constructed out of flats set at angles. Buildings are painted to represent red bricks. Two tiers of fire escapes are attached to the flats on both buildings. A high planked fence with uneven top is placed up stage, the ends adjoining the set buildings right and left, the fence is painted brown. Two clothes lines run from fire escapes at left to right upon which are hung various garments. The sky backing used. Four members of the Quartette dressed as bowery types sit on crude stools down in one. They work in a white spot. The set is subdued in tones of amber with deep blue from borders and strips back of the fence on the sky backing. At the conclusion of their group of numbers two dancers dressed in bowery costumes enter and do a "Tintype Classic" which is some clever acrobatic dancing. White spots from the sides are brought in on the dancers during their number.

Prologue

Joseph Plunkett's prologue to the featured picture introduces Edward Albano in a selection not programmed.

The set represents a part of a wharf below a bridge or super-structure. A quarter arc with the base at left forms the opening. A spile left of center protruding over a row set to represent the edge of the pier. A set piece cut to represent the end of a scow is at extereme left, the end protruding from the base of the arch, a rope being attached at the point of the scow running to the spile. A blue sky backing is used. The singer is highlighted with amber from right. The set is subdued in tone.

RIALTO THEATRE

Rialto Orchestra under the direction of Willy Stahl, renders Overture, "If I Were King," Adolph Adams.

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz, supplemented by the Rialto orchestra presents a pleasing series of song and dance numbers so blended together as to constitute a continuous performance. Beginning with a screen announcement of the program and the Rialto orchestra playing the introduction of the first number Mr. Frank Cornwell, seated in wicker chair beside a bamboo table upon which is a shaded lamp shedding a rosy glow (from rose cross spots on balcony breast) the setting is upon a raised platform on left of orchestra while the Jazz band occupies a similar place on the right of orchestra. The melody of the song numbers were all carried by the orchestra: "Girls of My Dreams," is the series.

1. "Tulip Time in Holland." The little Dutch Girl. As the song reaches the chorus the curtains part and a girl appears in a white spot, dressed in the native costume of Holland. The backing in two is the soft velvet folds of the screen curtain, lighted foots and proscenium sides and top, soft blues and from sides and top in second there is green, high lighting the drop. The girl does a Holland "coax me" dance to the singer as a finish for this number, going back to first position in spot, which dims out for second song.

2 "Mary, You're Little Bit Old Fashioned." The Country Lass. As song begins, a girl dressed in costume of the hoop skirt period, is revealed in white spot does dainty dance to chorus for finish and closes as first number.

3 "Madelon." French Girl. This number treated in same manner with dancer dressed in very full skirt, permitting the graceful execution of a type dance of a few years ago. The dancer working direct to the singer most of the time. This closed in the spot on dimmers.

4. "Venetian Moon." Gianina. In this number the singer, plays several passages on the violin during the dancing. The dancing costumed colorfully in Venetian gala dress, does a pretty dance finishing in same manner as the other numbers as orchestra vamps introduction for the next song.

5. "Seventeen." This number is a duet between soprano and tenor. Soprano is discovered in rose colored spot, dressed in modern costume, of gray. For the finish of this number the dancers in the foregoing numbers are assembled in a pretty tableau. Rose spot is broadened with "barn door" effect cutting top and bottom so that the figures only are in rose light while the blend of blue and green from foots and borders high light the hanging piece. This concludes the stage numbers.

6. Orchestra members dressed in tuxedo sing "All Aboard for Heaven" (Joseph Meyer), with "Fuzzy" Knight and Rialto Ensemble. After the announcement the spot is shifted to the drummer who is dressed as a candy butcher on a train, doing a clever dance. The piece is finished in the usual classy jazz style with the orchestra helping out with train effects and to carry the refrain in soft contrast with the wilder syncopation of the jazz band. The lights are brought up and the close in curtains part revealing a very effective and a silhouette of tall mountains with pine trees skirting a river, the moon is peeping from behind the highest peak casting a reflection on the water (water rippler operated through a slit in mask) the approach of the train is heard very faintly then grows in volume and the train is seen to speed on it's way along the base of the mountains, all lights in the train are casting their amber glow which is reflected in the water as the train crosses the scene as the curtain closes in.

Overture

The Colony Melody Masters render a symphonic paraphrase of "Meditation" by Massenet.

The Mystic Voice (Revealed)

The popular singer who has been entertaining Colony audiences for six weeks is introduced in person, singing "I Wonder Where We've Met Before" (Knecht) with console accompaniment by John Priest. The close-in curtains are drawn revealing black plush hung in two. Suspended at center against the plush is the figure of a man barely visible. He is dressed in white. A large radio cabinet with chair and candelabra is at left and a victrola and accompanying furniture at right. During the song the singer is slowly lowered to the floor. When he reaches stage he comes down center, finishes song being highlighted green from right and blue from left. The radio and victrola are spotted blue from the bridge. A very effect number.

Colony Dance Creation

A number introducing several dance specialties is rendered in a set which consists of black patent leather hung back over which gold ribbons are hung to cover the entire surface. Back of the streamers at center a white marble statue on a pedestal is placed. Two large floor vases painted silver are placed right and left with flowers to dress. Ambers and greens from the sides highlight the dancer. White and light blue spots flood and spots being used for specialty numbers.

Atmospheric Prelude

A very effect number used as a prologue to the picture introducing a singer rendering "Ave Maria." The set consists of a large window painted to represent the Madonna and accompanying ecclesiastical figures. This is placed at center occuping about a quarter of the opening. Pyramidal steps painted red are placed at center in front of the window. The singer dressed in a nun's garb of white with two long veils running from her head down across the steps at angles. At right and left four girls dressed as nuns in white kneel on the steps. Two flats with stained glass window effects are used right and left for returns. These are highlighted magenta and blue which is also the tone used on the characters. The singer is spotted white from the bridge; a scrim is hung down in one.

Super Radio Week

A general program of features marks the entertainment offered for this particular week featuring Ben Bernie and his Orchestra. The curtains are drawn with a blackout, blue foots are brought up about a quarter revealing a large disc placed in two against a background of black. The disc represents the face of a microphone and during the opening number lights placed back of the circular openings on the border of the disc are brought up revealing the head of a musician. This spotting is carried on during the entire number, and for finale the lights come up as the large disc is taken away revealing the orchestra seated on a large step platform against a painted drop in marble line design. The front of the platform is painted to match with the back drop, the edges of the platform being trimmed with tinsel. The grand piano is placed at right upon which a large microphone is set. Bernie brings on a regular microphone on a small gilt pedestal places at center, and introduces the various numbers from this spot. The lighting is ambers being full up during the action. During the number the close-in curtains are drawn and when opened the archestra is discovered seated on gilt chairs against the background of black plush. The following program is offered.

1 Ben Bernie and His Orchestra.
2 Rosa Polnariow, violin soloist.
3 The National Male Quartette.
4 Joseph Termini, guitar virtuoso.
5 Ben Bernie and His Orchestra.
6 The National Male Quartette.
7 Ruby Keeler, Tap Dancer.
8 Finale
Trio from "Faust"

Mariam Lax, Martin Brefel and James Donaghy. With Ben Bernie and His Orchestra.

The Rivoli Dancers

Four girls, two dressed as youths all wearing mid-Victorian costumes appear right and left in the orchestra pit, ascent a stairway to a platform erected in center of the orchestra pit. They render a charming little dance with a pink flood being used. At the finale the curtains are halfway drawn permitting the dancers to exit on stage.

"The Home Maker"

Universal Produces, With Alice Joyce and Clive Brook, One of the Finest Pictures Ever Made

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"The Home Maker," with Alice Joyce and Clive Brook, will be an outstanding picture of the coming season. Exhibitors will throw their hats in the air and cheer when they see its effect upon their audiences, for in addition to its unquestionable box-office value, it is the sort of clean, wholesome, gripping domestic drama which will do the reputation of the whole industry a world of good. Universal has been making some fine pictures lately and "The Home Maker" will be near the top of the White List, if it doesn't lead them all.

This is a box-office picture par excellence for all audiences. It is hard to conceive an audience that will dislike it. The drama is simply done but so tense and absorbing in its import that it will hold the eyes glued on the screen. Women will eat it up, and cry, and men will like it fully as well as the women, for it does man no injustice by putting woman on an unscalable pinnacle.

"The Home Maker's" many points of interest—and its wonderful exploitation angles—may be analyzed without a single justifiable criticism except that of length, and on that point there is ample ground for argument. The general opinion of reviewers who sat enthralled throughout its 7,755 feet was that it might be cut a few hundred feet, but nobody insisted that eliminations were imperative. Possibly the critics couldn't believe that here was a picture which couldn't be criticized. Oh yes, two of the subtitles are too flowery.

King Baggot is responsible for "The Home Maker" and Universal owes him a flock of congratulatory telegrams and a museum of medals.

The picture is really wonderful in the simplicity of its story and settings and acting. It is a perfect emotional unit from start to finish. An accident in which the husband is crippled and a fire threatening loss of life might have been over-stressed, but they have been carefully subordinated to the telling of the story.

"The Home Maker" opens with scenes of ordinary domestic routine. The wife is performing her daily work, stopping only to reprove the children. In this role Alice Joyce is perfect. She does the ordinary things which we see done from day to day, does them simply and naturally, yet rivets attention on herself. The same is true of Clive Brook. These two accomplished artists—may their tribe increase—bring a wealth of humanity to the picture that assures the utmost in realism. We cannot for the moment recall any picture which is so real as "The Home Maker."

While the entire cast does expert work, two other members deserve especial mention. Martha Maddox is superb as a sour-faced, dyspeptic old maid. Her work is restrained like that of the others, but remarkably effective.

The other player? Say, you must see little Billy Kent Schaffer. In this picture he ranks with Jackie Coogan, not as Jackie is now, an experienced actor, but as he was when about Billy's age—four years. Little Billy is called upon to sulk and he does it in such delightfully realistic fashion that women's arms will go out toward him; he is called upon to smile and there was never a more winning baby seen on the screen.

In closing, a word about the exploitation angles of this picture. They are there—big and self-evident. The wife takes the husband's place as the wage-earner, having failed to inspire happy children; the husband, a business failure, succeeds in the home. In the end, smiles replace scowls on the children's faces and there is joy.

Don't fail to book this picture. It will please your patrons as few pictures have done; it will do your prestige as a theatre owner untold good. Book it, boost it, get the clergy to see it, for they will preach about it, and you'll live in the hope that the gods will be kind and give you another picture just as good sometime in the not too distant future.

Lester Knapp fails to obtain promotion in the office of his department store. He hates the work. Eva Knapp, his wife, hates house work, knowing herself to be fitted for greater things. An accident cripples Lester. He stays in the home, Eva works in the store. Lester makes the children happy. Eva had misunderstood them and they had resented her efficiency. One day as he sleeps Eva sees his legs move. To her that symbolizes a return to drudgery in the home, but she calls a physician. Lester begs him to tell Eva that he is still crippled, arguing that the time has not arrived for him to walk. The doctor agrees and there is no rift in the family happiness.

"Never the Twain Shall Meet"

Colorful South Sea Island Atmosphere and Enjoyable Comedy in Newest Cosmopolitan Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Kipling's famous line about "East is East and West is West" furnishes the idea, while the last five words of the quotation supplies the title, for the Cosmopolitan production, "Never the Twain Shall Meet," distributed through Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Huntley Gordon in the leading roles.

There are a couple of surprises in the early part of this film that lift it out of the routine of stories based on this theme. In the first place, the usual location of the action in some Asiatic country is missing and instead the heroine is a native of one of the Pacific isles. Then, after sufficient introduction to plant her character, she is transferred to San Francisco.

This gives the story a good twist, for it brings about thoroughly amusing situations caused by the heroine's ignorance of the customs and conveniences of civilization. Anita Stewart handles these scenes admirably and her experiences with an elevator, call bells and switchboard in an office, and the efforts of the butler to help her during a formal dinner, provide excellent entertainment. They kept the audience at the Capitol Theatre, New York, continually chuckling.

In this portion of the film there is also an exceedingly well handled pathetic bit where her father, a French sea captain, learns that he is a leper, and with a smile on his lips, takes his own life by leaping into the ocean. Lionel Belmore, handicapped with an enormous beard, gives an excellent performance of this role.

About the middle of the film, the action shifts back to the South Seas. The heroine, misunderstanding the hero's attitude, returns home and the hero follows. There is a melodramatic punch based on coincidence which shows him arriving after a journey of several thousand miles just at the moment to save her from an attack by the white villain. Then follows an extremely colorful sequence showing their wedding according to native custom. Director Maurice Tourneur is especially in his element here and has provided interest-holding scenes showing apparently hundreds of natives engaged in these festivities, against striking backgrounds.

Up to this point, the picture has provided amusing and colorful entertainment, with the romantic angle rounded out. Apparently, however, with the idea of justifying the title, the hero is shown to have "feet of clay." The glamour with which he has been surrounded is destroyed; he finds his surroundings irksome and eagerly embraces an opportunity to return to the states, while another white man, his best friend, takes his place. This provides a half-way happy ending but it is not convincing and smashes the idea carried in the title. We believe a large number of patrons would prefer to have the story end with the conclusion of the wedding ceremony, before the hero's weakness is revealed.

Both in the colorful island surroundings and in the San Francisco scenes Anita Stewart is attractive and does excellent work, and Bert Lytell is capable as the hero-weakling. Huntley Gordon is effective in the minor role of the other man.

When her father, a French Sea captain, is ready to sail, Tamea whose mother was queen of the little South Sea Isle, goes with him as the Pagan priest has said he would not return. Arriving in San Francisco, her father is found to be a leper and after leaving Tamea in care of his young employer Dan Pritchard, he ends his life by jumping overboard. Tamea proves a problem and Dan enlists his friend Mellenger a reporter and Maisie his old sweetheart. Speculation causes Dan's firm to fail and when he refuses to let Tamea help him with her money, she returns to her island. Dan follows her arriving in time to rescue her from an attack by Muggridge, a renegade. They marry according to the island custom, but Dan soon tires of idleness and his love cools. Mellenger arrives from the states with a letter from Tamea to Maisie saying that she and Dan are of different worlds and were not meant for each other. Dan seizes the opportunity to return, but Mellenger stays behind and there is a hint of romance in the future.

"The Wild Bull's Lair"

Rather Improbable But Pleasing Story Gives Fred Thomson A Chance to Bull-Dog A Real Bull

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Peppy entertainment with plenty of opportunities for the star and his wonderful horse, seems to be the goal of the producers of the series of pictures released through F. B. O. starring Fred Thomson. This has resulted in several that, while unmistakably "Western" in flavor, have shown considerable variety and gotten away from the conventional type, for example "That Devil Quemado" and "The Bandit's Baby."

Now comes "The Wild Bull's Lair" which is of still another type. It is a rather improbable story of a university-bred Indian who reverting to the primitive seeks to drive the white man out of the west and in furtherance of his scheme uses a wild bull the product of cross breeding cattle and bison.

Fred appears as a government secret service man who thwarts this scheme and of course there is a romantic angle introduced. He does not have much opportunity for action, instead, there is a lot of rather mechanical comedy involving a dude Easterner which however should be good for several laughs, and a surprise thrill comedy situation where Fred charges a "wild bull" that invades the barn dance and finds it is only a peaceful cow.

As practically the whole development has been centered on the climax the interest doesn't hold up quite as well as usual. The climax, however, develops considerable melodramatic tenseness and is suggestive of the big scene at the end of a serial episode, for the girl's father is fastened in front of the ferocious bull which is held by a peg attached to a rawhide thong which as it shrinks causes the peg to pull out gradually. Of course the hero arrives in time to save the father and also rescue the girl from the renegade Indian.

As usual, Thomson's horse, Silver King, comes in for a large share of the interest. There is a good stunt where he awakens his master by taking a towel and dipping it in water and then brushing it over Fred's face. His big scene, which will make the children howl even if it does appear too overdrawn for the grownups, shows Fred rigging up a device so that every time an Indian appears on a projecting rock the horse pulls a string attached to the trigger. As a result, three Indians are made to "bite the dust."

The supporting cast is entirely adequate, Catherine Bennett is attractive as the girl and Frank Hagney is exceptionally "villainous" both in appearance and acting, as the bad Indian.

Fred has little chance for cowboy stunts except where he bull-dogs a bull. Here is a real thriller, for he uses no steer but a real bull which gives him a real fight before it is subdued. Several times the bull gets Fred down in such a position that he is between the animal's horns.

As a general proposition, we don't think this picture measures up to several of the others, but it will doubtless prove good entertainment for Fred's rapidly enlarging circle of admirers.

Story

The ranchers in the neighborhood of Skull Mountain become excited over the fact that this mountain seems to be haunted. In reality it is the headquarters of a band of Indians led by Red Fang, a university graduate whose ambition is to get rid of the white men. Dan Allen is sent by the government to investigate it. He visits the Harbison ranch and falls in love with Eleanor, and finds that her father has a ferocious bull which at the instigation of Red Fang, posing as Mr. Redfern, is the result of crossing a bull with a bison. This bull escapes and goes to Skull Mountain. Red Fang persuaded Harbison to go there with him and then lures Eleanor there and demands that she become his wife. He ties Harbison and arranges a device so that in a certain length of time the bull will be free and attack him. Dan, learning of this, arrives and with the help of Silver King keeps the Indians at bay and rescues Eleanor and her father and wins her consent to marry him.

"Not So Long Ago"

Sidney Olcott Makes Real and Entertaining a Story of the Last Century, Featuring Betty Bronson

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

"Not So Long Ago" is largely what Sidney Olcott made it, for as a play the dramatic material is decidedly thin. In many hands the story would sink almost to travesty and in others it would be flat and commonplace, but with a carefully selected cast and admirable direction Mr. Olcott has worked it into a charming and at times almost a thrilling play. He gets you so interested in the characters and the atmosphere that you overlook the lack of dramatic smash.

This is a story of New York of the early fifties of the last century, thirty years back of the perfection of the automobile and half that distance from the old fashioned high wheeled bicycle; the days when stage coaches were filled with straw in Winter to keep the passengers' feet warm, and when the Brooklynite went home over the Fulton Ferry instead of the Brooklyn Bridge.

It is an interesting and very faithful picture of its period and the backgrounds have the charm of a series of old prints. This probably will possess greater sales value than the story, but does not indicate that the story is lacking in value, though it gains much through the personality of the players. Betty Bronson is charming as the little sewing girl who builds her dreams around the handsome son of her fashionable employer. She has not yet developed full depth of emotion, but her work is a very decided advance over her two previous roles and in her lighter moments she is wholly delightful.

Ricardo Cortez, as the somewhat floppish man of fashion keeps the role from becoming effeminate, and the finely drawn character of Sam Robinson is delightfully handled by Laurance Wheat. You have to recall him in other characters to realize that he is acting and not merely being himself. Surprisingly good work is done by Dan Crimmins as the old inventor. Part of the time he aids in supplying the comedy and at other moments he must contribute to the pathos, yet not once does he lose sympathy through overstressing the comedy.

The production has been most carefully made and the director has been singularly happy in his handling of the larger scenes. His mobs have the same pictorial value as the artistic groupings of the smaller scenes. The picture is thoroughly good entertainment with an abundance of natural comedy.

Length, 6,943 feet.

Michael Dover is working to perfect a steam propelled vehicle. His experiments eat up the scanty family fortune and he is forced to turn to Jerry Flint, a money lender, for assistance. Flint realizes that the idea may have value and frames the note so that the invention becomes his property in the event of non-payment. Betty, Dover's daughter, obtains employment as seamstress in the home of the fashionable Mrs. Ballard and becomes enamored of her son, William, who is engaged to Ursula Kent, largely because his mother wishes him to marry her wealth and position. Pestered by the attentions of Sam Robinson, Betty permits him to infer that Ballard has been making love to her and the jealous Sam persuades her father to ask Ballard his intentions. Getting to him before the two men arrive, Betty confesses her deception to Ballard, who good naturedly promises to aid her pretense, and in pursuance of this asks her father's permission to call. He falls genuinely in love, so the jealous Sam tries another device and informs Mrs. Ballard, who promptly discharged Betty after telling her of her son's engagement. When Ballard seeks to come to the financial aid of Dover, she will have none of his assistance. Flint assents to a trial of the vehicle, for advertising purposes, and Sam undertakes to walk against the device. But it is the old story of the hare and the tortoise. Sam drops in for a drink and the car beats him to the finish line. Flint claims the car, but it blows up, and he is glad to get the money from Ballard, who tells Betty that Ursula has given him his release because she, too, loves another.

"The Half-Way Girl"

Real Fire and Explosions Aboard Ocean Liner Provide Exceptional Thrills in Exciting Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There is one sequence in the First National production "The Half-Way Girl" which alone would insure its cordial reception by excitement-loving picture fans. That is the actual blowing up of a big ship at sea. Here is a real thriller. A fire breaks out aboard, smoke and then flames are seen bursting out through the hatches and soon the ship is ablaze, with passengers rushing madly to and fro. To add to the effect, the flames are in natural color. Lifeboats are lowered, even the crew is shown jumping off to a raft while fire bursts from the deck and through the portholes.

The fact that you know high explosives and matches have been loaded in the hold adds to the suspense, which reaches a high pitch with the rescue of the hero who is locked in "the brig" between decks. As if this were not enough punch for one situation, a leopard gets loose and causes the passengers to leap from a lifeboat, finally is routed by the hero with an oar and lands on an upturned boat to which the villain is clinging. Out-and-out melodrama this, but externally effective, and convincing because it is the real thing. But this is not all: after the passengers have left, the ship is shown rocked by three distinct explosions, each hurling parts of the vessel into the air, and finally it is seen sinking beneath the waves. These scenes are also in color.

All of this comes at the climax of a story that will hold the interest of melodrama lovers throughout. The locale is Singapore and the action concerns a half-way girl, neither good or bad, and a man who is a derelict, disillusioned by war and a faithless woman. The romance and regeneration is worked out in the midst of colorful oriental settings. There is plenty of action, for the hero kills a man in a brawl and is hunted by his own father, the head of the secret service, who also hounds the woman, sending her to lowest of the waterfront dives believing her to be an adventuress seeking to fleece his son.

Right up to the finish there is action, culminating in a fight in the dark between father and son, neither recognizing the other. While adding to the physical thrills, this seems a needly sacrifice of sympathy for the heroine who, to get revenge on the father, deliberately brings about this situation which ends in gunplay with the possibility that either father or son might have been killed. It ends, of course, with recognition and forgiveness.

Doris Kenyon gives an excellent performance, making the title role exceedingly real, and Lloyd Hughes is thoroughly acceptable opposite. Hobard Bosworth gives another of his vigorous performances as the father with Tully Marshall in a character bit.

With proper exhibition, "The Half-Way Girl" should prove a real box-office attraction.

Story

When a theatrical troupe is stranded in Singapore Poppy La Rue stays behind to take care of one of the girls who is sick. This girl dies and with the alternative of facing jail because of the big hotel bill, Poppy becomes a private hostess and makes the acquaintance of Philip Douglas. John Guthrie, head of the Indian secret service comes to Singapore and informs his subordinate that his son Philip has left home, disillusioned because of the war and an affair with a woman. Philip seeing his father disappears and goes to a dive where he drinks heavily and is robbed and in attempting to recover his wallet shoots the keeper. He gets away and with the aid of Poppy by boarding a steamer bound for Penang. Poppy returns to the hotel and going to Philip's room to get his luggage meets his father who thinks she is an adventuress and using his power sends her to a dive. Jardine, her former boss gets her out on condition that she accompany him to Penang. A fire breaks out in the hold and Philip is forced to come on deck where he rescues Poppy from Jardine and is locked in the brig. After the others leave the ship, Poppy helps him get out and an escaped leopard adds to their menace but they finally get in a boat just before the ship explodes, and are rescued by another ship. Philip's father comes aboard and Poppy contrives so that they fight and almost kill each other in the dark to get her revenge. Philip then discloses that they are married and love each other.

"Lorraine of the Lions"

Story of Girl Reared by Jungle Animals Makes Entertaining and Colorful Universal-Jewel Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

It is a story of the Tarzan type that is unfolded in the Universal-Jewel production, "Lorraine of the Lions," with Norman Kerry as the star and Patsy Ruth Miller featured in the title role. While fanciful and highly improbable, it should provide good entertainment for the majority of patrons. It is colorful, with good melodramatic punches and amusing comedy.

A ship with a circus aboard is wrecked. All are lost except a little girl who is saved by a pet gorilla. They land on an uninhabited tropical island along with a cage of lions. Regardless of the title, however, it is the gorilla and not the lions that figures largely in the action.

Isadore Bernstein has provided a smooth running story and Edward Sedgwick has capably directed the production, and combined with the excellent work of the players the interest is held throughout. Especially striking is the manner in which Mr. Sedgwick has produced the jungle scenes, the atmosphere being colorful, but aside from the unusual nature of the story, the biggest single factor is the performance of Patsy Ruth Miller. As the simple child of the wilderness, with only the faintest recollection of her people, she gives an excellent and convincing performance, never once getting out of character, admirably shading her work so as to indicate the effect of civilization after she is brought back to this country.

There is some excellent comedy in the situation where Norman Kerry attempts to show Miss Miller how to don conventional feminine garments and she succeeds in mixing things up generally. Mr. Kerry handles his role well throughout but is overshadowed by Miss Miller. The others in the cast are thoroughly capable and especially fine is the work of Fred Humes as the gorilla. In many of the situations the illusion is perfect.

A good melodramatic climax has been provided in the scenes where the gorilla escapes from his cage during a severe storm and, thoroughly terrified, grabs the heroine and starts off with her, climbing up on a roof. There is plenty of punch and excitement when the hero climbs up after this animal and rescues the girl but comes near forfeiting his own life when this powerful brute turns on him; but you feel a pang of regret when a timely shot kills the gorilla, for it has been a real friend and companion for the girl and saved her on several occasions.

Of course there is a romance and it has been pleasingly worked out.

Young John Livingston married a circus woman and his father never forgave him, but offered to take their child, Lorraine, and care for her. While coming to America with their circus the ship struck a derelict and sank and all were reported lost. Lorraine's companion, Bimi, a gorilla, saved her and they land on a tropical island with an elephant and a cage of lions. In an apparition Lorraine's grandfather sees her and is so impressed that for years he visits fortune tellers to try and get some news of her whereabouts. Finally Don Mackey, student of the occult, is nearly run over by the old man's car. Don reads a crystal and sees Lorraine and the party, including Hartley, a nephew, who seeks the Livingston fortune. They find Lorraine, who has grown up as a child of nature with only the old gorilla as a companion. At last she is persuaded to return with them to San Francisco. During a dinner when Lorraine is ill at ease, Bimi acts badly and is put in a cage. Later a storm comes up and without Lorraine to comfort him he becomes ferocious, breaks out, invades the house and starts off with Lorraine. Don succeeds in rescuing her and is attacked. The gorilla is finally shot. Don starts to leave, saying his work is finished, but Lorraine says if he must go she will go with him.

"Eve's Lover"

Irene Rich, Lytell, Louis and Clara Bow in Entertaining Warner Brothers Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Two vivid characters, opposites, hold the center of the stage in "Eve's Lover," a Warner Brothers Classic of the Screen, with Irene Rich, Bert Lytell, Clara Bow and Willard Louis. Miss Rich is a steel magnate, Lytell a handsome rounder. They marry as a result of the machinations of a business man, played by Louis, and the story revolves around the rounder's new-found love for the woman and his difficulties with former playmates, among them a flapper played by Miss Bow.

With these strong characters and a strong though not unusual plot, "Eve's Lover" proves good entertainment. It is the first big directorial effort of Roy Del Ruth, previously identified with slapstick comedies, and a creditable work.

The climax is particularly well directed. It concerns a strike and stampede of mill employes which various men try to check and which ends to the satisfaction of all but the villain.

Miss Rich is a most dependable actress and in "Eve's Lover" she is eminently pleasing. Some of the transitions afforded by change of make-up and dress are striking, as she becomes the elemental rather than the business woman. Lytell's performance as the rounder is finished in all respects, and Willard Louis again scores, this time in the role of the crude business man. Clara Bow is a flash of temper as the aggrieved flapper.

"Eve's Lover" is a good program picture and ought to please in a majority of theatres. The cast is excellent and the work of its members expert.

Story

Baron Maddox, breaker of women's hearts, marries Eve Burnside, business woman to whom love has previously been only a word, at the instigation of Austin Starfield, business competitor of the Burnside steel factory, who plans to force its sale. Maddox falls in love with his wife and refuses to heed Starfield. Rena, a flapper in love with Maddox, leads Eve to believe that Maddox has only married for money. Starfield engineers a strike at the Burnside factory. Maddox breaks this up and convinces Eve he loves her.

"The Ranger of the Big Pines"

Eulalie Jensen's Excellent Characterization Is Outstanding Feature of Vitagraph Western

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

One of Hamlin Garland's novels, "Cavanagh, Forest Ranger," has been adapted to the screen and is being offered by Vitagraph under the title, "The Ranger of the Big Pines," with Kenneth Harlan and Helene Costello, the daughter of Maurice Costello, in the leading role.

From the standpoint of story and action the picture is an average western with a conflict between cattle barons, who refuse to pay tax for grazing on government land, and the defending forest ranger as opponents. Following one of the variations of the familiar formula, there is an attack on the ranger, with the girl riding ahead to give warning and a posse following to the rescue, giving opportunities for plenty of hard riding and gunplay.

The picture is lifted out of the ordinary, however, by a single character, admirably played by Eulalie Jensen, that of the deserted wife struggling along as manager of a frontier hotel, losing beauty, refinement and even neatness to keep her daughter in luxury in the East. Here is splendid character drawing, accentuated by the distaste of the daughter, who, arriving unnoticed, finds her ideas rudely shattered. Miss Jensen holds strictly to the character and finally wins real sympathy for a distasteful role. Fighting through the barrier of unloveliness by sheer force of personality and artistry, she gives the picture individuality.

Due to faults either in continuity or direction, the story is lacking in smoothness. For instance, the opening scenes show the girl arriving home and being received with great acclaim. She is then pictured as aboard the train and this is confusing until her real arrival under totally different circumstances establishes the previous scenes as a dream. The comedy relief, while amusing, is considerably overplayed.

Kenneth Harlan is well cast as the ranger, carrying out the romantic idea of the role admirably. Helene Costello gives a creditable performance as the girl but does not seem as yet quite sure of herself. With a make-up that is none too good Eugene Pallette struggles with the unconvincing role of the girl's father who returns in disguise and seems miscast.

Length, 7,032 feet.

Story

After being away from her mother for ten years, Virginia Weatherford returns west filled with rosy hope and is shocked to find that her mother an unkempt woman running a hotel catering to rough men and has become as rough and hardened as the men are. Virginia meets Ross Cavanagh a ranger who takes up for her mother and her influence softens her. Gregg, leader of the cattle barons who resent a government tax on grazing on public lands, sends his son out with the cattle and Cavanagh accepting a challenge whips him in a fight. Later, Pinkie the hotel waiter overhears Gregg plan to send his men to attack Cavanagh and make way with him if necessary. Virginia rides to warn him and he is also aided by a rough character who confesses to Cavanagh that he is Virginia's father who disappeared years before charged with a crime. Finally the attackers are repulsed but this man is killed and Cavanagh keeps secret the fact that he is her father.

"Rugged Water"

Exciting Rescue from Storm-Tossed Vessel Is Big Punch in Paramount Version of Lincoln Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Some authors excel in the delineation of character, others in developing action, and the same is true of directors. Joseph C. Lincoln, who wrote the novel on which the Paramount production, "Rugged Water," is based, belongs to the former class, while Irvin Willat is an exponent of the latter.

Like all of Lincoln's novels, this one is a story of the rugged folk who live along the shores of Cape Cod and the entire action takes place in a small village or the life-saving station nearby. Naturally there are several scenes that justify the title and the sequences when the crew go to the rescue of a sinking ship. These are well handled, besides being in many instances pictorially beautiful. Mr. Willat is at his best here. From the point where the hero asserts himself, overrides the authority of the cowardly captain and orders the men out into the raging water, there is plenty of punch. The rescue, with the crew boarding the storm-tossed vessel, is dramatic and realistic, and the same is true of a later scene where the hero rescues the girl's father during a storm, though it loses some of its effect because of the previous scene.

There is an amusing sequence showing the clever village belle forcing the hero into a proposal but not much action or incident before the big climax. The highlights of the story are here, the characters keep the plot in motion but they have not been sufficiently developed to keep you intensely interested in their movements. Lincoln's popularity depends more on the way he builds his characters to make their actions convincing than in what they actually do, and it is this compelling motivation that is lacking in this story, which as a result loses much of its force.

This is especially true of the old captain. He is introduced as a religious fanatic but his physical cowardice, which he cloaks with religion, comes as a surprise, for there has been nothing to establish or explain this angle.

Lois Wilson and Warner Baxter give capable performances in the romantic leads, and Phyllis Haver is capital as the scheming village belle, while the minor roles are all well handled. Walace Beery gives a sterling performance as the old sea captain, but we doubt whether this character in which he "shows the white feather" will appeal to his public who are accustomed to seeing him in roles which while not often sympathetic are always vigorous.

Mr. Willat has excellently established the ruggedness and bleakness of the surroundings and the atmosphere of the life-saving station is convincing. The production details are excellent.

Robert Kane Picks Higgin to Direct "Invisible Wounds"

TWO years ago Robert Kane said that future directing talent would have to be sought in the writing branch of the business.

"The old directors hold to old ideas and cannot be made to change," said Kane, "the writers have the new ideas and we must develop them as directors."

Kane instanced a number of writers who had been given a chance to direct—and two years have borne out his prophecy: the men are successful directors today.

When Mr. Kane became an independent producer and signed a First National contract, he bought Frederick Palmer's book, "Invisible Wounds," and assigned Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin to the continuity. So impressed was Kane with their treatment, that he gave up negotiations with a famous director who wanted to produce the picture, and now First National announces that Higgins will handle the megaphone.

"I selected Mr. Higgin after giving the matter much thought," states Mr. Kane, "and because the treatment he prepared with Miss Cowan showed real genius. He seems to me the type of writer who has a future as a director, and should make good on his vision of 'Invisible Wounds.' I claim that the finished scenario-continuity writer has the fundamentals of direction at his finger-tips. He should not find it difficult to transfer his vision of the story to the screen. The mechanics of the work of reproduction are his least worry."

And so, suiting action to belief, Kane has given Higgin his chance and production commences about July 20th in New York City. A strong cast, headed by Blanche Sweet, is being assembled for the picture.

Lewis King, younger brother of Henry King, has been appointed assistant to Director Higgin.

Exhibitors and Writers Acclaim New Director

"THE GIRL WHO WOULDN'T WORK," the first directorial work of the young Rumanian, Marcel De Sano, was previewed last week in Hollywood at a special showing arranged by B. P. Schulberg under whose supervision this new Preferred Picture was made.

The performance was attended by a group of California exhibitors and the West Coast representatives of motion picture magazines and newspapers. De Sano's work was generally acclaimed as indicating that he is one of the most significant young directors to be introduced to the industry in many months.

He came to this country atter several years service in the French diplomatic corps, and received his picture training as a scenario and title writer with Universal and Metro-Goldwyn. Two months ago, B. P. Schulberg gave him his first opportunity at the megaphone. His next production to follow "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" will be the screen version of Wallace Irwin's novel, "Lew Tyler's Wives."

This first picture, however, will serve as the first example of his directing technique. It is adapted from the novel by Gertie D. Wentworth-James that was widely discussed in London last fall. Marguerite De La Motte, Lionel Barrymore, Forrest Stanley, Lilyan Tashman, Henry B. Walthall and others are in the cast.

Rossman on the Air

Producer of "Kivalina of the Iceland" Talks via Radio on Arctic Data

Earl Rossman, who spent two years in the frigid North making the screen-drama "Kivalina of the Ice Lands," which Pathe will release on August 9, is telling radio fans of the experiences encountered in making his picture.

Through the New York studio of Station WOR, Rossman is giving a series of five talks on how he managed to photograph the aurora borealis; how he persuaded the native Eskimos to act out his story before the camera; how he lived in an igloo with the Eskimos and other interesting subjects. He calls his series of talks "Tales of the Arctic, or Making Pictures Under the Midnight Sun."

He has also broadcast over WNYC, the New York City Municipal Broadcasting Station.

Convention of First National

A call for a national convention of First National branch and district managers has been sent out by E. A. Eschmann for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, August 25, 26 and 27 in New York City.

The main feature of the convention will be the presentation to the field force of the selling plans on the new product, though many other features for the betterment of First National service to the exhibitor will be gone into.

Four Comedy Two-Reelers From Century This Month

FOUR proven comedy successes will be released for general showing during the month of August by the Century Film Corporation. They are two-reel Century Comedies made with such well-known stars as Wanda Wiley, Edna Marion, Al Alt and Eddie Gordon.

The first to reach the screen will be "After a Reputation," starring Edna Marian. This young comedienne has built up such a widespread reputation in Century Comedies, she has been borrowed by the Universal Pictures Corporation to play an important role in one of Universal's forthcoming Second White List Jewels, "The Still Alarm." In "After a Reputation," which was directed by William Watson, Miss Marian was given unusual opportunities to display her ability to draw laughs. It is a hilarious take-off on the adventures of a home-town girl who has stage aspirations. It contains some jazzy back-stage chorus scenes and also is notable by the appearance of Pinto Colveg, the man with the funny face. Matty Roubert plays the principal supporting role. This comedy will be released through Universal Exchange August 5.

The next Century to reach the screen will be "Paging a Wife," starring Al Alt. Charles Lamont, the director, pilots Alt and a strong cast through an amusing series of comic situations which make for good screen entertainment. Included in the cast are such well-known comedy players as Hilliard Karr, Charles King, who has been promoted to be a Century Comedy star in his own right, and Lillian Worth. The comedy has a number of angles, including funny automobile and golf scenes. It is heralded as the best Al Alt comedy ever made. It will be released August 12.

The third Century Comedy for August will be a Wanda Wiley Comedy. It is called "Won By Law," and shows Miss Wiley in an entirely new type of comedy. It is a true situation comedy, with a strong plot and a rapid sequence of amusing situations. It concerns a blase young heiress who can't get a thrill out of life until she is kidnapped by a cave-man from the wooly west. An enforced stay in his mountain cabin makes a new girl out of her.

Popular Bob Reeves has the chief supporting in this comedy. Others in the cast are Lillian Worth and Frank Whitson. It will be released August 19.

The last Century release for August is "Crying For Love," starring Eddie Gordon. Noel Smith directed it. Eddie has the role of an adventurous young bride-groom, with husky Blanch Payson playing the bride. Eddie finds that being the new husband of a six-foot cave-woman has its drawbacks, especially when he takes an interest in smaller and outer brands of girlhood. This comedy is slated for release August 26.

The August Centuries mark the wind-up of that company's 1924-1925 product, and because of the exhibitor's need for strong comedy offerings at this time of the year, have been selected with unusual care. They all are heralded as excellent box-office pictures.

C. Edward Davenport Will Produce Feature Series

C. EDWARD DAVENPORT announced this week the incorporation of a producing company, the name of which will be made public shortly, and for which company he will make a series of feature photoplays.

Mr. Davenport states that he is associated with Wally Gluck, of New York City, son of former State Assemblyman Samuel A. Gluck, of Brooklyn, sponsor of the New York State Sunday Opening Bill, under which certain forms of theatrical entertainment are permitted, including the presentation of motion pictures.

Some years ago, Mr. Davenport was seriously burned in a studio fire when making a picture for J. V. Ritchey and Arthur Sawyer. The trade press and newspapers at the time published Mr. Davenport's obituary notice. But he didn't die. He lived, and fought his way back through the scars, wrecked tissues and nerves, following the fire. His recent affiliations have been with the legitimate stage, whence he came originally to the screen.

Mr. Davenport was associated with the old Reliance company, Majestic, Lubin, All-Star and others, both as an actor and as director. He produced "Broken Barriers."

The series of "Safety First" pictures, directed by Mr. Davenport for the railroads, are in use by five big railroad systems in the United States and Canada.

With the announcement of the name of the producing company, which will have temporary offices in 1486 Broadway, Mr. Davenport will announce further details regarding stories, stars and players, and studio arrangements.

Maloney Starts New Series

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Clarion Photoplays, Inc., announces that, according to advices just received, Leo Maloney has just started production on the first of his series of eight five-reel Western Gems which Clarion will distribute this coming season. The preliminary work for the series has been completed in full. The first picture of the series will be released under the title of "Win, Lose or Draw."

Scenes in "Without Mercy," a George Melford production, with Vera Reynolds, Dorothy Phillips, Robert Ames and Rockcliffe Fellowes, released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Fox Gives Titles and Dates on First Group of Short Subject Releases

TITLES and release dates for its initial group of short subject productions for the season beginning in August are contained in an announcement just issued by Fox Film Corporation.

Numbering twenty-two, exclusive of the Fox News releases, with pictures from each of its five short reel units, the initial Fox announcement contains an imposing group of short reel films.

There are four of the second series of Richard Harding Davis "Van Bibber" comedies, the first series of which have been hailed as comedy triumphs of the current season; three of the new O. Henry series, which Fox is making from the cream of that great American genius' works; three of the "Married Life of Helen and Warren" laugh-getters from the widely read newspaper stories by Mabel Urner; three Imperial Comedies, which need no introduction to exhibitors, and nine Fox Varieties, one-reel gems of the world we live in.

The four Van Bibber releases mentioned in the announcement are "The Big Game Hunter," "The Sky Jumper," "The Wrestler" and "A Parisian Knight"; the O. Henry selections include "Shoes," "Transients in Arcadia," and "Failure"; the initial Married Life films are "A Business Engagement," "All Aboard" and "The Peacemakers"; the Imperial Comedy trio includes "On The Go," "Sweet Marie" and "Love and Lions."

The nine one-reelers which make up the first group of Fox Varieties include "The West Wind," "In a China Shop," "My Own Carolina," With Pencil, Brush and Chisel," "Cuba Steps Out," "The Sky Tribe," "White Paper," "The River Nile" and "Toiling for Rest."

The Van Bibber "The Big Game Hunter" is the first Fox short subject release for the new season, with August 16 as the date set. In this humorous tale Earle Foxe, starring in the title role, excels anything he has ever done. His antics as a big game hunter and the laugh getting incidents that follow one after another make this first release a "wow" it is said.

"On the Go," an Imperial, and "The West Wind," a Varieties, are the next releases on August 23. The adventures of a group of city cliff dwellers in the wide open spaces is the basis of the humorous laughs in the comedy production. Full of surprises and beauty is "The West Wind," which is a new idea for a picture with the most novel of treatment.

"A Business Engagement," the first of the Married Life of Helen and Warren series to be released, is set for August 30. This picture is a scream which will be appreciated by any couple whose peace is threatened by "business engagements" on the part of friend husband says a Fox official.

"Shoes," O. Henry's tale of Alabama cockleburrs and bare Central American feet, is scheduled for release September 6, with the Imperial "Sweet Marie" and "In a China Shop," a Fox Varieties. The O. Henry story is too well known to need repeating. "Sweet Marie" moves around the misadventures of the suitors of a sweet young thing to innumerable real hearty laughs. "In a China Shop" is a unique subject having to do with the history of making porcelain.

"The Sky Jumper," a Van Bibber, "Love and Lions," an Imperial, and "My Own Carolina," a Fox Varieties, will be released on September 20. If you have ever seen any one trying to learn how to ski, you can easily imagine how funny this Van Bibber is, for it is based on the initiation of Van and his clique into the mysteries of the famed Norwegian sport. "Love and Lions" is one of those inimitable lion comedies which Fox produces so well. The yearning of all the songs that express a longing to go back to the Sunny South are rolled together in "My Own Carolina."

An intimate glimpse of genius is "With Pencil, Brush and Chisel," scheduled for release October 4. Into his marvelous New York Studio, this Fox Varieties takes you to spend interesting minutes with Emil Fuchs, one of America's foremost artistic geniuses. The second Married Life Picture, "All Aboard," is scheduled for release October 11 and the humor and pangs of a couple's parting are shown here in an amusing manner.

On October 18 another O. Henry, "Transients in Arcadia," and "Cuba Steps Out," a Fox Varieties, will be released. The O. Henry release is said to be the most typical of that author's work and brings to the screen in a convincing manner the humor and pathos for which he was justly celebrated. "Cuba Steps Out" takes one to that playground of the Western Hemisphere, which, despite its numerous pleasure seekers, ministers to the needs of the world with its great crops of sugar and tobacco. It is a picture of unusually interesting contrasts.

A Van Bibber, "The Wrestler," and a Varieties, "The Sky Tribe," made up the November 1 releases. The slender Earle Foxe as an adventurer into the land of catch-as-catch-can is claimed to give more laughs per foot than any comedy ever made. "The Sky Tribe" is the result of the daring of the adventurous Miss Elizabeth Pickett into high mesas that rim the deserts of the Southwest, where dwell the Eagle Men, the Pueblo Indians. Truly a picture of rare beauty and intense interest to lovers of the strange and unique sights of the world.

"White Paper," based on the transformation of a tree into a newspaper, the million-tongued crier of modern civilization, is the interesting Varieties scheduled for release on November 15.

On November 22 "The Peacemakers," third of the Helen and Warren series, will be available for distribution. One may easily imagine the humorous situations that can be built around the entrance of olive branch bearers into a quarrel between Helen and Warren, which is the background of this two-reeler.

"The River Nile," a Varieties, and "Failure," an O. Henry, make up the November 29 releases. "The River Nile" is a photographic record of an expedition to the best known river in the world, showing Egypt going ahead today with its work as it did 5,000 years ago in the days of King Tut. "Failure," despite its ominous title, has enough humor sprinkled through it to be clasesd as a comedy rather than a tragedy and is considered by many as O. Henry's greatest story.

Concluding the initial group of releases on December 13 are "A Parisian Knight," a Van Bibber, and "Toiling for Rest," a Varieties. As a "Parisian Knight" Earle Foxe has a fertile field for his inimitable comedy stunts. "Toiling for Rest" shows a band of hardy vacationsits setting out in search of rest in the heart of the Canadian Rockies. This picture gives the thrill of adventure and at the same time is one of real beauty in its scenic setting.

Scenes in the William Fox photoplay version of the John Golden stage success, "Lightin'," with Jay Hunt, Madge Bellamy, Ethel Clayton, J. Farrell MacDonald, Otis Harlan and Wallace McDonald. This is a John Ford production, from a scenario by Frances Marion.

Florence Turner to Play for Columbia Under Tony Gaudio

EXHIBITORS and fans are always anxious to get a little word about the great favorites of the early days. And when they hear that Florence Turner, the famous Vitagraph star of twenty years ago has come back to Hollywood, they will be all the more interested—especially when they realize that one of the pioneers in the screen world, Tony Gaudio, who "shot" her early productions when Blackton was her director, is the man who will handle the megaphone for Columbia in the second of its Waldorf releases, "The Price of Success."

Miss Turner recently returned from England where for the past eight years she has been heading her own company and has scored considerable success in the biggest features made during that period in the British Isles.

"It makes me feel great to get back to the States," Miss Turner told Gaudio after the two had greeted each other and had also recounted some of the interesting phases of the early days of motion pictures when they were on the same lot.

"I am enthusiastic about my treatment abroad as I was given the best consideration wherever I went. But I'm glad to make pictures again in the United States because I feel that there is ample scope for my ability here. I am delighted with the story, 'The Price of Success,' and elated with the part I play in it."

Miss Turner has been given offers to play in a number of big Hollywood productions, and expects to get right back into the swing of picture work here, beginning with "The Price of Success."

Alice Lake heads the cast of "The Price of Success," and a number of well-known favorites have also been included: Gaston Glass, Lee Shumway, Alma Bennett, Speck O'Donnell and Tom Rickets, seasoned troupers who have appeared in some of the best pictures of the year.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Signs Virginia Bushman

VIRGINIA BUSHMAN, of Baltimore, daughter of Francis X. Bushman, has signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to appear on the screen.

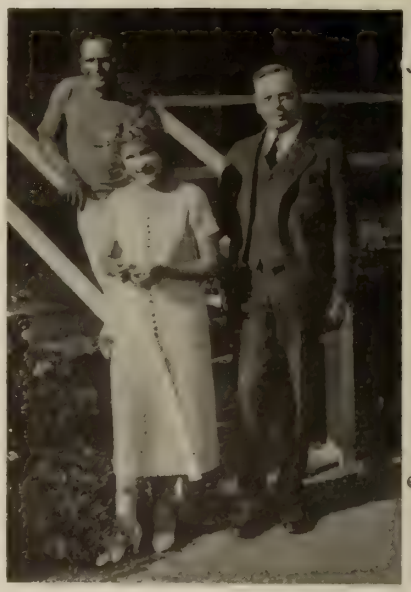
Miss Bushman, who is 19, was given a small part with her sister Lenore, 17, in Monta Bell's "Lights of Old Broadway," adapted from the stage play "Merry Wives of Gotham," when the girls recently left their Baltimore home to pay a visit to their father in Hollywood. Later Robert McIntyre, casting director for the Culver City studios, selected Miss Bushman from among 800 extras without being aware of her identity, and subsequently secured her signature to a contract.

Mrs. Bushman, interviewed at her Baltimore home, has expressed great pleasure over Virginia's success.

"I knew about Virginia's good fortune, of course. She wrote me immediately. Both Virginia and Lenore are very pretty girls and are of the type that screen well. They are enraptured with the idea of careers on the screen."

Mr. Bushman is now playing at the Culver City studios opposite Mae Murray in "The Masked Bride."

Florence Turner, famous Vitagraph star of the pioneer days, with Alice Lake and Director Tony Gaudio, who are to make "The Price of Success" for Waldorf Pictures, which Columbia distributes.



James C. Burger, newly-elected Imperial Potentate of the Shrine, called on Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks recently and talked over old times in Denver, his home town, with Doug, a Denver native.

F. X. Bushman Cast

Will Play Leading Role Opposite Mae Murray in "The Masked Bride"

Francis X. Bushman has been signed to play opposite Mae Murray in "The Masked Bride." Bushman will have the straight role of Richard Grover, second in importance only to that of the star.

Bushman, who began his career in films with Essanay in the early days of pictures, returned to the stage several years ago, but was recently lured back to the screen to play Messala in Fred Niblo's production of "Ben Hur."

Directing "Souls for Sables"

James C. McKay is directing the Tiffany Production "Souls For Sale," suggested from Garlan & Co. by David Graham Phillips. McKay has had an intensive training in various branches of the motion picture business and has heretofore directed a number of excellent pictures. Before joining Tiffany Productions he was associated as an assistant with Herbert Brenon and then with the Cosmopolitan Productions.

"Action Galore" Started

Advices from Lester F. Scott, Jr., on the West Coast announce the start of production on "Action Galore," the third in the series of eight Five Reel Rough Riding Romances featuring Buddy Roosevelt.

The story is adapted from "The Valley of Jeopardy" by Ralph Cummins, which was published in Action Stories Magazine.

The picture is under the direction of Robert Eddy from the continuity by Betty Burbridge.

"Bunker Bean" Finished

News to the Warner Bros.' head offices in New York tells of the completion of production work on "His Majesty Bunker Bean," one of the specials on the 1925-26 schedule. This is Julien Josephson's adaptation of Harry Leon Wilson's widely read and popular novel, with the inimitable comedian, Matt Moore, in the name part, and Dorothy Devore in the leading woman's role.

RIZA ROYCE

A charming stage personality won this New York celebrity a contract in pictures from B. P. Schulberg. Miss Royce has gone to the Coast for her first role in the Preferred Picture, "Lew Tyler's Wives."

Ray in M.-G.-M. Picture

Will Have Role Opposite Pauline Starke in "A Little Bit of Broadway"

Charles Ray, one of the most famous and best loved motion picture actors in the world, has signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, according to an announcement made by Harry Rapf, associate production executive at the Culver City studios.

Ray will be co-featured with Pauline Starke in "A Little Bit of Broadway" under the direction of Robert Z. Leonard.

"Hurricane Horseman" Arrives

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers Artclass Pictures Corp., announces that he has received the negative and first print of "The Hurricane Horsemen" from Lester F. Scott, Jr., its producer.

This picture is the second of the series of Eight Five Reel Acrobatic Stunt-Thrillers featuring Wally Wales (The Cowboy Prince). Those who have seen the picture fully agree that it lives up to its title which implies fast riding.

Signs for Columbia

R. C. Fox, president of Freedom Film Corporation of Rochester, New York, has signed with Columbia Pictures to distribute in upper New York State a number of their big successes: "Traffic in Hearts," "Her Accidental Husband," and "Pal O' Mine," as well as twenty two-reel westerns featuring Dick Hatton, and Screen Snapshots. The Freedom territory lies east of Buffalo and beyond Albany.

Titling "Wrong Doers"

John Krafft has completed editing and titling "The Wrong Doers," directed by Hugh Dierker, the first of the Bernarr MacFadden series, and is now writing final titles for Johnny Hines' forthcoming comedy feature, "The Live Wire," produced by C. C. Burr under direction of Charles Hines as the initial offering under their new contract with First National.

"Paris After Dark" Announced As Norma Talmadge Picture

"PARIS AFTER DARK" will be Norma Talmadge's next starring vehicle for First National, according to word received yesterday from the Hollywood offices of Joseph M. Schenck.

The announcement that the story goes into production immediately on completion of her current vehicle, "Graustark," confirms the indication that 1925 will be the busiest production year of the star's career.

"Paris After Dark" is an original story by John W. Considine, Jr., for the past several years production manager of Joseph M. Schenck productions, and who recently made his debut as an independent producer. It had been previously titled "Sun of Montmartre," but with its definite selection as Norma's next film the switch in title was decided upon.

Additional news value was given the advice received at the First National offices here from Schenck in the announcement that Samuel Goldwyn had agreed to lend the services of the popular Ronald Colman as Norma Talmadge's leading man in "Paris After Dark."

Sidney Franklin, who directed "Smiling Through," will handle the megaphone. The photoplay will be known as a Sidney A. Franklin Production.

Norma's next vehicle will mark her return to the type of role in which she reigned in public favor before the era of such character roles as she had in "Secrets" and "The Lady." In "Paris After Dark" she will be an impudent spitfire, an idol of the Apaches of the Montmartre. It is a role of fire and dash, in radical contrast to the sweet, devoted characterizations of her recent mother roles.

Roland West, author and producer of several mystery plays and photoplays, such as "The Unknown Purple" and "The Monster," will have production supervision of the new Norma Talmadge film. As the action involves a mingling of mystery and melodrama with comedy and pathos, West was deemed the logical selection for production command.

"Paris After Dark" is scheduled to be put into production about August 15th.

All Warners Stock Company Stars to Appear in Big Special

WARNER BROS. have decided to use every member of their stock company and every one of their stars—with the possible exception of John Barrymore and Lowell Sherman, in "Broken Hearts of Hollywood," one of the productions of their 1925-26 schedule.

Plans now under way and just revealed in information coming from Hollywood call for one of the biggest specials ever made.

Among the stars and featured players appearing will be Syd Chaplin, Monte Blue, Marie Prevost, Irene Rich, Louise Fazenda and Patsy Ruth Miller, to take just a few names from the formidable Warner list. It is even possible that a dog part will be found for Rin-Tin-Tin.

Roy del Ruth will direct the production from the scenario by Darryl Francis Zanuck.

John McGraw, manager of the New York National baseball team ("The Giants"), with Allene Ray, Patheserial star of "Play Ball," written by McGraw.

Lilyan Tashman Signed

A potential star of meteoric appearance has been secured by Metropolitan Pictures in the signing of Lilyan Tashman under a three-year contract.

Miss Tashman has been in Hollywood but fourteen months and in that short period has appeared in fifteen productions including "I'll Show You the Town," "Pretty Ladies," "Broadway Butterfly" and Al Christie's newest feature "Seven Days."

Immediately upon the completion of her work in "Seven Days," William Sistrom, general manager of Metropolitan Pictures signed her to appear in featured roles exclusively in the productions to be released through Producers Distributing Corporation.

"Lovers in Quarantine" Completed

Bebe Daniels has completed her latest comedy under Frank Tuttle's direction, "Lovers in Quarantine," adapted from the play "Quarantine," which evoked hearty laughter for many months on Broadway where it was played by Helen Hayes and Sidney Blackmer.

The star's principal aids in the gaieties that followed her elopement with her sister's suitor were Harrison Ford, Alfred Lunt, Eden Gray, Ivan Simpson, Edna May Oliver, Diana Kane and Marie Shotwell.

Add to "Big Parade" Cast

Word comes from the Coast to the effect that Hobart Bosworth, Claire Adams, Robert Ober and Claire McDowell have joined the cast of "The Big Parade," John Gilbert's first starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Bosworth will have the role of Mr. Apperson, the hero's father and Claire Adams is to play young Apperson's southern sweetheart. Robert Ober has been cast as Conrad, one of the Gilbert's buddies in the picture, and Claire McDowell is to have the role of Mrs. Apperson.

King Vidor is making rapid progress with this Laurence Stallings story and hopes to complete it shortly.

A Galsworthy Original

Associated Pictures Corporation is negotiating with John Galsworthy for an original scenario for Barbara La Marr, who played the leading role in the Sawyer-Lubin production of "The White Monkey," by Galsworthy, for First National Pictures.

This vehicle probably will follow "Spanish Sunlight," an adaptation of the novel by Anthony Pryde, which has been announced as Miss La Marr's next picture, and is to be made on the Coast under the personal supervision of June Mathis.

Completes "The Perfect Clown"

"The Perfect Clown," Larry Semon's second special comedy production for the new Chadwick Pictures Corporation program, has been completed. "The Perfect Clown" is scheduled for release on October 15, but arrangements have already been completed for a special pre-release engagement on Broadway in September. The cast includes Dorothy Dwan, Oliver Hardy, Stuart Holmes, Kate Price, Otis Harlan, Alice Fletcher and Sam Allen.

"The Auction Block"

Hope Loring and Louis Lighton, one of the best known teams of scenarists in the motion picture industry, have started the continuity from their adaptation of Rex Beach's novel "The Auction Block," which will be produced in the near future by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

BETTY BRONSON
Featured in Paramount's "Not So Long Ago."

New Thriller for Walsh

"The Prince of Broadway," the well known Broadway stage success, which will be George Walsh's next vehicle under the Chadwick banner, is well under way in Los Angeles. The story, which is a fast-moving comedy, is said to provide this athletic star with opportunities for a greater variety of his thrilling stunts than has ever before been attempted in any picture. "The Prince of Broadway" will be completed within three weeks and is scheduled for release on September 15. "American Pluck," the first of the Walsh series, with Wanda Hawley, Tom Wilson, Leo White, Frank Leigh, Wilfred North, Sydney De Grey and Dan Mason in the supporting cast, will be released on August 15.

W. S. McNutt Signed

William Slavens McNutt, fiction writer, has signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to write scenarios, and has gone to the Coast to join the staff of writers now at the Culver City studios.

West and Considine, Jr. to Produce for United

United Artists Corporation announces that Roland West and John W. Considine, Jr., have become associate producers.

Word came in a message from Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of directors of United Artists Corporation, now at Hollywood, to Hiram Abrams, president of the corporation. Messrs. West and Considine have been serving Mr. Schenck as production supervisors for Norma and Constance Talmadge.

The selection also places West and Considine on the executive roster of the newly organized Art Finance Corporation.

This step was interpreted by Mr. Schenck's first move toward transforming United Artists Corporation from the basis of a few pictures a year to a full, all-year releasing schedule.

Changes Titles

First National Pictures has selected the release titles for two of its new productions.

"What Fools Men" is the new title for the picture that George Archainbaud has been directing from the new Henry Kitchell Webster novel, "Joseph Greer and His Daughter." Photography on "What Fools Men" was completed on July 13th. Cutting and titling is now in progress.

"Dangerous Currents" is the title of the photoplay Edwin Carewe is making from Willard Robinson's play "The Sea Woman," on which rapid progress is being made. Mr. Carewe will soon announce his next production for First National.

Tourneur to Direct

Sam Rork has engaged Maurice Tourneur to direct his new production for First National release, "Clothes Make the Pirate," from Holman Day's novel. He expects to star photography this week.

Leon Errol, the musical comedy star who made such a hit with his first screen appearance in "Sally" with Colleen Moore, will be the star of the production. Mr. Rork has signed up several noted screen players to appear with him, notably Dorothy Gish, Shirley Mason, Nita Naldi, Tully Marshall, George Marion and Frank Lawlor.

Begins on Second Macfadden

Casting began this week on the second series of eight Bernarr Macfadden True Story film productions. The Pathe studios in the Bronx will be used by the Macfadden company, which is releasing through Astor Distributing Corporation.

R. R. Riskin has temporarily taken charge of the Macfadden film enterprise, it was stated this week at the office of the True Story Film Company in the Macfadden building, 1926 Broadway. The first picture to be produced under the supervision of Riskin will be "The Danger Line," a Macfadden "true story."

Foster's Rise to Fame

Louis Foster, who handles a multitude of detail work concerning comedy production as an assistant to F. Richard Jones, vice-president and director-general of Hal Roach studios, is one of the individual examples of Roach's policy of giving deserved positions to any employee in preference to seeking new people from outside the studio. Foster started as a property boy with Roach and in three years has progressed through various channels of production work to his present post.

"The Vanishing American" Cast

Casting for "The Vanishing American," the production which marks one of the most ambitious filming efforts ever attempted by Paramount, was completed with the addition of nine players to Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery, Malcolm McGregor and Shannon Day. The eight new names include George Magrill, Gert Woodruff, Bernard Siegel, Charles Stevens, Joseph Ryan, John Webb Dillion, James Corey and James Spencer.

Peggy Browne Is In Town

Peggy Browne is back in New York this week after a protracted stay in Hollywood, where she appeared in a number of Warner Bros. pictures, and is headed straight for the cast of "Riquette," which will be an operetta to be presented in the metropolis this month.

Joins De Mille Staff

Cecil B. De Mille announces a valuable addition to his scenario staff in the person of Douglas Z. Doty, a former editor of Century Magazine, whose signature has just been secured to a long term contract.

Doty recently completed the continuity for Leatrice Joy's next starring picture, "The Wedding Song," which is now being produced under the direction of Alan Hale, and his work so pleased De Mille that he offered Doty a contract. Doty is credited with the scenario work on numerous successful pictures, among them "Broadway After Dark" and "Circe The Enchantress."

To Start "The Bells"

Preparations for the production of "The Bells," Lionel Barrymore's next special for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, are being completed by James Young, who will direct the picture. In "The Bells" Lionel Barrymore will portray the character of Mathias, which was immortalized by the Late Sir Henry Irving on the stage.

Production on "The Bells" will be started as soon as I. E. Chadwick, president of the company, who is now in New York City, returns to the Coast. The production will be released early next fell.

"The Live Wire"

So rapid has been the advance made by Director Charles Hines on C. C. Burr's first Johnny Hines production for First National release, "The Live Wire," that photography will be completed in early August at the rate of progress now being maintained. The filming of the exterior circus scenes, made at Sheepshead Bay, marked the end of the most elaborate scenes. "The Live Wire" will be released as one of its Winner Group of pictures by First National early in October.

Change Title to "Lone Eagle"

With the announcement that production work has started and is well under way on Rudolph Valentino's first starring feature for United Artists Corporation, comes the added statement that the title again has been changed to "The Lone Eagle."

The title change was made necessary, it was explained, because of a conflict with the title of another big feature picture which is being produced for United Artists Corporation release.

"With This Ring"

B. P. Schulberg Productions has arranged a book tie-up with Grosset and Dunlap for a special photoplay edition of the novel, "With This Ring," by Fanny Heaslip Lea, which will be the September release on the new schedule of Preferred Pictures. The production is now being directed by Fred C. Windemere with a cast that includes Alyce Mills, Lou Tellegan, Forrest Stanley, Donald Keith, Martha Mattox, Dick Sutherland and others.

"The Masked Bride"

The first scenes of "The Masked Bride," Mae Murray's new starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, have been begun at the Culver City studios under the direction of Josef von Sternberg. "The Masked Bride" is based on a story by Leon Abrams. Francis X. Bushman has the leading role opposite Miss Murray.

JULIA FAYE

This delightful player has been seen in all of the big specials created by Cecil B. De Mille since "Male and Female," and she is featured in De Mille's "Hell's Highroad," a Producers Distributing Corporation release.

"Memory Lane"

John M. Stahl, who will direct "Memory Lane" for First National Release at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, has completed his technical organization and camera work will begin this week. Sidney Algier is his assistant. Percy Helburne will be the cameraman, assisted by Eddy Fitzgerald. Charles R. Condon, former head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer publicity department at the studio, is unit manager. "Memory Lane" is a screen adaptation of an original story by Stahl. The continuity was prepared by Benjamin Glazer and the picture will be released by First National. Eleanor Boardman, Conrad Nagel and William Haines will be seen in the leading roles.

Studio Visitors

Will Hays was a recent visitor at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, at Culver City, Cal., in company with James P. Goodrich, ex-Governor of Indiana.

"Lost World" Breaks Grauman's Record

The record playing time at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre in Los Angeles has been won by the First National-Rothacker special, "The Lost World," produced under the supervision of Earl Hudson. It played five weeks at that big theatre, piling up receipts that seldom have been equalled in that city.

Frank Newman gave "The Lost World" an additional fifth week because of the great business done through the first four weeks of the run. The highly laudatory reviews in the newspapers and the high-powered exploitation campaign got the photoplay off to a big start and after that the word-of-mouth advertising received from those who had seen the film drew capacity houses week after week.

Sells Two Series for Japan

Louis Weiss, managing director of Artclass, announces that he has sold his series of Eight Five Reel Rough Riding Romances featuring Buddy Roosevelt and his series of Eight Five Reel Thunderbolt Thrillers featuring M. Kleinerman of New York, for the territory of the Japanese Empire.

According to Mr. Kleinerman there is a great demand in Japan for American action pictures and he states that there is no doubt that his purchase of the right for this territory will be very satisfactory to himself and the producers.

Charles Ray to Start

Having completed "Some Pun'kins" and "The Winner," his first two rural comedy dramas for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, Charles Ray and Jerome Storm, his director, are preparing to start work on the third one shortly. The third story, the title of which has not yet been determined, will be another original written especially for the star. The script is now being prepared at the Ray studios, the Chadwick western production headquarters in California, and the actual photographing will start immediately on Mr. Chadwick's return to the Coast.

Signs New Contract

Cecil B. De Mille has secured the services of Lillian Rich for the next five years.

Lillian signed a contract with the Cecil De Mille Pictures Corporation this week which supersedes an arrangement that had been operative before De Mille entered the independent field and which only recently expired. Her first work at the De Mille Studio will be the feminine lead in Rod La Rocque's next starring picture, "Red Dice," on which Director Paul Sloane is scheduled to start shooting in August.

Constance Bennett Signed

Constance Bennett has been signed by Oscar Price to make two more film productions for Associated Exhibitors' release, following her appearance with Glenn Hunter in "The Pinch Hitter."

Miss Bennett will next appear in "The Clod Hopper" with Hunter and then will assume the featured role in "Peggy." The latter was originally made with Billie Burke in the starring role under the auspices of the old Triangle organization.

Puts on Warner Week

J. E. Courter, owner and managing director of the Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo., has decided to put on a solid Warner week from Novembmer 22 to 28. He has contracted to show at that time "Tracked in the Snow Country," "The Beloved Brute," "Captain Blood" and "The Code of the Wilderness." In addition, Mr. Courter arranged to show one Warner picture every week, starting in September.

"Spanish Sunlight"

The first role assigned to Lewis Stone under his long term contract with First National Pictures is a co-featured part with Barbara La Marr in "Spanish Sunlight," the picture which Sawyer-Lubin are producing for First National from Anthony Pryde's new novel. "Spanish Sunlight" will be produced on the West Coast under the supervision of June Mathis who is preparing the continuity.

Napoleon, Marvel Horse, Mix Co-Star in "Lucky Horseshoe"

FINDING a horse to wear the mantle of fame which has been achieved by the celebrated Tony, has, for several years, been an important concern of Tom Mix, Fox Film Corporation star.

For nearly a decade, Tony has labored constantly with Tom in the pictures. Tony is now past twelve, and therefore, for a horse, in the middle age of life.

Several years ago Mr. Mix realized that a worthy successor to Tony must be found and for four or five years he has constantly cast his eye about for an animal that would some day have the keen intelligence and fine resources necessary to inherit Tony's shoes. Mr. Mix spent his odd moments visiting horse ranches and sales stables. Foreman Pat Chrisman of the Mix ranch, and a score and more of cowboys who work with Mix, also have been on the lookout for a bright, promising colt that could be developed into a cowpony of the Tony type.

Colt after colt was examined by both veterinarians and Mr. Mix. Several times it was believed a worthy successor for the famous Tony had been found. Yet some blemish or bad trait was discovered which resulted in the find being abandoned. Ultimately, a promising bay colt was discovered. It was critically examined by the veterinarians and pronounced good of wind and limb. The colt, named Napoleon, gave promise of being very bright mentally and free from the petty, mean tricks so frequently found in young horses. Napoleon was purchased and sent to the corral at Mixville, California. For two years or more Napoleon has been tutored by Mix and the Mix cowboys in the exacting commands of picture-making and now, in "The Lucky Horseshoe," the new horse makes his first public bow for recognition.

Although crude in many ways, Napoleon gives promise of one day becoming a very talented cow horse.

In the meantime, the sedate and dignified Tony Mix will be given a long vacation and a rest, after which he and Napoleon will alternate in Mix photoplays.

Gwen Lee Signed

Gwen Lee, who played the part of the chorus girl who kept her baby in a traveling bag in her dressing room, in Monta Bell's "Pretty Ladies," has bee signed on a long term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Miss Lee made her first appearance on the screen four months ago in "Lady of the Night."

Earle Foxe is starred in the Van Bibber series for Fox Film Corporation.

Mix Starts Third Picture Under Direction of Flynn

FOR the first time since their joint efforts resulted in that greatest of all Tom Mix Pictures, "The Untamed," the celebrated Western star and Emmett Flynn, veteran Fox Film Corporation director, are together again as director and star. Mix, having completed "The Lucky Horseshoe" under the direction of J. G. Blystone, has started on his third 1925-26 production under the direction of Flynn.

Katharine Fullerton Gerould's thrilling novel, "The Conquistador," supplies the stellar Western performer with his vehicle this time, and Eve Unsell contributed the scenario from which Flynn will direct.

The production will be made under the working title of "The Conquistador," which will be changed to a more suitable English title before release.

Olive Borden, beautiful and talented screen actress, has been secured to play the leading feminine role opposite Mix, with the most important character portrayal in the hands of Margaret Livingston. Tom Kennedy and Francis MacDonald will enact the "heavy" roles in this Mix production. Others in the cast, which is not yet completed, are Kathryn Hill, Martha Mattox, Raymond Wells, Gene Paletto, Harry Seymour and J. Kranz.

A Cowboy of the Wild West romances in Spain in "The Lucky Horseshoe" in which William Fox will present Tom Mix and Napoleon, the marvel horse

"Prisoners"

First National Pictures last week bought the screen rights to "Prisoners," the new novel by Franz Molnar, the Viennese plawright, known for his plays, "The Devil," "The Swan," "Fashions for Men," the latter recently filmed for First National release by John M. Stahl, under the title of "Fine Clothes."

Grainger Again Traveling

Hardly stopping to catch his breath in New York after his nation-wide tour of the branch offices of Fox Film Corporation, James R. Grainger, general sales manager of the Fox company, is again making Pullman compartments his headquarters as he visits Chicago, Detroit and Boston for the purpose of closing a number of important contracts with some of the biggest exhibitors of these cities.

Harrison Ford, who recently signed a long-term contract with Paramount to play leading roles. He is seen opposite Bebe Daniels in "Lovers in Quarantine," and in D. W. Griffith's production, "That Royle Girl."

Brandt Pleased at Progress of Independent Producers

ON his arrival at the home office, President Joe Brandt of Columbia Pictures announced that he was greatly pleased at the progress the independent producers are making in Hollywood this season.

"Independent producers on the Coast," Mr. Brandt explained, "are backing up their promises which were made a number of months ago by more than the best of intentions as they actually have pictures made—better ones than ever before in their history, and will make good the promises which were made to the exhibitor.

"On our own lot we have advanced so far with our stories and scenarios that we have only two more stories to complete—and these two are in skeleton form today which means that in a month or so our entire production for the 1925-26 season will be completely under way.

"Our studios are operating under full swing today, three distinct producing units, the Columbia, Waldorf and Perfection productions are being made at the same time. This will mean that the exhibitor will have an opportunity to see independent pictures before he books them, which is keeping the promises made to him.

"Another big factor is the star array who play in our pictures this season. In our desire to give the exhibitor the best, we have obtained the expensive services of a number of very famous stars and character actors who mean money at the box-office because of their reputations and ability.

"Another big factor which will aid our exhibitors is the fact that we have established a special still department to make publicity and exploitation stills of quality.

"Several big exploitation and advertising ideas were also worked upon before I left production manager Harry Cohn, and I expect they will be fully prepared within a few months. I realize the value of direct advertising and although I cannot say at present as to how far we will go with this idea, I expect that we will try to back up the exhibitor in a 'big time' way and help him to do more business with our pictures."

Von Stroheim Will Direct Constance Talmadge Picture

THE "best hated man on the screen," Erich von Stroheim is going to act again.

This was the surprise note accompanying word from the offices of Joseph M. Schenck in Hollywood yesterday that the illustrious director-actor had been signed to direct Constance Talmadge in her next First National starring vehicle, "East of the Setting Sun."

For close observers of cinema affairs this news contains a double significance, for while it is the first time Constance Talmadge has been given a director of the von Stroheim type, it is the first time the amazing director has signed with a producer of the Joseph M. Schenck type.

Schenck's propensity for disregarding expense to get the lavish effects that distinguish Norma and Constance Talmadge's films promises for "East of the Setting Sun" the scope for prodigality characteristic of all of von Stroheim's productions.

This forthcoming First National attraction will be von Stroheim's first appearance as an actor since his memorable portrayal in "Foolish Wives," which he also directed as well as acted in. In the new Constance Talmadge film he will wear the monocle, uniform and all the other accoutrements of the villain which in "Foolish Wives" earned him the title of "best hated man on the screen."

"East of the Setting Sun" is from a serial by George Barr McCutcheon, which is in preparation for appearance in book form. McCutcheon is the author of Norma Talmadge's current romance, "Graustark," which was one of the best-selling novels written by an American. The locale of "East of the Setting Sun" is in Central Europe, in that group of small countries which are now keeping the Continent in ferment by their "bad boy" squabbles over boundary limits. It is a colorful story, well suited to the comedy tinge of Constance Talmadge's portrayals and the Continental touch of von Stroheim's directing.

New "U" Western

"The Thrill Hunter," a two-reel western starring Edmund Cobb is now being produced at Universal under the direction of Ernst Laemmle. In the cast are Velma Conner, William Steele, Ted Henderson, Robert Rose, Fred Burns and Jack Gavin. Fred Humes is cast in the featured role in the "Call of Hazard," another two-reel western being made at Universal. William Crinley is directing. Supporting Humes are Virginia Bradford, Anton Vaverka, Buck Moulton and Morgan Brown.

New Freckled Protege

Junior Coghlan, probably one of the homeliest boys on whom the sunshine of Southern California has dwelt long enough to form abundant freckles has been signed as a regular member of the De Mille Stock Company.

Junior Coghland, eight years old, played so splendidly with William Boyd in early sequences of "The Road to Yesterday" that De Mille has signed him to a long term contract.

Here we have beautiful Bebe Daniels, gorgeously arrayed, with Edmund Burns, her leading man, in a scene in her current Paramount picture, "The Manicure Girl." This is the famous "dream scene." Dorothy Cumming, at right.

Scenes in "Hell's Highroad," starring Leatrice Joy and featuring Edmund Burns, Julia Faye and Robert Edeson. This is the first Cecil B. De Mille personally supervised production released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Six Producers Dist. Releases Ready; Working on Second Six

THE first six productions on the coming season's program of Producers Distributing Corporation have been fully completed and work on the second six is now in full swing at the De Mille, Hollywood and Christie studios.

The completed productions include "The Coming of Amos," the first starring vehicle for Rod La Rocque from the De Mille studio, "Seven Days," the Al. Christie six-reel comedy featuring Lillian Rich, "Without Mercy," the first George Melford production from Metropolitan Pictures, featuring Vera Reynolds. "Hell's Highroad," De Mille's first Leatrice Joy starring picture, "The Prairie Pirate," the first of Hunt Stromberg's new series of Harry Carey westerns, and Stromberg's first special production, "Off The Highway," featuring William V. Mong, Marguerite De La Motte and John Bowers.

All of these subjects have been made on a lavish scale with exceptionally strong supporting casts. "The Coming of Amos" has Jetta Goudal, Noah Beery, Trixie Friganza, Richard Carle, Arthur Hoyt, Clarence Burton and Ruby Lafayette opposite Rod La Rocque. "Hell's Highroad" has Edmund Burns, Robert Edeson, Julia Faye and Helene Sullivan supporting Leatrice Joy. "Without Mercy" has Dorothy Phillips, Rockliffe Fellowes, Patricia Palmer, Lionel Belmore, Robert Ames, Sidney D'Albrook, Fred Malatesta and Gene Pallette in support of Vera Reynolds. "Seven Days" presents Creighton Hale, Lilyan Tashman, Eddie Gribbon, Mabel Julienne Scott, Hal Cooley, William Austin, Tom Wilson, Rosa Gore and Charles Clary supporting Lillian Rich. "The Prairie Pirate" has Robert Edeson and Stromberg's new find, Trilby Clark, in support of Harry Carey. And "Off The Highway" Chas. Gerrard, Buddy Post, Joseph Swickard, Gino Corrado and Smoke Turner supporting William V. Mong, Marguerite De La Motte and John Bowers in the three featured roles.

The six features now in course of production include:

"The Road to Yesterday," Cecil B. De Mille's personally directed production, which is now in its fifth week of work with Joseph Schildkraut, Jetta Goudal, Vera Reynolds, William Boyd and Julia Faye in featured roles. It is expected that this big special will be finished by September 20.

"The Wedding Song," starring Leatrice Joy under Alan Hale's direction is in its second week at the De Mille studio with Robert Ames, Gertrude Claire, Charles Gerrard and Rosa Rudami in the supporting cast.

Meighan Signs New Contract

Before sailing Saturday for Ireland, where he will make a picture for Paramount, Thomas Meighan signed a new agreement with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by the terms of which he will be a Paramount star for several years to come, it was announced yesterday by the company.

"Simon the Jester," Frances Marion's production is in work at the Hollywood Studio under the direction of George Melford with Eugene O'Brien and Lillian Rich in the featured roles supported by Edmund Burns and Henry B. Walthal.

Hunt Stromberg has two productions under way in "The People vs. Nancy Preston," a special feature with John Bowers and Marguerite De La Motte in the featured roles, and "The Man From Red Gulch," starring Harry Carey with Trilby Clark in the feature role under the direction of Henry Mortimer.

"Madame Lucy," Al. Christie's big feature comedy, is in work under Scott Sidney's direction with Julian Eltinge, Ann Pennington, Lionel Belmore, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Evelyn Francisco and Jack Duffy contributing their talent to make this production a worthy successor to "Charley's Aunt."

In addition to this activity, preparations are being made at the Hollywood Studio for the early starting of Stromberg's big western epic, "The Last Frontier," while at the De Mille Studios plans are almost complete for the immediate starting of "Three Faces East," under Rupert Julian's direction and "Red Dice," starring Rod La Rocque under the direction of Paul Sloane.

Scenes in "The Man Who Found Himself," the Thomas Meighan starring vehicle for Paramount release, completed a few hours before the star sailed for Ireland, last Saturday, to start work on his next picture. "The Man Who Found Himself" was directed by Alfred Green, and will be released in September. The girl is Virginia Valli.

"A Slave of Fashion" Goes Over Big With N. Y. Critics

NORMA SHEARER'S first starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, "A Slave of Fashion," has opened at the Capitol Theatre in New York, and has met with enthusiastic approval from both public and critics. Hobart Henley directed this Samuel Shipman story from the screen adaptation by Bess Meredyth. Lew Cody plays opposite Miss Shearer in this picture, and heads a supporting cast that includes William Haines, Mary Carr, Vivia Ogden, Miss Dupont and other popular players.

"If you were to have your choice," writes Mildred Spain in the New York Daily News, "for the ideal starring story for Norma Shearer you couldn't do better than 'A Slave of Fashion.' It's a Cinderella story with Fifth Avenue trimmings. The sub-titles fairly snap with humor and the direction is as smooth at Norma's hair. Norma Shearer, a gal that's good for a twenty-four-hour look, never tires one. Lew Cody is suave and charming as the gentleman who discovers he had a wife on his return home. Vivia Ogden comes in for her share of the laughs as Aunt Sophie, who never missed a beauty sleep. Norma Shearer is certainly a star. 'A Slave of Fashion' is just the picture for you and me."

"Norma Shearer," remarks the Brooklyn Daily Engle, "is making her bow as a full-fledged star in 'A Slave of Fashion' this week at the Capitol Theatre and is demonstrating (as if a demonstration were still necessary) that she deserves her elevation. Miss Shearer has been very much present in previous pictures, but this reviewer cannot recall one in which she was more engaging. Miss Shearer and Cody come off with the principal honors, but Vivia Ogden shines in the small part of the girl's aunt."

"Norma Shearer again proves versatile," observes Geo. E. Bradley in the New York Morning Telegraph, "in a story cleverly directed and sumptuously dressed. The whole affair is extremely well done, in the better class of movie fare, with Norma Shearer proving conclusively her value as a box-office attraction. The writer must admit that Cody is better in a sympatheic role than as the deep-dyed villain of old. 'A Slave of Fashion' will please our feminine movie goers."

"Major Edward Bowes, the managing director of this ever popular playhouse, reports the New York Evening Journal, "displayed his accustomed keen judgment when he picked 'A Slave of Fashion.' It would be difficult to find a film to furnish Miss Shearer with a finer vehicle for attainment to stardom. It is an eye-filling picture throughout—plenty of action, plenty of romance, plenty of everything. You will enjoy 'A Slave of Fashion.'"

"Norma Shearer is far too beautiful and alluring!" testifies the New York Herald-Tribune. "She dazzles the eye. 'A Slave of Fashion' is a good story. Lew Cody is the hero instead of the villain, and William Haines is the villain instead of the hero. An exciting picture!"

Gloria Swanson's Next

Following "The Coast of Folly," She Will Play in "Stage Struck"

Gloria Swanson has lost no time in getting started on her next picture for Paramount, "Stage Struck," which is to be produced by Allan Dwan in the Long Island Studio. She arrived in New York late Wednesday afternoon, began conferences on the story details early Thursday morning and approved a number of costumes before Friday noon.

Actual camera work will start within a week or two. The story is from the novel by Frank R. Adams. The screen adaptation has been done by Forrest Halsey, who did the adaptations on all of the recent Gloria Swanson pictures.

While preparing for the start of "Stage Struck," Mr. Dwan is also supervising the cutting and editing of Miss Swanson's last Paramount picture, "The Coast of Folly," made in California.

Sprinkler System

A new sprinkler system on the West Coast is now being installed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City, Cal. The sprinklers will protect every office, storeroom and stage from a main supply reservoir holding 600,300 gallons of water.

Constance Talmadge in her forthcoming First National release, "Her Sister from Paris," with Ronald Colman.

MARTHA FRANCIS

This charming player will be seen as "Harriet Kinnard" in "The Scarlet West," a First National release.

New Screen Personality

Splendid Acting by Charming Martha Francis Stands Out in "The Scarlet West"

Reviewers who have caught an advance glance at "The Scarlet West," the Frank J. Carroll production to be released by First National, are talking about a new screen acquisition in the person of Martha Francis. Miss Francis, who plays the important part of Harriett Kinnard in the big Western special, stepped into the role at a moment's notice from her part in real life of society leader and prominent daughter of the South, with a previous experience limited to amateur theatricals.

Unusual interest in the screen debut of Martha Francis will also undoubtedly be felt in the South, as she is the daughter of the late Dr. Dixie Douglas, of Nashville, Tenn., famed during his lifetime as one of the greatest surgeons below the Mason and Dixon line. Miss Francis is a graduate of Ward Belmont, Dixieland's elite college for women, located at Nashville, Tenn. Reviewers declare that she brings to the screen the charm of the South's fair daughters, intelligence and native histrionic ability.

Southern Enterprises Take 1925-26 Century Comedies

CONTRACTS have just been closed with the Southern Enterprises, the Southern theatre organization of Famous Players-Lasky, for the showing of the entire new 1925-1926 output of Century Comedies in all Southern Enterprises houses, it is announced by H. M. Herbel, sales manager of the Century Film Corporation. The contract was closed, on the part of the Universal Pictures Corporation, which distributes Century Comedies, by Ned E. Depinet, Universal sales director, and Dan E. Machalove, assistant sales director.

The contract covers 52 two-reel comedies, including a series of twelve Wanda Wiley Comedies, twelve Edna Marian Comedies, the series of twelve Buster Brown Comedies which Century is introducing this fall as a film novelty, based on the famous Buster Brown newspaper comics; six comedies starring Al Alt, six starring Eddie Gordon and four starring Charles King.

This is the most comprehensive booking ever made between Universal and the Southern Enterprises for Century Comedies, and will place the two-reelers in towns and houses never before included in their representation. It is regarded by Herbel as the first big gun in Century's announced Fall Drive to put that company's two-reelers in second place to none in the comedy field. In this connection, attention is called by Herbel to last winter's announcement by Julius and Abe Stern, the officials of the Century organization: "We have increased our studio facilities and we are now out to make comedies which will surprise the industry next fall."

The extent to which Wanda Wiley has developed in public favor as a comedy is indicated in the fact that the Southern Enterprises officials put a premium on her comedies in booking them for the vast S-E chain. This took the form of extra prices for her comedies and the understanding that they will be featured when shown. This same attitude was taken as regards the Buster Brown Comedies, which are being put out by the Century company as a special series of unusual box-office value, and for which, it is reported, higher prices are being obtained.

The Buster Brown series is now in the making. Several already have been made and previewed, with results immensely satisfactory to the Stern Brothers. The Wanda Wiley comedies included in the Southern Enterprises arrangement are well on towards completion, six having already been completed. They are "Cupid's Victory," "A Winning Pair," "A Speedy Marriage," "Going Good," "Her Lucky Leap" and "Yearning for Love." Those which have been previewed are classed as exceptional Wanda Wiley comedies.

The cities and towns covered by the Century Comedy-Southern Enterprises arrangement include the following: Asheville, Augusta, Chattanooga, Columbus, Gadsden, Greenville, Greenwood, Jackson, Jacksonville, Johnson City, Knoxville, Maryville, Macon, Miami, Montgomery, St. Petersburg, Savannah, Spartanburg, Sumter, Tampa, Sanford, Gainesville, Cocoa, Ft. Lauderdale, Lake Worth, New Smyrna, Ft. Smith, Little Rock, West Palm Beach, Raleigh, Dallas, Houston and others.

To Start "We Moderns"

Colleen Moore in Hollywood; Jack Mulhall Opposite the Star

With the arrival of Colleen Moore in Hollywood, preparations for "We Moderns," the next First National production in which the little comedienne will appear, have been speeded materially. Photographic work is expected to be started this week.

John Francis Dillon, according to a recent announcement, will handle the business end of the megaphone on Colleen's first film offering to be made since she signed her new First National contract. Jack Mulhall will play opposite the star.

A tentative cast for "We Moderns" has been selected and is only awaiting the signature of John McCormick, Western representative for the First National company

Scenes in "Souls for Sables," a Tiffany production with Claire Windsor, Eugene O'Brien, Anders Randolf, Claire Adams, Eileen Percy and George Fawcett, to be released by Truart-Renown.

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Pitcure World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Cue Sheet Suggestion

Russel Cecil, Projectionist Lewis Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma, makes the following suggestion regarding cue sheets. Looks "not so bad" to me. What do you think about it?

"I read the story of Brother Pyle—that was the name, if I rightly remember—who said something about making a cue sheet and pasting it in the lid of the box containing the reel. I also noted your criticism on the proposal.

It is true, as you said, that reels may not be, and in fact seldom are re-shipped from the exchange in the same box, and after reading the article I found myself in a rare mood. I was thinking! And here is what my think works doped out: Why not typewrite the cue and paste it on the reel band, something like this: Reel No——. Scene ——. Fadeout at (Cue)————————. Courtesy (Projectionist's name), if he wishes to add his name.

This may easily be pasted or glued on the reel band, near the place where the title and number of the reel is printed or stamped. If it be a new wrapper, then it might be stamped on. Don't you think so?

And now about the cue. Who should make it out? I believe exchanges, in event of a plan such as this being adopted, should require their inspectors to make the original cue, and to change it at any time it may become necessary. But I am sure any projectionist who has any reel interest in his profession will be glad to make a cue.

I have used this plan myself. I make my cue by selecting a scene or title at the proper distance from fade-out point—about four feet is my idea of what is right as to distance. If it is a scene (frame) I mark a cross after "scene," and then describe the scene. If there is a fade in and out I mark F. I and O. "Yes." If it is a subtitle, but no fade, then I mark Sub title. F. I & O. "No."

I place my name at the bottom, merely to see if there would be any letters of commendation or adverse criticism. Have been thinking of having a lot of gummed labels printed as I have described, but concluded to wait and see what you might have to say about the plan. I may also add that as soon as I get the cue, I cut out all the punch marks and other "signal" marks, so often placed there by some jackass of an "operator"—that being what the type of man who thus damages film proudly (and nightly), calls himself.

In my opinion the man who deserves to be known as a motion picture projectionist will not employ such crude methods as punch marks, etc. Some men say: "Oh, it's too much like work to make a cue sheet. I have not got time, and besides I don't get any money for it.

Yes, it is a bit of work, but did any one ever see a really successful man in any line of human endeavor—any man who lifted himself out of the ruck and above the CROWD who did things the easiest way, regardless of what the effect might be? Possibly you may have, but I have yet to see the first one, or even to hear of one.

Well, so long! Hope you don't give my poor effort too severe a criticism. I just had to get it out of my system.

The foregoing comes from a young man. I said his plan looked good, but after all I'm not so certain. The possible trouble, as I see it, would be the mix-up of reel bands when they are amputated in making 1,000 foot reels into 2,000 footers, as is now the common practice in many theatres. When the time comes to separate the reels again, Mr. Doitthe Easyway is done with them and, being Mr. Doitthe Easyway, he don't care Adam about them or what happens to the next fellow who must use them, so instead of being careful to get the right band back on the right reel he just grabs a band, while asking an usher if Lizzie is waiting down below, sticks it on, and—God help the next chap who depends upon the cue.

Now, that is my final reaction to this scheme—which seems to me, aside from the possible mix-up described, to have considerable merit.

Personally more and more I come to the conclusion that all these things will finally be cleared up ONLY through the exchanges. When those birds come to the point—and they seem to be slowly, oh, so slowly arriving—where they will have films THOROUGHLY inspected, and all points in connection with them carefully checked up, handing out reel FINANCIAL PUNISHMENT to any theatre which does not send back the films in the same condition in which they were shipped, except for ordinary wear and tear of course, or the results of accident, a statement of which must accompany the films.

Bluebook School

Question No. 339—Do you consider it practicable to reduce and regulate the current output of a series arc type motor generator (when it is either necessary or unnecessary to burn one of the motion picture projector arcs at the same time, or if one projector arc is used for slide projection, then to burn both projector arcs simultaneously) by means of the field rheostat? In this we will arbitrarily assume that the necessary reduction in amperage will be from 75 to 30, and that the machine is a 75—75 ampere capacity one.

Question No. 340—What is meant by a "field coil," and what does it do? What is the practical effect of increasing current flow through the field coil?

Question No. 341—May a generator have more than two poles, or more than one field winding?

Question No. 342—Suppose you have a motor generator set which is quite old. Its generator commutator has been recently turned up and is in apparently excellent condition, yet the brushes spark excessively and continually and the whole commutator heats unduly. Where would you expect to find the trouble? (Note: This is a "practical question" submitted by the editor.)

Question No. 343—What is the practical effect of additional poles, over and above two, in a motor or generator?

An apology: I guess the heat you chaps kick about got me, too. Some utterly inexcusable repetitions of questions occurred in the last two or three sets of questions. I shall endeavor not to let it happen again.

He Wonders

X. Y. Zee, whose real name is supplied, but not for publication, Los Angeles, says:

I wonder—when exchanges will thoroughly inspect and repair every reel of film sent out to theatres?

I wonder—when twenty four reels will be the maximum per day of eight hours for an exchange film inspector, instead of from sixty to ninety, as now.

I wonder—when exchanges will clean and polish each reel of film, each time it comes to the exchange, and write on each reel band the dated statement of the exact footage contained on the reel—the two operations performed at one time.

I wonder—when exchanges will send out with each show accurate change-over cue sheets for every multiple reel production.

I wonder—when exchanges will take a tumble and ship on 2,000 foot reels.

I wonder—when exchanges will ship film on really good reels, instead of the lop-sided, bent, broken tin poor imitations of a reel they now use.

I wonder—when producers will supply exchanges with an extra fifty foot of the beginning and ending of each reel of film, so that when the said ending and beginning become "pretty well shot," though in fair shape between, the new stuff can be put in and the picture thus greatly improved.

I wonder—if some machine operators will ever come to an understanding of the fact that film is only LOANED to them, and that some one else must use it when they have done with it, and suffer for all the abuse they heap upon it.

I wonder—if some of those "Aw-what-th'-Ell's-th'-difference" chaps will ever get the excellent habit of scraping the emulsion from titles and trailers when splicing them back on the films after having made 1,000 footers into 2,000 footers and vice versa.

I ALSO WONDER—what these same ginks say when THEY receive a show some other one of those same use-saliva-for cement ginks have used, who, having no patching light and glass, took the one-in-four chance of making a splice in frame-and-lost.

I also wonder—how many reams of paper it would take to enumerate all the various things which should be but "ain't", but the coming of evening and its cooling breezes have brought the patient out of his spell, and with careful nursing he should soon again be all right.

Well, maybe most of your "wonders" are not so bad; also maybe others have done the same job of wondering some few thousands of times. Personally I think it all possibly may be all summed I WONDER when exhibitors will demand the same careful precision in all things pertaining to projection in their theatres that they demand in other things connected with their business.

That extra fifty feet of film, for each reel is, it seems to me, most excellent, especially as to the last fifty feet of each reel. If when productions were first put into service, such a "spare" lay in the exchange vaults, to be tacked on when, as friend Zee says, the fifty feet nearest the end gets full of rain, etc., it certainly would be a mighty darned fine stunt, or at least it seems so to me. What do YOU think?

Gray Says

Arthur Gray, Boston, Massachusetts, says:

For the love of Mike use a little hot weather discretion, and avoid bunching a group of man-size questions (Bluebook School, he means) into any one series. You place your earnest students in a very unenviable position—half way between determination and desperation. They are tempted to be concise, due to that good ole heat, but hesitate to descend to brevity and platitudes when the subject seems to demand or warrant extended treatment and considerable amplification.

Question 309 is the biggest one question so far asked in the school, and darn it, you knew it, too. Yet answers to 306 and 307 are not so good unless the whys and wherefores are included. Question 308 in a very important one too (If you have a 75 ampere high intensity lamp and are using a full diameter lens, the feature is dense or medium and the comedy and news reel mostly thin, how would you manage to overcome the glare and a flattening of the photography without reducing the projection lens diameter? is question 308.—Ed.) because it deals with a phase of modern projection which has been given far too little consideration and development.

And so on. What's the answer? To cram or to crib? To do or not to do. That's the question. (Pardon reference to Skakespeare in our department, but you've got my angoria in this series—series in June 20 issue, he means. —Ed.)

But—the current issue of the department brings forgiveness and excuses all your faults. My admiration goes forth to Brother Whitt—he of piscatorial ability extraordinary! There's a MAN for you! A true disciple of Isaac Walton. A man of the Great Out Doors! A true sportsman! The salt of earth! One who gives the fish a fair fighting chance, and then thrills to the spirit of fair competition. He may go down to the sea in ships, or down to a brook on foot, but he knows the lure of the whirling reel. His heart is attuned to a true appreciation of that ancient and noble sport which you, friend Editor, are unfortunately immune to.

Gosh darn you, man, I never could see the sport of sticking a steel barb into living flesh and compelling the critter, even though only a fish, to pull for its life against that barb. Nope. I d*o*n*t like to hurt or to kill anything. I'd much rather be hurt myself. If that fish had a hook in YOUR living flesh, and it was which one of you gave in first, then I might possibly see the "sporting or a fair fighting chance." Sometime you catch a live fish, tie your fishline to it, stick the hook in YOUR mouth, throw him in the water and let the fish have some sport playing YOU. Gosh!

There, I've disgraced myself before all of you bad blamed fishermen. Well, g'wan and fish, darn you. Not me.

As to the other—well, Gray, I realize there is a lot in what you say about spreading things around, but it is not always so easy. As it is I haven't been to a show in weeks. Just simply have not had time. I'm doing a big job this summer. You'll understand when you come here—as you have said you would, and I'm looking for you.

However, as to space in the department, I don't care so much how long the answers to questions are now. Correspondence is always comparatively light in summer, so I can use more space for the "School." I will, however, try not to bunch so many really big questions together in future.

Which Is Which?

From W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island, comes the following letter. (Mr. Budge was a musician prior to becoming a motion picture projectionist.

A short time ago you had an editorial in the department in which you made the assertion that the musician, or to put it exactly correct, the music could be dispensed with, and no great inconvenience would be experienced.

This statement set me thinking. I hope you will read, not one but many times, page 954, June 27th issue of the Moving Picture World. As I have been a part of the "game" in a seat immediately under the screen in a place beside the motion picture projector, I am able to see BOTH sides of such a question as this.

My three years beside the projector have taught me that very much of the junk I project might well be dispensed with, and the audience be better entertained by having the orchestra play; also the manager would save money on his current bills by pursuing this course.

Music Immortal

A great deal of music is immortal. Can you name me just one silent drama that the public will care to see over again? When I traveled with the "Birth of a Nation," many of the audience spoke of the music, instead of the picture. Many persons in the audience will close their eyes and let the music thrill them.

The day will come when the wise director will use the orchestra to direct his ideas, instead of the actors. When such a director comes, he will be a genius, and that is what the silent drama needs very badly today.

God pity the projectionist who has an artistic temperament when he has to watch the screen upon which so much pure JUNK is being shown.

Musical Taste Acquired

Just such a letter as I would expect from a real musician. It is characteristic of the musician—the true musician—that to him music is the alpha and omega of everything. It actually thrills him. He or she can sit and listen, with keenest enjoyment, for literally hours, to an aria which would merely bore four out of every five who listened to it. In proof of the fact, that, while I concede that there is a goodly sprinkling of music lovers in most any average audience, the average person don't care for it, I have sat in the audience at a grand opera and watched the "Golden Horseshoe" box occupants closely. Four out of five did not listen to the opera at all. They conversed, and did other things, merely glancing at the stage occasionally and applauding at the places where the audience in general applauded.

What they in the boxes were doing I think we may assume the audience in general would have done, had there been opportunity. To me, for instance, while I respect the musician, and dearly love soft, dreamy music, or a softly sung ballad, the average orchestra is nothing less than a (deleted) bore. I'm glad when it gets through and shuts up, or the picture comes on.

You say much of the stuff you project is pure junk. Well, yes and no. A lot of it is, but a silent drama does not have to be immortal to supply good amusement, and I, for one, often look at a photoplay, and am well entertained, while I would not care to see it again. The same is true of very many, I think.

You say much music is immortal. True! Also much music is very much worse than junk, or so I think.

You ask if I can name any silent drama

POWERLITE

This company has long been fully aware of the value of the reflector lamp but did not feel justified in placing one on the market until a lamp of this type could be offered to the motion picture industry which would fully live up to the reputation we have established for Power's Projectors and Power's Products. In offering Powerlite we feel that a reflector lamp has finally been produced which overcomes the serious defects of the earlier lamps and in addition has a number of important improvements and patented features which will win the strong approval of exhibitors, managers and projectionists.

Control apparatus is very neat and compact and is attached inside the lamphouse, thus eliminating the necessity for extra shafts, gears and control handles. Constructed so that perfect control of the arc is secured and carbons fed intermittently and automatically upon an infinitesimal rise of voltage brought about by the burning of the carbons. Control apparatus is thoroughly protected and it is impossible for the current to reach the motor until the arc is struck regardless of whether the line switch is open or closed. This permits the control motor to be wound for proper arc voltage and to operate positively at full voltage as soon as it is brought into the circuit. The control mechanism forms part of the lamp itself and only the necessary controls project from the rear of the lamphouse.

The method of inserting carbons will be found a real convenience to the projectionist. It is merely necessary to press a lever, insert carbons into the carbon holders FROM THE SIDE and release the lever. The carbons are then locked into position ready for operation without the use of tools. Vertical adjustment of the negative carbon and lateral adjustment of the positive carbon have been provided for in a manner which will be found very satisfactory to the projectionist and Powerlite also permits an exceptionally long carbon trim. An improved friction device allows the arc to be struck and fed without unlocking it from the motor feed system.

Special attention has been given to the design and construction of the mirror which has been made according to our own specifications. Improved insulated mirror supports and latch allow the mirror to be readily removed for cleaning. A radical departure and a great improvement in lamphouse construction has been made in Powerlite by having the door slide quickly and easily into the top of the lamphouse. This action is similar to that of the door in a sectional bookcase and leaves the interior clear and accessible for the projectionist's manipulation. The lamp slides easily into or out of the lamphouse and this will be found extremely convenient when cleaning or making replacements.

Powerlite can be attached in about five minutes to Power's, Simplex or Motiograph and no lining-up or similar adjustments are required.

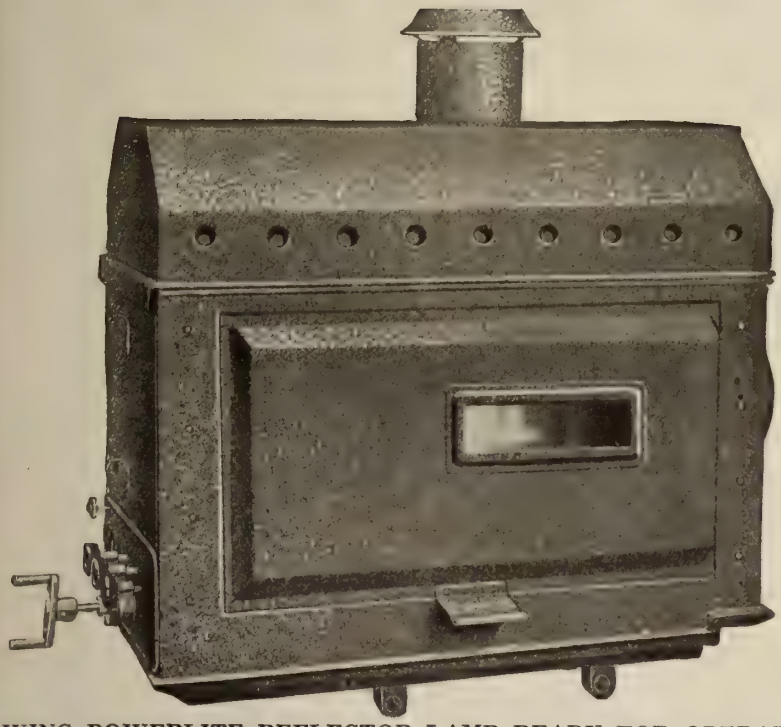
REFLECTOR LAMP



HOWING POWERLITE REFLECTOR LAMP READY FOR OPERATION

POWERLITE REFLECTOR LAMP

Lamphouse

Powerlite lamphouse is of ample capacity and this is extremely important as the reflector lamp requires a certain minimum space in order to secure the most efficient results.

Stereopticon attachment may be easily swung into position for projecting slides, operating in a manner similar to that of the ordinary arc lamp.

Entire lamphouse is finished in black crystallized lacquer and makes a very attractive appearance.

ECONOMIES

Practical tests and actual use in thousands of theares have definitely shown the tremendous economies ffected by the use of the reflector arc lamp. The figres given on this page may therefore be accepted ithout doubt or hesitancy, and investigation will illy substantiate all statements made.

Powerlite Reflector Lamp using approximately 20 mperes actually delivers more light and of a better uality than the ordinary arc lamp using 75 to 80 mperes direct current. This means that an immedite saving is effected of 75% in current consumption lone in addition to the superior results obtained upon ie screen. A house using 75 ampere arcs (ignoring ntirely the fact that two of them are burnt for a porion of the day and taking only one into consideration) aying for current at the rate of 5c per kilowatt and nning ten hours a day for one year, by using Powrlite Reflector Lamp will effect a saving of over ,000 in current.

A large saving is also effected in carbons as the rdinary D. C. arc using from 70 to 80 amperes reuires 7/8 x 12 positive carbons and 7/16 x 6 negative rbons. At least two negative carbons will be used r each positive carbon consumed. Using 1,000 positve carbons per year at $161.00 per thousand and 000 negative carbons at $72.00 per thousand, the nount paid for carbons during the year would be approximately $305.00. As against this 1,000 sets of carbons for the reflecting arc will cost at the most $85 and only one negative is necessary for each positive consumed. Figuring that only 1,000 sets of carbons are used per year (and this estimate is fairly conservative) the carbon saving with Powerlite would be $220.00—a saving of approximately 70%.

The method of carbon support in the Powerlite permits the stubs to be burned extremely short and this of course prevents unnecessary waste. Other economies are also effected through the elimination of condenser breakage and on such items as carbon holder replacements.

Powerlite Reflector Lamp will also be found more reliable than the ordinary reflector lamp and its simplicity and convenience will make a strong appeal to the projectionist.

The economies secured through the use of Powerlite seem so extraordinary and the figures are so startling it may be difficult at first to believe they are not exaggerated. Making reasonable allowances for the size of the house, the number of hours the projectors are operated and other conditions of a similar nature, the figures will be found approximately correct but we will be very glad to furnish further detailed information based upon the current consumed in any particular theatre.

that the public would care to see over again.

Yes, several silent dramas have been reproduced because the public asked for their reproduction. There is, I am told, right now, a demand for the reproduction of "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight" and "Fair and Warmer." I saw "Fair and Warmer" three times when it was running, and I'd like darned well to see it again. I would go to see "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight" again, or any one of a good many others I could name, were they reproduced and as good as they were originally.

Padding

However, I grant you that there is much JUNK, but as a general proposition I think the GREAT BULK OF "JUNK" CONSISTS IN PADDING. A director has a good or an excellent five reel story. But he MUST make six or seven, or maybe eight reels. He introduces cow-eye poses, close-ups and a lot of stuff which all but entirely ruins what would have been a corking good play, had it been kept down to its legitimate length.

TO MY WAY OF THINKING FOOTAGE PADDING IS ONE OF THE BIG CURSES OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY OF TODAY. I have watched the cow-eyed "hero" pose and pose and pose and pose, until I could cheerfully throw a brick at the screen. And the female cow-eye does exactly the same thing. AND a scene which ought to consume fifty feet, is STRETCHED, by peurile and sometimes idiotic nonsensical action, until the fifty becomes two hundred and fifty or maybe even five hundred.

I do NOT hold the music to be non essential. Not at all. What I said, or what I intended to say, was that as between the two, the picture is THE thing the audience pays to see, and is therefore the more important of the two. Also the AVERAGE theatre has an orchestra which could stand some considerable fixing. It is NOT a thing of unadulterated joy or harmonious harmony. In a theatre such as the Capitol, New York City, the orchestra of nearly seventy pieces does play a large part in the entertainment. No doubt of it, but just the same I'll bet dollars to boiled no good onions, that if the pictures were eliminated from the Capitol program and the music retained, the falling off in attendance would be at least twice as great as it would were the picture continued and the music dispensed with. It would, however, be worse than foolish to dispense with either. I have seen, right here in New York City, a little theatre operating on the second floor, without even a piano most of the time, and doing capacity business week in and week out. Try and do that with music alone.

Picture Main Thing

And now what is the gist of all this? Why just this. I have objected to the orchestra leader being given the power or authority to direct projection speed at will, so that it will synchronize with what he conceived to be the best speed for the music. I hold the picture to be the main thing, and that the music should be the thing to suffer from over or under speed, if either must suffer.

Granting that the picture may be junk—and a goodly percentage of the music as rendered by the average theatre orchestra is JUNK, too—still it is the thing that has brought the main part of the audience to the theatre.

I know your viewpoint, and can sympathize with you, Brother Budge. I have no doubt but that you were a good musician. You seem starting out to be a good projectionist. I can sympathize with your viewpoint, but cannot agree with your conclusions.

Oh yes, by the way. When you traveled with "The Birth of a Nation" I think you were a musician. Naturally you heard the comments favorable to the music. A music lover will seek out a musician and tell him of his enjoyment. Did you ever hear of a picture fan seeking out the projectionist and telling HIM of his enjoyment? You did NOT.

Joining the Union

From a certain mid-west city comes the following:

Have been keeping up with the Bluebook School, though I have not tried to send in answers. If you publish this, kindly withhold my name and location for certain personal reasons.

I want to know how to get into the union. I known I am not yet qualified, but am going to keep on studying and trying to perfect myself. Is there any certain age you must be before becoming a member of the union? To what union should I apply when the time comes?

Well, that's that, and now I will tell you something of myself. My father owns the Rivoli Theatre here, and I manage it, which means that I am everything from bill poster to projectionist—at least I am trying to be the latter, though perhaps "operator" would fit better for a while yet.

Simplex Projectors

We have a couple of Simplex projectors, which "buzz" fairly well, considering their age and consequent infirmities. But friend Father-boss is figuring on putting in an entire new "pitcher show." If he does I will have all new equipment, which I certainly will be mighty proud of.

I have one of your Third edition books, and intend soon to have one of the latest Bluebooks.

Many Want to Know

You suggested that I answer by mail, but the number of similar inquiries received of late, asking how to join the union, makes your letter of use in the department, because they show it is time to again explain that matter.

In the first place, you are within the jurisdiction of a union but a comparatively short distance to the south. Inasmuch as I have concealed your name and location, I will transmit the location of the union and name of its Secretary to you by mail.

Men working as motion picture projectionists in a place where there is no union of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. OF THE U. S. & C. are working within the jurisdiction of the local union which is nearest to them in point of miles.

Local unions have almost absolute "local atonomy," and I think that includes the matter of age. In other words a local can set a minimum age limit, though some of them do not. Also some of them do. At least that is my recollection of the matter.

A local union may accept you or may not, with or without just reason, or without giving any reason at all. Many locals are reluctant to admit small town men working within their jurisdiction because they fear the man, if admitted, will seek employment in the city, which he will then have the right to do, and thus further crowd what is possibly an already overcrowded field. On the face of it a union ought to admit any man working within its jurisdiction who can prove himself to be eligible in the matter of character and ability as a motion picture projectionist. However, in practice this operates to set up a possible very bad condition, for the reason stated, hence locals are not to be too much blamed for slowness in admitting small town men. I think it is not impossible that this might be handled by a carefully worked out plan that the competent small town man be admitted, with a proviso that he have the first opening, in his turn, in the city, new members to take the small town jobs and transfer members the same. Oh yes, I hear you chaps poo pooing such a crazy proposal, BUT anyhow suppose you give it a bit of careful consideration. It also is a bit "crazy" to refuse membership to competent men working within your jurisdiction also, is it not?

I don't mean the exact plan I have outlined could be used, but possibly something somewhat along those lines might be found available, and certainly the competent small town man who is working within the jurisdiction of a local, which same local claims absolute jurisdiction over the territory, has a RIGHT to some consideration.

Conditions

In order to join the union you must (A) have been working as a motion picture projectionist within the jurisdiction of the local you apply to for a period of at least six months. You must make application to the union in accordance with its by laws, which same vary in different places. You must pay the sum demanded, and stand the examination given to you by the local examining board, which same way be a very competent examination and may be one which would make a cow of ordinary intelligence smile with derision.

One thing is flat, however, and that is that so long as you work as "Manager," you will NOT be admitted. I'm not criticising the "manager-projectionist" stunt, mind you. It is the necessary thing in many small towns where the possible patronage will not admit of the employment of both, but you will readily see that a labor union could not very well admit either a manager, or a man holding down two jobs.

If I were you, when you get ready to join and think you are eligible, I would make a trip up to the city, find the president of the local which you may do by inquiring of the projectionist of any theatre there), and have a talk with him. In that way, at no excess of cost, as you are not far away, you will get first hand information, and can make application right then and there, if he is willing to take it and thinks you eligible.

Bluebook School—Answers 311 to 315

S. Glauber, Brooklyn, New York, had a correct answer to all the last set of questions. They either came too late or were mislaid—I don't know which.

Question No. 311—Suppose you took charge of a new installation, or an old one for that matter, and suspected the projection room leads were too small. How would you proceed to calculate the voltage drop in the circuit, and what voltage drop would you consider as being permissible?

I don't know whether this one floored a lot of you, or whether you just couldn't get up steam enough, notwithstanding the heat, to answer. Anyhow only John Griffiths, Jr., Ansonia, Connecticut; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Massachusetts; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, and T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, came anywhere near replying correctly, and only one, Gray, gave a thoroughly comprehensive answer. Again I must remark upon Gray's reply as remarkable in its completeness. Gray told me last week that what he doesn't know he hunts up, often having much labor in finding the required information. He said to me: "Rich, the man who follows this school as he should, and says he is not helped, either is a fool or a liar." In which I hold him to be absolutely right. No man can possibly read such replies to questions as what follows without learning, ALWAYS PROVIDED HE READS THE REPLY UNDERSTANDINGLY. Merely to read hastily, and without study, is next to useless. But after all, the man who gets the really big benefit is the one who does as Gray does, and DIGS UP THE INFORMATION NECESSARY TO THE ANSWER HIMSELF. Gray says:

When, as in this case, we speak of the wires of a circuit being too small, we mean that they are not capable of carrying the amount or volume of current they are or may be called upon to carry, without causing an unnecessary and undesirable consumption of electric energy—unnecessary because such consumption may be reduced to almost any desired degree by installing larger conductors—the exact effect in reduction of loss being predetermined by calculation through the use of carefully worked out available formulae contained in the "Bluebook," or in any standard book treating of electric wiring.

The voltage drop across a circuit, or across any part thereof, is dependent upon the strength or volume of current flow as measured in amperes, and the resistance of the circuit up to the point at which the measurement is made. This resistance is calculated by applying Ohm's law in one of its forms, viz: E equals I X R, in which I represents the amperes flowing, or which it is proposed to cause to flow over the circuit, E the electromotive force, or voltage, and R the resistance of the circuit, in ohms.

Knowing the number of amperes and the resistance of the circuit, in ohms, we may calculate the voltage drop, or put in another way, we may calculate the number of volts of electric energy which will be consumed in forcing the current against the resistance—in this case the resistance of the circuit wires or conductors.

The resistance of the conductors depends upon (A) the conducting characteristics of the kind of metal from which the wires are made—see Table No. 2, page 72 and page 65 of the Bluebook, (B) its temperature, (C) the area of cross section of the conductors, and (D) the length of the conductors.

The first two factors named (kind of metal and temperature) are often termed the "specific resistance of the metal" and the application of this unit to resistance calculations takes the form of the so-called "mil-foot standard" of resistance—see page 73 of Bluebook. It is based upon the resistance of a certain kind of wire (Commercial copper.—Ed.) at a given temperature, the said wire being one mil in diameter and one foot long.

Knowing the resistance of a mil-foot of wire at a stated temperature, in order to ascertain the resistance of a wire or conductor made from the same metal (all copper wires are made from "commercial copper" of a fixed standard of fineness, the same as the mil-foot resistance is calculated from.—Ed.) we have but to know its length and cross section area in order to make accurate calculations. We have but to multiply the resistance of the mil-foot by the total length of the wire, which would be twice the one-way length of the circuit, and divide that result by the area of cross section of the wire expressed in circular mils, which gives us, as a result, the total resistance of the circuit wires, in ohms. Having this we have but to multiply the resistance in ohms by the current flow, in amperes, to ascertain the voltage drop of the circuit.

For example: The projection room leads in question have, we will assume, a one-way length of fifty feet. The maximum current flow through the circuit is sixty amperes. The wires are No. 4.

Turning to table No. 1, page 70 of the Bluebook, we find No. 4 wires have an area of cross section of 41,740 circular mils.

The mil-foot standard of resistance for commercial copper (page 73 Bluebook) is 10.5 ohms. What then is the voltage drop in this fifty foot circuit, which contains 100 feet of wire?

Using the formula $E = \frac{K \times I \times L}{d2}$, in which E represents voltage drop, K the mil-foot standard of resistance, in ohms (10.5), L the length of the wire in feet (100) and d2 the square of the diameter of the wire (its cross section in c.m.) we have the whole question stated. Substituting figures for letters we have $E = \frac{10.5 \times 60 \times 100}{41{,}740}$, which gives us, as a final result, 1.27 as the voltage drop.

(Note: Gray evidently struck the wrong typewriter key, as he gave it as 41,742, instead of 41,740 as in the Bluebook table. I mention this because I corrected it in the formula, and it might possibly make a slight difference in the final result, though it would be very small.)

If we now multiply 1.27, the voltage drop, by sixty, the flow in amperes, we get 76.2 as a result, which is the number of watts of electric energy lost through resistance of the circuit wires themselves. This energy is registered on the meter, and must be paid for, and now I suppose I am in for an argument, because I shall make the statement that we also pay for the energy consumed in all other parts of the circuit as well, though the question deals with the projection room feeders only, and that is what we are considering.

The operation of a projection arc requires a certain amount of resistance other than that inherent in the arc itself, hence it requires a greater potential drop across the input terminals than actually occurs across the arc.

It makes no difference, or so it seems to me, either in the operation cost or the performance of the arc itself, whether this drop occurs across a rheostat, or is distributed, in part at least, along the circuit wires. In this I of course assume that none of this resistance occurs because of loose or corroded connections, which would tend to introduce irregularities in current flow, or because the wire carrying the current is working above permissible carrying capacity, which would tend to introduce a potential fire hazzard and to injure the insulation of the wires.

Just as long as the wires carrying the current are not overloaded—are not carrying more than the current permitted by the National Board of Fire Underwriters—there is, in my opinion, only two limiting conditions to "permissible voltage drop" as applies to the projection room feeders, and those are (A) in cases where the voltage drop affects the operation of a motor or motors—the tolerance here may be from 5 to 10 or 12 volts—and (B) where the combined drop in the leads and across the minimum rheostat resistance prevents the desired volume of current from flowing through the arc or arcs.

Come on, men! Y' going to let Gray get away with this sort of thing without giving him a run for his money? There are good men in this "school." If Gray can dig up such an answer as this, what sort of excuse are you chaps who have equal capabilities but who crawl back into some ice house and go to sleep? And what have you thousands who do just exactly nothing at all got t' say, Huh? Do you mean to tell me that the relatively few actively enrolled in the Bluebook "School" are the only capable men in this country and Canada—the only ones with ability and energy enough to get in on such a thing as this?

No, I shall not argue with you on the point you have raised, Brother Gray, except to say that I personally do NOT consider it good practice to depend upon the resistance of the circuit wires for arc resistance or ballast. My way would be to reduce the projection room feeder circuit to the resistance which would be economical in any other circuit, and to use my rheostatic resistance ENTIRELY for arc ballast. I grant you there is room for argument here. I would like to hear from Bennewitz, from Dobson, from Fell, Hanover and the rest as to their views on the matter.

Question No. 312—How would you calculate the size wires necessary to carry a given amperage at a given, predetermined voltage drop?

All the above, plus Andrew Coates, St. Paul, Minnesota and P. R. Sedgwick, Winnipeg, Manitoba. (I nearly dropped dead from shock when I saw that Winnipeg had woke up) made good on this one.

Moore says:

There are many methods, but I would prefer to turn to page 74 of the "Bible of Projection," the Bluebook, using formula No. 4.

Which is correct, but just the same, brother Moore, you might have been considerably more explicit in the matter of explanation. What I am getting at is that, while such an answer "gets you by" because it really is correct, still—well, see Gray's reply to 311 and ponder.

Hanover says:

The question may be answered by referring to formula No. 4 on page 75 of the Bluebook, but an added explanation seems proper. If I were going to calculate the matter without the No. 4 formula I would first ascertain what resistance would be necessary to cause the voltage drop decided upon. To do this we have but to divide the voltage drop by the number of amperes to find the ohmic resistance necessary to cause the voltage drop.

For example: if we propose to have a five volt drop at a fifty ampere current flow we have only to divide five by fifty to know that it will require one tenth (.1) of an ohm resistance to accomplish the desired result.

Consulting any reliable wire resistance table, such as Table No. 2, page 72 of the Bluebook, we find that No. 6 wire, which (see table No. 1, page 70 of the Bluebook) is rated at 50 amperes R. C., has a resistance of 0.4002 of an ohm per 1,000 feet, or say .4 of an ohm, which is close enough for our purpose.

If one thousand feet of such wire has .4 of an ohm resistance, then of course one quarter of that, or 250 feet, would have one quarter as much resistance, or .1 of an ohm. It therefore follows that a circuit 125 feet long would have .1 ohm resistance which would cause a five volt drop.

Question No. 113—What is the area of cross section of a wire one eighth of an

"One Minute While We Change Reels"

IN the early days of motion pictures no one cared much about the technique or quality of projection. When the operator announced—"One minute while we change reels"—the audience was glad of the opportunity to rest its eyes from the flash and glare of the screen. It accepted the annoyances of poor projection without protest.

But it is quite a different story today. The manner in which a picture is presented is as important a matter as the quality of the picture itself.

But projection today is either an asset or a liability. It either attracts patronage or drives it away. The large percentage of unsuccessful theatres that have poor projection is tangible proof that people know the difference between good and bad projection and that they give their patronage to theatres that offer the best.

Good projection is a matter of good business. Besides being an unfailing means of increasing patronage it actually costs less in the long run. If you have faulty projection you also have expensive repairs of machines and reels, less box office receipts, and the good will value of your theatre is nil. But if you have perfect projection, the kind you get from a Simplex projector, you have no repair bills, larger box office returns, a high investment value in your machine, and the reputation of your theatre extends more and more every day.

inch in diameter? Of a wire 100 mills in diameter?

All the before-named answered correctly.

Moore says:

To find the area of cross section of a wire one eighth of an inch in diameter, first reduce the diameter to thousandths of an inch. There are one thousand one thousandths in one inch, hence in one eighth of an inch there are as many thousandths as eight is contained in one thousand, which is 125, hence our wire is 125/1000 or .125 of an inch in diameter. To find the area of cross section of a round wire, square the diameter in thousandths of an inch, which means multiply the diameter by itself and 125 X 125 = 15,625, which is the area of cross section in circular mils.

Examining table No. 1, page 70 of the Bluebook, we find that the wire lacks the difference between 15,625 and 16,510 c. m. of being a No. 8 wire. Put in another way it lacks 3.5 mils of having the diameter of a No. 8 wire. As to the 100 mil diameter wire by the same rule 100 X 100 = 10,000 c. m.

Doe says:

The rule is that multiplying the diameter of a round wire, expressed in thousands of an inch, by itself—called "squaring the diameter"— give its cross sectional area in circular mils. Frankly I have never been able to quite understand why this should be, apparently it is, so, as the editor so often remarks, that's that!

One eighth of an inch is reduced to thousandths by dividing 1,000 by 8, which gives us 125 as the result. The wire then is .125 of an inch in diameter, which, multiplied by itself, gives 15,625 c. m. as the area of cross section of the wire. That is 885 c. m. less than a No. 8 wire. By the same rule a wire 100 mils in diameter would be 100 X 100 = 10,000 c. m. in area of cross section.

Question No. 314—How would you calculate the voltage it would require to force a given number of amperes through a given resistance?

Guimond says:

By ohm's law, voltage is equal to current flow, in amperes, divided by resistance. It is expressed by the formula $E = \frac{I}{R}$, in which E stands for electromotive force, or volts, I for current flow in amperes, and R for resistance in ohms. Therefore to cause ten amperes to flow through 1 ohm resistance, 10 amperes divided by 1 ohm equals 10 volts pressure is required.

Question No. 315—What is the area of cross section of a wire 1/1,000 of an inch in diameter?

Coates says:

Since one circular mil is the area of cross section of a circle one one thousandth of an inch in diameter, and since we may presume that the wire in question is a round one, and since its diameter is one one thousandth of an inch, it follows that its area of cross section is one circular mil.

As to Carbon Sizes

From time to time, averaging maybe a half dozen or so a week the year around, come inquiries as to what are the best sizes of carbon to use for different amperages.

Again I repeat: THE CORRECT SIZE POSITIVE FOR D. C. IS THAT DIAMETER WHICH WORKS AT FULL CAPACITY, AND AT A POINT ABOUT FIVE AMPERES BELOW THE LOAD WHICH CAUSES IT TO START TO PENCIL.

That is the really best and most efficient load, since with it you obtain the maximum crater area to be had with the amperage used, without an unnecessary body of relatively cool carbon adjacent to the crater. Also the crater area is not reduced by "penciling" through overload.

However, experience has amply shown that relatively few motion picture projectionists will take the trouble to make careful tests to determine just what size comes nearest to fulfilling the above specification, and for those who will not, the National Carbon Company engineering department has compiled a table of carbon sizes designed to cover the entire range used in motion picture projection. I think we may safely say that these tables are quite sufficiently accurate for users of National Carbons, except that of course difference in operating conditions, may possibly alter the figures supplied to some extent.

Under ordinary conditions, however, I am very certain the tables will be found entirely adequate, and I would suggest that they be cut out, framed in a "Woolworth" (10-cent) frame, under glass, and hung on the wall of the projection room. Here they are:

What Is It?

From Marietta, Ohio, comes word that a projectionist by the name of Deming McCullogh, or McCullough, has invented a device for steadying the film while it runs through the "machine." It also is claimed to eliminate all chance of film breakage.

Just what this may be I don't know. The film runs through a number of "machines," and there is no statement as to which one it is. Presumably, however, since the inventor is said to be a motion picture projectionist, it is the projector, though it may also be the camera, the printer, the perforator or the rewinder, all of which equally are "machines."

Just in what way the film is "steadied" deponent sayeth not. If further and more detailed information arrives we will advise you.

Langdon is the man specifically mentioned by newspaper critics, trade papers and exhibitors as the greatest comedy find of years.

When you have a personality like his, that pulls people to your show, why keep it a secret? Why not play him up in your advertising as big as or bigger than the feature?

Geo. C. MacKinnon, Boston Advertiser, says: "A Harry Langdon comedy was the funniest film seen by these tired eyes since New Year's. Langdon is a real comedian."

Leah Du Rond, Register and Tribune-News, Des Moines: "Harry Langdon is the only genuine comedian making short comedies today."

R. Addison Adams, Indianapolis Star: "Langdon is the biggest comedy bet since Chaplin."

Chester B. Bahn, Syracuse Telegram and Sunday American: "The Harry Langdon comedies are one of the three best comedy series in two reels."

Carlton Miles, Minneapolis Journal: "I think the Harry Langdon comedies are the best short subjects this year."

Arthur Sheeman, St. Paul News: "Of the year's events concerning short subjects I think nothing was so important as the extraordinary advancement, altogether deserved, of Harry Langdon. I would place him second only to Chaplin."

Walter D. Hickman, Indianapolis Times: "Langdon has made himself more popular with his two-reelers than even he or his distributing company realizes." (FILM DAILY).

Christie's Greater Laugh Season

The successful showman is the one who has his finger on the public pulse.

The vital spot—the most sensitive and responsive fiber of that public pulse—is the "laugh center."

That's why the good old public pays millions for a laugh—and not a centime for a crepe-hanger.

If you can make a cat laugh, you have achieved the ultimate. As a figure of speech, "Enough to make a cat laugh" means that the risibilities of millions of human beings will be jazzed into a merry, rhythmic syncopation when they see the Christie Specials.

The Christies have been titillating the public diaphragm for many years, while the cash registers of exhibitors have played a jolly little "Dough-Ray-Me" symphony of their own.

Christie Specials are the Champion Classical Jazz Symphonies of the screen —and the CHAMPION MONEY—GETTERS OF ALL TIME!

"Enough to Make a Cat Laugh?"—Yea, bo!

In the patois of this Jazz Age—They're THE CAT'S WHISKERS!

means to you Mr. Exhibitor

With an established reputation of fifteen years as producers of fast-moving, rollicking comedy of proved box office quality—backed by the most elaborate and up-to-date studio equipment for the creation of de luxe productions—the Christie Feature Comedies for the coming year will Surpass the magnificent records made by the Christie Product in the past.

His long and brilliant career has won for Al Christie the title of Master Farceur of Motion Picture Production. That rare faculty of detecting the humor possibilities in a situation and that still rarer ability to grasp the kind of humor that turns laughs into plethoric box-office receipts, is the reason Al Christie leads in the Feature Comedy field.

The Past Performances of the Christies have made their name synonymous with Box Office Success. When you book a Christie picture, you book an Assured Success—the product of men who have proved their ability to gauge the public demand for Entertainment and have met that demand with the maximum percentage of Showmanship Productions.

The stupendous success of "CHARLEY'S AUNT" demonstrated that the Christies stand alone in the Feature Comedy field.

"CHARLEY'S AUNT" BROKE ALL RECORDS AT EVERY FIRST RUN HOUSE IT PLAYED SINCE DATE OF RELEASE! It is acknowledged to be the greatest screen comedy ever produced.

"SEVEN DAYS" and "MADAME LUCY" will measure up to the superlative quality which the Christies demand and the public expect in the Christie Feature Comedies.

WORLD

The Editor's Views

WHETHER it was the opening of Greater Movie Season or just "this time of the year"—no matter what the cause, the motion picture bills presented on New York's Broadway this week certainly gave warm encouragement to all who are looking forward to the coming season.

Up and down the avenue—and not a misfit among them. And some really "great" as entertainment.

About this period of the year it is customary to wax enthusiastic over the wealth of picture offerings. But, checking back over the years, it seems to us that this has usually been due to the presence of several spectacles of the "million dollar" variety.

This year the story is different. We are enthusing about plain, ordinary—but how cherished—"entertainment." Even Doug Fairbanks is drawing them to the box office with a picture that does not have to rely on the dollar sign but goes back to the first principles of his popularity.

"ENTERTAINMENT." How simple to say, how easy to demand—but how hard to get. Take a look at "Kiss Me Again." As simple a plot as was ever told in twenty words. But what Lubitsch has done with it!

Lubitsch is acknowledged a master craftsman. Unfortunately, after giving a man such a label, there is a tendency in this industry to decide when he does an extra good job that he is "shooting over the heads" of the average audience.

We stood in line at Lee Ochs' cozy Piccadilly Theatre twenty minutes the other night, and then sat through "Kiss Me Again" with an "average" audience. And if there is a "fine" point in Lubitsch's work that this "average" audience missed we'd like to know where it is.

SOMEDAY, when this theatre opening fever reaches the point that someone decides to start a course for directors we are going to nominate Ernst Lubitsch for the Chair of Technique. For fine points, for sheer artistry, for delicate touches that have a world of meaning—whether the vehicle be spectacle or intimate domestic drama—we'll walk a mile to see a Lubitsch picture.

To the credit of Warner Brothers, let it also be added, they let Lubitsch do that which he can do. There's a lot in that.

ELSEWHERE on Broadway. "Sally of the Sawdust," "The Unholy Three," "The Goose Woman," "The Trouble With Wives." Just entertainment, every one of them. And corking good entertainment.

David Griffith is one who does shoot "over their heads" every now and then—and then for his next effort, gives us a box office sure thing like "Way Down East"—or, now added to the list, "Sally of the Sawdust."

Here is an audience picture if ever there was one. It is David Griffith plus a liberal dash of the original Sennett. Appears as though Griffith is about to set himself right again with low brow box office standards just in time to give Famous a flying start on his new series.

"The Goose Woman"—Universal maintaining the pace that we spoke of last week. "The Trouble With Wives"—a dash of Lubitsch, plus very broad Ford Sterling comedy that the folks down front just ate up.

And "The Unholy Three." Give thanks to the fates that once in a while bring an original idea to the screen. Here is one—delightful in its conception, delightful in its execution.

The concluding thought. Whether it was the opening of Greater Movie Season—or just "the pictures"—we do not know, but the box office line-ups in average Summer weather taught some sort of a moral. Give the credit to the Greater Movie Season if you want to. For our part, without detracting in the least from the value of that excellent effort, we hand the bouquets to the pictures. First, last, and all the time—the pictures.

Europe Watches Independent Fight With Apprehension

By W. Stephen Bush

EUROPE is very much interested, not to say aroused, as it watches the great struggle going on in the States between what is here called "the great combination" and the "independents." Columns of space are devoted to what is described as a contest between giants. Almost unanimously the sympathies of the press seem to be with the so-called independent forces, though there are no passionate outbursts.

In almost every case, however, there is an undercurrent of apprehension in the editorial comments. Nor is the fear confined to editors alone. Indeed the editors only echo the sentiments of the producers of the principal countries on the European continent. There is an uneasy feeling in France, Germany, Italy and all the former parts of the old Austrian Empire that whatever side wins in the States, or even if the great battle ends with a happy compromise, it will be Europe's turn next to feel the effects of American initiative and enterprise and learn by observation and experience what American organization can do by way of intensive selling.

Of course, the Europeans do not put it just this way. In fact, even a hard-boiled optimist will try in vain to detect any note of "Welcome to our fair land" in the comments of our European friends. Quite the contrary.

Listen to the lament of the Bavarian film producers, even if you have never heard of them before. These good people are plainly displeased with the present state of affairs.

"The U. S.," they say, "does not absorb our films, but we take almost their entire output. The Americans want to control the German market just as they have conquered the British, Franch and Italian markets. Their ultimate object is to destroy all European film industries. The Americans intend to annihilate and exterminate the German film industry and their first step will be to establish their own exchanges throughout Germany."

The Bavarian film producers take no pains to conceal their fear of the moral and artistic consequences of this threatening American victory. They flatly declare that German "kultur" will eventually disappear unless something is done in a hurry. A special tax for American films is suggested as a means of keeping back the flood. The rest of the German film producers, while expressing much the same painful prophecies for the future, have gone on record with a resolution against imposing special taxes on American films. A film industry which cannot breathe except with the aid of such artificial respiration as taxes on foreign competitors cannot live long.

The apprehension in the ranks of European film producers has not been lessened by a page "ad" appearing in all the big cities seeking "immediately" suitable quarters for film exchanges.

It does seem as if the statements appearing periodically in the trade press here and in the States that Europe was getting tired of Yankee films were based on nothing very substantial. The situation has not been softened by the plain and honest comments of the commercial attache of the American legation in Berlin. This gentleman, speaking of the efforts of the German government to force an exchange of German and American films as the basis of every permit to import our films into Germany, remarked:

"To enable him to bring in as many first-class American films as possible the German producer makes as many of the cheapest possible films as he can. The cost of the negative varies from $20,000 to $35,000. In these films generally one or at the most two sets are used."

Those readers of Moving Picture World who are interested in future film events may take note of a great feature which will be released in 1931. This most unusual production is being made in France by the strangest director I ever met in a long career of writing. I am speaking of M. Abel Gance and his ambitious undertaking to produce a minute and complete screen biography of Napoleon I.

The plan of M. Gance is to present the world not merely with two or three hours of entertainment, but with a work of monumental size and extraordinary quality. Films dealing with the subject of Napoleon have been common enough from the earliest days of the industry. The efforts to reproduce the great man and his life on the screen have persisted to this very minute.

M. Gance has no intention of competing with any previous effort of this kind. His aim is infinitely higher. He is painting Napoleon for the screen in all his struggles with Fate and for this purpose has divided the life of the conqueror into two periods: The early period when Fate seemed to obey Napoleon and the other period when Napoleon seemed but a toy of Fate. As M. Gance himself puts it: "As General Bonaparte he skirted the edge of the maelstrom; as emperor he was drawn into the very midst of it."

Space here is too precious for a detailed account of M. Gance's labors. The director has planned everthing carefully with a view to thoroughness. There are to be seven parts of the feature, each part to take just one year. One part is half finished, Mr. Gance having commenced work on it last January. All the early scenes have been taken in Corsica around Ajaccio, the birthplace of Napoleon.

I mention this because it indicates the scale on which the enterprise is planned. Three or possibly four different actors will take the part of Napoleon as he appeared in the great phases of his career. The "Societé Abel Gance" has been founded with international capital. It its claimed that the director will have 60,000,000 francs at his disposal. One cannot help thinking of the vast advantage of advertising a film for seven long years.

According to reports given out in Berlin, Paramount has not renewed its contract with the German concern which has heretofore distributed its films. It is not known what arrangements Paramount will make in the future. The agency which has until now distributed Paramount films has made a contract with Cecil de Mille's company. It is supposed to be based on a reciprocity arrangement by which at least a limited number of German-made films are to be distributed by the Producers Distributing Corp. through its exchanges in the States. These German films intended for absorption in the American market are to have the same star for the first three or four times at least. It is also intended to have American actors in the casts of these films.

Italy Is Nature's Film Studio

By Charles Simone

EVERY producer who wants to make better pictures should read the recent report of Commercial Attache H. C. MacLean to the Department of Commerce. The extracts published in the Moving Picture World of July 4, 1925, were both interesting and valuable. Mr. MacLean deserves great praise for the film facts he has so painstakingly gathered and for his correct summing up of the producing conditions existing in Italy.

I know from personal observation, close study right on the premises, and from actual experience that Italy has been but little and poorly used, and that her present state of well-nigh total inertia is directly traceable to the native producers' CAN'T and the foreign producers' WON'T. Some months ago I named Italy, "NATURE'S FILM STUDIO." It is that and more. It is a studio which, viewed from any and every angle, shows its towering superiority over all others. And yet Italy, climatically peerless, photographically ideal, scenically supreme, artistically unrivaled, politically serene and economically sound, instead of being first in motion picture production, is almost at the rear of the procession.

Studios Are Idle

Scores of studios, that but a decade ago hummed with activity, are now padlocked—mute evidence of the film primate which once was Italy's! Directorial brains going to seed and acting talent robbed of an outlet! A big industry that should thrive the most in Italy is, alas! almost moribund. What is wrong? Who is to blame? Where is the remedy? No doubt the World War and its aftermath did much in paralysing film production in Italy. But, more than war, the native producers are at fault, for, despite their undisputed excellence in artistic values, they know nothing and care less for commercial ones. Hence their pictures, except for a scattering few, have been financial failures. Little wonder Italian financiers have tired of losing money for Art's sake and steer clear of film producing propositions!

Last but not least, some of the blame may rightly be laid at the door of American producers, who, through some reason or another, have overlooked the advantages and the benefits that Italy offers them. True, a very small number of American productions have been made in the land of Mussolini; but inconsistent and sporadic efforts do not accomplish anything tangible.

Can Make Big Pictures in Italy

Personally I am at a loss to understand this aloofness of the American producers, especially of those who have already enjoyed a dip in the delightful and profitable producing waters of Italy. They, if any, should know that producing in Italy PAYS and pays right well. Verily it is not philanthropy but good business to produce pictures in Italy. Sixteen years of production and distribution experience together with my inherited and practical knowledge of Italy and Italians enable me to state most emphatically that bigger and better pictures can be made in Italy for less than the cost of mediocre features made anywhere else.

I am strong for home trade, and do not advocate an exodus of American producers. I believe, however, that not more than 90 per cent of American pictures should be made in the United States and that the remainder, particularly spectacular productions, should be staged in Italy with American directors and mixed casts of Italian and American players. "The White Sister" and "Romola" were so produced. Both unquestioned successes, artistically and commercially.

Inactivity Due to American Films

Because of two potent reasons, viz: lack of capital and inability to make pictures of world-wide appeal, the Italians are helpless and cannot lift the picture industry to the heights that Italy demands. Germany is trying to help; but Germany, notwithstanding some luminaries, lacks the experience and the sure touch of American producers. The Italian producers, or, rather, a small coterie of them, attribute their inactivity to the influx of American films, and ask their government to crush this "foreign evil."

Clamoring for governmental protection will be of no avail. There is nothing to protect anyway. When the Italian producer has learned the trick of making marketable pictures he will forget all about "invasion," "evil" and "protection." Just now, instead of crying for protection, he should shout his loudest for the co-operation of American producers. It is America and America alone that can aid in putting Italy solidly on the moving picture map. And Italy, though she may never regain the lost premiership, will, if adequately helped, be certain of second place —second only to America.

Should Send Italy Help

With the exception of capital, American know-itiveness and American commercial wizardry, Italy has everything (the best of everything) to make successful motion pictures, no matter what the theme, the period or the locale. America should not hesitate to lend Italy a hand for the amelioration of producing conditions there and for the general good of the film industry throughout the world. And right here it is well to bear in mind the fact, that, though such a move, America has all to gain and nothing to lose.

The Italian hand is beckoning from across the seas. Who will be the first to heed it? Where and who is the far-seeing American producer ready to grasp this golden opportunity and send a producing unit to Italy to make a series of bigger and better box-office attractions? Much could be written anent the whys and wherefores Americans should do some regular producing in Italy, but, for the present, I shall merely add that, while better pictures for less money may be made anywhere, the American producer is sure of them in Italy. It is essential to first secure the services of a capable and conscientious manager having a sound knowledge of Italy, preferably an American of Italian origin. The American producer, who can appreciate these truths and act accordingly, will make hay while the sun shines. And the sun shines longest in Italy.

M. P. T. O. A. Unseared by Detroit Bonfire; Little Is Accomplished

Faction War Features Personalities—Richey Out—Finance Status Started Invectives —Playdate Bureau Remains Unshaken

By TOM WALLER

THE national directorate session reddened the Detroit sky one night last week with all the brilliance of a conflagration. As such it was regarded then but, with the reduction of the flare to smouldering crisps, its significance is already being likened to a single bale of ignited dry straw, the flames of which possibly scorched the barn door.

No duel of machine gun batteries could have flung faster into one another leaden pellets which in Detroit's case were substituted by writhing bits of scalding sarcasm. For the hour they made what some may have considered good "news" copy. But with the cooling days which have followed the broth has simmered down to a clear consomme, the essence of which is an M.P.T.O.A. none the worse nor the better, excepting, possibly, a few surface scratches.

Excluding indulgences in one another's personalities, the M. P. T. O. A. directors returned to their homes last Friday afternoon, leaving as things of accomplishment on the Detroit record:

(1) The defining of the powers of finance committee and election of an administrative unit.

(2) The authorization by the board for the administrative committee to engage a business manager.

(3) The removal of the M. P. T. O. A. seal from the playdate bureau, but the pledge by the organization to cooperate for the successful functioning of the bureau.

(4) All of the directors, with the exception of Steffes, Cole and Cross, allowing their paid pledges to remain in the organization's treasury.

(5) Approval of Seider's plan for the solution of the contract and arbitration situations.

(6) Approval of Independence Week, starting October 18, and pledge of cooperation with independent producers for its success.

With Allied returning to the fold at Milwaukee, it was generally surmised then that there would be some internal rupture before matters as a whole in the M. P. T. O. A. would be smoothed out under the new program.

Some expected that the outburst would be realized at the first session of the new directorate. The former insurgents were apparently satisfied with the placements they received on executive committees at their closed gathering in New York.

What is said to have inspired the Detroit battle of epithets is now credited to a secret meeting of the old finance committee, following by exactly two weeks the session of the directorate held in the Roosevelt Hotel. This committee meeting is said to have been held in a private suite in the Biltmore Hotel. Cohen, it is said, it also developed at Detroit, then claimed that Louis Sagal as treasurer was automatically a part of the finance unit. Steffes and Cross, at that time, it is also reported, refused to recognize Sagal since this would have made President Woodhull's vote as an ex-officio member a deciding factor for the East. Instead of waiting for the directors' meeting Cross and Steffes are said to have quit the finance committee at that New York confab.

This situation, it is further reported, led to a demand from the middle west for the latest session of the national directorate in Detroit.

When in Michigan the request of Board Chairman Cohen for a report by the finance committee was reached the general question, "Who is the finance committee?" came from all corners of the hall.

The finance committee situation then disclosed itself with Steffes, it is said, claiming Sagal was not eligible and Cohen maintaining to the contrary. Seider interjected that both directors were wrong and that the constitution prescribed that the finance committee was legally composed of only three: Cohen, Commerford and Davis. For parliamentary reasons at the time these three resigned to be immediately re-elected.

The Playdate Bureau also had its innings. The question of its relationship to the national organization and its status in general were touched upon in a series of heated discussions. Whether or not the bureau should be abolished was never put to a vote, the World is informed. The subject which caused a temporary deadlock but which was later alleviated by a parliamentary ruling was the fifteen for and the fifteen against the acceptance of a report being rendered before the delegates on the bureau's activities.

Next in order was the question by some of the mid-western leaders as to the validity of the organization seal in connection with bureau correspondence and administration. Some of the Allied heads are reported to have voted against its discontinuance when it appeared that no strenuous objections would be registered against the move. Cohen, it is said, was one of those who voted for the omission of the seal hereafter in any connection with the bureau, which matter was carried.

The selection of the new administrative committee was made in a unique way. Cohen picked five men to his left and Steffes selected a similar number. These ten adjourned in caucus and reported the following committee which was endorsed: Brylawski, Wells, Cross, Commerford and Davis. This unit will have for its deliberation the naming of a business manager. Their selection, it was pointed out, will be only tentative and before becoming final will have to meet with the endorsement of the national directorate as a whole.

As reported in last week's World the business manager proposition was another move which greatly fanned the political wrangle at Detroit.

In this connection H. M. Richey, the tentative choice of the original finance committee, is definitely out. It is said that one of the main reasons for the break is due to a contract which he submitted. This is described as an ironclad document which made the managerial job one of great exhibitor power. One of its clauses is reported to have demanded a continuous amount of $500 monthly at the disposal of the holder. Among other things the contract is said to have demanded access to all of the organization's books and papers by the business manager.

Thirty exhibitors were in attendance on the first day of the Detroit session. Sixteen of the thirty put in an appearance on the second day. The absentees are reported to have been mostly Allied leaders. Eleven members constitute a quorum, so Friday's meeting got underway and terminated harmoniously. Then the plan submitted by Joseph M. Seider, chairman of the committee on arbitration and contract, for a solution of the arbitration and contract solution was endorsed. Approval was also recorded of Independence Week, commencing October 18, as inaugurated by the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association of America.

Entrance for Aged

The Strand Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, now has a "family entrance" in addition to its main front entrance as a result of the discovery by Manager H. E. Wilton that quite a few old or infirm people were being denied the pleasure of attending the moving picture theatre because of their inability to walk into a theatre from an automobile or carriage.

Manager Wilton heard from a number of regular patrons that there were old folks at home who would like to come to the show but who did not like the idea of being brought into the main door of the theatre. He therefore hit upon the plan of making a large side exit doorway a special entrance for these people. He then passed the word around that old people could be carried into the auditorium through this entrance and the result has been that many old people have now enjoyed their first movie in years. The side entrance leads directly to seats which are well up to the front.

Shallenberger Quotes "Informant" On Activities of Atlanta Board

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation, this week submitted to Moving Picture World information which he quotes as having to do with the activities of the Atlanta Film Board of Trade and "furnished me by a man who was a member of this organization." Although it is not included in his statement, this man is presumably Mr. Bromberg of Atlanta, about whom considerable was recently written in connection with his relation with the Atlanta board. Shallenberger quotes his informant as follows:

First: All national local members were stripped of authority and could only act and render decisions under instructions promulgated by their home offices.

Second: It was the policy of the members of the Arbitration Board to enforce unfair contracts without going into a statement of facts leading up to the signing of the contract by the exhibitors.

Third: The defendant was not given an opportunity to introduce evidence necessary to support his reasons for not going through with the contract that was in controversy.

Fourth: We honestly believe that the functioning of the board was not fair to the exhibitors.

Fifth: All local exhibitor members of the Arbitration Committee were handicapped due to the fact that they were sitting on the board with distributor managers with whom they were dealing each week, and in a measure this brought about coercion on the part of the non-members of the Arbitration Committee, as no local exhibitor, or even an out-of-town exhibitor who was brought to the city to act upon the board, at any stated meeting, did not feel at liberty to find in favor of the exhibitor, due to the fact that the company interested (in practically every case) was one with which he (the exhibitor member) was doing business from time to time.

Sixth: The local membership was stripped of all authority by reason of the fact that they could not, of their own free will and accord, do any act other than that which had the stamp of approval of the Hays organization. The independent membership was in the minority.

Seventh: The local organization consisted of fourteen members and of this number three were independent and eleven national organizations.

Eighth: By virtue of our membership in the local Film Board of Trade we were forced to support claims made against exhibitors and hold up and suspend service, even though in our opinion the claim was illegal, unjust and the contract or contracts were secured through unfair methods.

Ninth: We believe the board was operated contrary to the Federal Statutes regulating such organizations.

Tenth: The Film Board of Trade, as operated, was contrary to "Common Law Principles" and deprived not only exhibitors but film exchanges of their property rights, without due process of law, and was confiscatory.

Eleventh: The membership failed to cooperate 100 per cent and would not live up to what is known as a "gentleman's agreement" and all members were distrustful of one another and were frequently guilty of putting "something over."

Twelfth: Our experience in the findings of the Arbitration Committee demonstrated clearly that when an exhibitor bought or contracted for service for a specific day in the week and for some reason, beyond his control, the exhibitor was forced to close his theatre on that particular day, it was the policy of the members of the Arbitration Committee to ignore the fact that that particular service was bought for a stated day in the week, and endeavor to force the exhibitor to play the product contracted for on some other day in the week, disregarding the fact that some other distributor had service under contract for that day in the week, thus depriving the distributor, who was logically and rightfully entitled to its protection (to play dates); thus depriving distributor from receiving the revenue it was so justly entitled to, thereby favoring some national organization.

Thirteenth: Under a resolution adopted by the local Film Board of Trade (which was prepared by the general attorney of the Film Board of Trade, 469 Fifth avenue, New York) all revenue accruing to the local board was transmitted and deposited direct with the Film Board of Trade in New York, which is in direct conflict with Section Four, Article Three of the By-Laws of the local Film Board of Trade, thus denying the local board supervision of disbursements.

Fourteenth: The local Film Board of Trade, being a Georgia corporation and clothed with power to sue and to be sued, was stripped of all authority in the matter of finances.

Fifteenth: In the event an exhibitor or body of exhibitors saw fit to file suit of complaint against the local Film Board of Trade and its members, our company and three others would have been the only members who were residents of the State of Georgia and authorized by law to do business in Georgia and our assets could have been tied up instantly by attachment or otherwise. Whereas a majority of the membership consisted of non-resident corporations whose home offices were in states other than the State of Georgia.

Sixteenth: Little or no authority was vested in the local membership and no initiative could be indulged in by same, due to the fact that all national members were subject to instructions or home office officials in New York.

Seventeenth: During our membership not a single decision of the Arbitration Committee met with the approval of exhibitor and distributor alike.

Eighteenth: Those who were found against or lost their case before the Film Board of Trade evaded the rulings as far as possible and in this, when it was to the interest of some particular company, they were aided and abetted by the manager of other members of the organization and that particular company was the beneficiary. In many instances exhibitors were taught how to evade a contract that they wished to avoid.

Nineteenth: I know of not less than three cases where exhibitors who had their service held up by distributor members, during the suspension and pending a final hearing, national members of the Atlanta Film Board of Trade continued to serve product despite the fact that letters of deposit had gone out from all exchanges to the defendant exhibitor.

At Waycross, Ga., while the exhibitor was under suspension not less than two exchanges continued to serve this exhibitor to the detriment of all other members.

At DeFuniak Springs, Fla., while that account was under suspension, Pathe exchange having a claim against him, Famous Players-Lasky continued to serve that account to the exclusion of other member distributors.

One distributor member continued to serve various accounts that were suspended, claiming that they had a right to do so under certain franchises and it was our opinion that the franchise was of no more value and had no superior rights over a specific contract for a series or group of pictures.

Jasper, Ala., circuit consisting of four towns was suspended and during the suspension two of the national organizations, Famous Players-Lasky and Fox, and possibly others continued to serve this exhibitor despite the fact that Progress Pictures, Inc., and other organizations were forced to withhold service and return checks sent in by this exhibitor, a settlement of the claim having been made over the telephone without conferring or consulting with the entire membership of the Atlanta Film Board of Trade, thus causing other members to lose revenue and hold up contracts that represented a considerable investment. The national organizations attempted to absorb all playing time and tie up the exhibitors with block contracts for more playing time than the exhibitor had and when the exhibitor failed to absorb the product tendered they were threatened with the Film Board of Trade and were forced to play out unfair contracts to the exclusion of other members who had equal rights.

Twentieth: We resigned because we felt that we were competent to conduct our own business in our own way without being dictated to by officials in New York who had no knowledge of the territory or specific conditions.

In view of the above and many other facts which could be mentioned we, as independent distributors, did not feel that it was to our interest or the exhibitors in this territory to retain our membership in the Film Board of Trade and by withdrawing we put the world on notice that we did not approve of the methods employed by the local board and the edicts issued by the national board in New York, as we did not believe that we could consistently live up to our trade mark as an independent distributor.

W. E. SHALLENBERGER.

Calls It "Silly"

When Shallenberger's statement on the activities of the Film Board of Trade in Atlanta was called to the attention of the Hays office, Courtland Smith, assistant to Will Hays, observed:

"It is too silly to comment on."

Famous Launches in Canada Big Coupon Ticket Plan

A gigantic plan for the co-operative selling of books of coupon tickets is being put into operation by the Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, under a scheme which is known as the "Scrip Book Plan." These tickets will be sold at each of 57 selected theatres of the huge chain of approximately 100 houses owned and controlled by the corporation in Canada, the books of coupons being identical in design for all the designated theatres.

The new feature is being organized by Walter F. Davis, formerly the manager of the Metropolitan Theatre at Winnipeg, who has been appointed an official of the head office at Toronto for the purpose. He has arranged for the launching of the scrip book plan simultaneously in all Canadian cities and it will be one of several important "flashes" for the inauguration of the "Capitol Season of Entertainment" for the fall and winter season of 1925-26. A considerable amount of advertising matter has been devised for the first announcements, these including attractive 24-sheet posters, trailers, newspaper advertising displays, window cards and slips for distribution at the theatres.

The books of tickets will come in two book quantities, the designated number of tickets in each instance selling at stated prices, which will mean a saving to purchasers. The tickets will be recognized as regular admission tickets at each of the 57 theatres regardless of where they have been bought and they are transferable, the scrip books being suitable as gifts to friends or relatives, prizes or otherwise. They will also afford considerable convenience to patrons at theatre entrances.

PARAMOUNT REPRESENTATIVE SAILS

Reformers Plan

Another attempt, it is reported, will be made this coming winter to pass a bill in the New York State Legislature to stop Sunday motion picture shows in that state. The Lord's Day Alliance, a well known reform organization which was back of a similar bill known as the Jenks measure that was introduced at the last session of the Legislature, and which got no further than being referred to a committee and a subsequent public hearing that ended up in more or less of a row, will be back of the coming bill.

Between Sermons He Projects Film in Mass. Town

Motion picture shows in Pepperell, Mass., not only are conducted under the direction of a minister, but he is the projectionist as well. The Rev. Robert W. Drawbridge, pastor of the community church, holds a first-class Massachusetts projectionist's license.

Several years ago the residents of Pepperell felt that they would like to have motion picture shows in their midst. Accordingly, projection equipment was purchased and installed in the church.

The Rev. Mr. Drawbridge now says the motion pictures have grown much better and still are shown in the church. He says that all the best subjects are presented, including features, comedies, educational and news reels.

Hays Office Reports Movement Gets Underway to Brilliant Start—Chicago Opening Said to Eclipse Others in Magnitude

GREATER MOVIE SEASON is in full swing. More than fifteen hundred cities and towns are flying the pennant this week and will continue their campaigns throughout August, the Hays office reports. Brilliant openings are reported generally in telegrams to the national service bureau that organized the drive from the Will H. Hays office. A salute of guns in Atlantic City; a parade in Chicago witnessed by more people than any like event since the Armistice celebrations; a radio pageant broadcast from New York; a demonstration in Denver that amounted to a get-together of civic officials, theatre-owners and business men on a basis of mutual co-operation; every city with some outstanding achievement by way of emphasising the public importance of motion pictures. So runs the history of the first national Greater Movie Season backed by exhibitor exploitation of an unprecedented nature.

Personal appearances of D. W. Griffith, Carol Dempster, W. C. Field and other popular screen players commenced proceedings at the New York Strand. Special presentations at the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto and Piccadilly carried the "greater movie" theme; and an intensive newspaper, billboard and front-of-house campaign brought immediate results at all the seventy-five participating theatres throughout Greater New York.

The drive nationally developed as many surprises as an election. Atlanta, for instance, contradicted the general belief that the season's principal advantages were for first-run, down-town houses. "Reports from all theatres here indicate from ten to forty per cent. increase in business over the past three months," Willard C. Patterson telegraphed. "Community and second run theatres show the greatest increase. The most outstanding feature of our campaign was the splendid co-operation from big business concerns and newspapers, showing that the people of Atlanta hold their picture theatres in high regard. Greater Movie Season is a success. Let's have it every year."

From present indications Chicago staged the most spectacular function. The highlight proved to be the "King and Queen of Movies" Contest sponsored by the Herald-Examiner. Thirty-six hundred young men and women entered and all participated in the parade as Ladies-and Gentlemen-in-Waiting to the winners, Bert Douglas and Anne Teeman. More than a million and a half people thronged the line of march—the greatest crowd to witness a parade since the Armistice Day demonstrations, according to one Chicago newspaper. Exhibitors throughout Chicago reported one of the best Saturdays and Sundays in their experience, proving that already the campaign has taken effect.

Under direction of Ralph T. Kettering, everything planned was carried to a successful conclusion. Two contests were conducted simultaneously in the Chicago papers—the essay contest in the Evening American and the "King and Queen" contest in the Herald and Examiner. All the other publications were generous in support. More than 17,920 lines of free publicity were secured in the six newspapers, which at the regular advertising rates would have cost $54,760. The writing and placing of the stories was handled by Louis P. Kramer, chairman of the publicity committee. Credit for the parade, declared to be the greatest thing arranged by any industry in Chicago, goes to Russell Moon of Paramount.

Chicagoans had a second opportunity to pay homage to the movie king and queen and to continue the celebration of Movie Season at Trianon Ballroom when both Mr. Douglas and Miss. Teeman received diamond rings valued at $1,000. The "royal couple" were also awarded paid-up life insurance policies for $1,000 and parcels of Florida real estate. Other prizes to the value of $10,000 were awarded competitors.

"There can be no doubt that the campaign has helped to bring together various factions in the motion picture industry," says Louis P. Kramer, chairman of the publicity committee. "Exhibitors and their executives, who were at sword's point before the start of the campaign, are now working in harmony, having learned the value of unified effort through Greater Movie Season. The campaign has also aided business in Chicago in general. One newspaper handling the Chicago contest has increased its July advertising by more than four hundred columns over the same period of last year, and built circulation instead of losing it as most newspapers do when people are away on vacations. The industry has not only benefited, but has made many friends who now fully understand the value of motion pictures and motion picture theatres."

Three hundred Michigan theatre-owners conducted the campaign simultaneously and according to H. M. Richey, "reports indicate a remarkable public interest. It has been a big job but it will be worth the effort." No less than fifty special window displays were arranged in Detroit. One enterprising Michigan exhibitor in a town of twelve thousand is offering two automobiles as prizes to his patrons; while in Lansing, where the effort behind the national contest is particularly aggressive, twenty valuable local awards have been secured.

Washington, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Oklahoma City, Tulsa and Louisville have deferred their season for two weeks in order to develop full publicity impetus.

Telegraph dispatches from other centers where the season has opened, follow:

Atlantic City—A salute of fourteen guns, one for each theatre, fired by the Janeway Battery Saturday morning, formed the opening shots of Greater Movie Season. This brought thousands on the run to the beach where boy scouts displayed large banners reading: "Atlantic City Welcomes Greater Movie Season Which Opens To-Day." From there the parade moved down Atlantic Avenue. All theatres and most of the exchanges were represented by floats; theatre employees marched together with platoons of militia, scouts, and mounted police. The country for twenty miles around is twenty-four-sheeted; the fronts of streetcars carry one-sheets; and the Greater Movie Season slogan is borne on the windshields of over two hundred jitneys as well. There are fifty thousand visitors in Atlantic City at present and with the intensive three weeks' campaign that has been directed at them, all houses and the two piers are getting extra money.

Wires Tell Story

New Orleans—The season has been launched auspiciously, ably supported by ninety per cent. of the leading theatre owners. The campaign has been sound and practical and without unnecessary trimmings. It is felt that exhibitors have learned much that will prove valuable next year.

Des Moines—"The public is in accord with our campaign and know that greater and better motion pictures are to be shown during the coming season," said A. G. Stolte, of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, whose efforts have been largely responsible for the successful start of Greater Movie Season here. "The present lineup of attractions being booked from August to December promises exceptional business, and we are convincing the public of the sincerity of the Greater Movie slogan."

Dallas—The season opened with capacity audiences all day. Newspapers have given splendid editorial support. While no actual figures regarding box-office increases can be quoted, Si Charninsky of the Capitol, for one, declares himself thoroughly sold on the movement and looks forward to it as a yearly event.

Indianapolis—Greater Movie Season opening on Sunday was a big success at all theatres. In addition to special advertising space, the season was featured in individual displays. The campaign here illustrated so graphically the manner in which public spirit and enthusiasm can be developed by a cooperative drive, that city officials and business men will adapt the working plans for a civic demonstration to be known as Greater Indianapolis week, scheduled for September.

Toledo—All theatres participating in Greater Movie Season have started off to increased business, according to F. E. Walters of the Temple Theatre, who controlled the campaign. The mayor issued a general proclamation which was published in all newspapers. Theatre fronts are decorated and a huge banner is stretched across the main thoroughfare. The Toledo News-Bee, conducting the essay contest, is offering thirteen hundred and seventy three prizes in addition to the three national awards.

Encouraged by the campaign's success, the large theatres intend to carry the season through into September.

Loew Projectionists Strike in New England

As a result of refusal to re-employ Thomas Hayden, projectionist at the Music Hall Theatre in Pawtucket, R. I., a strike has been called in virtually all of the theatres in New England controlled and operated by E. M. Loew, it is reported. The strike is among the musicians, stage employes and projectionists in the Loew theatres at New Bedford, Lowell, Lynn, Fitchburg, Dorchester.

The theatres affected by the strike are Strand, New Bedford; Capitol and Dreamland, Lynn; Majestic, Fitchburg; Rialto, Lowell, and Dorchester at Dorchester.

Albany Zone By-laws to Be Augmented

Exhibitors in the Albany zone have made certain suggestions which are to be embodied in by-laws that will be used to govern the Albany and Buffalo zones in the near future. A draft of the by-laws promulgated by the Buffalo zone, was recently received in Albany, and copies were then sent to the officials and members of the board of directors of the zone, consisting of Louis Buettner, of Cohoes; Uly S. Hill, of Troy; George Dwore, of Schenectady; Rae Candee, of Utica; W. W. Farley, of Albany; Robert Wagner, of Little Falls; L. L. Connors, of Cambridge; Lew Fischer of Fort Edward; and Meyer Schine, of Gloversville.

An expression was asked of each relative to rejection, approval or amendments. As a result, some excellent suggestions have been received for possible amendments. A meeting of the Zone Committee will be called in Albany the latter part of August or the fore part of September to give consideration to the by-laws.

ROCHESTER MAN SUES PARTNER

Alleging that he has been "frozen out" in the management of the Plymouth Theatre, Rochester, and that his partners are conducting the place "improvidently and negligently," Harry Tischoff has brought suit for dissolution of his partnership with Isidore Rubin and Morris Bachmuth, both of Kodak Town. Tishcoff claims that Rubin and Bachmuth failed to keep an agreement to assign to him a third interest in the lease and have failed to consult him in the management of the theatre.

ALBANY PIANIST AVERTS PANIC

What might have been a panic at the Arbor Hill Theatre in Albany, N. Y., one night last week, when an unknown person yelled "fire," was averted by Peter Reilly, the pianist, who kept cool and continued to play on as though nothing had happened although a badly frightened crowd was jamming the exits. One woman fainted but was revived later on and was taken home. Abe Stone, manager of the house, later on offered a reward of $25 for the arrest of the person who had caused the near-panic.

United Artists Gets Big Interest in Foreign Firm

In line with its program of expansion, the United Artists Corporation has reached into Germany and consummated a deal acquiring a large interest in the Internacionale Action Gesselshaft, one of the largest distributing companies of that country.

The deal was completed August 4 by Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board, and Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists Corporation, who agreed to all terms submitted through their representative in Berlin.

Included in the deal is a part in the management of the company's holdings, which comprise six exchanges in Germany, a building in Berlin and sixteen German-made films. The United Artists Corporation is to have representation on the board of directors and to participate in the administration of distribution as well as production.

The disposition of the sixteen German films acquired in the deal waits upon their viewing by Mr. Schenck, who will pass upon their suitability for release in the United States. If satisfactory, they will be released through the United Artists Corporation.

Jersey Directorate Lauds Cohen and Playdate Men

At a special meeting in New York this week the New Jersey M. P. T. O. board of directors passed two resolutions. The first, in part, states: "that we commend the courageous stand of those directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who stood steadfast in their support of the Play Date Bureau and so preserved the cause of the independent theatre owner, producer and distributor."

The second resolution follows in part: "that the work of Sydney S. Cohen, as a theatre owner leader, be commended and that we offer to Mr. Cohen our hearty congratulations and appreciation for his efforts to protect and advance the cause of the independent theatre owner of this country."

Other business taken up was the election of Henry Hecht of Passaic to fill the unexpired term of Henry P. Nelson as a director, and the creation of an associate directorate, including Lee Newbury, Belmare; E. Thornton Kelly, Papasades; J. J. Ungerm, Newark; A. W. Hill, Paulsboro; Lew Pizor, Audubon; L. Morton Lewis, Atlantic City.

Incorporations

The motion picture business continues to reflect the usual midsummer slump in New York State, with three companies obtaining charters from the secretary of state during the past week, for the purpose of engaging in some branch of the industry. The newly incorporated companies included the Dependable Film Corporation, amount of capitalization not stated, with Charles S., Betty and William Goetz of New York City as directors; The Village Follies Attractions, Inc., $100,000, with William Kaufman, Israel Finkel and Ida Shmunis, New York; 45th and Broadway Corporation, capitalization not stated, with David Blum, Irving M. Greenfield and Matie Hammerstein, New York City.

N. Y. Zone Extends Peace Pipe to State Organization, O'Reilly Writes

President Dillon Agreeable to a Conference on Subject of T. O. C. C. Participation in Empire Unit's Activities

FIRST overtures to bring about harmony in the New York State M. P. T. O., have been made by Charles L. O'Reilly, of New York, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, and former head of the state organization. In a letter to William A. Dillon, of Ithaca, who was elected president of the State M. P. T. O., at Syracuse, several weeks ago, by the Albany and Buffalo zones, and without the metropolitan zone participating in any way, shape or manner, O'Reilly has now come forward with a suggestion that a conference be held between Jules Michaels, head of the Buffalo Zone; Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, chairman of the Albany Zone, President Dillon, Charles Hayman of Niagara Falls, and himself, in order that matters may be ironed out and the break that came weeks ago, be repaired.

Dillon has already replied in a favorable way to O'Reilly's suggestion for a conference, and then forwarding O'Reilly's communication to Zone Chairmen Michaels and Buettner, has received assurance of a desire on their part to co-operate and bring about a unification of the exhibitors in the Empire State.

Outstanding features of O'Reilly's letter and Dillon's reply include:

Assurance from O'Reilly of his personal and loyal support.

Assertion from O'Reilly that ever since the Washington convention there has existed a lack of cohesive effort in organization work.

Declaration on the part of O'Reilly, that steps should be taken to do away with the present system forcing an exhibitor to pay dues to three distinct organizations in order to be 100 per cent organization.

Suggestion from President Dillon that one or two delegates be named from each Zone in New York state to confer with a like number of delegates from the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce on matters of statewide importance.

Declaration on the part of Chairman Buettner that the present method of functioning of the Albany and Buffalo zones must not be disturbed and that exhibitors in these two zones are today receiving quicker action and quicker results than ever before.

The letter from Mr. O'Reilly to President Dillon came as a distinct surprise to many of the officers in both the Albany and the Buffalo zones and likewise to the few exhibitors who have been acquainted with the fact that a movement has been launched to once more harmonize matters in New York state, and that the first step was taken by O'Reilly, apparently representing the metropolitan zone, a section which saw fit for several months to absolutely ignore the other two zones and apparently the state association itself.

At the Syracuse convention, at which Dillon was chosen to head the New York state M. P. T. O., Walter Hays of Buffalo, the retiring president, emphasized the fact that the New York City zone had absolutely repudiated its agreement of several months before to meet its share of the running expenses. Hays at that time called attention to the fact that the New York one had never taken the trouble to acknowledge a letter or a wire, and as for forwarding their check, such thing had never occurred. The Albany and Buffalo zones, far from being discouraged through the desertion on the part of New York City, proceeded to elect Dillon as state president, even though the two zones did not represent the state as a whole. O'Reilly's letter apparently concedes the fact that Dillon has been regularly elected, and heads the state organization, and should be recognized as such.

The coming conference, which is expected to restore harmony in the ranks of the exhibitors in this state, will be held in either Albany or New York, probably the former in view of the fact that the state headquarters is permanently located in the Mark Strand building in Albany. The conference will take place the latter part of August or the fore part of September.

MACK D. WEINBERGER
Who has resigned as sales manager of B. P. Schulberg Productions.

Schulberg Sales Post Is Vacated By Weinberger

Mack D. Weinberger, one of the best known figures in the sales end of the motion picture industry, it became known this week has resigned as sales manager of B. P. Schulberg Productions. No announcement of Mr. Weinberger's future plans has yet been made though it is known that his action of this week comes as a result of a desire to broaden his field of operations and is in perfect harmony with the Schulberg organization. J. G. Bachmann, in charge of distribution for the latter concern, is enthusiastic regarding the results obtained by Mack Weinberger in securing nation-wide representation for the Schulberg product during the past year.

Previous to his connection with the Schulberg organization Mack Weinberger held many responsible positions in the sales field, principally with national sales organizations and including a number of years as sales director of the D. W. Griffith enterprises. He is known from coast to coast, both by exhibitors and territorial buyers, and in particular has a specialized knowledge of the Eastern field.

In recent weeks there have been rumors at various times that he had signed for important sales posts with two different national organizations and there is a possibility that the resignation announced this week may have some connection with these whisperings.

AUTO KILLS PRITCHARD

Charles C. Pritchard, Pathe News staff cameraman stationed in Chicago, came safely through the dangers attached to his calling in the photographing of important news stories, only to meet death under the wheels of an automobile while crossing the street in front of his home.

Pritchard had recently finished his work at the Scopes trial in Dayton, Tennessee, and was off duty when the accident occurred. The funeral was held in Chicago.

PICTURE CAMERA EXPORTS SHOW GAIN

One hundred and twenty-three motion picture cameras were exported from the United States during the month of June in comparison with 59 for June, 1924. This was shown in preliminary Department of Commerce figures, which further gave the value of these as $29,271 as compared with $12,192 last year.

For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1925, exports of motion picture cameras totalled 1,140 valued at $289,057, while for the fiscal year 1923-24, 1,039 cameras were shipped abroad at a total value of $342.062.

Conn. Loses Million

The reduction in the state admission tax on amusement places in Connecticut caused a drop of nearly a million dollars in revenue from that source during the fiscal year ended June 30, last. The total revenue from amusements, chiefly theatres, was $298,943.

OFFICIALS OF PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

Storey, Scott and Campbell Get Promotions in Pathe Organization

THE continued growth of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the expansion of its business horizon during the past few years are emphasized in an official statement released this week by Elmer Pearson, vice-president and general manager of the company, in which announcement is made of a newly created office in the Pathe system and three important executive promotions.

The past year has witnessed so overwhelming an increase in the duties and responsibilities of Mr. Pearson, due to the remarkable growth of the company's business during this period, that officials of the company decided to create the new post of assistant general manager. To this important post has been appointed John E. Storey, formerly general sales manager. Mr. Storey will be succeeded in the office of general sales manager by Harry Scott, who has been serving as feature sales manager for the past two years. The post of feature sales manager will be filled by "Pat" Campbell, special feature representative. The promotions became effective on Monday, August 3.

To fill the important position of assistant general manager, the Board of Directors and company officials selected the logical man in J. E. Storey. He has been with Pathe over so extended a period of years and has been so closely associated with the firm's personnel and administrative activities that he is admirably qualified to assist Mr. Pearson.

COLUMBIA SALESMAN ROBBED

Milton J. Goldbaum, Southern Illinois salesman for Columbia Pictures Corporation, was held up by two bandits on a road near Harrisburg, Ill., early on July 31. He reported that the highwaymen took two diamond rings valued at $3,000, a suit case containing his clothing, $150 in cash and a Ford sedan belonging to the picture company. The machine was later recovered.

CHANGES IN F. P.-L. MANAGERS

Owing to the request of M. C. Hughes to be relieved of duty as Paramount branch manager at Pittsburgh, on account of illness, there have been several changes made in the exchange personnel by George W. Weeks, general manager of Paramount's department of distribution.

Mr. Hughes is succeeded by J. E. Fontaine, Cleveland branch manager, who in turn is succeeded by E. H. Brauer, branch manager at Columbus. Carl Weeks, salesman in the Columbus exchange, has been promoted to branch manager at Columbus.

Mr. Hughes has been in poor health for nearly a year.

State Rights Sales

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation, announces the completion of arrangements with Edward A. Golden, president of Golden Distributing Corporation, 57 Church street, Boston, Mass., under the terms of which Mr. Golden's organization will market in the New England territory the Twenty-Four First-Run Pictures which make up The Golden Arrow Franchise.

Coming and Going

General Sales Manager James Grainger of the Fox Corporation left this week on an important trip to the Coast.

Colvin Brown has returned to New York after a tour of F. B. O. exchanges.

Richard E. Rowland of First National has gone to the Coast.

Al Boasberg has returned to the F. B. O. headquarters after a western sojourn.

Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Commerford, with their daughter, Muriel, and Mr. and Mrs. William Cadoret sailed for Europe this week.

Alice Lake is in New York from the West.

H. Goerz, manufacturer, has arrived in Manhattan from Germany.

Bruce Johnson, First National's foreign manager, has returned from a visit abroad.

Charlie Chaplin arrived in New York this week to attend the premiere showing of his latest picture.

$4,000,000 Chicago House Underway by B. & K.—L. & T.

PLANS for a $4,000,000 movie theatre at Washington boulevard, Crawford and West End Avenues, Chicago, are just announced by Balaban & Katz. The structure will be the first to be erected by the recently organized company owned by Balaban & Katz and Lubliner & Trinz.

A miniature movie theatre, where children may be left under the care of attendants to view pictures especially selected for them while their parents enjoy the big features upstairs, will be an innovation.

The building will be situated 125 feet east of Crawford avenue and will extend 332 feet north of West End avenue. It will front 165 feet on Washington boulevard. A "jeweled" tower will rise seven stories above the street. In addition to the children's theatre, a completely equipped kindergarten, nursery and playroom will be maintained.

The new house will be in Spanish Renaissance architecture with immense lobbies, carved pillars, mural paintings, highly decorated promenades, lounges, rest rooms and cosmetic parlors finished in the elegance of that period. Orchestra pits and organ consoles on elevators, a gigantic freezing plant and a new form of indirect lighting from hidden coves will be notable items. A stage larger than any now in use in the Balaban & Katz theatres will be installed. Construction will begin this fall.

Buettner Opens Closed House To Aid Fire Sufferers' Fund

Big hearted Louis Buettner of Cohoes, N. Y., as square as a die, became the idol of the hour last week when he donated the entire proceeds of the Majestic Theatre on Wednesday night to the stricken families who have lost everything through a fire that swept over one section of the city a few days ago. While others were passing the hat and seeking contributions from this and that source, Louis Buettner stepped forward with the announcement that he would reopen his theatre, ordinarily closed throughout the summer, and give every cent that came through the ticket window to the fire sufferers.

Maybe the announcement didn't score a hit. Dozens stopped as they left the theatre and personally thanked Mr. Buettner for the opportunity that had been given them to contribute and at the same time enjoy an evening's pleasure. More than one man shoving a bill through the wicket for his seats, told the cashier to keep the change.

It was only last week that Mr. Buettner and his partner, L. J. Shearer, bought the Majestic outright, a house of 1,000 seats which they had been leasing for ten years. As a general thing, Mr. Buettner has been closing the theatre each summer, saying that he is money in, but this year things have been different. Such crowds flocked to the recent Saturday night showing of the fight pictures that Mr. Buettner has decided to run the theatre each Saturday night from now until September, when it will reopen full blast for the fall and winter season.

Of course, if appendicitis really came from the food one ate, something might be said concerning the bride's first efforts. But that theory was long ago dispelled and as a result John Garry, manager of the Empire in Glens Falls, now back home following an operation for appendicitis, can lay the attack to almost anything. Mr. and Mrs. Garry returned only recently from a honeymoon. He was stricken rather suddenly, for at 10 o'clock in the evening he telephoned the amount of the day's receipts to C. H. Buckley in Albany and four hours later was on his way to the hospital.

Remember the days when the words "mopping up" had an altogether different meaning from the present? Yet they fit in pretty well with the business William Smalley did in Cooperstown with "The Ten Commandments," for, as Mr. Smalley says, he literally mopped up the section.

L. L. Elliott of Hudson has a German police dog, who could probably get a job behind the bat with almost any baseball club. Mr. Elliott divides his time between his theatres and his kennels, taking both fun and money out of both. He does his own training just as he does his own buying. One of the dogs has been taught to catch the swiftly pitched ball, while others leap hurdles that would seemingly defy even a deer.

It looks as though some of the wealthy exhibitors around here are to take a flier in Florida land values. W. W. Farley of Albany, who recently sold his holdings in Schenectady and Catskill to Famous Players, and who is generally able to write his check for anything in six figures, is back from Florida and once more away on a ten days' vacation. William Shirley of Schenectady, who recently pocketed a check for something over $100,000 for his holdings in Farash Theatres, Inc., of that city, is also said to be interested in Florida possibilities.

What's doing? was asked Lew Fischer, of Fort Edward, the other day as he strolled along Park Row. "Not a thing to report," replied Mr. Fischer, "other than the price of film is still too high." It is perhaps unnecessary to add that Mr. Fischer booked no pictures during his stay.

Thrills on the screen these days are as nothing to Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Strand interests in Albany and Schenectady, whose car did a flip flop the other day just outside of Albany, while Mr. Hill was doing his level best to avoid a collision. Down the embankment went the Hill machine, turning completely over with father and son inside. The boy managed to climb through a broken window, first yelling to his dad if he had been injured. Mr. Hill scrambled out, uninjured with the exception of a cut in the palm of one hand from broken glass. The pair had been on a fishing trip and one in which the son at times proved a better angler than the father.

Literally as well as figuratively, Tony Veiller of the Lincoln in Troy received a jolt on the jaw the other day. Eight times did the dentist jab his gum with alleged pain-killing dope, after which he scraped the bone and then finished both the operation and Tony by handing over a bill for $25.

Jake Golden of the Griswold in Troy, busy as ever, trotting back and forth from New York or figuring out new schemes to catch the attention of the people in the Collar City, is having his house reseated and newly carpeted. Mr. Golden is going to indulge in the advantages of the Greater Movie Season, but will not start the ball to rolling until August 8, owing to an agreement to start at the same time as the Lincoln and Troy.

"WHO SAID IT'S HOT?"

Clara Horton is reading a summer month issue of the Moving Picture World, but that's the only thing in the picture to show it was taken in July. Miss Horton, who recently completed a part in "The Wheel" for Fox, calls this refuge her "Eskimo bath" and has made it quite a fad in Hollywood. It's a good place to wear summer furs, too, she says.

Scenes from "Love Sick," a two-reel Century Comedy featuring Constance Darling and the Century Follies Girls. Arthur Lake plays opposite Miss Darling. It is a hilarious take-off on "puppy love."

News of the Albany Territory

Bill Benton of Saratoga Springs, mecca of the racing world this month, you have the right idea! With thousands of men and women from the bigger cities in town, you couldn't afford to run any old kind of pictures, simply because that you are affording one of the few means of entertainment during the evenings. Here's the way Mr. Benton will stack up for August: "The Ten Commandments," "Lost World," "Graustark," "Marriage Whirl," etc. No wonder the visitors remark on the Spa's up-to-dateness.

Mrs. A. E. Walton, who runs the Happy Hour in Lake Placid and is entrusted with the bookings for the exclusive Lake Placid Club, has arranged for a presentation of "The Iron Horse" at the club during the latter part of August. Motion pictures are shown at the club under almost ideal conditions and attract the elite of the country.

Well, Meyer Schine, if what we hear along Film Row is so, the World offers its heartiest congratulations to yourself and the bride-to-be. Some of the exchange managers came back during the week and announced that Mr. Schine would next month forsake the ranks of bachelorhood, and in announcing the fact passed around the cigars.

From now on, if Abe Stone worries about business, and it is a question whether or not he does, for he always has a smile, the worry will center around but one theatre, for Mr. Stone has given up his lease of the Delaware in Albany and is confining his entire efforts to the Arbor Hill Theatre.

Film Row had a new visitor during the past week. George Cohen, with theatres in Newburgh and Poughkeepsie, and who ordinarily books out of the New York City exchanges, showed up for a nice chat as well as a little luncheon with his old friend, Charlie Walder, who handles the Fox product in Albany.

Oscar Perrin isn't going to take any vacation this summer, declaring that he has always been more tired when he gets back from a vacation than when he started. Of course the mere fact that Mr. Perrin is at the present time looking after three theatres, not forgetting extensive improvements under way at the Leland in Albany, may have something to do with it. At any rate, the Leland blossomed forth last week with a brand new carpet that was so thick it was almost luscious.

The Rose in Troy, ordinarily a 10-cent second or third run house, bloomed forth last week with the first run in Troy for the Gibbons-Tunney fight pictures, and charging 10 cents at that! It goes without saying that the house was packed from top to bottom with a whole lot of people who read the newspaper advertisements journeying in from Green Island and Cohoes. The Rose is giving away candy on Friday nights and advertising its amateur nights fully as large as the biggest pictures shown.

The beads of perspiration were certainly standing out on Ben Stern last Sunday morning as he endeavored to handle the crowds at the Lincoln in Troy, while Walter Roberts was in much the same shape at the Troy Theatre with "The Desert Flower" playing to the best Sunday night thus far this summer. Mr. Roberts took the next night off and had his fun at the ringside, where he spends each Monday night.

Fred Hathaway, who is connected with the Robbins houses in Utica, has a little extra vacation money this summer, amounting to $25, which came his way as an additional prize from Universal for extra work done on the third and fourth episodes of the "Great Circus Mystery."

When the American in Troy reopens it will try out the drawing power of a serial, something rather new for a Strand house in this part of the state. "Play Ball," the Pathe serial, was booked during the past week and will be shown during August.

Nate Robbins of Utica is grinning from ear to ear these days, having been named as one of the chief factotums of the New York Theatrical Enterprises, which, in other words, is the Famous Players, as they have taken over the Robbins group of houses.

These rainy Sundays are certainly tough on Julius Boxhorn of the Mark Strand in Albany. When Mr. Boxhorn was living in New York City the hardest day of the week was Sunday, and as for a little trip out into the country, it couldn't be thought of. After coming to Albany, Mr. Boxhorn purchased a Ford, and on a Sunday—providing it doesn't rain—he journeys out to some one of the historic spots and spends a day communing with nature.

Ormond Roberts of the Hudson Theatre in Albany, together with Mr. Hill and Mr. Buettner, served at a special meeting of the Arbitration Board during the past week when several matters were cleaned up that had been hanging fire for some little time past. It was Mr. Roberts' first appearance on the board.

Harry Lux is coming down from Utica for the annual outing of the Albany Film Board of Trade on September 14, a date which incidentally means a legal holiday being declared along Film Row. He will find many other fellow exhibitors present, for the tickets are going like wild fire. The exchange managers, salesmen, Albany Zone committee and Film Board of Trade have them for sale. 'Nuff said.

Osmyn Brownell of Carthage, formerly connected with the Colligan Theatre and later the Hippodrome and Strand theatres in that village, has just received word that he will be accepted as a student at the Paramount Theatre Managers Training School, and will leave for the Big Town on August 14.

Buffalo, N. Y.

An Erie, Pa., paper tells the world that George E. Eichenlaub of that city has been selected to draw plans for a proposed theatre in Buffalo, but does not give the name of the house or its site. The story says: "It is reported in certain quarters that the new theatre may be the central hub of a new chain of theatres in western New York and Pennsylvania operated by a new organization functioning as a separate unit from the older groups, with an independent policy of booking feature films and vaudeville attractions."

Union stage hands have asked for a wage boost in Buffalo. Increases of $7, $12 and $22 a week are fixed for three classes of stage help. The electrical and property departments are to be independent of the regular stage crew. In Syracuse union projectionists have asked for an increase from $44 to $49 and $47 to $52 weekly. It is reported that exhibitors will offer a $2.50 boost as a compromise.

"Nothing that we have heard about," was the way Walter Hays, vice-president of the Mark-Strand interests, disposed of the story in a theatrical weekly that the Fox Film Company was dickering for the Mark-Strand chain of houses in New York State.

Keith's Theatre in Syracuse has definitely embarked upon a new combination policy and it is rumored that the Temple, the Keith house in Rochester, may follow suit.

Manager George T. Cruzen of the new Palace Theatre, Lockport, N. Y., put over a good stunt when he presented J. E. Pool, a native of the Lock City, in the exact costume used during the making of "The Lucky Devil."

William A. Dillon of Ithaca, N. Y., president of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc., is planning with B. R. MacMillan of the staff of the Cornell Medical College to make a moving picture of Congressman Carence MacGregor, chairman of the Committee on Accounts of the 68th Congress, who is now at Cornell taking a summer course in economics. Mr. MacGregor is a real friend of the exhibitors, he having been prominent in aiding the elimination of the admission tax. Mr. MacGregor's home is in Buffalo.

Lewis Stone, famous screen star (seated), has affixed his signature to a contract with First National Pictures for a term of years. Al Rockett, representing First National, at left, and Freddie Fralick, Stone's business manager, at right.

Contributions to this department are solicited from all exhibitors.

Detroit

George E. Guise, for seven years general manager of the Charles H. Miles theatres in Detroit, has resigned, effective immediately. The announcement followed Miles' announcement that he planned to immediately erect six large theatres in various sections of the city, including one in the downtown section.

Mayor Bert Silver of Greenville, one of the oldest exhibitors in Michigan, paid Detroit a visit last week. This was his second visit to the Motor City in ten years.

The opening date of the new Roosevelt Theatre has been set for August 17. This is a new combination vaudeville and picture theatre located at Gratiot and May avenues. It will be run in connection with the Cinderella and De Luxe by George W. Sampson.

The front of the Imperial Theatre, 7030 Michigan avenue, was destroyed early one morning last week by a bomb which police say had been "planted" in the ticket office. Besides damaging the theatre, the explosion broke windows in nearby stores and homes. The management can offer no reason for the outrage.

The Strand Theatre, owned by E. S. Brewer at Owosso, has passed into the hands of Angell and Codd, who operate houses in Niles, Adrian and Owosso.

Harold Shuckert, who operates a chain of theatres in the Thumb district, is up and around after a serious automobile accident that fractured his ankle and badly bruised his head.

Massachusetts

Sunday film shows at Ware is the subject of a lively controversy and the matter probably will be put up to the voters for a decision.

Herbert W. Johnson, theatrical manager of Boston, and Elizabeth M. Marliavo, also of Boston, have taken out marriage intentions.

A. T. Proctor of Springfield is visiting his brother, F. F. Proctor, head of the Proctor Theatres, in New York City.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Cook of Boston are the parents of a daughter, born July 23. Mr. Cook is manager of the Hollis Theatre.

"Don Q" will open the Colonial Theatre in Boston on August 17.

Canada

During Stampede Week at Calgary, Alberta, Manager John Hazza of the Capitol Theatre gained considerable notice for the theatre by transforming the front into a "Bronco Filling Station." This consisted of an elaborate false front representing an old-time western hostelry with hitching rail, porch and other details. Facilities were provided for the feeding of horses at the hitching post, thus carrying out the idea of a bronco feeding place, and various typical western outfits of cowboys and Indians set up their camps temporarily in front of the theatre.

It was here that Earl Haig, who was a visitor in Calgary during the Stampede, donned his new regalia as a Sarcee Indian chief and partook of flapjacks on horseback, the flapjacks being served at the time by the ranchers from Willow Creek, who had camped outside of the Capitol. Pictures were taken of Earl Haig as he enjoyed the impromptu breakfast on his horse in front of the Capitol's front and these were sold far and near as souvenir postcards of the Calgary celebration. The theatre front was also featured in a special edition of a local newspaper.

The unusual news comes from Manager Pete Egan of the Strand Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, that one of his ushers, Fred Tickell, has passed with high honors in the vocal examinations at the Toronto University of Music. Arrangements are being made for "personal appearances" of the usher in singing features at the Strand.

J. M. Franklin, manager of the B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, secured personal distinction recently in connection with a movement in Scotland to erect a national memorial to Erskine Nicol, famous Scotch artist. Cabled and other reports mentioned some of the outstanding paintings of the artist, who has now been dead some years, and reference was made to the fact that the only known original Nicol painting in Canada was owned by Mr. Franklin of Ottawa.

Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto, has secured the Russell Theatre at Ottawa, Ontario, under a special arrangement, whereby the company will book certain attractions into the Ottawa house regularly throughout the season. Little has been done with the Russell Theatre for several years past, but Famous Players will now undoubtedly give the house a new lease of life.

H. M. Thomas of Winnipeg, Manitoba, western general manager for Famous Players Canadian Corporation, has returned from a two weeks' visit to New York City where he visited leading theatres and various exchanges in search of ideas. On his return to Winnipeg he supervised the finishing touches to the Metropolitan Theatre which is reopening August 3.

When the war memorial in St. John, N. B., was unveiled a few days ago, Manager W. H. Golding of the Imperial Theatre conducted a ceremonial in the theatre which coincided with the formal ceremony at the park where the statue was being unveiled. At a signal, the performance at the Imperial was stopped, the orchestra rose to their feet and the "Last Post" was sounded simultaneously with the sounding of this call at the park, followed by the playing of the National Anthem in the theatre, the audience remaining standing. The incident was commented upon as a mark of community spirit on the part of the manager.

Arkansas

Eli Whitney Collins and W. L. Mack will commence the construction of a new $75,000 theatre at Jonesboro, Ark., in the near future. It will be named the Strand.

D. W. Strong will erect a new $10,000 theatre building at Pine Bluff, Ark., in the near future.

Patsy Ruth Miller, featured in "Rose of the World," by Kathleen Norris, a Warner Brothers picture. Rockcliffe Fellowes plays with Miss Miller.

Oklahoma

Tom H. Roland, the popular manager of the Empress Theatre at Oklahoma City, Okla., is being extensively talked of for nomination and election as mayor of Oklahoma City at the next election, and afterwards as governor of the state. Tom Boland is a go-getter and a winner in all of his undertakings and has never been beaten for anything that he went after. If he can be induced to run he will be a most formidable candidate.

John and Pete Sinolpulo are fast making their Orpheum Theatre at Oklahoma City, one of the best vaudeville and first-run picture houses in the Southwest, as nothing but first-class attractions and first-run pictures are booked and nightly there are capacity houses.

Incorporation: Ritz Theatre, Inc., Tulsa, Okla., capital stock $250,000; incorporators Ralph Talbot, Harry Castle and Willah Wave Talbot.

Connecticut

Well, well, if we haven't gone and discovered another lady exhibitor in New England. There's plenty of 'em, a'right, but they're too modest to let anyone know about it. So once in a while we just sort of stumble on them, accidental like. Miss Julia Smith is manager of the Strand Theatre in Waterbury, Conn., an up-and-coming picture house, conducted in such a way as to give ample evidence that Manageress Smith knows the business as well as knowing how to get it, too.

Morris Rosenthal, manager of Poli's Majestic Theatre in Bridgeport, has been vacationing at Myrtle Beach. Mrs. Rosenthal plans to pass the remainder of the summer there.

Alfred Straus is reported to have taken an option on the lease of the proposed half-million dollar theatre to be erected in Derby. Mr. Straus conducts a number of theatres in Southern Connecticut. The plans for the new playhouse now are being revised, but it is expected actual construction work will be started during this month.

Chicago

Another community theatre is nearing completion in Chicago and will be ready for opening in September, according to W. T. McCarthy, president of the M. and H. Theatres Corporation, which is building it at 5823 West Division street on the far West Side of the city. The new house will be known as the Ambassador and will seat 2,500, with 1,800 on the main floor and 700 in the balcony. It will combine a Spanish and Italian scheme of architecture and have a large stage with ample orchestra room for a symphony organization under a well known leader.

The M. and H. Theatres Corporation was originally organized with a capital stock of $500,000 and it is reported to have about 2,500 stockholders. Last week the company was given permission by the Secretary of State to increase the capital stock to $1,000,000. The officers are W. T. McCarthy, president; George Drallmeier, secretary, and Joseph Wassell of the North Austin Trust Company, treasurer.

Norman E. Field, general manager of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, celebrated his fifty-first birthday and twenty-fifth year with the circuit last week with a dinner for five of his fellow workers. Will Rosenblum, manager of the Rialto, for twenty-three years in the service of the organization; George Moore, manager of the Orpheum, twenty-two years with the circuit; John G. Burch, with eighteen years to his credit;; Ralph T. Kettering, publicity manager fifteen years, and Sigmund Faller, the general auditor, headed the gang with twenty-six to his credit, making a total of 129 years for the half dozen veterans in the service of the organization.

Claude D. Raber, George C. Bunge and Karl Gruenwald have organized the Broadway Film Laboratories with headquarters at 6227 Broadway. The new organization has a capital of $225,000 for the production and manufacture of moving pictures, according to the records.

Charles Pyle will open his new theatre at Danville, Ill., on September 7. He recently added the Victory at Kokomo to his circuit and soon will take on other houses.

W. H. Heasman of the Colonial at Danville, Ill., has returned from a sojourn on the West Coast and Ted Schlanger of the Gregory theatres is down Florida way hobnobbing with the real estate millionaires.

The many friends of Ralph Kettering of Jones, Linick & Schaefer will be surprised to hear that he intends to leave publicity work for the firm with which he has been connected for seventeen years and take up other work. During the past week he was at Peoria, Ill., helping the boys there get ready for Movie Week.

The Clark Theatre on North Clark street, under the management of Elmer Rutishauser, has been closed for a few weeks while being overhauled and redecorated. A new organ will be installed.

Lou Houseman, manager of the Adelphi, is laid up with a badly sprained ankle.

Marcus Heiman, president of the Orpheum Circuit, denies the rumor that the company will increase the dividend of the common stock. Market manipulators have been trying to boost the price of the stock, and Heiman said the circuit is not involved in any merger or consolidation that might be used for that basis by the stock promoters.

Charles Harned, who managed the Vadakin Theatre at Bethany, Ill., will open another picture theatre in the Bishert building in that town and expects to have it ready in the early fall.

The policy of the Randolph Theatre under Manager Harris has been changed. Prices have been reduced to 35 cents and the program pictures have been changed to conform with the new house policy.

Irene Rich, Warner Bros. star, photographed at her Beverly Hills home with her blue ribbon wolfhounds.

St. Louis

The Palace Theatre, Creal Springs, Ill., has been purchased by M. Whitehead. W. P. Walker is the former owner. Walker has taken over the house at Vienna, Ill.

Joe Desberger is installing a Typhoon cooling system in his Washington Square Theatre, Quincy, Ill.

S. E. Pertle plans to open his new house at Bushnell, Ill., soon.

"The Iron Horse" will be the opening vehicle of Dominic Fresena's Capitol Theatre, Taylorville, Ill.

Ferris Brothers are again in charge of the theatre at Lovington, Ill.

The Dixie, Wynne, Ark., is under the management of John Collins. He also has the Majestic, Paragould, Ark.

Visitors of the week included: Oscar Wesley, Gillespie; Sam Taylor, O'Fallon, Ill.; C. W. Mourning, Jerseyville, and Chester Gruber, Collinsville, Ill.

CLARA BOW

plays the most colorful role of her career as the Apache girl in "Parisian Love," a Preferred Picture presented by B. P. Schulberg.

Pittsburgh

Plans for the erection of a new picture theatre in the downtown section of New Kensington have been announced by Samuel Haimovitz, general manager of the Columbus Amusement Company. The new theatre will be located on Fifth avenue above Tenth street, and work will be started within a few days. The house will have a frontage of twenty-five feet in Fifth avenue, will extend back a width of 25 or 40 feet, where it will widen out to the full width of the building or 50 feet. The main room of the new theatre will be 120x50, with 40 feet for a foyer and lobby. Plans call for a capacity of 650, with a possible increase to 1,500 as soon as existing leases in parts of the building expire. The approximate cost of the new theatre will be $35,000 at present. Haimovitz also announced the suspension of the State Theatre, also operated by the same company, on September 1, the lease having been transferred the past week.

Bart Dattola has his plans completed for a beautiful new picture theatre to be situated on the site of his present Alhambra Theatre, close to the proposed new theatre to be erected by the Columbus Amusement Company. Mr. Dattola's new house will occupy, besides his present site, Forty-five feet additional frontage adjacent to the present theatre building on Fifth avenue. The frontage will be seventy feet and the depth 120 feet. It is estimated that the new house will cost a quarter of a million dollars to build, and will seat 1,600. Construction will begin in a few months when leases expire.

Manager Gerald Gallagher of the Cameo in downtown Pittsburgh announces that the house will be closed during August 17 to 21, inclusive, during which time a triple shift of workmen will make every minute count in completely transforming the decorative scheme of the house both inside and out. Mr. Gallagher promises many interesting changes and wants the exhibitors to come in and look the house over when the alterations are completed. Several other changes will be noted at the Cameo. The prices will be raised to 40 cents instead of 30 cents as at present. An orchestra, under the direction of John M. Boyd, will furnish the music. Young men will act as ushers, instead of the young ladies who are now doing the work. The Cameo will play the Universal-Jewels, with a complete change of bill each Saturday.

F. L. Watson and W. D. Ray, newcomers to the picture theatre business, have taken over John Hando's Garfield Theatre at 5139 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, the new owners having taken charge on July 25. Mr. Hando contemplates a visit to his old home in Austria before his return here to look for another theatre.

N. Rosen of the Model Theatre, Butler street, Pittsburgh, has his own male quartette now, the latest member having been born on July 18. Singing performances are given daily at Mr. and Mrs. Rosen's home on Morningside avenue, and as mother and son are doing fine the World extends its best wishes.

Recent exhibitor visitors to Film Row included: C. B. Pascoe, Somerset; Mr. Murray, Cambridge Springs; the Figard Brothers, G. L. and W. R., of Six Mile Run; William Lamproplos, Latrobe; B. E. Cupler and Nat Walken, Washington.

Samuel Haimovitz, president and general manager of the Columbus Amusement Company, New Kensington, has returned to his duties after a week's business trip to New York City.

Johnny Harris, Jr., took care of things at the Majestic Theatre, Butler, the past few days, while the resident manager, M. M. Wear, was recovering at his home in Charleston, W. Va., from a minor operation on his leg.

Seattle Exhibitor News

Frank Edwards has recently put into effect a 15-cent policy in his Winter Garden Theatre. This is the first time prices have been over 10 cents since Mr. Edwards took over the house several years ago. He has made a signal success of his undertaking and reports that the new policy is working out splendidly.

Film Row, film theatres and film folk of Seattle and the surrounding territory all had their part in the colorful Knights Templar conclave in Seattle this week. Noticed in the line of march in their various commanderies during the big parade were Frank Graham of Centralia, Mr. McMillan of Palouse, Clarence Farrell of Ellensburg and Ray Grombacher of Spokane. There were probably others. If we have overlooked any names it is only because the entire parade was such a gorgeous pageant that it was virtually impossible to see everybody!

John Hamrick, owner of Blue Mouse theatres in Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, is an ardent fisherman. He returned from a week-end trip with fifty-eight fine trout, caught by himself and Mrs. Hamrick, who also is an adept at the sport. A feast was declared and the entire Seattle staff dined on speckled beauties on Monday. John refuses to tell us where he goes. He says it is a hundred miles away. We don't mind his keeping the secret, but we're awfully fond of trout, too!

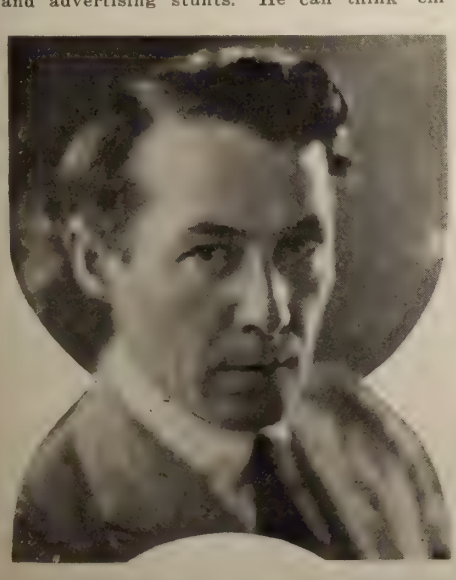
Hal Daigler, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Minneapolis, is spending his vacation in Seattle with Mrs. Daigler. Hal has a host of friends in Seattle, where he was prominent for a number of years as manager of several leading houses.

G. E. Dickinson of the Ellensburg Theatre, Ellensburg, Wash., was in Seattle this week lining up new product.

Ed Dolan of Aberdeen and Hoquiam was also in, and we met Adrian Cormier of the Twin City Amusement Company (Centralia and Chehalis). We presume all the rest of the boys were in during this big week, and we hope they all enjoyed the parade.

Ned Edris, manager of the Tacoma Blue Mouse Theatre, entertained all the city's orphans at a huge matinee party to see "The Silent Pal." He had the co-operation of newspapers and automobile companies. The youngsters were given souvenirs and eats and the party was a huge success.

Herbert Sobottka, manager of the Colonial, Tacoma, Wash., is a hound for exploitation and advertising stunts. He can think 'em up faster than he can use them. Recently when the city opened some new water mains, polluting the entire water supply with a strong creosote taste, Sobottka hastened to arrange with a local spring water company for an ample supply of pure, fresh water. He then placed a sign in his lobby, "Puritas water free inside," and ran in his ads the announcement that the Colonial was the only theatre in town "serving drinks" of pure fresh water in its foyer. Twenty gallons were consumed the first day, proving that this one stunt alone was worth the effort.



Henry B. Walthall, one of the splendid players featured in "On the Threshold," a Producers Distributing Corporation release.

A recent press announcement in commenting on the new 1,800-seat theatre costing $500,000 to be erected in the Broadway district by Jensen & Von Herberg states that this company plans the erection of a series of five elaborate residential section theatres, of which the new Broadway is to be the first. The house is to occupy the entire block on the west side of Broadway between Mercer and Republican streets. It is to be of Spanish design, with special attention paid to courts, sunken gardens, rare shrubbery and enclosed automobile courts. The house will probably handle first runs, being operated along the lines of Grauman's Egyptian.

Kansas City

The comedy in the Prospect Theatre, a suburban house of Kansas City owned by Jay Means, flickered out the other night and amused men, women and children filed out. A few doors away the crowd stopped. A government raid on a drug store was in full progress. Even as in the comedy, coatless men with revolvers strapped around them hurried in and out of the store. The next day when Mr. Means went down to an exchange to see about his films for the night, he jokingly was told that his rate would have to be doubled in view of the fact that the exchange manager had passed by and seen him "standing them up."

Work was begun last week on a new picture theatre at the southeast corner of Twelfth street and College avenue, Kansas City, for George A. Maloney and H. H. Barrett, who have leased the building for five years from Gary M. Baltis. Mr. Barrett also operates the Colonial at Thirty-ninth street and Woodland avenue. Fireproof, the new theatre will be of Spanish design with exterior finish of two-tone tan brick and tile roof. A tower will rise at either front corner. The theatre will be 60 by 115 feet. The opening is expected to be about October 1, with a name yet to be selected for the house. Interior features will include a lobby, 44 by 10 feet, a balcony capable of seating 350 persons, a blower fan cooling system and stage, with space at one side of the stage for an orchestra. The two exhibitors will pay an annual rental of $3,900 for the theatre. The house will cost $30,000 and seat 1,100.

Charles Raymond, new manager of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, recently taken over by Paramount, lost no time in slipping in a boost for Greater Movie Season when he was called upon to speak before the Advertising Club of Kansas City at a luncheon at the Hotel Baltimore the other day. Entertainers from the Mainstreet Theatre also were on the program and a film was made of the luncheon. The importance of motion pictures in civic life and the future outlook of the screen were analyzed by Mr. Raymond.

Earl H. Roraback, manager of the World-in-Motion Theatre, Kansas City, last week leased the Grand Theatre, formerly a legitimate house. The house, which seats about 2,000, having three balconies, will be reopened soon as a picture and vaudeville theatre.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market last week were: F. G. Weary, Farris Theatre, Richmond, Mo.; Laurence Brenninger, Cozy and Crystal, Topeka, Kans.; J. R. Burford, New Burford, Arkansas City, Kans.; Charles Sears, Sears Circuit, Nevada, Mo.; F. W. Meade, Meade Theatre, Kingham, Kans.; Blaine Cook, Perkins Theatre, Holton, Kans.; Ed Peskey, Penn Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kans.

NEIL HAMILTON

This sterling actor is supporting Betty Bronson in "The Golden Princess," which Clarence Badger is producing for Paramount.

Long has the name of the Star Theatre been familiar with theatre patrons of Ottawa, Kans., but it soon will be wiped out, the name of the theatre, which is owned by C. A. Whitney, to be changed to the Royal. The theatre is being remodeled.

"Well, well, this is not so hard to take after all," mused Theodore P. Davis of the Liberty Theatre, Parsons, Kans., as he received $50 as second prize for the best exploitation of Universal serials in the entire country.

Texas

Jeff Custer will open his new theatre at Slaton, Texas, in the near future. It will seat about 700.

A. Martini has opened his rebuilt Dixie Theatre at Galveston, Texas. The house is strictly fireproof.

Charles Lagadinos has taken over the Joyland Theatre at Stamford, Texas.

Abe Silverberg has purchased the Folly Theatre at Houston, Texas.

T. H. Hodge will erect a new theatre building at Winters, Texas, soon.

P. A. Preddy is erecting a new theatre building at Robstown, Texas.

Joseph Stanzel has let a contract to remodel his Opera House at Hallettsville, Texas.

Senter & Senter will erect a new theatre in the oil fields near Holliday, Texas, in the near future.

Fire did $1,500 damage to the Mission Theatre at Dalhart, Texas, last week.

Omaha

A. H. Blank, big theatre operator of Omaha and Des Moines, announced in Omaha a few days ago that he plans to build a big picture theatre in Paris soon. He is working out the plans now for a big new theatre at Twentieth and Farnam streets in Omaha, and immediately when that is well under way he expects to begin building in Paris.

Associated Exhibitors

RACING LUCK. (5 reels). Star, Monty Blue. This one surely got the laughs and many patrons stopped to tell how good it was. Subtitles were especially good, and the explosions of mirth when Monty took his first driving lesson were reminiscent of a July 4th celebration. Step on the advertising, if you buy this, and you'll have no cause for regret. Tone okay. General appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

RACING LUCK. (5 reels). Star, Monty Banks. A fast moving comedy that pleased the majority. Laughs were plentiful throughout the picture, which does not have a dull moment. Helen Ferguson is very satisfactory as the sweetheart and is easy on the eyes. The kids ate this one up, and the grownups were as pleased in a less demonstrative way. It is good exercise for the children's lungs if that sort of applause is allowed. Moral tone good. Sunday yes, special no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

F. B. O.

ALIMONY. (7 reels). Star cast. People thought it fair and if it hadn't been for hot spell might have done some business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5,291 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A knockout western. Not quite as good as "That Devil Quemado," but all right. Thomson makes good with us. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

BREED OF THE BORDER. (4,920 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Plenty of action, but no story. Failed to catch the thread. Tone, Fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

BY DIVINE RIGHT. Star cast. This was too stilted and sugary sweet to please. People walked out on it and the result was loss. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

CHEAP KISSES. (6,438 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. A good program but named badly for a drawing card. "Cheap Kisses" doesn't mean anything to the passerby, and the stars as yet haven't attained much individual draft. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. This one was a dandy. Lots of action all the way through and that is what my people want. We played this to a packed house on the hottest day this year. That's a test for any picture. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday. No as special. Draw merchants and farmers, town 400. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

GALLOPING VENGEANCE. Star, Bob Custer. An excellent western program offering that went over with a bang. Patrons even complimented us as they passed out and asked when we were going to show Bob again. The man who played the villain in this feature assisted greatly in putting this picture over as he was "some" villain and his every appearance caused the audience to shudder. Moral tone somewhat rough. Audience appeal—strong wherever westerns are liked. Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HUMAN TORNADO. (4,472 feet). Star, Yakima Canutt. Very poor western and this boy is starting to fall back into the ham-and-egg class here. Canutt used to be a drawing card here but he will have to do better and if he is champion cowboy of the world patrons want to see some good broncho riding as he certainly can't act. Tone good. Appeal none here. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and railroaders, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

JIMMIE'S MILLIONS. (5,167 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Very good program offering in six reels that would have pleased much better with one reel less in the production. A somewhat loosely put together story but Dick's presence saved the day. Fair tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LILIES OF THE STREETS. (7,216 feet). Star, Johnny Walker. Here is a real picture and one that will go over; well directed, and the acting is all that could be asked. Boost this picture to the limit, as people all like this class of picture. Good tone, excellent appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farmers and railroaders, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

LULLABY. (7,179 feet). Star, Jane Novak. People here told me this picture was a wonder and it pleased the majority very well. Owing to very hot weather the result at the box office was unsatisfactory. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MAILMAN. (8,475 feet). Star cast. This picture pleased a hundred per cent. Wonderful scenes showing the U. S. Navy in action. Play this by all means. Excellent tone. Yes Sunday and special. Draw average Americans. R. V. Chapman, Belvedere Theatre, Grove Hill, Alabama.

MASK OF LOPEZ. (4,900 feet). Good Saturday night picture. The kids eat the Thomsons up. Film was cut up, rainy and jumpy. Tone O. K. Appeal seventy-five per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

RANGE TERROR. (4,738 feet). Star, Bob Custer. The best Custer today and a nice western picture that pleased our western fans. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

SMOOTH AS SATIN. (6,043 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. A good crook story. I consider this the best of Miss Brent's starring vehicles for F. B. O. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Questioned for Sunday. No as special. Draw better class, town 5,333. Admission 10-30. C. W. Davis, Broadway Theatre (500 seats), Reidsville, North Carolina.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,915 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Did a fair business and was generally liked. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WHITE FANG. (5,800 feet). Star, Strongheart (dog). Just a program picture, very badly directed, and just when you expect the dog to do something, the scene changes. The fact that this is a Strongheart picture will put it over but don't promise much because it is not there. Good tone, fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and railroaders, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

ON TIME. (6,030 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Went over fairly well. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star, George Billings. A wonderful production that should be seen by every American! While a historical subject, it was so cleverly directed that it held the interest of the audience from start to finish and Billings' characterization of the martyr President was absolutely perfect. There is only one fault with the picture; the photography was poor in many places. Excellent tone, very strong appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission on specials 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. The greatest picture we have ever shown. Pleased everybody, old and young. In spite of a carnival and extreme hot weather, we showed to three good houses. We could not say too much for this one. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, extra good. Farming class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Goodrich Brothers, Strand Theatre (225 seats), Callao, Missouri.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star cast. This story deals with the ever-present problem of American home life, the dangerous age when romance leaves the heart of the husband and wife and they seek other fields but, of course, it all ends well and they see the error of their ways and live happy ever afterward. A good cast with Lewis P. Stone and Cleo Madison in the leads. A worth while picture and bound to please. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

MAKING OF O'MALLEY. Star, Milton Sills. A mighty fine production that pleased immensely and drew fine the second night. Title seemed to be attractive and Sills proved a drawing card for the first time. Step on this and you need not worry about it not pleasing. Joe Hewitt, The Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

SELF MADE FAILURE. (8 reels). The tragedy made you laugh and the comedy made you want to cry. Ben Alexander good. Hamilton rotten. Tone O. K. Appeal hard

Constance Talmadge and Ronald Colman in the coming First National picture, "Her Sister From Paris."

Universal

BROADWAY OR BUST. (5,272 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Fair program picture that pleased the majority but business was below the average. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

DRIFTING. (7,334 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Had several fair comments on this picture and it went over passably. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

EXCITEMENT. (4,912 feet). Star cast. Not considered much of a production here and it flopped badly. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FOOL'S HIGHWAY. (6,800 feet). Star cast. This was considered a good picture ture and it went over passably. City of 110,-Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FORTY HORSE HAWKINS. (5,148 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Even Hoot couldn't entice them in with the thermometer around one hundred. A fair program picture, City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN. (7,400 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. The best picture Reginald Denny ever made and he is on his way to the front. Tone good. Very good appeal. Good for Sunday. Yes as special. Draw neighborhood class, city 325,000. Admission 10-20. L. R. Markum, Dream Theatre (500 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

LADY OF QUALITY. (8,640 feet). Star cast. Was considered a good picture and if it hadn't been for hot spell might have done some business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

LAW FORBIDS. (6,262 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. Did a very nice business. Not a big picture by any means, but seemed to please the majority. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

RIDE FOR YOUR LIFE. (5,510 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Nothing to rave over but Gibson just managed to pull through. City of 110,000. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

RIDIN' PRETTY. Star, William Desmond. A piece of cheese. Failed to please the mere few patrons fooled in on it. Tone, questionable. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, none. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

SADDLE HAWK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Good name, but can't say picture is unusual. Just an ordinary western. Hoot is okay for Saturday with the country folks. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

SMOULDERING FIRES. Star, Pauline Frederick. This one is a peach. Pauline is excellent in this one and so are Laura La Plante and Malcolm MacGregor. A good story with an interest that lasts to the end. Never had a kick and got lots of compliments. Good tone. A hundred per cent. appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw merchants and farmers, town 400. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

TAMING OF THE WEST. Star, Hoot Gibson. This is one of Hoot's best, and that's saying a lot. He is irrepressible, and in a class by himself. The fans are for him, and it would be hard to get a better Saturday picture. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

WESTERN WALLOP. Star, Jack Hoxie. Just another western that pleased a Saturday attendance. Print good. Tone O. K. Good appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WHITE TIGER. (7,117 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Was considered a very good picture by the majority, and despite very hot weather went over fairly well. City of 110,-000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Vitagraph

BAREE SON OF KAZAN. (6,800 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. This is a picture that should be boosted to the skies. Pleased a good patronage. Would like at least one a week similar. Tone, extra good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,-000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

CAPTAIN BLOOD. (10,680 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. The majority was enthusiastic about this picture and a number of people were anxious to tell us how much they enjoyed it. Despite very hot weather it did a nice business. City 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FEARBOUND. Star cast. Considered a very good picture here, and did a fair business. City 110,000. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FLOWER OF THE NORTH. Stars, Henry B. Walthall, Pauline Starke. This is a very good picture and appeals to any audience who want to get away from that sex stuff. I had several compliments on this one. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Draw town and country class, town 400. Admission 10-25, 15-35. A. H. Higley, Rushmore Theatre (250 seats), Rushmore, Minnesota.

GREATER THAN MARRIAGE. Star, Lou Tellegen. A splendid production. Well done and pleased. Good patronage. Tone, extra good. Sunday, yes. Special, questionable. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

SCHOOL FOR WIVES. Star, Conway Tearle. As usual, a very good picture from Vitagraph. Star and supporting cast very good. Print new. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Warner Brothers

CONDUCTOR 1492. (6,500 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. Very good comedy, suitable any day, any audience; but print was in such bad shape that they did not know what half of it was about. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. B. Jaffe, Norwood Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama.

FIND YOUR MAN. (7,300 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). Fair picture that did not compare favorably with or please like the old Strongheart pictures did. Tone O. K. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

ON THIN ICE. Stars, Tom Moore, Edith Roberts. Fair entertainment. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

There are a lot of theatres running so close to release date that they argue "The old picture reports don't do me any good—why bother to send in tips?"

Boys—don't feel that way!

Figure it that a few minutes a week on your part will help thousands of exhibitors.

For the sake of the game—
SHOOT IN THE TIPS!

Comedies

AMATEUR DETECTIVE. (Fox). Star, Earle Fox. The last of the Van Bibber series. This was far inferior to the others. Of the entire series of eight the first and the last ones were not much, but the other six were some of the BEST short subjects we have ever played. Of the entire series, "The Spanish Romeo" was a hundred per cent. perfect and we hope that the next series will be as full of pep as this one was. The moral tone was O. K. and the audience appeal for the entire series was strong. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

CAVE INN SHEIK. (F. B. O.). Star, Jimmie Aubrey. This was not up to Aubrey standard but it went over. Print good. Fair appeal. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

DESERT BLUES. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. A good one reel comedy that pleased all who saw it. Some very comical incidents in this little subject. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw general class, town about a thousand. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HOLD TIGHT. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. The first part of this comedy hasn't got a laugh in it but the last part makes up for the first. Draw merchants and farmers, town 400. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

KID DAYS. (Universal-Snooky). Very good one reel comedy. I think the animal comedians are all good. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw small town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. Henry D. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

LOVE GOOFY. (Educational). Star, Jimmie Adams. Just a fair comedy, pleasing to the majority. Draw general class, town about a thousand. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

ONE OL' CAT. (Educational-cartoon). An animated cartoon subject that pleased a hundred per cent. This is a novelty that can be added to any program and will create much favorable talk. Fine tone, strong appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw general class, town about a thousand. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

RED PEPPER. (Educational). Star, Al St.

John. Good comedy with some wonderful trick bicycle riding by Al. Plot thin, as in nearly all comedies, and the laughter was provoked by the antics of the star. Good tone, fair appeal, yes for Sunday. Draw general class, town about a thousand. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Serials

RIDDLE RIDER. (Universal). Star, William Desmond. I just started this serial and it went good the first night. It is full of action and mystery and that's what we want in serials. Draw farmers and merchants, town 400. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES. (Pathe). The best cartoon on the market. Always good. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw better class, town 5,333. Admission 10-30. C. W. Davis, Broadway Theatre (500 seats), Reidsville, North Carolina.

EMPTY STALL. (Universal-Fast Steppers). Star, Billy Sullivan. This is a good short subject. Just started using these shorts and they're all right. They sure help. Draw merchants and farmers, town 400. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

FOX NEWS. A very good News, with good photography. C. W. Davis, Broadway Theatre (500 seats), Reidsville, North Carolina.

GO-GETTERS. (F. B. O.). Star, Alberta Vaughn. Not as good as "Fighting Blood." These are too draggy, and all about alike. Good tone, yes for Sunday. Draw farmers and railroaders, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

NEPTUNE'S NIECES. (Pathe-Sportlight). Bathing girls and the underwater scenes were very good. Print new. Tone O. K. Appeal good. Yes for Sunday. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

PACEMAKERS. (F. B. O.). Stars, Alberta Vaughn, George O'Hara. They are better than comedies; brings 'em back better than serials. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw better class, town 5,333. Admission 10-30. C. W. Davis, Broadway Theatre (500 seats), Reidsville, North Carolina.

Independents

ACROSS THE DEADLINE. (State Right). Star, Leo Maloney. A dandy western picture. This pleased our western fans. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 1020. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

AFTER A MILLION. (State Right). Star, Katherine McDonald. A program picture that seemed to please. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

BARRIERS OF THE LAW. (Independent). Stars, Wm. Desmond, Helen Holmes. A very good picture of the melodrama type. Should please those who like this sort of entertainment. Print new. Good tone and appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

BILLY THE KID. (State Right). Star, Franklyn Farnum. Just picture—that's all! City 110,000. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON. (Artclass). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. Oh boy, oh joy, this is the kind that makes 'em grip their seats. His pictures are all good to date. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, questionable. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

DANGER AHEAD. (State Right). Fair stunt picture; some mystery worked in and the usual Talmadge stunts. Good tone. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. D. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

DRUMS OF JEOPARDY. (Truart). Star cast. Not considered very good here. Showed up badly at the box office. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

EMPTY HEARTS. (Banner). Star, Clara Bow. Was considered a good picture, but owing to hot weather business was poor. City of 110,000. Admisison 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FAST AND FEARLESS. (State Right). Star, Buffalo Bill. Went over fairly well. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HARD HITTIN' HAMILTON. (Artclass). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. This little picture did a very nice business despite the fact that the star is not well known here, nor was the picture anything great. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HIDDEN MENACE. (State Right). Star, Charles Hutchison. A lot of exposed film but same old stuff, no difference. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

HUTCH OF THE U. S. A. (State Right). Star, Chas. Hutchison. (8,312 feet). Went over fairly well. Fair production. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

JAZZ BOUT. (Independent). Star, Benny Leonard. Another action subject and the best of the series. Print good. Fair appeal. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MADEMOISELLE MIDNIGHT. (State Right). Star, Mae Murray. People told me it was a good picture, but it had no drawing power and flopped badly during its run. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MARRIAGE MARKET. (Columbia). Star, Jack Mulhall. A good program, as are most of the Columbia pictures, but this one did not draw. Hot weather kept women away. Men folks want action on hot nights. The marriage question is overworked just now. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, St., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

MIDNIGHT SECRETS. (Rayart). Star, George Larkin. A reporter story, full of action and very good. Print good. Good tone and appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MOCCASINS. (State Right). Star, Bill Cody. Just a picture that did as well as the rest of them during the hot spell. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TRUTH ABOUT WOMEN. (Banner). Star, Hope Hampton. People liked this picture and it went over fairly well. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TWO FISTED SHERIFF. (Arrow). Star, Yakima Canutt. I did not see this but reports were very good. Good appeal. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WALLOPING WALLACE. (State Right). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Just a western program that did fairly good business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Stan Brown Makes the Children Agents For the Sale of Summer Ticket Blocks

SPLITTING sales with church and welfare organizations has been modified into a Summer stunt by Stan Brown, of the Strand Theatre, Milwaukee. He writes that he has gotten the idea off to a fine start and that it is growing weekly. In essence it is merely to permit children to sell tickets and retain half the profits. In addition, the members of the "club" are given a weekly morning performance at the theatre.

This scheme is devised to get patrons for a downtown house in the hot weather, but it can be adapted to the neighborhood houses, perhaps with a smaller percentage to the children, though it pays to give them as large a share as possible.

Simply Handled

The idea is very simple. On July 3, the first vacation period, the Fourth coming on Saturday, a special performance was given at the Strand at nine o'clock. Admission to this was by card, the cards being distributed to adult patrons the early part of the week. They were also given to such children as applied at the box office. The text read:

This ticket admits one child to our Free Children's Matinee
Friday, July 3rd, at 9 A. M.
Let the Children be our guests on this day.
Special comedy show.
We're going to tell them a plan to make some extra vacation money.
Let them enjoy this treat before starting their Glorious Fourth Celebration.
We'll take good care of them.

Telling the Idea

Meanwhile circulars had been prepared giving the idea, the copy reading: To Milwaukee Parents. Teach your children self-defense and thrift. Let them join the Strand Theatre Juvenile Thrift Club and earn their pocket money for the entire vacation season beside enjoying a special matinee performance every Saturday morning at nine o'clock.

For particulars read the following outline. You will find the proposition absolutely fair and square.

Every Saturday morning from now until Aug. 30th a free performance will be held at 9 o'clock for members of the Strand Juvenile Thrift club. Each child who attends and brings the sum of one dollar will be presented with four tickets (valued at two dollars) good for any evening performance to the Strand Theatre any time between now and Sept. 1st. The children will receive certificates entitling them to sell the tickets in their neighborhood. The certificate will also serve as admittance to the following club meeting performance when they may reinvest their dollar profit for four more tickets on which they may make another profit of 100 per cent. By a weekly reinvestment of the original dollar a child may easily earn a profit of eight dollars, beside seeing a special performance every week.

If you are willing to give your child this opportunity sign the attached coupon which will be accepted as an admission ticket to the next Saturday morning performance.

Parental Consent

The lower portion of the circular was a form to be signed by the parent. It ran: I hereby signify my approval of the Strand Theatre Juvenile Thrift Club and have given my child the sum of One Dollar ($1.00), the child to receive Four Tickets good for admission at the Strand Theatre at any performance before September 1st, 1925, and a certificate entitling the resale of them for Two Dollars.

Signed.....

This slip had to be presented along with the dollar, but once on file the renewal of the certificate given each week was sufficient.

Kept Up

Mr. Brown gave the youngsters an informal talk, telling them how to approach a possible purchaser and warning them against importunity.

Of course, not all persons were purchasers, but they heard about the show at the Strand and probably many of them decided later to drop in. And most children experienced little difficulty in selling four tickets and their success has added others to the club until it promises to reach a membership of one thousand.

There is no book keeping involved and no risk, since the tickets are paid for in advance, and if the child sells only two of the four tickets there is an even break, and the family can use the other two.

The idea in its present form works well for Mr. Brown. It can be changed for Winter work, and it can be adapted to suit.

Good Argument

L. L. Pollock, of the Kettler Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., got an idea that he would like a card in the busses which run from Palm Beach to the Number Two town. He also had the idea that he did not want to pay a fancy price.

He argued with the bus line that if his Paramount pictures drew the crowds attracted by cards in the bus the bus would get extra fares, so he gets a card each week at the cost of a single pass to each bus. That's better than paying for the cards and it is an argument that can be offered any interurban line.

HAND PAINTED POSTERS ARE COMMON IN LOS ANGELES, BUT NORTH BEND IS DIFFERENT

That's a none too large town in Oregon, and these hand painted 24-sheets for The Desert Flower got more attention than would a circus parade in a larger place. The drawing is crude, but it is spirited, and specially painted posters for only a two-day run is going some. Naturally, they made for better than usual business at the Liberty Theatre.

Blanchard Hustles For Greater Movie

If all the managers got behind Greater Movie Season the way J. M. Blanchard, of Sunbury, Pa., did, the season would have been a walloper. Mr. Blanchard, who has been located there for so many years that he is a part of the town, got the Mayor to give his official endorsement to the movement in the form of a semi-proclamation. The meat of the letter is found in this paragraph:

"Because of the prominent place motion pictures hold in the public regard, their qualities of entertainment and their educational influence I hereby urge the citizens and commercial bodies of Sunbury to participate in Greater Movie Season that screen-art may continue to advance to our personal happiness and industrial good."

With this for a starter, Mr. Blanchard ran it as an advertisement and then got the newspaper to give him a column story, three-fourths of which ran on the front page with a turn to the inside. It carried a single column head between the two three column splashes, and was the only single to rise to the top of the front page.

With such a start he naturally got a lot of stuff about the Strand's attractions in later stories. He sold the paper on the idea in order to sell them extra press work for his own shows. The paper knew that was what he was after, but since it could make it news, it was willing to use extra press stuff.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

With the theme of "Marriage Whirl" as an inspiration, the biggest stage number with that First National-Corinne Griffith attraction was programmed as Modern Love Lyrics and embraced a group of five selections introducing singers and the ballet corps. Besides this there were three additional incidents on the musical program, and the Mark Strand Topical Review, rounding out a show of two hours and four minutes. The feature picture was one hour and twenty-six minutes long, while the Review was its accustomed eight, leaving thirty minutes for the stage presentations.

Offenbach's "Orpheus" was the overture selected to start each deluxe performance, of which there are four each day. The Mark Strand orchestra put this over under two soft orange Mestrum floods from the projection room, augmented by two Mestrums of the same color from the dome. Purple beaded draw curtains closed over the production stage and were lighted by floods named above in addition to side spots of rose pink and amber. Foots of small stage soft blue, and foots and borders of large stage same color. Overture eight minutes.

Harry Reser, noted recording banjoist, followed the overture, appearing on the apron of the large stage in front of the orchestra. Lights remained as for the overture, with the addition of a white spot on the soloist from the dome. His numbers were "Pickins" and a medley of popular tunes, with "Tell Me More" as an encore. Six minutes.

Stage presentation No. 3 was the Mark Strand Mixed Quartette of tenor, soprano, basso and contralto, in the "Good Night" Quartette from Flowtow's "Martha." They appeared on the apron of the production stage, before gold draw curtains. Costumed concert style and lighted by white spots from the sides and overhead. Moonlight blue floods on the musicians from the projection room. Four minutes.

Following the Mark Strand Topical Review, with its especially scored and timed music, was the Modern Love Lyrics presentation, in full stage. The set was rural back drop with set cottage center stage and prop tree to the right. Flower boxes at windows of cottage and settee to the left. Transparent window of house lighted from inside by amber open box lamp. The selections: "I Love You Truly," by mixed quartette, assisted by dancers; "The Love Nest," basso and soprano; "Love Sends a Little Gift of Roses," premiere danseuse; "I Love Thee," tenor; "I Love You," ensemble. Twelve minutes.

Fenced His Cats

Most Southern Enterprises theatres have used the black cats for Charley's Aunt, backing them with phonographs and laughing records, but John B. Carroll, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla., put his cats on back fences to make them more realistic.

He had as guests the inmates of the Old People's Home, a local bus line supplying the transportation, and he gave them a wonderful time. Also he got unusually good business.

Used Radio

Midweek in the run of Are Parents People? Frank H. Ricketson, Jr., of the Rialto Theatre, Denver, gave a radio demonstration, the KOA program for that evening being sent out from the theatre stage with the artists and announcers in full view of the audience.

It not only got a large audience, but all sorts of publicity through the radio columns, and verbal advertising from those who saw the show.

Stars and Bars

Making a belated showing of Barbara Frietchie at the Rialto Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., J. L. Cartwright made his lobby decoration the old flag of the Confederacy.

Through the News he invited all veterans and their wives to be the paper's guests, whether they fought for North or South, and the response was large.

A section of the six sheet, mounted on compoboard, was used for a lobby painting.

TWO LOBBY STUNTS WORKED IN LOEW'S VENDOME THEATRE, NASHVILLE, ON THE DIXIE HANDICAP

The drink stand dispensed 2,500 bottles of the beverage, the stock being donated by the company. The tie-up also included the bannering of the trucks used for delivery to the trade through that section. The miniature race track balanced this display, but the horses apparently were not animated. The hookup was arranged by C. D. Haug, Metro-Goldwynner.

A HIGHLY GIFTED CAR FROM ERIE, PA., THAT MADE A HIT

Thomas J. Fordham entered it in an Elks Parade early in July and he did a packed business that evening in spite of the weather. If you can use the S. R. O. sign in July, it's a good stunt. The car had a hidden driver who worked the stunts.

Got Packed House With a Trick Car

Getting into the local events is always good, but if you can get in with a stunt that beats the others, then it is well worth while. Thomas J. Fordham, of the Strand Theatre, Erie, Pa., got a S. R. O. in July with a trick Ford that had everyone talking.

He fixed up an old car so that it might be driven from the rear seat and then masked in the driver with scrim. Apparently the car ran without direction. This, in itself, would have been ample, but that was only the starter. The car shimmied. We admit that most Fords do that, but this shimmy was more pronounced. Better still, it squirted water; apparently from the radiator, and it blew confetti from the exhaust.

As it went down the street, with its imitation of a whale, it got no end of attention and a lot of people came around to the theatre after the parade to ask how it was done.

The discs on the wheels were mounted to remain stationary as the wheels revolved, so that the message always was legible. The front wheels, as well as the body of the car were painted in gay water color and suggested the camouflaging used during the war.

With His Supreme Moment for the attraction, Mr. Fordham did a turnaway business. He does not say anything about renting out the car, but we think he could book it with a circus.

His Own Weeks

Nyman Kessler, of the Atlantic Theatre, Atlantic, Mass., is not worrying about greater movie seasons and all that sort of thing. He rolls his own for the summer months, and by careful booking he can get any style "week." His most successful was his recent Comedy Week with Going Up and The Love Nest for one program and five short comedies and a serial chapter for the other.

"Making it a "week" gives many times the emphasis that the bare announcement of the program would give. It entails a little more writing for the program copy, but it pays him dollars a word for the extra effort.

Don't get the idea that weeks are silly. Even if your patrons laugh a little at the idea, they are impressed none the less, and it means real money to you.

Night Club Idea Intrigued a Town

Using the idea worked in Butte on The Rag Man, Ed Corcoran, a Paramounteer, got Appleton, Wis., all stirred up with the announcement posted in a vacant store that it presently would be opened as a night club.

Nothing like that ever had happened in staid Appleton before, and the police authorities posted a special policeman to see that the hooch and other furnishings were not moved in.

Ministers even denounced the invasion of this new invention of the Devil, so Corcoran let it run until a few days before Raymond Griffith was due and then changed the sign to explain that The Night Club would open at the Fischer Theatre.

As there is no night club in the play of that title, the police and the moralist were left flat with nothing to prohibit. It helped business a lot.

Helpful

Because the Marion Star had arranged with Lt. Harding, one of the world flight aviators, to give a lecture on the trip in its new auditorium, it tied in the Rotary Club to help put it over.

G. H. Poster, of the Marion Theatre, acting on the suggestion of Paramounteer W. H. Wright, offered the paper ticket prizes for its model plane contest, on condition that it got some of the publicity for The Air Mail, which was the following week attraction at the theatre.

The newspaper welcomed the co-operation and loaned the planes for a ballyhoo for the picture. The theatre gave a season pass, one for six months and a single ticket to each of the 25 entrants.

Took a Drive

There is nothing suggestive of the old fashioned buggy ride in Paths to Paradise. To the contrary nothing less than ninety miles an hour is wanted, but Earl Settle, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., used the buggy and got a lot of attention for the play.

The vehicle was tenanted by a loving couple, but to avoid offense the "girl" was assistant manager Herbert Scriven, who made a very personable young woman, while her sweetheart was James West, the house artist, in an old dress suit with a high hat. Both the horse and carriage were liberally bannered.

Slate Show Boards Lessons in Love

J. L. Cartwright, who recently took over the Rivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., worked out a clever lobby idea for Constance Talmadge in Lessons in Love.

He took the educational idea, and his main board was decorated with a heart carrying the heads of Constance Tlamadge and Antonio Moreno. Below was: "Enroll now in our Love School. Tuition Adults 25c. Children 10c. Lessons 11 A. M. 1-3-5-7-9 P. M."

On the slates was jazz copy. One showed a fractured heart with "Oh, Constance, Constance, how could you? It's all busted." Another was "How about this petting business? Do girls get away with it and never pay up? I wonder." "Another, with the s in reverse was, "Oh boy! Those eyes. Those lips. Those nose."

They all carried the suggestion of vivacity and people stopped to read them all.

A SCHOOL OF LOVE SOLD LEARNING TO LOVE

The "lessons" were on slates in the lobby of the Rialto Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., and the cleverness of the text helped sell the idea of a snappy comedy. The idea was worked out by J. L. Cartwright, who has recently come into the management.

Special Paintings Supplement Cutout

Building up a cutout with natural foliage is old, but D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., painted a couple of street scenes for a cutout on Old Home Week that gave many times the original value to the cutout.

He worked up the cutout showing Meighan standing in the automobile bowing to his enthusiastic townsmen. This was placed in the centre of the lobby. By itself it was just a piece of advertising matter.

But Mr. Faunce set the stage with a pair of side pieces showing the sidewalks on either side of the street with the welcoming crowds. This made the cutout into a production, and was ten times as impressive. The stills were worked into the design, and the last touch was a huge "Welcome" on a banner above the cutout.

Apart from 5,000 special cards the campaign otherwise was standard but business edged up to a nice figure.

SPECIALLY PAINTED SIDE PIECES TO SUPPORT A CUTOUT

Note the street scenes painted to carry out the suggestion of Tom Meighan coming down Main street during Old Home Week. The stunt made the cutout much more convincing. Devised by D. Roscoe Faunce for the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

He Courted Arrest for Charley's Aunt

Scores of managers have used a female impersonator for Charley's Aunt; indeed that angle has become almost as standard as the laughing cat. It remained for Vincent Stoll of the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, to make the most of it.

Practically every community has a law against masquerading in the costume of the opposite sex. This is seldom invoked against advertising perambulators, but is designed to prevent a more serious effort to deceive.

But the law is on the books, and Stoll decided to get all he could out of it. To make certain he could get it over, he interviewed the Chief of Police and arranged to be arrested, but not until the ballyhoo had been worked up to a proper pitch.

He took the part of the impersonator himself, and rode up and down the streets of the business section several times without challenge. His car was a 1901 model and it was driven by a man with a grotesque facial make up.

When the stunt had properly sunk in, Stoll gave the high sign to a policeman posted a few blocks from the theatre. This official halted the car and arrested the manager, who argued the matter volubly, gathering a crowd. Suddenly he broke away and headed down the street toward the theatre, with the policeman in full chase. In accordance with the plan, he was not caught until he had reached the theatre lobby, where another argument ensued, the crowd having grown tremendously during the chase.

The laughing records in the advertising cats were turned on, to help the excitement along, and Stoll submitted to arrest and was taken inside the theatre, a large part of the crowd following him in, after the necessary pause at the box office.

Still in his masquerade, Stoll was taken into court where, when asked to give his name, that he might be arraigned, he announced that he was Charley's Aunt, playing an engagement at the Empire Theatre.

Naturally he was dismissed with a warning and he hurried back to get photographed for the newspapers, along with the officer who made the arrest. He got a three column cut and a quarter column story on the front page.

He used 300 cards with "Ha" and "He" pendant from the lobby front, had all sorts of cats and seven story banners on the theatre's corner sign and also on a new building. The latter stood squarely across the main street at one end and the banner could be read ten blocks away.

Borrowed a Band

E. E. Pollock, of the Kettler Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., knows the keen desire of the Florida realtor for publicity.

One of the concerns maintains a really good jazz band of fifteen pieces. Pollock borrowed it for a day, added it to The Last Man on Earth and did an average two day business on the single day.

It was a lot cheaper than hiring a band for he would have had to advertise in either event.

News, Comments of the Week and Guide to New Material

SEND YOUR SUGGESTIONS

WE are powerless to give publicity to the achievements in your activities in presentation work unless you let us know what is happening. Suggestions, new ideas, comments and news items are always welcome. After all, presentation producers have much in common, much which is of particular interest to producers, and a letter or a story will be given as much space as we have available. This Department cannot be limited to one territory. It it world-wide in its scope. Your current programs and stories should be mailed to reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure publication in early issues. We want to hear from everyone who is interested in this particular work. .

CREPE PAPER NOVELTIES

A FIRM specializing in the manufacture and retailing of crepe-paper, have prepared a set of sketches of costumes which can be made of this material. The sketches include color schemes and a variety of subjects such as nationals, symbolical and storied characters. These costumes are inexpensive to make and can form a vital part of a costume or fashion show. The paper from which they are made includes all standard colors with eight new shades. There are suggestions for making beads of sealing wax, wigs of crepe paper, and other valuable suggestions.

ZURO TO LEAVE RIESENFELD

IT is reported that Josiah Zuro, who has been identified with Hugo Riesenfeld, as his presentation director at the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion Theatres, New York City, has resigned, and will devote his time to the work of producing presentations for motion picture theatres not controlled by Famous-Players. Mr. Zuro has become a prominent figure in New York musical circles thru the medium of his Sunday Symphonic Society, and more recently thru the commission he has received from the city of New York to conduct the series of municipal opera which is to be shortly presented in one of the large stadiums

THE SEASON BEGINS

THE official opening on August 2nd, of Greater Movie Season marks the commencement of another year of activity in the motion picture theatre. It is gratifying to observe from reports received from various sections that there is a wholehearted effort being made on the part of theatre managers and producers to make this season's programs really count for something. We are very hopeful as to the future. Theatre managers and producers have a definite idea as to what real presenations are. They have signified a willingness to add these features to their programs. The presentations, prologues and special musical features are of value and when properly exploited can be made a profitable adjunct. But be sane, withal, in the matter of production costs; keeping watch on the cost will insure a long season and not spasmodic productions.

MARKET CREATED

THE Service Bureau idea which was advanced a couple of weeks ago has proved to be a valuable source of information of the exhibitor who is interested in presentation production work. One manager told us that his greatest trouble in the past has been in the long delays he has had in getting comparative prices before he placed his order. Another informs us that the cost system as outlined has materially cut down his regular budget. This is the kind of reaction we wanted, and it proves that we are in a position to render a service of value in a market we know to exist.

WENGER'S OPERA SETTINGS

JOHN WENGER has been the recipient of many commendations for his artistic settings on the series of Municipal Grand Opera productions recently inaugurated by New York City. Mr. Wenger is one of the representative artists which the presentation and prologue field can truly claim as its own, and the patrons who weekly view his scenic work at the Presenfeld-houses in New York and pleased with the added recognition his art has achieved.

NEW GLOSSY TRANSPARENCY

A GLAZED-finish tarlatan has been put on the market which will not only lend itself to artistic treatment in ballet costume make-ups, but has been claimed by those who have used it to be better and cheaper than scrim for transparent effects. The material is 45 inches wide and in all colors. A preparation of gelatin is applied to the thin muslin in its manufacture which gives the glossy effect.

TREATMENT FOR PALM LEAVES

AN attractive decorative treatment for palm leaves when used in spots adjoining the proscenium or in niches about the house, is obtained by painting the leaves with bronze or silver paint. A coating of shellac or white varnish can be added and before it sets, metallics in silver, bronze, green, or vari-colored can be added. When the job is dry, the painted surface will take a beautiful lighting treatment, the metallics adding an irregular surface which will cause the palm leaves to appear studded with jewels.

ORCHESTRA PIT ELEVATORS

THE installation of elevators for the orchestra and organ are a valuable feature of the newly constructed motion picture houses. One of the established theatre equipment construction firms have perfected an elevator whereby either the orchestra or the organ can be raised or lowered in an efficient manner without conflict with the other. The controlling device can be at the leader's stand or back stage on the switchboard.

BERNIE TO RIALTO

BEN BERNIE, the jazz impresario at the Rivoli, will travel down Broadway to the Rialto Theatre at the end of his fourth week at the Rivoli, to make way for the full orchestra necessary to the proper musical interpretation of the "Ten Commandments" booked for a limited run at the Rivoli. It will be an excellent test as to the popularity of Bernie, and the drawing power of this particular kind of attraction. The Rialto stage is being extended to give ample room for the program innovations to come.

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Unholy Three"
(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Music

Capitol Grand Orchestra, David Mendoza conducting, offered as the overture "Maritana" (Wallace). A special number, the Sextette from "Lucia di Lammermoor." . . . Donizetti is rendered by the Brass Sextette of the orchestra.

Capitol Male Quartette

Painted drop hung in one depicting a Southern scene with a corner of a large colonnade veranda with rambling vines at right. A foliage border merges a cluster of branches and attendant undergrowth at left. In center the roof and upper section of a hut of the servant quarter is visible. Quartette is highlighted with amber from the right and blue from the left. The drop is toned blue from right, green from left, with magenta brought in back of the drop to tone the sky area. This is gradually taken off as blue is brought in and the blue dimmed down as green is brought up for finale.

Divertissements

(a) "The Little Toy Soldiers"

Gambarelli and Capitol Ballet Corps of six present one of the best dance novelties recently seen. The setting consists of a black plush and hung in two with colorful set pieces on profile grouped in conventional manner. A cannon, cut from a flat piece, is right. A pyramid of cannon balls left; two sentry houses right and left of center with a flag pole between them at center. Canary flood with amber and white tone the performing area and highlight the set pieces. Characters enter through the sentry house wearing wide striped blue uniform blouses and black uniform caps. Gambarelli is dressed in a white uniform of similar color. There was much comedy injected in this number.

(b) "Caprice Viennois"

A duet based on the well-known Kreisler composition was rendered in a very artistic setting which consisted of a drop hung in one with a large circular opening in center, back of which was the outline of a double-tiered fountain; streamers of white were attached to the pans of the fountain, upon which a water effect played, giving the effect of water falling from the fountain. The background was a formal foliage outline against a deep blue sky. Two singers sat in front of the fountain in the center and were highlighted with green from the left. The foliage border was visible at the upper left hand portion of the circular opening.

(c) Yurieva and Svoboda

Finale Second Act

The finale of the second act from "Forza Del Destino." . . . Verdi was given an effective interpretation by Hazel Simonson, Salvatore Solte and Ensemble of Twenty-five. The organ played the introduction. The curtains were drawn, revealing a section of a church with a five-panel stained glass window occupying one-third of the area center, in front of which was silhouetted an altar surmounted by a large cross and candles. The Ensemble was divided into two groups. At the rise they were discovered kneeling in an oblique line from the corners of the platform, bearing the altar. Each member was garbed in an ecclesiastical robe of black with a white tunic bearing a red cross on the breast. They carried long candles surmounted with amber tips lighted. Two soloists entered from the left clad in similar garb. The entire set was subdued with the exception of the highlights back of the window at center, which brought out the colorful treatment of the ecclesiastical design of the window. A blue from left highlighted the various characters of the Ensemble and a white spot identified the soloist at center.

The Prologue

The Prologue to the featured picture was very simple but an effective bit of coloring. A scrim hung at the curtain line, with black background. A flame effect masked down to cut the lower part of the back drop was brought in. Presently a magnesium pot was worked, the smoke being highlighted with green from right, a character in a tight-fitting costume appeared back of the smoke at right center and engaged in several gyrating movements, being highlighted with green as the main titles of the picture were brought in on the scrim. The lights dimmed down, closing in at the screen.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Sally of the Sawdust"
(United Artists)

Music

A "Prelude" is played by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, with Carl Edouarde conducting.

The Prologue

Joseph Plunkett has arranged a very effective prologue for the featured picture. At the opening of the action the orchestra pit is flooded with amber. A character appears in circus garb through the opening carrying a circular plaque announcing the circus. Two spots are brought up on two mechanical figures placed right and left of the proscenium. A clown on a revolving disc is at right and an elephant holding a ball with its trunk is left. The brass section of the orchestra, wearing circus band caps, rise and play the introduction to the prologue in true circus fashion. Curtains are drawn, revealing the interior of a circus tent; back drop painted to represent a circus tent is hung as a cyc. Various circus accoutrements are placed around the stage to dress. A scrim is hung at the curtain line. Canary and amber tone the performing area, which is full stage, and a rose tone is brought in at the sides of the tent, with an amber strip back of the scrim to highlight the characters working at center. The action opens with a selection by the quartette dressed respectively as a clown, ringmaster, canvassman and trainer. After their number "Monty and Carvel" enter from up center and do an acrobatic and balancing act. They are followed by "White and Manning," the sensational acrobatic dancers, who present several excellent flips. A comedy entrance is given the male member of this team, who enters wearing a large fur coat and small straw hat. The girl is dressed in white. For finale an effect of falling balloons in greens, blues and yellows is operated on the cyclorama.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Goose Woman" (Universal-Jewel)

Music

The Colony Melody Masters, with Chas. Eggett conducting, present a popular Potpourri. The well-known voice which has been billed as The Mystic Voice is also introduced during the showing of the pictorial when some scenic shots with accompanying titles are introduced during the news features. The singer sings "Rose of Picardy."

Roy Smeck

An instrumental novelty is introduced featuring this talented "Wizard of the Strings." A repeat set is used depicting a Southern Sea exterior. A cut wood drop in one with palm drop on net is hung in two. A blue sky drop is hung back of this, with a moon box at center. Magenta is brought in from right and green and blue from right and left highlight the set. Blue border with mixture of red is brought in. This treatment is carried out also in the foots. A set tree constructed of profile with a rock piece is used to dress. The artist is seated at right upon a bench over which is a colorful drape, and is highlighted with green and amber. He plays several popular selections on the guitar, banjo and ukulele. His program consists of "Can't You Hear Me Calling, Caroline?" "Alabamee Bound," "Gypsy Love Song," "Hayseed Rag."

"A Fisherman's Fantasy"

A dance divertissement with two characters is given an artistic setting. Blue foots and borders are brought up and the curtains open, revealing an exterior; a set tree made of profile is placed at right center, with a practical tree with pink flowers at left center, before which a small section of a stone wall is placed. Foliage banks are used to mask and dress right and left from the center opening. A set platform is placed and masked with a few rock pieces. Blue cyc to back

Amber from sides with magenta and greens to tone are used in the lighting treatment. The male member of the team is discovered at center with a fish pole. He pulls in his "catch" and the lady dressed in diaphanous costume enters as they go into their number.

Mlle. Annette Royak

We commend the management for this artistic stage setting of the new school. Three-step platforms are placed on the right hand of the stage in terrace formations with a single column, the base of which is on the lower platform right of center, the capital being masked in the border. A Venetian lamp with a red tone is hung right center. A red drapery is hung on the left in two, with the ends caught up at center and off left. A cut arch border is hung back in three; back of this is the blue cyc, upon which a star effect is hung. Singer stands left of center and is enveloped in a rose and blue tone from the bridge. The blue foots and borders tone the setting.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Trouble With Wives"
(Paramount)

Ben Bernie and His Orchestra in Spain

This is one of the most attractive settings that has been given the Ben Bernie Orchestra during his four weeks at the Rivoli Theatre. A very colorful scenic treatment which not only embraces the stage but is carried out in the orchestra pit. At right a flat is placed representing a side of a house with a balcony with an arched opening in which are hung lavender draperies. At left another flat with a window outline is placed with a painted Spanish shawl filling the opening. Set trees with green foliage tops and large red fruit hung among the leaves is placed right and left of the proscenium in the orchestra pit. There is a profusion of foliage pieces and bay trees gilded set in formal order about the pit. At center an electric fountain is placed, with small play of water being worked. The orchestra chairs are grouped about the fountain. As the stage and curtains are opened a setting consisting of a drop hung back and two flat pieces set on angles represent a Spanish house. There is an opening up right with a platform, back of which two characters were seen. Three set trees are given an even grouping to dress the setting. Two garden benches are placed, one right and the other left. The orchestra are dressed in black Spanish costumes with gold braid trimmings. Festoons of gold leaves are hung along the orchestra rails. The general lighting emphasized the colorful scenic treatment, with greens, reds and blues predominating. The following program is offered:

a. La Paloma
b. "Marcheta" Victor Schertzinger
   Virginia Johnson, soprano
   Tandy MacKenzie, tenor
   Kapa Davidoff, guitarist
   Albarado, mandolinist

Novelty Radio Demonstration

We are pleased that the Piccadilly is inaugurating a newer form of stage attractions, and an auspicious number is introduced which has achieved a popular response. In conjunction with one of the leading radio companies an attractive stage setting consisting of a large model of a radio, occupying the entire lower part of the proscenium opening is placed. This is constructed and painted to represent a mahogany radio with the various dials and accessories. On the upper half of the opening a black drop is hung, upon which is traced in silver metallics the outline of a loud speaker. Amber highlights the model of the radio and a white spot from the projection room defines the loud speaker. A powerful amplifier is placed back of the drop and at the opening a guest announcer speaks through the microphone which is connected to the amplifier. The first number is introduced and then the center section of the radio model is slowly raised, revealing a setting which represents a radio broadcasting station. A small piano is placed left; a settee right center, table extreme right, with a lamp placed upon it; a microphone on a standard is set at center and a piano lamp placed at left center. A mirror is hung on the wall up center. Two candelabra brackets are placed right and left center. During the broadcasting part of the program the announcer introduces the following: Richard B. Gilbert, Herbert Spencer, Mlle. Rose and Mario Alverez. At the conclusion of the last number in the studio the center panel is again lowered. The announcer then introduced Les Stevens and His Orchestra. The orchestra begin their music and the drop with the loud speaker outline upon it is taken away, revealing an orchestra of 11 pieces in alignment on the top of the radio model. A black fabric is used to back, and hanging at center above the orchestra is the large amplifier disc treated with silver metallics and highlighted with a white spot from the projection room, giving it a glistening appearance. The orchestra, dressed in tuxedo, are highlighted in white. They present four numbers in an excellent fashion.

"IF TODAY WERE 1425"
A Jazz Novelty
A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

WITH the introduction of jazz orchestras in programs, particularly at this season of the year, the general trend is to achieve novelty both in the presentation of the orchestra and the attendant numbers. The usual idea of introducing the orchestra with a glittering setting and the characters in garish costume creations has lost its appeal, and the presentation suggested this week was born of the query made practically in jest by a very well-known musical director who said, "I wonder what jazz would have done to the Middle Ages."

There is always a wealth of comedy to be derived from situations arising from a modern interpretation of the costumes and habiliments of remote periods. The Middle Ages "when knights were bold and ladies fair" is perhaps one of the most colorful periods we have in our records. While chivalry, romance, ballads and the more stately musical compositions, limited as they were in their scope at that time, ruled, and this impression has been carried on down through the intervening centuries, it provides an ideal comedy base.

The producer can practically go the limit with this number. It requires a very spirited modern program, good singers, clever dancers garbed in the costumes of the Middle Ages, slightly exaggerated in design.

Ground Plan (Fig. 2)

The cut drop hung in one, the opening cut as specified in Fig. 1. In the opening three steps placed in front of a platform between 4-ft. and 6-ft. deep covering the entire width. Two columns are placed right center and left center upstage platform. A sky drop for backing set back to permit strip lights to be placed on the upstage side of the platform. Down extreme left on the downstage side of the cut drop a platform with steps leads off left.

Construction Data

(a) Cut Drop—This should be cut as shown in Fig. 1 and the bottom batten fastened to the floor, the hanging batten brought taut.

(b) Columns—The two wide columns on the platform may be either flats painted to represent columns or can be hemispherical shells.

Scenic Treatment.

The cut drop should be painted to represent stonework with a large block design. This should be done in gray and buff. The two hanging banners dyed red carrying an heraldic design are placed on the drop right and left of the opening. The small platform and steps extreme left in front of the cut drop should be painted to match the stonework of the drop, namely, gray and buff. The steps and large platform should be painted a dull gray; the two columns should be painted to represent old stone showing the effect of the "wear of the elements." A blue sky drop for backing.

Lighting Treatment.

Red and blue foots and first border blended to give a purple and cut down to about half should be the general lighting in the foreground. Canary spots from left with a subdued orange amber spot from right should be placed at the entrances in one to highlight the various performers who work in one. A baby spot with a red and amber variegated medium should be hung off left, and masked down to highlight the folds and emblem on the drape hanging at the left of the drop. A baby spot with a green and orange amber variegated medium should be placed on the floor at the entrance and masked down to highlight the folds of the drapery hanging on the right of the drop. Orange amber from the bridge back of the cut drop to highlight the platform area with canary from left and amber from right to flood the various characters who appear through the opening. A spot with a rose and canary variegated medium should be placed at left to highlight the center and upper areas of the sides of the two columns. A light blue strip placed in back of the platform to flood the base of the sky drop and the back border in blue flooding the top of the drop. To this should be added olivetts with green from right and orange amber from left. A cloud effect can also be used.

Costumes.

The costumes of this period which were worn by the people of wealth and nobility were rich in color and design. Embrioderies and brocades were used with gaudy trimming. In making these costumes the materials to be used can be dyed muslin, colored and stenciled sateen to imitate silks, cotton crepe, ratine in colors and a thin grade of Turkish toweling dyed in desired colors. Cretonnes may also be used.

Fig. I. representing a middle class woman which shows a long sleeved semi-fitted type of garment with the skirt caught up in front and thrown over the arm, exposing an undergarment in different color. The embroidered design can be in rhinestone or spangles.

Fig. II. represents another woman of the middle classes with the steeple headdress and veil, which is sometimes draped over the arm or left to flow free behind. The dress is fitted and has a wide fur collar. A profusion of jewelry should be worn.

Fig. III. The page costume is ideal for dancers in this presentation. Over the doublet, which has a plain round collar and tight sleeves with turn-back cuffs, is worn a tabard which may be of plain color or parti-colored. Tights or hose are often of two or three colors, sometimes one leg of one color and the other another color, or the leg is divided into two colors, the color divided in points just below the knee. Deep blues, maroon, greens, purples with several pattern combinations in high designs constitute the color schemes.

Fig. IV. The design represented the costume worn by a warrior or knight. The general garb was a chain armor with a helmet also made of chain. Over this is worn a sleeveless tunic slashed over the left leg and girdled around the waist. The tunic was made of some brilliant colored material such as red with gold crosses or blue with gold crosses, and similar tunics of striped materials, the stripes being about 3 inches wide and of alternating colors. Where the chain armor is not accessible through a costume company it is suggested that this can be made of coarse knitted material and painted with silver paint. An ordinary knitted helmet such as the one used in the army during the World War could be used for a chain helmet. This also painted with silver paint.

Music:

"Semiramide" by Rossini, is the overture feature rendered by the Rialto Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld. A trombone solo entitled "Macushla" (McMurraigh), was played by Boyce M. Cullen.

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

a. At the conclusion of the overture Dr. Riesenfeld surrendered the baton to Willy Stahl, conductor of the orchestra—the house is darkened and upon the close-in curtains appears the gigantic shadow of the conductor, cast there from a few baby spots placed in front of the orchestra platform on the floor. The jazz band occupied the same place as last week and dressed as then, upon the platform is Frank Cornwell, tenor, and back of him is cast a hugh shadow from several magenta baby spots placed on the floor. The number is "In Shadowland," by Fred E. Ahlert. At the conclusion of the song the curtains are drawn apart disclosing a white drop in two, leg drop with cut out bare branches forming the border and entwining across stage, hung in one and a half, the lighting effect consists of small green floods from right and left back of leg drop high-lighting the upper portion of the white drop and blue floods from same place high lighting the bottom. No front light for the first dance of the ballet which are dressed for Nymph dance in silhouette, then red foots cast dancers shadows for second dance and as a finale a bank of baby spots cast hard white shadows on the back drop with a quick dimout for next number.

b. Saxaphone Sextette, by J. Gillespie, P. Mason, J. Weston, F. Stone, Gus. Guderian and J. Moynahan.

c. "A Sailor's Sweetheart." Theme played by orchestra and the jazz band, sung by Gus. Guderian with quite a bit of low comedy thrown in for laughs. He danced in sailor fashion and costume by Jim Moyahan, on the platform of the jazz band and in the amber spot which was switched from the singer. This dance was assisted by the dancing girls on stage, all dressed in sailor blouses of white satin with trunks of same material, and hats to match, trimmed in blue braid.

Danced in white flood and against the soft folds of the screen's close-in curtains which were lighted top, sides and foots with white.

ATLANTA ORCHESTRAS OUT

Information received from Atlanta, Ga., to the effect that the orchestras in the Howard, Metropolitan, Rialto and Alamo No. 2 theatres were given their notices two weeks ago Saturday following a demand on the part of the Atlanta Federation of Musicians that the present scale be increased. The managers' association refused to meet the claims of the musicians, particularly at this time of the year when the season's business has not been up to standard.. It was expected that an adjustment or compromise would be reached, but according to the report such attempts have proven futile and the managers have taken a firm stand in refusing the request. It is understood that Alex Keese, who has been the conductor of the Howard Theatre orchestra, has left for Dallas, Texas, where he has accepted a similar position.

CLARK ROBINSON JOINS POGANY

Clark Robinson, who has been the art director at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, has purchased an interest in the firm of Pogany-Teichner, well known scenic artists, and will serve as a director of the firm and also in the capacity of staff designer. The association of Mr. Robinson with Pogany is destined to result in a business combination of much promise. Mr. Robinson will make the Pogany-Teichner studio his general headquarters, excepting at such times when he resumes his association with S. L. Rothafel in the new Roxy Theatre.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Tame Men and Wild Women"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Good broad burlesque throughout, the first scenes of this Arthur Stone-Hal Roach comedy are a whiz. Arthur has attained the age of thirty-one and his mother thinks it time for him to know something of life. Holding him in her arms, she warns against women while tears spatter her face and Arthur shudders. That is real comedy that should convulse any audience. The rest of the subject shows Arthur succumbing to the lures of the opposite sex. In the end he abducts the girl of his choice, while his mother faints, apparently proving that love laughs at advice as well as locksmiths. Some excellent acting is done by Marie Mosquini, Helen Gilmore, Martha Sleeper, Louise Carver, Marvin Lobach and Sammy Brooks. Marcel de Sano directed. "Tame Men and Wild Women" ought to send a great many audiences into roars of laughter.—S. S.

"The Tourist"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is the first of a series of two-reel Tuxedo Comedies offered by Educational starring Johnny Arthur, who scored a hit in the feature picture, "The Monster." Gags and situations rather than slapstick have been relied upon to furnish the laughs and have succeeded, and this film should prove thoroughly entertaining for the majority of patrons. Much of the comedy is based on "stunts" with a flivver, but they are all good for laughs or smiles, for Director Goodrich has introduced an entirely new lot of Ford gags. Many of these deal with the manner in which the tourist used his "car" to prepare breakfast, proving that it makes a "rattling good cook stove." There is a lot of ingenuity shown here, everything being utilized, even the headlight lenses serving as plates. Following this is a chase scene to reach the tax office to save the property from crooks. The hero's car gradually falls to pieces. This part of the film is built on a familiar idea but it is nevertheless amusing. Johnny Arthur is a capable comedian of the quiet, unobtrusive type, who is pictured as having plenty of spunk when he is aroused. —C. S. S.

"Lucky Stars"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Harry Edwards directed this Mack Sennett comedy. Harry Langdon, the star, is informed by a fortune teller that he should become a doctor and that he will fall in love with a dark woman. He falls in with a quack and becomes part of the traveling medical show, finally landing in San Tobasco where a dark-haired senorita lures Harry away from medicine temporarily. A villain dopes the medicine. Imbibers dance and bottles explode until the outraged populace turn on the quacks and drive them from the town. This is a more or less routine slapstick subject, with few chances for Langdon to display his unique type of comedy. He is funny but hardly any more so than any other comedian would be in the same role. Natalie Kingston is as charming as ever as the vampish senorita and Vernon Dent has a good part as the chief quack.—S. S.

"Crying for Love"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Although Eddie Gordon is the star of the two-reel Century Comedy distributed through Universal, Blanche Payson walks away with the picture and really makes Eddie only a foil for her comedy. Eddie is small and of slight build, Miss Payson is large and robust. Eddie appears as the disappointed suitor who finally wins her when the other fellow is caught flirting. Wifie is pictured as having a temper commensurate with her strength and large stature and poor Eddie if of course the goat continuously, being thrown around and battered about unmercifully. It is good for a number of laughs and there is one especially clever scene where wifie gets jealous and yanks Eddie into another room while he resists, knowing what is coming to him. It is an unusually good picture of its kind and should provide good entertainment for anyone who likes rough and tumble comedy.—C. S. S.

"Pictorial Proverbs"

(Educational—Hodge Podge—One Reel)

Here is another of the Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podges in which considerable cleverness has been shown in furnishing a basis for holding the varied subjects together. This has been done by following out the idea of the title and picturizing familiar proverbs. As each proverb is flashed on the screen a scene illustrating it follows. Among these are "Let the cobbler stick to his last," "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," "One tongue is enough for a woman," "Paddle your own canoe." These introduce scenes from all parts of the world, with the usual sprinkling of cartoon caricatures. The most interesting is the decidedly novel way in which the Ainus of Japan settle an argument by alternately clubbing each other. A good number of this series.—C. S. S.

"Thirty Years Ago"

(Short Films—Novelty—One Reel)

Here is a novelty that should go over big with practically every real picture fan. In this reel is included some of the earliest examples of motion pictures including "The Kiss" which runs only twenty-five seconds and is said to be probably the oldest film in existence, which was made in 1895 by Edison. Next is a complete picture which is not much longer, "Old Maid in a Drawing Room" made in 1898. Then comes "Street Car Chivalry" showing how much harder it is for an elderly fat woman to get a seat than a young and pretty girl. The piece de resistance however is "The Great Train Robbery" which was made in 1903 and proved to be a sensation. It is credited with being the first film with dramatic sequence and continuity of scenes, telling a complete story. As its title indicates, it depicts the robbery of a train by bandits and their subsequent capture. In 1903 this picture thrilled, but now it will amuse because of the great improvement that has come in every branch of production. Especially amusing are the sets with clocks, pictures, etc., painted on the walls. In one, a dance hall scene, even a large stove is painted on the backdrop. One thing striking, however, is the good quality of the photography.—C. S. S.

"His New Suit"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Arthur buys a suit on the installment plan after spending his cash to buy a toy balloon from a pretty girl. He ties the balloon to the suit and they go sailing away and are found in a store that has been robbed and Arthur is accused. The girl comes to his rescue and he is freed, but the gang all kid him about the suit. This is the gist of the story of this single reel offering, one of the series starring Arthur Lake. There are some situations that will amuse patrons especially the younger generation and it averages up with the previous issues. Arthur has a new leading lady, Velma Connor an attractive girl. Eddie Clayton still appears as the other fellow.—C. S. S.

"The Best Man"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

In this Universal Western Josie Sedgwick the star appears in the role of a red-blooded ranch girl who can hold her own with any of the men. Love comes to her and she decided to be just a woman, but fate brings one more adventure with rustlers before she wins the man of her choice. Miss Sedgwick again proves capable in a role of this kind even when it comes to broncho-busting. The story is of average interest and there is plenty of action in the climax when she holds up a rustler and then rescues the hero and finally joins with him in bringing about the capture of the entire band. Well up to the standard of the others in this series.—C. S. S.

NEWEST REVIEWS and COMMENTS

EDITED BY CHARLES S. SEWELL

"Sally of the Sawdust"

Griffith's Newest Is Corking Good Audience Picture With Plenty of Mirth-Provoking Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A new light on D. W. Griffith's ability as a director is revealed in "Sally of the Sawdust," his latest production for United Artists release. Numerous offerings of different types have demonstrated his masterful skill along artistic lines and in developing tremendous drama, reaching emotional heights that play upon the heartstrings. He has shown that he is a genius in combining these elements with exceptional character delineation in situations noted for their unusual power in sustaining action and interest at high pitch. This picture demonstrates that he can also handle mirth-provoking comedy.

Don't get the impression that he has put all of his eggs in one basket and produced a picture that depends on comedy alone, but in "Sally of the Sawdust" he has allowed the pendulum to swing in this direction much more than ever before. He has taken a thoroughly human little story which in its outline does not get far away from a familiar screen formula; a woman is cast out by her stern father for marrying a circus man and her daughter becomes the ward of another member of the troupe and finally after many vicissitudes comes into her rightful heritage.

Aided by the excellent portrayals of Carroll Dempster and W. C. Fields, he has developed the characters of the little circus orphan and her strange protector, a likeable faker and charlatan who is quite a bit of a crook, so that they get a firm hold on your sympathies, and with his usual skill brought out the shadings from lightness to deep pathos, so that he keeps you intensely interested.

All of this was expected of Mr. Griffith, but it is in the comedy elements that he springs a surprise, for, having decided to play up this angle for all it is worth, he has jumped in with both feet, discarded subtlety and injected comedy that is broad and hilarious, gags, situations that are rough and tumble and of the type employed by some of the well-known slapstick directors. Although this may seem strange for Griffith, don't make the mistake of thinking he is like a fish out of water, for it all registers up to the acid test, making audiences laugh, as has been demonstrated at the Strand Theatre, New York.

With no idea of disparaging Mr. Griffith, in justice it must be said that a great deal of it is due to the truly excellent performance of W. C. Fields, a newcomer who made a tremendous hit in the stage version of the same story. Mr. Fields is literally a wow and is guaranteed to go over big with any audience. He has injected several gags from his current stage act. Carroll Dempster is right there, too, as a foil in some of the scenes, though naturally her greatest moments are in the emotional situations. Mr. Fields makes the character of the circus faker extremely likeable and amusing. He figures largely in this picture, and with a technique entirely different from the usual screen comedian gets a laugh or a chuckle almost the entire time he is on the screen. The other roles are all in competent hands.

Obviously, Mr. Griffith had his eye on the box-office and did not hesitate to make certain sacrifices to get the effects he wanted. For instance, he takes considerable liberties with court decorum but he puts over a big emotional climax when the girl pleads and, escaping through a window, seeks to make a getaway. There is the familiar Griffith punch in the way he sustains these sequences and registers the extreme pathos of this wisp of a girl hunted by a score of big, burly men. He has adroitly injected comedy here to relieve the emotional tension by cutting to Fields in a balky flivver, showing him meeting mishaps, getting mixed up with bootleggers, bumping over plowed ground, etc., to come to her rescue.

In a word, Mr. Griffith has produced in "Sally of the Sawdust" a picture that is filled with sure-fire stuff that will thoroughly entertain the majority. It has an abundance of rattling good comedy, pathos, drama, sympathy and suspense and should prove a big box-office attraction.

Story

Because she married a circus man, Judge Foster cast his only daughter out, and just before her death a few years later she left her little girl in the care of her friend McGargle, a good natured crook, juggler and faker. Sally, the girl, grew up in this atmosphere, unaware of her ancestry. McGargle, realizing his responsibility finally managed to get a job with a carnival company playing at Great Meadows where the Fosters lived. A real estate boom had made them wealthy. Sally made a hit with her dancing and Peyton, the son of Judge Foster's friend fell in love with her. To save him, the Judge arranged to have McGargle and Sally arrested. McGargle escaped but Sally was finally hunted down and brought back. McGargle, hearing of Sally's plight swiped a flivver and after many vicissitudes finally reached the courtroom and presented proof of Sally's parentage. The judge dismissed the case and his wife took Sally in her arms, but Peyton's claim was stronger and she agreed to become his wife. McGargle was persuaded to remain and found an outlet for his peculiar talents in selling real estate.

Lon Chaney Stars in One of the Most Powerfully Gripping and Unusual Pictures Ever Screened

From the main title to the final fadeout the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Unholy Three," starring Lon Chaney, is one of the most unusual and powerfully gripping stories ever unfolded on the screen. There is not a moment when the attention is not riveted. traction. It is the kind that your patrons will tell their friends to be sure and see without fail.

All of the elements that go into the making of a photoplay have been wonderfully coordinated in this picture. The title is curiosity-arousing and intriguing. There is a peach of a plot built on an entirely new idea and developed along original lines. Not once can even the "wisest" fan sit back and foretell what is going to happen next. And such suspense, the kind that keeps you edging forward on your seat. Then, too, there is that master artist, Lon Chaney, in one of his finest interpretations, and running him a close second is an absolutely unique screen characterization, a twenty-inch midget masquerading as a baby. These are aided by a flawless cast and evident throughout is wonderful directorial work by Tod Browning, all going to make an exceedingly well-rounded dramatic entity.

The plot gives you an idea of its exceptional possibilities and we want to go on record as saying that Director Browning has not missed any of them. Three side-show freaks, a ventriloquist, a strong man and a midget form an alliance and open a bird store, selling parrots that only talk when the ventriloquist, who poses as the delightful old lady owner, uses his powers. This naturally brings kicks from purchasers, which are investigated by the old lady, who takes the midget along in a baby carriage, his job being to get the lay of the land. Then the three follow up their nefarious scheme by later robbing the places that are worth while.

As one of the trio remarks, "The plan sounds unholy," hence they call themselves "The Unholy Three." It is all somewhat weird and uncannily plausible, suggestive of the best of Edgar Allan Poe's best stories, a suggestion that is further borne out by using a gorilla in the later sequences. But it makes wonderfully gripping drama, which is not without its comedy in the performance of the midget as the baby who gets out of character and, still in swaddling clothes, smokes heavy cigars. Pathos, too, there is in plentiful quantity in Chaney's role, who while posing as the old woman sees another man win the love of his sweetheart.

The climax is tremendous where Chaney's rival is on trial for a murder committed by the midget and strong man, and Chaney, because of his love for the girl, uses his ventriloquist powers to try and save the accused man by telling his story through this man's lips while the poor chap is mumbling the Lord's Prayer over and over without making a sound. Failing in this comes Chaney's dramatic confession. There is a masterful touch in closing the picture, with a repetition of one of the early subtitles showing Chaney saying, "That is all there is to life, a little laughter—and a tear."

There are so many other good things in this picture that only a few can be mentioned. The wonderful suspense of the scene where the detective picks up the toy elephant in which the jewels are hidden, the thrill when the gorilla attacks the midget and strong man, the tremendous suspense and dramatic tenseness of the whole story and Chaney's wonderful work throughout, but particularly a scene with the girl where in a close-up by gradual changes of expression he displays all the emotions from fiery anger to compassion and kindness.

We don't believe we have ever witnessed a more gripping, better produced or better acted picture, and we can heartily recommend it as wonderful entertainment for all classes. The kind that your patrons will be talking about to their friends long after you have seen it. Book it or you will be sorry.

Story

Among the attractions in a side show were Echo a ventriloquist, Hercules a strong man and Tweedledee a midget. They were all crooks on the side and were aided by Rosie a pickpocket who was Echo's sweetheart. Calling themselves the Unholy Three they put into operation a plan suggested by Echo. They opened a bird store and stocked it with parrots that would not talk except when Echo used his powers as a ventriloquist. Echo posed as an old lady and the midget as a baby and when a complaint came, they would go to the house and get the lay of the place and then go back and rob it if worth while. As a foil they hired Hector, a simple-minded soul as a clerk. Rosie fell in love with him and on one occasion Echo's jealousy kept him at home while the other two robbed and murdered a man. The police arrested Hector. The trio fled taking Rosie with them, also a pet gorilla of Echo's. Finally Rosie by agreeing to give Hector up persuaded Echo to try and save him. Echo went to the trial and while Hector was on the stand and simply moving his lips, Echo threw his voice and made it appear that Hector was telling the full story of the murder. Hector was freed. Rosie keeping her promise went to Echo, but telling her he was kidding he sent her back to Hector and resumed his old occupation of ventriloquist in a side show. In a row, the midget who had a vicious temper freed the gorilla who turned on him and the strong man.

"Fine Clothes"

John M. Stahl-First National Picture Finely Directed and Acted But Far Too Long

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

An excellent cast does capital work in "Fine Clothes," John M. Stahl's First National production, which is based on the really successful Franz Molnar stage play, "Fashions For Men." This vehicle suffers slightly through its translation to the screen because only a few of the scintillating lines of the play can be used in the subtitles, but the situations have been retained pretty nearly as they were in the original, and beyond a shadow of a doubt the artists do very capable work.

The film as shown to the reviewers has one big fault—it is far too long. If First National will skillfully eliminate more than a reel, "Fine Clothes" will become above the average entertainment and will hugely please a great majority of audiences. As it is now, it drags badly in the middle through the presentation of too much detail and the employment of too many incidents which do not serve to advance the plot but only develop characterization far beyond the point of necessity.

Certainly "Fine Clothes" has the ingredients of a fine picture. Percy Marmont as the tender-hearted, trusting proprietor of a clothing shop, Eileen Percy as the wife who left him, Raymond Griffith as the thief of the wife's affections, Alma Rubens as the girl who came to love the kind man, Lewis S. Stone as the seeker of the latter's affections—all these perform splendidly. Indeed, their work and that of William V. Mong in a lesser role could hardly be improved upon.

The story is human and Director Stahl's treatment of it sympathetic. He has deftly eliminated much of the sophistication with which the stage play was replete, and he has eliminated it without impairing the plot. Only one incident could offend, it seems, the minds of picture theatregoers, and it is problematical if that will.

"Fashions For Men," the stage play, was a comedy-drama which poked satirical fun at people who let their kindly feelings dominate, who saw only good in people though taken advantage of time and again. "Fine Clothes," the picture, tells a human story of the triumph of a fine man's kindliness after repeated disappointments, and lets the sophisticated angle be implied rather than stressed. It has real heart throbs and it has a wealth of humor. Most audiences will like it if it is drastically cut—if it isn't, they may tire before the final clinch.

"Parisian Love"

Gasnier's Newest Production for Schulberg is Romance of Parisian Underworld and Society

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "Parisian Love," his newest production for B. P. Schulberg Productions Inc., Gasnier unfolds a story which centers around an Apache girl who for revenge marries a wealthy man who has kept her lover away from her, and then discloses her real identity. The opening scenes in the Parisian underworld are atmospherically good and of average interest, and include a real fight, as well as a fake one with an element of novelty as it develops the latter was staged to provide excitement for American tourists.

From this point on, the interest lessens considerably as none of the characters develop either strength or the elements that command sympathy. They go through situations shaped by the will of the author rather than logic. For instance, the girl says she can never become a lady. Then with apparent ease she poses as a cultured girl while her slovenly old pal masquerades as her chaperone, and we are asked to believe that she is immediately able to win the love of a cultured man who has withstood the wiles of women of his own class, and this notwithstanding the fact the old woman constantly shows lapses that would give her away. There are several other inconsistencies.

Due to lack of plausibility little interest is developed and the story drags considerably. The outcome is never in doubt and the final romance brought about by the convenient method of a divorce. Some of the underworld scenes are unnecessarily unpleasant in showing human depravity.

The Knifer is killed but Marie escapes and disguising as a maid is employed by Marcel and sees another girl kiss Armand. Determined on revenge, she gets the Apache leader to finance her and poses as a convent-bred girl. She wins Marcel's love and marries him and then tells him of her plot. Armand, who has been in London marketing an invention, returns and Marie flies to his arms. Apaches, believing she has double-crossed them, fire and wound her and Armand nurses her back to health. Marcel goes to America and arranges for a Parisian divorce so that the lovers can be united.

"The Trouble With Wives"

Ford Sterling Runs Away With Paramount's Speedy and Decidedly Amusing Paramount Farce Comedy

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

As spicy as a French domestic farce and yet as clean as a hound's tooth, "The Trouble With Wives" is a fine combination of smart story, good acting and intelligent direction. The lack of any one of these three essentials probably would have made a botch of the idea, but there is nothing lacking, and it stands a delightful farce comedy that will please the sophisticated, amuse the less intelligent and probably not fail even with the dense. Some of it: indeed most of it, should get over even to the dumb bells.

This is an original story by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins and not an adaptation. It is a powerful argument for stories directly for the screen, yet it is an old theme, made appealing through unusually intelligent treatment. Ford Sterling walks away with the honors in the role of a well-meaning but blundering friend who always says and does the wrong thing at the time when it will do the most hurt until the climax is reached when he retrieves his errors through one bold stroke. Sterling has been with us since the days of the Keystone Cops, but he has never done so fine a bit of work. He makes a stressed character drawing seem real, and his pantomimic work is admirable.

Tom Moore is capital and Florence Vidor has a role written to her order and which fits her like a glove. Esther Ralston is good as is Lucy Beaumont in her few scenes, but the bulk of the work is carried by the three first named with Sterling the outstanding character, though his work would lose much were he less ably supported.

The direction will do much to enhance the reputation of Malcolm St. Clair. He never for a moment lets the action sag, but drives steadily to a finish that closes the picture at the highest point of action. "The Trouble With Wives" should prove one of the best box office bets of the season.

Story

William Hyatt has run a shoe store into a "bootery," with a manufacturing plant on the side. He has done it on capital supplied by Al Hennessy who is a diamond in the rough, a well-meaning but giftedly blundering hick. Hyatt is still in the honeymoon stage when Al turns up and, of course, must be introduced to the new wife. He gets in bad about seven minutes later through his revelations of Hyatt's early life and when the latter is called to the 'phone by his pretty fashion designer, Al makes matters worse by reminding his friend that but for him the girl, Dagmar, would have been Mrs. Hennessy. Taking the advice of her aunt, Grace pretends to vamp Al, but her husband does not notice it, and throws Al out, as she hopes. Several times perfectly innocent engagements with Dagmar are "explained" by Al to give the worst possible suggestion but when with awkward good nature he takes Grace in his arms to comfort her, and is discovered by the husband, the denouement comes with speed. William goes to a seaside hotel, where Al presently turns up with his blushing bride, who is none other than Dagmar and Grace, looking for evidence for divorce, finds that her William has been faithful after all.

"A Woman's Faith"

Universal Offers Impressive and Well-Acted Story of a Miracle Wrought Through a Woman's Faith

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Both from a showmanship standpoint and because it is especially appropriate to the theme, Universal made a good move in giving the title, "A Woman's Faith," to the screen version of Clarence Budington Kelland's magazine story, "Miracle," for it is exactly what the film title implies, a woman's faith in God and in the eventual redemption of the unbeliever whom she had learned to love.

It is obvious from the foregoing that there is a deeply religious note in this picture, which should strengthen its appeal for a large proportion of patrons, but even for those who may not be religiously inclined this does not prevent it from being good entertainment, as the keynote strikes at the deepest emotions of which we are capable and there is strong drama in the development.

The attention is captured by the opening scenes which show the hero losing faith in human nature and especially in women because he finds his fiancee in the arms of another man. He leaves the train, buries himself in a wilderness and tries to forget. There is a let-down here and coincidence comes in handy in bringing together this scoffer and a deeply religious girl he met on the train, who is now being hunted for a murder she did not commit.

Although he shows contempt for her belief and prayers and taunts her, against his will he is drawn to help her and in a fight with the villain he goes blind. Finally her supreme belief leads her to decide to face her accusers and this so impresses him he reluctantly agrees to go with her to the famed shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre in Quebec.

This leads up to the climax, which is dramatic and reaches a high pitch of emotional exaltation, in which the girl is shown ascending on her knees the Sacred Stairway, praying devoutly on each step, and as she reaches the last, the hero finds that a miracle has been performed and he has recovered his sight. These scenes are authentic, being filmed at the famous shrine, and are decidedly impressive.

The story is obviously built with the climax in view, and while the situations are not always convincing the interest is held throughout and the depth of the underlying theme always in evidence in the sincere and admirable portrayals of Percy Marmont and Alma Rubens.

As she ascends the Sacred Stairway praying for him, a miracle occurs and Donovan's sight is restored. Neree learns her uncle has confessed to the murder and she and Donovan are wed in the chapel.

"Kiss Me Again"

Lubitsch's Skill Makes This Exceedingly Light Comedy Delightful and Amusing Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Praising the directorial genius of Ernst Lubitsch has gotten to be an old story, but if there is any picture in which the skill of the director is so obviously the main reason for its being thoroughly enjoyable entertainment as in "Kiss Me Again" we fail to recall it.

This Warner Brothers production, suggested by the title of a popular song, has a story of almost fairy-like lightness, and besides its basic idea is not new. A busy husband backslides in showing affection for his wife. She loves music and a musician succeeds in supplying the missing caresses. Hubby agrees to a divorce, musician begins wearing the high hat, a flapper vamps hubby, wifie tires of musician, gets jealous and finally there is a reconciliation.

Of such gossamer-like threads Mr. Lubitsch has woven a picture that is thoroughly amusing. You probably won't laugh out loud many times, but you will find yourself chuckling almost continually. Of course there is some subtlety but most of the humor is perfectly obvious, and it is all decidedly clever. The continental touch is present and one or two situations border on the risque but they have been handled discreetly so that they amuse and do not offend.

It is a delight to watch how Mr. Lubitsch handles his situations; for instance, he takes the simple little point of having the husband strike the wife to provide divorce evidence and makes it one of the highlights of the film. Hubby is shown trying again and again to get up his nerve, and never succeeding even with the aid of several liquid bracers. This keeps up for considerable footage and keeps you chuckling all the time. It is one of the best directed scenes we have ever seen and extremely well acted by Monte Blue. Another gem is where he gets laughs by simply having all the principals pacing up and down the floor absorbed in deep thought.

While every scene is either interesting or amusing, even Mr. Lubitsch's skill will not keep many patrons from wishing the story ould develop faster in the early reels, but the latter portion more than makes up for this and your final reaction is one of amused satisfaction.

The performances of Marie Prevost and Monte Blue in the leading roles are excellent and leave nothing to be desired. Thoroughly satisfactory too are the portrayals of John Roche as the musician, Willard Louis as the lawyer and Clara Bow as the flapper vamp. But after all it is the way in which Mr. Lubitsch has developed the clever and amusing comedy possibilities to their utmost that make this picture one what should prove thoroughly pleasing for all classes of patrons and delight the sophisticated and students of the drama.

Story by Hans Kraely.
Directed by Ernst Lubitsch.
Length, 6,722 feet.

Story

The Fleurys live in Paris and Gaston pays more attention to his newspaper and business than to his wife, Loulou, and she becomes enamoured of Maurice, a temperamental musician. Gaston takes his lawyer's advice and tries to be romantic but his motive is misunderstood, so he becomes disgusted and tells Loulou and Maurice he will arrange a divorce. Cruelty is to be the ground, but Gaston cannot go through with it, so it is decided there must be another woman. Loulou immediately gets jealous. Maurice immediately starts to acting as if he owned the place, and resents Gaston's presence and tells him to keep away. Gaston is lured by a Grizette to take her out one evening and Loulou sees them apparently happy. She leaves Maurice and goes to Gaston's hotel and he plays up the affair as if the other woman was in the next room. Loulou learns the truth when the girl comes back for her handbag. Finally Gaston and Loulou make up and return home, and prepare to retire. Maurice, waiting in the parlor, starts to play the piano and Gaston, in pajamas, tells him to play more softly. Maurice, thoroughly angry, disappears from the scene.

"Lady Robinhood"

Evelyn Brent an Appealing Personality in Exciting F. B. O. Melodrama

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Lady Robinhood," an F. B. O. melodrama directed by Ralph Ince, presents Evelyn Brent in one of her best roles—that of a masked woman Robin Hood of high birth who secretly punishes the rich with whom she associates and alleviates the sufferings of the poor by night-ridings. The subject is frankly melodrama laid in a fictitious country, and as such very interesting and thrilling.

Miss Brent injects a lot of pep into her work. She is a swashbuckling, fearless woman bandit as she dashes across country on her white horse or scales adobe buildings in the best Fairbanks style. Then, at home among the rich, posing as a languid invalid, she gets over another effective bit of acting.

Romance is introduced through the device of an American visitor to this country. He is the owner of large mines. This part is acted by Robert Ellis and his work is satisfactory without being impressive. Boris Karloff makes a vicious dictator and William Humphrey supplies good comedy relief.

Of course the hairbreadth escapes of the heroine tax credulity, but Miss Brent performs them with a snap and verve that will endear her to patrons of melodrama. One of the best scenes deals with her temporary capture and the discovery of her identity; other good scenes follow when she and her followers ride to the rescue of the American as he faces a firing squad.

Story

In a certain foreign province the peasants are cruelly treated. Senorita Catalina, ward of the governor, poses as an invalid but secretly avenges injustices and plans a revolution. As the masked bandit she is known as La Ortega. An American, Hugh Winthrop, comes to inspect his mines. She captures him but he escapes and meets her again at the governor's. La Ortega steals important papers and sends them off as evidence of injustice. Hugh falls in love with her. They are caught together and the senorita recognized as La Ortega. She escapes and collects her followers as Hugh is led before a firing squad. She returns just in time. The governor and his henchmen are brought to justice.

"I Remember"

(Short Films—Pastoral—Two Reels)

As this picture unfolds upon the screen, there will be many who will recall the beautiful little poem by Thomas Hood upon which it is based. It pictures a simple little narrative of a Sunday in the life of a happy-go-lucky care-free country boy. This little lad is shown digging bait to go fishing accompanied by his faithful little dog. The boy's dream of coming pleasure is rudely shattered when his mother makes him "dress up" for church, but he sneaks away and has a few stolen pleasures at the brook before he reaches the church. Then there follow scenes of other childish pleasures, the old swimming hole, the swing with the lad doing "stunts" while his little lame brother looks on wonderingly. Mr. Venturini who made this film has retained the charm of the delightful poem and succeeded in picturing the real joy of living that the little lad feels. There is no attempt at a story or to inject drama, but in its place is realism and human interest. There are several excellent touches as for instance where the lad kisses his little sweetheart and throws his hat in the air and turns handsprings as he runs away, also where he gets sick in the swing. Altogether, it is a delightful little film.—C. S. S.

Harry D. Buckley Tells How and Why "Don Q" Set New Broadway Precedent

WITH the end of the world premiere showing in New York of the new Douglas Fairbanks feature, "Don Q, Son of Zorro," which closed a most unusual eight weeks of capacity business at the Globe Theatre on August 9th, Harry D. Buckley, personal business representative for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, and member of the board of United Artists Corporation, was asked to give his views as to the reasons for the exceptional summer business done by this production.

"The answer is brief, and may best be summed up this way," said Mr. Buckley, "A star who now is greater than he ever was in a picture that fits the public taste exactly —a production that hits the public bull's-eye, and unceasing work with the requirements of the box-office constantly in mind.

"In the first place," Mr. Buckley continued, "and even before the cutting and titling of 'Don Q' had been finished, it was generally agreed that this latest Fairbanks production would prove a big success. The first problem to be solved was when to release the film for the world premiere showing. To go into a Broadway house in September seemed the easiest way. No doubt then of tremendous crowds and an indefinite run.

"But the interests of exhibitors all over the country had to be given proper consideration, as well as the success of the world premiere. These exhibitors would want the picture for early fall showings. The question then resolved itself into one of a summer opening on Broadway.

"Such a situation is not pleasant to contemplate—when one visualizes crowds going to the beaches, to the country on week-ends and vacations; a general exodus from the big city.

"Mr. Fairbanks wanted a summer opening. 'Why not?' he asked. 'If the picture can stand up at all it should be able to do its bit on Broadway in summer as well as in winter. People certainly need fun and relaxation, more in summer than in the cool weather. Let's get a cool, comfortable theatre and go ahead.'

HARRY D. BUCKLEY

"So we made our arrangements. A deal was closed with the Globe Theatre for a run of eight weeks. This seemed like the best possible proposition, for the Globe has a removable roof and a splendid cooling system. Our opening date was set for June 15.

"We knew we had good music, because Mortimer Wilson, a composer of note, had written the score on the lot while the picture was being made, and he also was to conduct an orchestra of symphonic musicians.

"'What of the prologue?' was another question that popped up. It must have something strong and that would strike the keynote of the play. Here again Mr. Fairbanks came to our rescue. An Australian stock whip is used in the picture—used in dramatic moments and for big stunts. It was something new on the screen. Fairbanks had become an expert in wielding it just for the purposes of this picture. He thought the whip should form a strong part of the prologue. Briefly, he outlined the act as it was put on at the Globe—a scene in Spain, a Spanish dancer, a whip expert, singing and dancing all welded into a cort of operetta.

"When we came to New York our plans were pretty well all set. Norris Wilcox was chosen as company manager, and Mark Larkin was brought on to handle advertising, publicity and exploitation.

Mr. Buckley then went on to explain how general publicity on the opening was started one month in advance; billboards put up seven days in advance, and newspaper advertising started on the Wednesday before the opening date, Monday, June 15.

"The first night, of course, was a tremendous success and the attendance held up right along. We knew we had one of the biggest successes ever achieved by a great star; but we also knew that we had to keep the public forming lines at the box-office. We stood constantly to keep the human tidal wave moving.

"What amazed us most was that the crowds kept right on coming, even in the hottest weather. There was one spell when the heat records for New York for years We did a capacity business all through that were broken. This lasted some ten days. period. In fact, it seemed as if the crowds came into the theatre to laugh and forget the heat."

"This was an astounding situation. It overturned Broadway traditions to the effect that folks cannot be driven into a picture house on the Great White Way during hot weather.

"Later on, and any time there were signs of any let-up in any way in business, high pressure methods were applied. We arranged a Spanish Night, when standing room was sold, and there was a big pick-up in the attendance for days afterward."

When Douglas Fairbanks in "Don Q" finished a record-breaking run of eight weeks at the Globe Theatre all of those who had anything to do with the New York engagement gathered on the stage (center) and there was a "farewell party." Most of this force went to Boston, where "Don Q" opens at the Colonial Theatre on August 17th, for a limited engagement of one month. At left and right are pictures of the street turnout for "Don Q," with W. P. O'Grote, ex-cowboy and one of the Roosevelt Rough Riders, up. O'Grote rode the white horse up and down Broadway and through other sections of the city, creating much comment. These pictures show the rider and his horse in front of the Globe.

Associated Exhibitors Guarantees Next Season's Product, Says Woody

"ANNUAL statements are usually written in superlatives. Mine is written in negatives."

So begins an official communication issued this week by John S. Woody, president of Associated Exhibitors.

"We are making a guarantee of next season's product and it has been interpreted in some quarters as applying unreservedly to any and all conditions. This, of course, is wrong. We're trying to make the guarantee mean something, which it could not possibly do if it was without limitation of any sort.

"What is desired is to give the exhibitor who buys without screening definite assurance against being oversold and to provide him with specific means of obtaining redress. If the buyer is too sanguine about values, if the product is misrepresented, or if for any other reason the pictures do not measure up to the box office standards which are established by competing product, he can apply for an adjustment. And if he doesn't get it promptly he can take us before his local Film Board of Trade and bring us to time.

Will Not Find Redress Necessary

"Many persons told me during the Milwaukee Convention that they did not understand how we could afford to make any sort of guarantee of results from motion pictures. A few persons have even asked where the joker is. There seem to be so many tricks practised that such a simple thing as a guarantee doesn't always get credit for being even an evidence of good faith.

"The peculiar thing about our warranty is that in order for it to serve us advantageously we must release pictures of such high average quality that a guarantee is unnecessary. In other words, what leads us to say to exhibitors that they can obtain adjustments, if adjustments are justified, is our confidence that nobody who runs our pictures will ever find it necessary to apply for redress. Frankly, we don't expect the guarantee to cost us one cent.

"But don't forget that if we should unfortunately find it necessary to make price concessions after pictures were played, we would be doing nothing more than is done by merchants, distributors and manufacturers in other lines of business. If we can't deliver product which will stand the market test we have no reason to expect success. And if we sell Class C pictures for Class A rentals, the exhibitor is entitled to redress.

Guarantee is Not Revolutionary

"It should not be assumed, however, that our guarantee is sweeping, revolutionary or all-inclusive. We are not proposing to do anything which we do not believe it is good business to do. We are not only willing but anxious to have our productions compared with other pictures, yet we are not in position to say that rentals, days of the week, and other important factors in determining box office results need not be taken fully into consideration in determining whether value has been given. We don't make absurd statements, but we do insist that our pictures will show equally as well as, or better than, any other one brand of product which is played on similar days of the week and during the same months. We welcome that sort of competition, whatever its source.

"I don't want anyone to be misled by hasty reading of our guarantee or by inadequate consideration of its terms. I am trying to build good will—to pave the way for long continued, happy business relationships, and that can't be done by seeming to promise something and then walking out later through a loophole or technicality. That's exactly why I'm laying especial stress on the negative side of this proposition instead of coming out in blazing language with a lot of verbiage and persiflage.

"And the point I want to emphasize above all others is that Associated Exhibitors does not guarantee individual pictures. I've seen all of our first ten releases for the 1925-1926 season and personally I consider them good, trustworthy pictures. But I'm not guaranteeing what the box-office results would be from playing them individually in theatres of different classes and clientele throughout the country. As a matter of fact I don't think all of the so-called blood-and-thunder houses would likely find them highly profitable because they have been made with first-run patronage in mind.

Every Production an Experiment

"If there were any individual in the world who could say with definiteness, in advance, that a certain story, made in a certain way, under certain direction and with a designated cast would be generally successful at the box office, then the issuing of guarantees would be simple. But the known fact of the matter is that every production is to a certain extent an experiment. There are many pictures made every year which the producers and directors confidently and honestly expect to bring large revenue, but which really are not as profitable to exhibitors, distributors or producers as productions which are much less pretentious. Hence, so far as relationships of the exhibitor and the distributor are concerned, the only fair method is to figure results on a basis of averages.

Previewing Removes Guarantee

"I think it also should be clear that a theatre which insists upon previewing before buying does not need, and is not entitled to, a guarantee. It has happened in my personal dealings that an exhibitor and I have differed in opinion about the value of a picture. He may concede it is a pretty good production, but may have doubts about whether it will appeal to his special patronage. Knowing what the picture is doing nationally, and feeling that the exhibitor is mistaken in his contention, I have not infrequently given individual picture guarantees. But cases of this sort are very different. Guarantees such as these are given to effect sales in the face of honest belief that the pictures ought not to be used. I certainly would not give à guarantee to an exhibitor who had seen a picture and bargained for it on a basis of what he considered it to be worth. Nor do I imagine for a moment that any reasonable buyer would expect such a concession.

"Our guarantee is a very plain and definite statement. It has been published in a booklet, printed in advertising and in the trade press and should be carefully read in order that there may be no misunderstanding of its terms. The important thing to remember, regardless of what contrary impression may prevail, is that it is given only to exhibitors who purchase a minimum of twenty-four pictures without previewing."

Strong Guarantee Is Feature of Associated's New Selling Policy

A GUARANTEE that its productions will compare favorably in box office returns with other brands of pictures used by the same theatre is the feature of Associated Exhibitors' 1925-1926 selling policy.

This guarantee, which is given to all purchasers of a minimum of twenty-four productions, specifies that the buyer will be entitled to an adjustment of rentals if the box office returns from any group of eight or more Associated Exhibitors' pictures are not as large as the returns from any other brand of productions used in the theatre during the same months and on the same days of the week.

It is especially provided in the guarantee, a copy of which appears on this page, that it may be used by the exhibitor in Film Boards of Trade actions and will be binding against the distributor.

Associated Exhibitors' sales policy, according to an official statement, has been designed to provide for buying either with or without previewing and in individual units, small blocks or large groups.

The exhibitor who desires to preview can see at least eight pictures at a time, all several weeks prior to release date, and may use this product over a four-month period.

The exhibitor who does not care to preview may purchase the entire season's output, and because of the fact that he buys upon the distributor's representation of quality, in advance of box office testing of values, he will be covered by the distributor's guarantee.

It is stipulated that the guarantee is not given if pictures are previewed or if less than twenty-four are purchased. The explanation for this is that the buyer who looks at the pictures before purchasing is banking on his own judgment and should know what he is doing. The reason given for not applying the guarantee to sales of fewer than twenty-four pictures is that the guarantee is not intended to cover individual releases, but is based upon averages—upon general expectations from a season's product.

To make honest guarantees possible, it was necessary to provide more than ordinary production safeguards. And these were established, it is asserted, through the cooperation of producers and the distributor. The production contracts are said all to make definite provisions for meeting market requirements.

There has been frank discussion, from production, distribution and exhibition angles, of every detail of manufacture. The story has first been selected. Then a continuity has been worked out. Following that, costs have been budgeted, sets have been designed and directors and casts have been selected. Every step has been separately discussed and mutually agreed upon, and all preliminary details have been fully arranged prior to production being started.

It is the belief, both of Associated Exhibitors and of the producers whom it represents, that every reasonable precaution has been taken to insure high grade productions of uniform quality. But it is conceded by the distributor that even the most extraordinary safeguards will not prevent errors and that the greatest care which it is possible to exercise will not invariably produce big box office successes. Hence, the arrangement for advance deliveries which make previewing possible. Hence, also, the decision to give a guarantee and thereby force the pictures to measure up to reasonable requirements or pay the penalty in revenue losses.

The first eight pictures, and part of the second group, have already been delivered and all of the first eight have been shipped to the exchanges. They have been passed upon, in completed form, by a reviewing committee comprising fifteen persons and have been accepted unanimously. Some of them have had as many as four or five theatre previews before audiences and it is declared that in all instances, they have been well received.

Of the second group of pictures there probably will be ten. All of these are either completed or nearly so. They are to be available for screening in September or October and will be scheduled for release during December, January, February and March.

The third group is contracted and has reached the stage where final discussion of production plans are being conducted. Stories have been selected, casts and directors engaged and other preliminary details completed. This group will be screened in December or January and will be released during April, May, June and July of next year.

Detailed statements of casts are required from producers, this being the basis upon which valuations are fixed. Auditors, representing the distributor are in the studios from the moment production starts until it is completed. According to Associated Exhibitors, it appears that the first eight productions have cost between $850,000 and $900,000, or an average of around $109,000. The least expensive one has involved an outlay of close to $60,000 and the biggest one about $200,000. The cost of selling, physical distributions and advertising, added to the production cost, with a percentage for profit, will place the average exhibition value at between $200,000 and $300,000.

Big Exterior Setting Constructed in Studios

One of the most prententious exterior settings ever constructed in an Eastern studio is that built at the Diamont Studio in Fort Lee, for an important sequence in "Lovers' Island," a new Associated Exhibitors picture.

The setting, which represents a mountain valley with a lily pond and waterfall, also includes real growing trees. It is estimated that over one hundred wagon loads of earth and rock were carted to the studio stages, where the transplanted trees grew just the same as though they were out of doors. The entire setting covered a floor space of 70 by 130 feet.

"All the credit for this piece of workmanship should go to my staff of studio mechanics," said Mr. Berger. A great part of the production of "Lovers' Island" takes place at the waterfall and my staff realizing that there would be many delays due to weather, decided to build the set in the studio and not be dependent upon the uncertainty of sunlight."

Associated Exhibitors' Guarantee

THIS is to certify that Associated Exhibitors, Inc., in consideration of having sold a minimum of twenty-four (24) motion pictures for the 1925-1926 season without the same having been previewed, does hereby guarantee as follows to the purchaser,

.....
(Name of Exhibitor)
.....
(Exhibitor's Theatre)
.....
(City and State)

First, that Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will not include in the said twenty-four (24) or more productions sold as aforesaid any picture which it does not believe is of the quality or box office value to insure its profitable use by the purchaser, and

Secondly, if the box office returns from any group of eight or more pictures are not as great, in proportion to the rentals paid, as the returns from any other brand of pictures which is played in the same house, during the same months and on corresponding days of the week, then said rentals shall be adjusted, upon application of the purchaser. Application for adjustment shall be made not earlier than one day nor later than fifteen days after the playing of the last picture in the unsatisfactory group. The adjustment of rental shall be made within thirty (30) days after the filing of the application.

Thirdly, it is further agreed by Associated Exhibitors, Inc. that this guarantee shall be considered a portion of the contract with the aforementioned purchaser of next season's service and may be used in any proceeding affecting the rental of these pictures which is started by the purchaser before a Film Board of Trade.

Twenty-four Features and Four Big Specials Are Listed by Associated

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS has assembled for the 1925-1926 season a strong array of productions, in which story values, prominent cast names, and abundance of showmanship angles combine to assure box office success. In all there will be a minimum of twenty-four features and four big specials. These will be released at the rate of two each month, in groups of not less than eight each. Production work on the Associated Exhibitors program of releases for the new season has been going forward steadily during the past several months with the result that the company is able to advise the exhibitors of the country that its productions will be available for screening several weeks in advance of release dates.

Heading the Associated Exhibitors' first group of eight is "Never Weaken," starring Harold Lloyd, which will be released the first part of August. "Never Weaken" is one of the "Popular Demand Series" of Harold Lloyd successes. This three-reel comedy was directed by Hal Roach and Fred Newmeyer and presents Mildred Davis, the present Mrs. Harold Lloyd, in the leading feminine role with Roy Brooks, Mark Jones and Charles Stevenson in the supporting cast.

Also scheduled for August release is "Manhattan Madness" with Jack Dempsey, World's Heavyweight Champion, and his wife Estelle Taylor in the co-starring roles. This story was done by Douglas Fairbanks in the early days of his starring career and proved a great box-office success. It was considered an even more ideal vehicle for Dempsey, and the results achieved are said to bear out this prediction in every respect.

The story, which was written by Charles T. and Frank Dazey, deals humorously with the experiences of a cowboy who comes to New York and is given some unexpected thrills through the connivance of some Eastern friends. Dempsey is given plenty of opportunity to register in the sort of work that the fans would like to see the ring champion engage in, including a fistic encounter and rough-and-tumble match with Bull Montana which is a veritable whirlwind of action. There is a strong thread of romantic interest running throughout the story in which Estelle Taylor appears as the heroine opposite her world-famous husband. George Seigman, Frank Campeau, Nelson McDowell, Bill Franey, Dean Markham, Theodore Lorch, Tom Wilson, Glenn Cavender, Jane Starr, Robert Graves, Christian Frank and Harry Tenbrook are also cast in this special production.

"Camille of the Barbary Coast" will appear on the Associated Exhibitors program for August as a Hugh Dierker production with Mae Busch and Owen Moore heading the cast. This feature picture is adapted from Forrest Halsey's published story of underworld life in the old Barbary Coast section of San Francisco. Besides the featured players the cast comprises Burr McIntosh, Fritzi Brunette, Harry T. Morey, Dorothy King and Tammany Young.

Monty Banks, star of Associated Exhibitors' box-office success, "Racing Luck," makes his debut on the 1925-1926 program of releases in "Keep Smiling," described as a comedy thriller. This is a motor-boat story by Monty Banks, Herman Raymaker and Clyde Bruckman. The feature comedy was produced at the Cecil B. de Mille Studios

Bottom row: Eileen Percy and Tom Moore in "Under the Rouge" and Glenn Hunter and Edna Murphy in "His Buddy's Wfie."

Many Prominent Directors Working on Associated's Pictures for Next Season

A REPRESENTATIVE group of the well-known directors are identified with the production program of Associated Exhibitors for the coming season.

Among those who will be responsible for the direction of pictures under the Associated Exhibitors' banner are Hal Roach, E. H. Griffith, Tom Terriss, S. E. V. Taylor, Stuart Paton, Arthur F. Beck, Wallace Worsley, John McDermott, Fred Newmeyer, Henri Diamant Berger, Hugh Dierker, Nat Ross, Louis H. Moomaw, Albert Austin and Gilbert W. Pratt.

Hal Roach and Fred Newmeyer are responsible for the direction of the Harold Lloyd comedies in the Associated Exhibitors' "Popular Demand" Series, including the tried and proved laugh-makers "Never Weaken," "I Do" and "Among Those Present." Roach is too well known to need mention of his directorial achievements, and Newmeyer has been associated with him in many of them.

E. H. Griffith directed "Headlines" by Dorian Neve, which is in the first Associated Exhibitors' group and will probably make several other productions. Griffith began his directing career with Vitagraph and has made features for all the big releasing companies.

Tom Terriss who made "His Buddy's Wife" a T. Howard Kelly story, in the first group, is a former English actor-manager who has achieved distinction in the American directorial field, beginning this work with World Film. Recently, he was signed by Famous Players-Lasky to head their new Players School.

S. E. V. Taylor produced "The Miracle of Life" of the second group, from a published story of Olga Printzlow. Taylor is a veteran director who started with the original Biograph, and has made pictures with D. W. Griffith, Metro and many others. His pictures made for Universal with Marion Leonard as the star were some of the best of the early-day productions.

Stuart Paton is now making "The Lady From Hell," a Western drama for Associated Exhibitors. Paton began his screen career as a scenario editor for Universal, advanced to assistant directorship for that company and soon became a full-fledged director. He has made innumerable features including "Bavu," "Man to Man," and "Scarlet Car."

Wallace Worsley, director of "Two Gates" a melodrama by Henry Chapman Ford, has produced a long list of features.

The producer Arthur F. Beck, also made the recent Associated Exhibitors' feature, "Barriers Burned Away."

John McDermott guided Jack Dempsey in "Manhattan Madness" in the first group. This director started his screen work as an actor with Universal, for whom he later directed thirty pictures. He has produced many features, among them "The Spider and the Rose," "Patsy" and "Dinty."

Henri Diamont Berger directed "Fifty-Fifty" of the first group and "Lovers' Island" of the second group—the former from Allan Dwan's story and the latter from the pen of T. Howard Kelly. Berger is a Parisian artist and director who has decided to continue picture making in the United States, having leased the former Paragon Studio for this purpose.

Hugh Dierker made "Camille of the Barbary Coast," an underworld drama of the old Barbary Coast based upon a published story by Forrest Halsey. This is among the first group.

Nat Ross is working upon "Two Can Play," a romantic adventure story published in the Saturday Evening Post, which is scheduled for the second group. Ross has been directing for over eight years, among his pictures being "The Ghost Patrol," "The Galloping Kind," and "Never Let Go."

Louis H. Moomaw made "Under the Rouge," an underworld drama to be released in the first group. He will be particularly remembered for his production of "The Chechahcos," the first and only feature produced entirely in Alaska. Moomaw has had extensive experience in filming, starting with one-reel comedies. He was two years with Burton Holmes. His features include "The Golden Trail" and "The Deceiver."

Albert Austin and Gilbert Pratt co-directed "Keep Smiling," in which Howard Estabrook stars Monty Banks. Austin was associated for some time with Charles Chaplin and appeared prominently in "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms." He has directed comedies. Pratt began his screen work in the Kalem ranks and on becoming a director made a name for himself in the direction of comedies, including the "Hall Room Boys," Lloyd Hamilton and Monty Banks short fun-films. With these two experienced makers of comedies in the role of co-directors, "Keep Smiling" is sure to be well-taken care of from the angle of laugh-provoking gags and action.

As Associated Exhibitors plans to release several Specials during the coming season, it is expected that a number of other prominent screen directors will be added to their roster of producers in the near future.

McIntosh Gives Fine Portrayal in His Newest Film

Burr McIntosh, veteran of the stage and screen, offers one of the outstanding acting performances of his long career in the role of Henry Norton, a wealthy banker, in "Camille of the Barbary Coast," a new Associated Exhibitors' production.

In every scene in which he appears, McIntosh commands attention by his restraint in acting a character part which might easily have been overplayed.

Character parts are this player's forte and his screen portrayals were preceded by a list of sterling stage characterizations.

In Prominent Role

Malcolm McGregor, one of the most popular young screen stars, is prominently cast in "Headlines" a newspaper romance produced by St. Regis Pictures Corporation for release by Associated Exhibitors in the first group of eight pictures to be released next season.

McGregor plays the role of Lawrence Emmett, who at the climax of the film marries Phillis Dale, who is portrayed by Alice Joyce, who is starred in the production.

Betty Compson Signed

Betty Compson, one of the most popular stars of the screen who has been seen in a long list of Paramount pictures, has been signed to star in LeRoy Scott's exciting story "Counsel for the Defence," which will be produced on the West Coast for Associated Exhibitors under the direction of Burton King.

Associated's Features

at Culver City and the F. B. O. Studios in Hollywood under the direction of Albert Austin and Gilbert W. Pratt. Anne Cornwall will appear opposite Monty Banks, and the supporting cast will comprise Robert Edeson, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Martha Franklin, Syd Crossley, Glen Cavender, Ruth Holly and Mrs. Tom Forman. "Keep Smiling" will be released in six reels.

Hope Hampton is starred in "Fifty-Fifty," a colorful society drama with scenes laid in both France and America.

One of the season's strongest arrays of screen talent has been lined up for the production of Lewis H. Moomaw's initial contribution to the Associated Exhibitors' 1925-1926 program. This picture, to be released under the title of "Under the Rouge," is an underworld drama but with a distinct departure from the usual backgrounds associated with this type of production.

"Headlines" is a dramatic chapter from the exciting experiences of a woman reporter on a metropolitan newspaper.

"His Buddy's Wife" is a story written by T. Howard Kelly, which the Smart Set Magazine published serially. It's romance, pure and simple, with heart interest that will "get" the most seasoned fan—a story of a man's sacrifice for a friend. Glenn Hunter has the featured role and this exceptionally talented and favorite actor is supported by a cast which includes Edna Murphy, Douglas Gilmore, Flora Finch and Marcia Harris. The production was directed by Tom Terriss.

"I Do," is another of the Harold Lloyd revivals. It is from an original story by Sam Taylor, and directed by Hal Roach and Fred Newmeyer.

"Lovers' Island" is another T. Howard Kelly story which was published by Smart Set Magazine. It is strong romance, with many sea scenes, and is based upon an uncle's endeavors to keep his niece in the straight and narrow way.

"Two Gates" is a crook melodrama from a thrilling story by Henry Chapman Ford. Clara Bow heads the cast and is supported by Ralph Lewis, Forrest Stanley, John Sanipolis, William V. Mong, Eddie Lyons, George Cooper, Helen Dunbar and Arthur Rankin. Arthur F. Beck produced the picture and Wallace Worsley directed.

"Among Those Present" is a three-reel Harold Lloyd production; one of the Popular Demand Series.

"Two Can Play" is a Saturday Evening Post serial from the pointed pen of Gerald Mygatt. Associated Exhibitors officials feel that here they have a story which was made to order for a motion picture. Clara Bow plays the girl and Allan Forrest the boy. Nat Ross is the director.

"Who Said So?" is another Monty Banks feature comedy.

"The Miracle of Life" is a high-class, well-mounted, problem society drama. Olga Printzlow wrote the story, which is a guarantee that it is rich in interesting dramatic situations. In the cast are Mae Busch, Percy Marmont and Nita Naldi. The director is S. E. V. Taylor. It is now being cast for January delivery and April release.

"The Pinch Hitter" is a big production of a well known and highly successful subject. Glenn Hunter plays the lead. Oscar Price is the producer.

"The Lady From Hell" was made on the Pacific Coast by Stuart Paton and the cast includes Blanche Sweet, Roy Stewart, Frank Elliot and Ralph Lewis. It is a part-Western story.

A Strongheart Production, is to be produced by Howard Estabrooke and Jane Murfin with a special cast of well known actors.

"A Million Dollar Doll" is from the novel by Mrs. W. N. Williamson. It is to be made on a very large and elaborate scale commensurate with the $40,000 cost of the story. It is a St. Regis production for Winter delivery.

"Hearts and Fists" is a most exceptional Northwoods drama with thrills enough for a serial. It is based upon a novel by Clarence Buddington Kelland and was first published serially in the American Magazine.

"The Clod Hopper" stars Glenn Hunter and exhibitors can well imagine what he will do to a role of this sort.

"Blue Beard" is from the novel by Owen Johnson and is to be made by St. Regis immediately following "A Million Dollar Doll."

"Shine Inside" is another laugh riot in which Monty Banks will have the support of a big cast of fun makers and stunt artists.

"A Woman Scorned" was made in England with an American cast and under an American director. Cosmopolitan Productions, Ltd., is the producer.

"Her Husband's Wife" is a society drama for delivery early in the Spring of 1926.

Big List of Stars

Stanhope Wheatcroft, Mrs. Tom Forman, Glenn Cavender, Syd Crossley, Ruth Holly and Martha Franklin.

Tom Moore appears to advantage as a star in "Under the Rouge." Eileen Percy appears opposite him and the cast also has Mary Alden, Claire de Lorez, Chester Conklin, Bruce Guerin, Carmelita Geraghty, Eddie Phillips, Peggy Prevost, James Mason, William V. Mong, Tom Gallery, Aileen Manning, William Dills and Stanley Blystone.

Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion, holds a star role in "Manhattan Madness" with Estelle Taylor as his leading woman. Dempsey is not new to the screen but appears as a feature star for the first time in this attraction. The Dempsey cast is large: George Siegman, Frank Campeau, Nelon McDowell, Jane Starr, Bull Montana, Christian Fank, Glenn Cavender, Tom Wilson, Robert Graves, Bill Franey, Dean Markham, Harry Tenbrook and Theodore Lorch.

Alice Joyce, one of the early favorites of the cinema who is at the height of her popularity, stars in "Headlines," a newspaper story, Miss Joyce's screen successes date from the Kalem days, and her name is sure to attract the real movie fans to the theatre. Harry T. Morey, Malcolm McGregor, Elliott Nugent, Ruby Blaine, Virginia Lee Corbin, Johnny Hudgins and his revue and Miss Nobody from Nowhere are prominently cast.

Clara Bow, one of the brightest of the newer constellation of stars, will be seen in "Two Can Play" and "Two Gates." Miss Bow will be remembered for her work in "The Adventurous Sex" for Associated Exhibitors. In "Two Can Play," Allan Forrest heads the supporting cast and in "Two Gates," Ralph Lewis, John Sanipolis, William V. Mong, Eddie Lyons, George Cooper, Helen Dunbar, Arthur Rankin and Forrest Stanley are listed prominently.

Blanche Sweet and Roy Stewart will have the leading roles in "The Lady From Hell," which is based upon a story entitled, "The Lord of Double B." They are supported by Frank Elliot, Ralph Lewis, Margaret Campbell, Templar Saxe, Edgar Norton, Hardee Kirkland, Ruth King and Allan Sears.

Strongheart, noted canine star will be seen in an outdoors picture full of opportunity for him to exhibit his almost-human ability to carry the action at high speed.

Egyptian Theatre Continues Comedies

The third all-Pathe comedy circus to be staged by the Egyptian Theatre in San Francisco drew capacity business during the week beginning July 25, convincing the theatre management that these short subject bills are what the public likes in the way of screen entertainment.

The program included the following Pathe short subjects: Harry Langdon as the "shoot-'em-up-kid" in "Horace Greeley, Jr.," a Principal Pictures production; "Our Gang" in "Boys Will Be Joys," produced by Hal Roach; Alice Day in "Tee for Two," her first two-reel starring comedy under the Mack Sennett management; and "Yes! Yes! Nanette," a Hal Roach one-reeler with Jimmie Finlayson prominent in the cast.

So positive was the management that the show was full of comedy that they offered "Your Money Back If You Don't Laugh" in their advance billing.

In addition to the newspaper and other regular advertising, bright circus heralds printed in brilliant red upon vivid yellow stock were distributed broadcast throughout the city. On the bottom of the herald was a coupon for children which admitted them for 5 cents between the hours of ten and three.

New Artclass Exchange

Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that the Artclass-Renown Pictures Exchange in Indianapolis will be open for business this week at 432-434 North Illinois street. This Artclass Exchange will be under the active direction of Renown and will be temporarily controlled from the Chicago office. This branch will handle the three series made by Buddy Roosevelt, Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Wally Wales, which are released under the Artclass trademark, and the eight Leo Maloney Western Gems, which are being distributed by Weiss Brothers' Clarion Photoplays, Inc. Exhibitors will be enabled to deal directly with the distributor and will be enabled to get the very best of service in prints and accessories.

Finishes "Winding Stair"

John Griffith Wray has just completed "The Winding Stair," the first picture under his contract with Fox. Edmund Lowe portrays the role of a gallant young officer in the French Foreign Legion in Morocco. Alma Rubens plays the leading role opposite him, that of a dancing girl in a Casablanca cafe. Others in the cast are Mahlon Hamilton, Chester Conklin, Emily Fitzroy and Warner Oland. Julian La Motho wrote the scenario.

Harriett Hammond Signed

Harriett Hammond, recently hailed by Elinor Glyn as "the loveliest blonde in pictures," has been signed by Hunt Stromberg under a long term contract. She will make her debut as a Stromberg featured player as Harry Carey's leading woman in "The Man From Red Gulch," a picturization of Bret Harte's "The Idyl of Red Gulch."

Ben Verschleiser Buys Site For Theatre in Los Angeles

CONSIDERABLE interest is attached to the purchase of the property at the corner of Ninth and Hill Streets, Los Angeles, Calif., by Ben Verschleiser. It is understood that more than a million dollars is involved in the transacttion. There are several buildings on the property but these will be razed. In an interview, Sam Verschleiser, who is now in New York made the following statement:

"My father and I have purchased the property in Los Angeles at Ninth and Hill streets, which is one of the choice locations in the city, being in the theatre district and one block distant from Pantages Theatre. It is our intention to build a modern motion picture theatre on the site with a capacity of three thousand seats. The theatre will be used exclusively for first run independent productions and with us in the venture will be George Davis and Sam Briskin of Banner Productions and Henry Ginsberg of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation.

"Inasmuch as I am supervising production of the Banner pictures the personal interests of my father and myself are closely allied with these gentleman and a tentative agreement was reached during the recent visit of Mr. Ginsberg to the coast.

"The theatre will be the last word in modern advancement with every convenience for the patron. Building will commence as soon as our attorney determines the status of leases held by tenants of the property. I expect to have full information and can give a more detailed statement."

Paramount Announces "The Song and Dance Man"

ONE of the biggest of George M. Cohan's stage successes, "The Song and Dance Man," has been purchased as a motion picture vehicle for production by Herbert Brenon, it was announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production.

"The Song and Dance Man" is the last play in which George M. Cohan was seen on the stage. He wrote and produced the play, and for an entire season in New York City it continued one of the big hits.

The theme of "The Song and Dance Man" is the sacrifice that a poor vaudeville performer makes for his partner who has been gassed in the war and is unable to "hoof it" any more; and for a girl who is trying to "break in" on Broadway. He has tried for years and failed, but he helps the girl realize her ambitions. The humor, and it is typically George M. Cohan, comes from the unfaltering conceit of the "Song and Dance Man."

A modern sea nymph, Cecille Evans, meets a nomad of the waves, George Walsh, and thereby is romance born in "Blue Blood," second of a series of comedy dramas in which Walsh is being starred by the Chadwick Pictures Corporation.

Rowland Says First National's Prospects Were Never So Bright As They Are Today

"NEVER, in the history of First National, have the prospects been as bright as they are today," said General Manager Richard A. Rowland, before leaving for his quarterly visit to the West Coast studios, Monday afternoon. "This is not an idle prediction but one based on the solid facts of story value, star value and all-star value. We are far enough ahead of our production schedule to know that the promises which I made a few months ago will be more than fulfilled in actual box-office results.

"First National has maintained and will continue to maintain a policy whereby both variety and quality are assured in its productions. An essential feature of this policy is a fifty-fifty split, or approximately that, between pictures made by individual producers and those turned out by our own production units on the East and West Coasts. I believe this to be an ideal arrangement in that it enables us to profit by the ideas and craftsmanship of a large number of producers rather than depending upon the abilities of a one-man organization.

"Contrary to reports that have arisen from time to time, First National continues and will continue to welcome the best of the product made available by outside sources.

"In speaking of the star value of First National pictures which will be available in coming months, I point with confidence to the drawing power of such stars as Colleen Moore, Corinne Griffith, Milton Sills, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Richard Barthelmess and Johnny Hines. And also, during the past few months we have built up a strong organization of contract players including Lewis Stone, Lloyd Hughes, Blanche Sweet, Anna Q. Nilsson, Dorothy Sebastian, Ben Lyon, Doris Kenyon, Mary Astor, Dorthy Mackaill, Myrtle Stedman, Robert Frazer, Charles Murray, Victor McLaglen, Joyce Compton and Hugh Allen. With such actors and actresses as these as a nucleus of our playing force, I feel that exhibitors need not worry about the appeal of the personnel in our pictures.

"In the special classification, we have superproductions of magnificent quality in "The Lost World," "Winds of Chance," "The Viennese Medley" and "Men of Steel." "The Viennese Medley" is now in production on the coast under the supervision of June Mathis, "Winds of Chance" is completed and ready for early showing as a special and elaborate preparations are being made for the filming of "Men of Steel," taken from "United States Flavor" by R. G. Kirk. From any angle, they may be regarded, these specials looke like sure-fire successes.

"Our plans call for the making of about one dozen pictures at our Eastern studios under the supervision of Earl Hudson and an equal number on the West Coast where the studios are under the direction of John E. McCormick, recently appointed general manager of West Coast production. Mrs. Florence Strauss, who has been responsible for the purchase of a quantity of strong material for First National, will be at the Coast to assist in the conferences with Mr. McCormick and June Mathis. I expect that as a result of these conferences, we will be able to announce the purchase of some very important new story material.

"At the present time, our Eastern studios are ready to turn out two unusually fine pictures in "The Knockout" starring Milton Sills and "The Pace that Thrills" featuring Ben Lyon and Mary Astor. "The Half-Way Girl" featuring Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes, just released, is being received as one of the most stirring dramas seen in many months. Robert T. Kane is all ready to start shooting on "Invisible Wounds" in which Blanche Sweet and Ben Lyon will appear and Sam Rork is well along with his plans for the first Leon Errol production "Clothes Make the Pirate." We are promised a comedy of the highest class from C. C. Burr in "The Live Wire" starring Johnny Hines. Richard Barthelmess is doing some of the best work of his career in his latest characterization. The picture is now called "The Beautiful City" but a better title will be found.

"I believe that First National's coming product will make every month a Greater Movie Season for exhibitors."

Three for Artclass

Production Advancing and New Features Go Into Work

Advices from Lester F. Scott, Jr., President of Action Pictures, Inc., on the West Coast, to Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announce the start of work on "The Saddle Cyclone," third of eight Thunderbolt Thrillers featuring Buffalo Bill, Jr.

This week also will see the start of production on "Galloping On," the third Wally Wales production. This last picture makes three now being produced. The third is "Action Galore," third in the series of eight five-reel Rough Riding romances and features Buddy Roosevelt.

It is expected that "Action Galore" will be completed next week, and the fourth Buddy Roosevelt feature will then be put into production, and probably released under the title, "Thundering Through."

Laura La Plante, Universal-Jewel star, is now making her greatest hit in the starring role of "The Teaser," recently shown at the Mark Strand, New York City. "The Teaser" is a Second White List picture. This is a photographic study illustrating the title.

Vice-President Charles G. Dawes Watches James Cruze, Directing "The Pony Express"

CHEYENNE, Wyo., July 24—Vice-President Charles C. Dawes and his party today saw life in the great open spaces, where cowboys wear five-gallon hats and motion pictures are made.

General Dawes devoted the morning to watching the filming of "The Pony Express," James Cruze's next Western historical picture for Paramount. Seated in a chair beside the cameras, Dawes saw a number of thrilling scenes from the pictures filmed.

"This is the most interesting thing I have seen on my trip West," Dawes told Cruze. "As a young man I spent much time in Western Nebraska, when the Wild West was still wild. These sod houses you are using in your picture are more familiar to me than my own home in Washington.

"I think you are trying to do a tremendous thing in making pictorial history. Today you can still make pictures which show the picturesque and romantic conquest of the old West in accurate form. Fifty or one hundred years from now it will be impossible to do it.

"I have had more fun and learned more things about moving pictures today than I have any time during my Western trip."

General Dawes and his party were the guests on the Cruze location of Senator and Mrs. Francis E. Warren of Wyoming. General Dawes was smoking his famous upside down pipe, while Cruze was rolling his own.

Dawes was especially interested in the Indian features of the ceremony, as he always entertains Indian delegations when they come to Washington. Cruze was made an Indian chief while he was producing "The Covered Wagon." He is "Chief Standing Bear" of the Arapahoe Tribe. Dawes is to be made a Sioux chief during his stay here by the Frontier Day Indians who are to be used in "The Pony Express."

Dawes, a noted musical composer in addition to being Vice-President, was especially interested in the "Pony Express" orchestra, which appears in the picture, and which played for him a number of old-time stage driver songs of 1860, when the story was laid. They also played some modern music, and Dawes several times stopped the musicians and gave them pointers on musical quirks. Dawes also was extremely interested in Ernest Torrence, who plays an important part in the picture. Torrence is also a musician and composer of note, and the two talked music with great enthusiasm. Torrence presented Dawes with a five-gallon white beaver hat in commemoration of his visit.

Senator Warren especially introduced to Dawes Johnny Fox, the tobacco-chewing boy of "The Covered Wagon," who takes the part of young Billy Cody in "The Pony Express." Wallace Beery, who plays the part of a happy-go-lucky vagabond in "The Pony Express," also interested General Dawes greatly.

Accompanying General Dawes were Mrs. Dawes, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Humphreys, of Denver and Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Hoges, of Denver. Mr. Hoges is Treasurer of the Republican National Committee. Senator and Mrs. Warren, and John Fleming of the Wyoming State Tribune also were in the Vice-Presidential party.

As a special feature of his visit, Dawes was allowed to direct a scene of "The Pony Express" also to crank the first camera on one of the most important scenes.

"This is an accurate story of my own county and my own time, Charlie," Senator Warren told Dawes. "I'd go all the may across the country to see this picture. I saw "The Covered Wagon" in the White House with President Harding just before he started on his Alaska trip, and this picture is just as good or better. I've been out here almost every day seeing them take the scenes and it makes me feel like a young man again out in the West.

"All right," said Dawes, "What do you say that we take the film of 'The Pony Express' up to the White House and show it to Cal, when it comes out."

Begins "Lord Jim"

Victor Fleming, Paramount producer, starts production of Joseph Conrad's classic of the sea, "Lord Jim," at the end of this week when the entire cast will be selected.

Percy Marmont will play the title role in "Lord Jim," which was adapted for the screen by John Russell, an authority on the works of Joseph Conrad. The continuity was written by Bernard McConville.

"Golden Princess" Completed

"The Golden Princess," Betty Bronson's Paramount starring vehicle, has been completed. Clarence Badger, who directed the production, filmed the final scenes at Newport Beach. The players who are featured in support of Miss Bronson are Neil Hamilton, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Phyllis Haver and Joseph Dowling. The story was adapted for the screen by Frances Agnew.

Fuller on Bray Staff

"Ving" Fuller, the well known sports cartoonist of the New York Daily Graphic has joined the staff of the Bray Studios. He will act as one of the animators associated with Walter Lantz in the production of the new "Unnatural History" Cartoons and the Dinky Doodle series of cartoons which J. R. Bray is making for F. B. O. release.

VICE-PRESIDENT CHARLES G. DAWES AS THE GUEST OF DIRECTOR JAMES CRUZE

Preparing to "shoot" a scene of "The Pony Express," James Cruze's next Western historical production for Paramount (left). The director is standing, center, in white shirt. General Dawes, who was made honorary director upon his visit to the location near Cheyenne, Wyo., seated, smoking his famous upside-down pipe, and United States Senator Francis E. Warren, of Wyoming, who took the vice-presidential party to the location as his guest, is also seated. In the picture to the right, General Dawes listens to the "Pony Express Orchestra," which appears in the photoplay. The General, a composer and musician of note, enjoyed the "treat," and gave "the boys" some valuable pointers on how the old tunes should be played.

Public and Critics Rave Over Cosmopolitan Picture

"NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET," the Cosmopolitan production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer of the Peter B. Kyne novel directed by Maurice Tourneur, has opened at the Capitol Theatre in New York, and has taken both public and critics by storm. Anita Stewart and Bert Lytell are featured in this new screen success. Eugene Mullin made the screen adaptation.

"An achievement and a downright joy!" exclaims Mildred Spain in the New York Daily News. "'Never the Twain Shall Meet' is an enthralling, beauty-filled drama that will make you go away with that misty-eyed but happy feeling. The real South Seas furnished the background for the greater part of the tale and never have you seen such loveliness. Papuan maidens dance a wedding dance that is reminiscent of Gilda Gray and real natives are used for atmosphere. Anita Stewart scores a personal triumph as Tamea, the half-caste, primitive darling who is the Queen of Riva, but an outrageous little barbarian in the States. She can act, that's all there is to it. She puts Tamea across with an unusual deftness and real feeling."

"By far the best of the many South Sea Island pictures," declares Norman Lusk in the New York Morning Telegraph, "is 'Never the Twain Shall Meet.' Really entertaining, with deft characterizations, good acting and beautiful settings, it should please any audience equally as it did yesterday's large one. We are for it 100 per cent. There is, first af all, Peter B. Kyne's story, with the addition of sub-titles written by the author. They are admirably chosen, without one false note. The same can be said of Maurice Tourneur's direction. His eye for composition and lighting is unfailingly true in this picture, and he gives us exquisitely beautiful effects with direction that that never errs. His wedding ceremony in the South Seas is quite the loveliest picture of the kind that we have ever seen, while Joseph Urban's interiors are done in the artist's most brilliant mood. Furthermore, Anita Stewart, once more under the guidance of a real director, emerges vividly appealing as Tamea. The cast is uniformly good."

"A South Sea story bearing a wealth of beauty is at the Capitol," observes the New York Evening World. "In this picture Anita Stewart probably does the most commendable work of her long and varied career. She is the most appealing sprite imaginable as the little queen of her South Sea Island who turns out to be a most outrageous barbarian when transplanted to San Francisco. She brings to this role a deeply moving undercurrent of poignancy—a poignancy that is suggested rather than enacted—and magnifies this by flights of delicious comedy. In fact the portrayal is like that—first it tugs at your heart strings and then sends you off into chuckles. 'Never the Twain Shall Meet' is an excellent and beautiful picture."

"Many of the scenes were made on the Island of Moorea," reports Regina Cannon in the New York Daily Graphic, "so with these colorful tropical backgrounds the picture can't help but have tremendous appeal. Anita Stewart is unusually charming in the role of the South Sea Island princess. The costume, or lack of it, is very becoming to her slender figure. Huntly Gordon gives a polished performance as the society man who is the hero's best friend."

EARLE FOXE

The William Fox star, will be seen in "The Big Game Hunter," a Richard Harding Davis story, directed by Robert P. Kerr.

C. J. Post Retained

To Plan and Handle Widespread Shipping Campaign

Charles J. Post has been retained by one of the most important factors in the shipping construction interests in the country to plan and handle a widespread shipping campaign. The retaining firm is Gibbs Brothers, Inc., William Francis Gibbs, President, who were the firm that acted for the government in the shipping problems connected with the shipping reconditioning after the war.

Incidentally, Mr. Post finds himself in the light of publicity, godfather to the largest and swiftest passenger steamship ever built in the United States, the Matson Navigation Company's liner Malolo.

Moreover, she is being built with two motion picture theatres; one indoors, and the other for use on the open deck during the wonderful nights on her tropic voyage to the South Seas.

Mr. Post was formerly the Pacific Coast representative for the Thomas Ince, W. D. Griffith and Mack Sennett studios; he was the choice of the united periodical publishing interests in the publicity campaign for postal reform, and he will be recalled for his sales-campaign success in putting across the famous Literary Digest's split-reel of wheezes and jokes from the columns on topics of the day.

Leo Maloney Pictures

Weiss Bros. Artclass Star Has Completed Four of Eight Pictures

With the start of the active releasing season for the series of eight five-reel Western Gems featuring Leo Maloney, Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Weiss Brothers' Clarion Photoplays, Inc., makes announcement of the titles of the eight Maloney features which he will distribute for the season of 1925-26. The pictures will be released under the following: "Win, Lose or Draw," "Luck and Sand," "The Blind Trail," "Never Say Quit," "Heavy Odds," "Fighting Shadows," "West of 36," "Yellow Contraband."

It is probable that the releases will also be made in the order mentioned. Four of these stories have been completed by Forde Beebe, who is writing the series. The remaining stories will be completed in the next month.

Resorts to "Ads" and Radio

Picks Juvenile Talent From Those Who Responded to Call

Believing that better juvenile talent could be secured from the ranks of the every day boys and girls than was available through the professional channels of the industry, Jack White, director-general of the comedies now being made at Educational Studios, Los Angeles, resorted to the newspaper want-ad columns and to radio broadcasting to secure proper and convincing types to use in a coming series of six Educational-Juvenile Comedies.

The advertisement was first inserted in the columns of the Los Angeles Sunday morning newspapers. Out of the hundreds who sponded to the "ad" Mr. White secured two boys of the right type and ability for the screen. On two succeeding evenings the announcement that Mr. White was looking for Juvenile talent was broadcast from the Warner Brothers new radio station, KFWB, Los Angeles, and the required youngsters were secured.

Arvid Gillstrom will direct the new series of two-reelers. Mr. Gillstrom is admitted to be one of the best directors of children in the motion picture industry, and he is responsible for many of the Juvenile successes of the past year.

Production will start at once on this new series of two reelers.

Appoints Music Director

Paul Finstein to Work for Schenck Stars on West Coast

John W. Considine, Jr., general manager, has named Paul Finstein musical director for the Joseph M. Schenck Productions. Finstein, an orchestra leader of note, will select and supervise the musicians who help Rudolph Valentino, William S. Hart, Norma and Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton to "emote" when on Schenck productions. Finstein and his famous orchestra are now playing for Valentino, who is well into production work on "The Lone Eagle", this star's first production for United Artists Corporation. He has been with Clarence Brown, the director, on four pictures and with Valentino on two.

Universal to Star Denny in "What Happened to Jones"

"WHAT HAPPENED TO JONES," the internationally famous stage farce written and produced by George Broadhurst, wil be produced as a Universal Jewel production starring Reginald Denny, it has just been announced by officials of the Universal. "What Happened to Jones" will be put into immediate production and prepared for release as a Second White List picture, which means that it will reach the screen during the coming winter. "Skinner's Dress Suit" also has been scheduled for Second White List release, and will be ready for the market next spring.

This means a re-arrangement of the Denny schedule for the year 1925-26. It is a change said to be of great importance to exhibitors, in that it means the building of a string of gilt-edged Denny productions for the coming months.

In introducing "What Happened to Jones" and "Skinner's Dress Suit" to the Second White List, the following changes have been made:

"What Happened to Jones" goes into the schedule in the place of "The Whole Town's Talking," and will be released January 17, 1926. "Skinner's Dress Suit" goes in as a replacement for "This Way Out," scheduled for release April 4, 1926. The two replaced pictures probably will be moved over to the Third White List, scheduled for release during the 1926-1927 season.

"What Happened to Jones" was one of the most successful farce-comedies ever produced. It opened at the Manhattan Theatre in 1897 and had a long run.

The new Denny schedule for the Second White List is as follows: "California Straight Ahead," "Where Was I," "What Happened to Jones," "Skinner's Dress Suit" and "The Love Thrill." "California Straight Ahead" has been completed and is heralded as the greatest picture Denny ever made. It was previewed at the Florence Theatre, Pasadena, Cal., and was a riot of fun, according to the report of the theatre manager, Tom F. McDonald, of the West-Coast-Langley Theatre Circuit.

"Where Was I" is the screen adaptation of Argosy Magazine serial by Edgar Franklin, a noted writer of farces and farce-comedies. It is a speedy, well-knit comedy with good characters, logical action, plenty of love interest, and more than enough complications and ridiculous situations. It was directed by William Seiter. Included in the cast are such screen favorites as Marian Nixon, Pauline Garon, Tyrone Power, Lee Morgan, Chester Conklin, Otis Harlan, Arthur Lake, James Corrigan, William H. Turner and Tom Lingham.

The fifth Denny release in the Second White List, scheduled for June 27, 1926, will be "The Love Thrill," from a story by Byron Morgan This is promised as a fast action farce comedy, of the same tempo and box-office value as such Denny pictures as "Oh Doctor," "I'll Show You the Town" and "California Straight Ahead." It will go into production as soon as Denny has completed "What Happened to Jones" and "Skinner's Dress Suit."

Betty Jewel Signed

Betty Jewel, who recently was seen in "The Necessary Evil" for First National, has been added to the cast of Robert T. Kane's production, "Invisible Wounds," which Howard Higgins will direct with Blanche Sweet and Ben Lyons as stars. Possessing the essential characteristics of a personality suitable for screen success, namely, beauty, youth and an ability to act, Miss Jewel today is in a class of our young actresses who are gradually bringing their achievements to recognition, with promise of ultimate triumph.

Henry B. Walthall and Lionel Barrymore, members of the original Biograph stock company, talk over "the good old days," in an idle moment between scenes of the Preferred Picture, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work."

Kathryn Perry is appearing in William Fox photoplays.

Buck Jones Off to Good Start On 1925-26 Pictures for Fox

BUCK JONES, Fox Film Corporation star, has gotten off to a flying start on his productions for the Fox company for the season which starts in August. He has already completed starring roles in two virile pictures of the West, namely, "The Timber Wolf" from the novel of the same name by Jackson Gregory, and "Durand of the Bad Lands" adapted from the like-named Western thriller by Maibelle Heikes Justice.

In addition to his western pictures, Buck, billed as Charles (Buck) Jones this time, will play the title role in the screen version of Owen Davis' successful stage play, "Lazybones."

Buck will open the season on September 20 in "The Timber Wolf," a romance of a man who feared and loved. "Durand of the Bad Lands," showing Buck in the daring exploits of a beloved "outlaw," will be presented on November 1. "Lazybones" will reach the screens on November 8.

In "The Timber Wolf" Buck essays a new type of role, that of a rich western lumberman who is a champion of the weak and a terror to their oppressors.

Elinor Fair is charming in the role of the heroine, and Dave Dyas is a smooth villain. Others in the cast are Sam Allen, William Walling, Robert Mack and Jack Craig. W. S. Van Dyke directed.

In "Durand of the Bad Lands" Buck plays the role of western rancher who has been charged, during an absence of several years, with all the crimes committed by a crooked sheriff's gang.

In order to insure that "Lazybones" would rank with the best of the William Fox screen adaptations of successful stage plays, Frank Barzage was selected to direct the picture from a scenario by Frances Marion. Mr. Borzage promptly selected Mr. Jones to portray the lovable idler who would rather go fishing than work. The exceptional cast includes such stars as Madge Bellamy, Zasu Pitts, Leslie Fenton and Jane Novak.

Upon the completion of "Lazybones" Jones will immediately start work on another Western, "A Man Four Square." Supporting the star in this film from the story by William MacLeod Raine are Harry Wood, William Lawrence, Sidney Bracey, Frank Boal, Florence Gilbert, and Olive Trevor.

Three Chadwick Productions Set for September Release

CHADWICK Pictures Corporation, which has announced seventeen productions for the coming season, will release three, "The Unchastened Woman," "Some Pun'kins," and "The Prince of Broadway," in September. Two of the seventeen, "American Pluck" and "The Wizard of Oz," are August releases.

"The Unchastened Woman," the first of the Chadwick releases of September, is the much heralded production that marks the return of Theda Bara to the screen after a retirement of five years. "The Unchastened Woman," which has been produced on a lavish scale under the personal direction of James Young, is Douglas Doty's adaptation of the Broadway stage success of the same name by Louis K. Anspacher. In addition to Miss Bara, who will be seen in a role that is different from any heretofore attempted on the screen, the cast includes Wyndham Standing, Dale Fuller, Eileen Percy, John Miljan, Harry Davenport, Eric Mayne and Mayme Kelso.

"Some Pun'kins," Charles Ray's first picture for independent distribution, is another Chadwick release for September. "Some Pun'kins," an original story which was written especially for the star, is typical of the rural comedy in which he first established himself. "Some Pun'kins" was directed by Jerome Storm, director of most of Ray's Ince successes, and was personally supervised by Joseph De Grasse. The cast includes Duane Thompson, George Fawcett, Hallam Cooley, Bert Woodruff, William Courtright, Fannie Midgley and Ida Lewis.

"The Prince of Broadway," George Walsh's second production for Chadwick, will be typical of the modern action romances for which he is best known. The picture is an adaptation of the play of the same name and is said to provide Walsh with unusual opportunities for his varied athletic talents.

Completing Walsh Picture

The latest announcement from the west Coast on the progress of "The Prince of Broadway," the new George Walsh starring vehicle for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, states that this production is being rushed to completion in order to be ready to take its place on the Chadwick schedule for the coming season.

"American Pluck," the first of the Walsh pictures received splendid criticisms at its preview showing and is scheduled for release early in August. Exhibitors are eagerly booking this series, and in order to keep to the present schedule, "The Prince of Broadway" must be ready to follow the first production immediately.

Added to Cast of "His People"

Nat Carr and Otto Lederer have been added to the cast of "His People," Edward Sloman's production for Universal, in which Rudolph Schildkraut plays the featured role. Other members of the cast are Rosa Rosanova, Arthur Lubin, George Lewis, Kate Price, Blanches Mehaffey and others.

Rudolph Schildkraut (right), the distinguished actor, who has just arrived at Universal City for his debut in pictures, is evidently pleased with the script of "His People," which Edward Sloman, his director, hands him.

"Scarlet West" Goes Over Big in Denver and Salt Lake City

FIRST NATIONAL'S new special, "The Scarlet West," an epic of pioneer days produced by Frank J. Carroll, had its first showings on the same day, Saturday, July 25, at the Colorado Theatre, Denver, and at the American Theatre in Salt Lake City. The picture went over big in both cities and has set a pace that will be hard for other western dramas to equal. For a western photoplay to score such a great success in the very heart of the West is a high tribute to the accuracy of its details and treatment and the thrilling drama provided by its plot.

A. G. Talbot, manager of the Colorado Theatre, Denver, wired First National Pictures after the opening, as follows:

"Congratulations on premiere opening of 'The Scarlet West.' It played to big business Saturday and Sunday—extra good for Summer season. The picture attracted many new faces—old western pioneers, school children, Fort Logan soldiers, Fitzsimmons Military Hospital convalescents, besides our own regular patrons. The picture was generously applauded and received many praiseworthy comments. Author and director handled story skilfully. The cast, the details of photography, etc., are splendid. We will welcome more of this type."

H. T. Nolan, manager of First National's Mountain District, wired Producer Carroll that the receipts for the Denver opening were one-third above normal.

Fred Dahnken of Salt Lake City sent the following telegram on the American Theatre engagement: "'The Scarlet West' looked like a good bet to us so we booked it, but we never figured it would do one-third more than average yearly normal Saturday and Sunday business during the middle Summer season, but to our pleasant surprise it did that little thing and just pleased our patrons pink. Audiences applauded frequently. Old timers said picture is historically correct, not overdrawn and well done in every detail. Give us more of that kind."

The daily newspapers of Denver and Salt Lake City praised the picture in the highest terms in their reviews and the exhibitors from the Mountain District who attended the two openings were equally enthusiastic about the box-office draw of the production. Both the Colorado and the American are new theatres, with a seating capacity of about 3,000 each. To draw capacity business at a summer opening requires an attraction far out of the ordinary, and such a picture "The Scarlet West" proved itself by the big receipts at both theatres.

Seven First National Pictures Now Being Edited and Titled

SEVEN forthcoming First National pictures have gone into the cutting room in the past two weeks.

On the West Coast, George Fitzmaurice has finished photography on the Goldwyn-Fitzmaurice production, "The Dark Angel," from the play of that name, with Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky featured and it is now being edited.

Preceding it in the cutting room was "What Fools Men," directed by George Archainbaud from Henry Kitchell Webster's, "Joseph Greer and His Daughter," with Lewis Stone, Shirley Mason and Barbara Bedford.

Edwin Carewe's "Dangerous Currents," from Willard Robinson's play, "The Sea Woman," with Blanche Sweet, Victor McLaglen, Constance Bennett and Robert Frazer, is being cut and titled. Corinne Griffith's "Classified," from the Edna Ferber story, is aiso in the cutting stage.

Eastern productions now in the cutting room, or ready for it, are "The Knockout," starring Milton Sills, directed by Lambert Hillyer; "The Pace That Thrills," from Byron Morgan's story, directed by Webster Campbell, featuring Ben Lyon and Mary Astor; and C. C. Burr's first Johnny Hines picture for First National, "The Live Wire," from Richard Washburn Child's novel, "The Game of Light," directed by Charles Hines.

Leading Lady Wanted

Any Ambitious Girl, Anywhere, Can Qualify for "Doug's" Next Picture

Douglas Fairbanks wants a leading woman for his next big production, the working title of which is "The Black Pirate."

She does not have to be a star of note, although it is preferred that she shall have had some screen experience. The requirements are for a young woman about five feet, six inches tall, handsome and of "regal bearing." Photographs should be sent to Albert Parker, who will direct the forthcoming Fairbanks picture.

Harry D. Buckley, personal representative of Mr. Fairbanks, in charge of the "Don Q" showing, warns all aspirants for the position not to go to Hollywood. He is emphatic in saying that a letter and photograph will answer the purpose. The letter and the photograph should be sent to Douglas Fairbanks, care of Pickford-Fairbanks Studio, Hollywood, California.

Pathe Announces Program For Week of August 16th

HARRY LANGDON'S latest two-reeler and a Hal Roach star comedy head the Pathe release program for the week of August 16th, which also includes a chapter of the Patheserial "Play Ball," a Pathe Review, an "Aesop Film Fable," "Topics of the Day" and and two issues of Pathe News.

Harry Langdon stars in "Lucky Stars" produced by Mack Sennett and directed by Harry Edwards. Harry falls in with a doctor of a medical show and becomes a quack. The pair travel here, there and everywhere, finally landing in San Tobasco, where a senorita lures Harry away from the medicine. In his absence a villain dopes the medicine and then things happen. Langdon is supported by Natalie Kingston and Vernon Dent.

Arthur Stone heads the cast of "Tame Men and Wild Women, a Hal Roach two-reel comedy. As a youngster who believes there is a Santa Claus until he reaches the age of 31, Stone has a vehicle which gives him full chance to get over some of his inimitable comedy. He is supported by a cast of well-known players, among them being Marie Mosquini, Helen Gilmore, Martha Sleeper, Louise Carver, Marvin Lobach and Sammy Brooks. Marcel de Sano directed.

"Face to Face is the title of the fifth chapter of the Patheserial "Play Ball, writeen by Manager McGraw of the Giants and adapted to the screen by Frank Leon Smith. In this episode, Allene Ray and Walter Miller, the stars, are supported by Harry Semels, J. Barney Sherry, Mary Milnor and Wally Oeteel.

Pathe Review No. 33 offers excellent entertainment in a trio of subjects: "The Feast of the Harvest," a Thanksgiving celebration of an African tribe; "The Fortress of the Church," Avignon, the religious capital of ancient Gaul shown in Pathecolor views; "Spartan Sports," a novelty produced by the new "process-camera," invented by Pathe Review Staff Cameraman Alvin V. Knechtel.

"Soap" is the latest of Paul Terry's "Aesop's Film Fables," the popular animated cartoon series. Other subjects on the Pathe program of August 16th are "Topics of the Day," the newspaper humor reel and two issues of Pathe News.

Buffalo Bill, Jr., in "Quicker 'n Lightin,'" the first in the 1925-26 series of eight Artclass Thunderbolt Thrillers.

Doris Kenyon sings "A Song of India," to get in the mood for "The Half-Way Girl," First National's drama of the Orient. Sam Hardy also sings, while Director John Francis Dillon (left) sings and plays

Six Comedy Units at Work for F. B. O.; Short Subjects Popular

THE success of its short subjects has impelled Film Booking Offices to remain actively in the two reel comedy field, and the F. B. O. production forces are lining up one of the most imposing comedy programs in the industry for the 1925-26 season.

Headed by "The Adventures of Mazie," a series of twelve episodes based on the stories by Nell Martin which appeared in Top Notch Magazine, and which will again star cunning Alberta Vaughn with Larry Kent, Kit Guard and Al Cooke in support, F. B. O. announces that another series will soon be started on its lot, called "Fighting Hearts," which is being written expressly for the company by Sam Hellman, well known humorist. It is probable that Larry Kent will head the cast. "Fighting Hearts" like "The Adventures of Mazie" will be distributed as twelve two reel episodes.

"Amazing Mazie," No. 1 of the "Mazie" series was concluded this week. Ralph Ceder is directing from the continuities of Doris Anderson.

Joe Rock, well known comedy producer, who recently completed two series of two-reel comedies starring Stan Laurel and Jimmy Aubrey for F. B. O. distribution, is making two new series of twenty-six comedies for the releasing company.

The first series of 13 will be known as "Standard Fat Men" comedies and will feature the most famous fat men on the screen. Mr. Rock plans to use almost a ton of heavies in each picture, and the catch-line, "A Ton of Fun," will be used extensively in the advertising and exploitation of the productions. Work on the first comedy of this series, as yet untitled, was completed today, and featured in the production are "Tiny" Alexander, "Kewpie" Ross, and "Fatty" Karr, whose gross weight approaches half a ton. Billie Rhodes, famous comedienne, appears in this comedy with the heavyweight trio. The production is now in the cutting room and as soon as it is titled will be shipped to the F. B. O. branches for release on September 6th.

The second series of thirteen two-reel comedies will be known as "Blue Ribbon" comedies, and will feature some of the best known comedians on the screen, like Chester Conklin, Hank Mann and Vic Potel. Joe Rock's latest star discovery, a young woman from Paris who was recently "christened" Alice Ardell, will play opposite the stars. She is a fetching female who doesn't speak a word of English but whose sense of humor is easily discernible on the screen.

The Bray Studios will contribute 26 short subjects to the F. B. O. program. These twenty-six novelties will consist of thirteen Dinky Doodle Cartoons and thirteen comedies which will be known as "Unnatural History" cartoons. The Dinky Doodle Cartoons will be burlesques of famous tales and burlesques of the best known feature productions of the current year. "Don Q" will be the first.

"Ving" Fuller, well known sports cartoonist, formerly with the New York Graphic, will act as one of the animators associated with Waltz Lantz in the production of these two series.

Cosmopolitan Film Breaks Capitol's Summer Record

"NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET," the Cosmopolitan Corporation's picturization of Peter B. Kyne's famous story of the same name, broke summer records during its engagement last week at the Capitol Theatre, New York. The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer release drew the amazing total of $63,118.25 in its week's run, a figure which is seldom equalled at the height of the season. Only the fact that Greater Movie Season was inaugurated last Sunday, which lead Major Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol, to decide to usher in the occasion with a new picture rather than continue with a holdover film, prevented the Cosmopolitan production from playing a second week at the Broadway house.

"Never the Twain Shall Meet" also broke records at Loew's State Theatre, St. Louis, last week, doing the largest business in the history of the house with the exception of those weeks in which the Siamese Twins and Gilda Gray were added attractions.

The picture drew unusually favorable comments from the critics of the New York dailies. Following are excerpts from the reviews:

The Daily News: "A downright joy. An enthralling, beauty-filled drama that will make you go away with that misty-eyed but happy feeling. The real South Seas furnished the background for the greater part of the tale and never have you seen such loveliness."

"An excellent and a beautiful picture," said the Evening World, while the Graphic described the film as "worth a visit. If you like South Sea stuff—and who does not?—you'll enjoy this one."

The Morning Telegraph: "By far the best of the many South Sea Island pictures . . . Really entertaining, with deft characterizations, good acting and beautiful settings."

The Evening Post: "We recommend it . . . Another good bet on which to place the week's cinema budget."

Twenty-six Pictures in Various Stages of Production at M.-G.-M. Big Studios

THE difficulty of keeping pace with news on picture production grows steadily with the rapid expansion of the industry. With the realization of this difficulty laymen as well as exhibitors are beginning to realize why it is difficult for the casual visitor to get through the gates of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City, where the world's largest plant is now humming with feverish activity in realizing the most ambitious production program ever planned by any such organization. A luxurious line-up of stories, authors, scenario writers, directors, stars and technicians is actively involved at Culver City in maintaining the high Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer standards of motion picture production.

General impresario Louis B. Mayer and his associates, Harry Rapf and Irving Thalberg, were recently brought to the confession that not a day passes that something is not launched or a contract or two not signed. If it were legal to sign contracts on Sundays and holidays, their pens would be working even then.

No less than twenty-six pictures are at this moment going through the processes incidental to that labor known as "production." There are fifty-two in all. Some are taking form in the continuity department, some are being adapted, some are being cast, some are being directed and some titled and edited. It's surprising that systematicians have not tried to worm the secret out of the production department of how things are done at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. There's a valuable lesson for them there, if they can think fast enough.

After two years or more "Ben-Hur" is just approaching its climax. Gen. Lew Wallace hardly dreamed when he wrote his celebrated novel that it would be necessary to lease property worth $3,000,000 to Westview Park, Cal., realtors, in order to build the Circus Maximus sets for the chariot races. One hundred and ten weeks is quite an engagement to Director Niblo and Ramon Novarro. (It's too hot to figure out the exact cost of the largest motion picture ever produced!)

To change the subject to newcomers, there is Al Raboch, whom Harry Rapf has just signed to direct Rex Beach's The Auction Block." Almost' simultaneously Mr. Rapf signed Hope Loring and Louis Lighton, the leading scenario team of the movie colony, to adapt the novel and write its continuity.

Reaching the final stages with the eclat that was predicted for it is "The Big Parade," which Laurence Stallings (co-author of "What Price Glory?") wrote for the valuable talents of John Gilbert. King Vidor is its director. Another one for King Vidor to direct will soon be ready in "La Boheme," Lillian Gish's first production under the M-G-M banner, on which Edmund Goulding has just completed the adaptation. John Gilbert will play opposite Miss Gish in this screen version of the celebrated operatic stand-by.

Edmund Goulding, who only adapted "La Boheme" at the behest of his friend Lillian Gish, returned to the directorial duties of putting the finishing touches on his "Sun-Up," featuring Conrad Nagel and Pauline Starke, only to find that "Sally, Irene and Mary" had in the interim been purchased by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Company, had been adapted with the same celerity by Hope Loring and Louis Lighton, and had been allotted to him as his next megaphonic work.

Rex Ingram and Blasco Ibanez engaged in lively conversation at the latter's estate at Mentone, near Nice, France, where Ingram is producing the famous novelist's "Mare Nostrum" (Our Sea) for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with Antonio Moreno and Alice Terry in the leading roles.

And Joseph Von Sternberg, who with one hand is looking after the final details of "The Exquisite Sinner," for which he wrote the scenario as well as directed Conrad Nagel and Renee Adoree, is starting Mae Murray in "The Masked Bride" with the other. Basil Rathbone, the John Barrymore of England, has been signed for an important role in that production.

From the hinterlands some sixty-odd miles from Kingman, Arizona, word comes that Buster Keaton will soon be homeward bound, carrying a plenitude of canned comedy called "Go West," written by himself in collaboration with Raymond Cannon and Lex Neal and directed by the comedian and the latter of his collaborators. Kathleen Myers, whom Keaton discovered, is his new leading lady.

Then, to jump about 7,000 miles from Arizona to France, there is also word that Rex Ingram is well in advance of his production schedule on the Ibanez novel, "Mare Nostrum," in which Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno have the stellar roles.

Robert Z. Leonard is far from idle. With Kate Jordan's novel, "Time, the Comedian," featuring Mae Busch, Lew Cody and Gertrude Olmsted, almost off his hands, he is starting Richard Connell's "A Little Bit of Broadway," for which Pauline Starke has been cast in the leading role. With two productions to think about, he has insatiably begun preliminary work on "Paris," Carey Wilson's original story for which Erte, the movies' most munificently paid fashion creator is designing sets and costumes. Pauline Starke and Lew Cody will have to forego their vacations to feature in "Paris."

Frank Borzage and Tod Browning supply the M-G-M studio with subject for betting. Borzage is perfecting "The Circle," adapted from W. Somerset Maugham's stage play, while Browning is performing a like duty in behalf of "The Mystic," which he also wrote. No odds are given on either to finish first, but Eleanor Boardman heads the cast of the former production and Aileen Pringle and Conway Tearle of the latter.

William Wellman is just a little behind them, production charts reveal, with "I'll Tell the World," which was formerly known as "Don Quixote, Jr.," by George Scarborough and Annette Westbay. George K. Arthur, Gertrude Olmsted and Charlie Murray have the foremost places.

Of Hobart Henley it is known that he has finished Norma Shearer's first starring vehicle, "A Slave of Fashion," and is starting the picturization of Cosmo Hamilton's "An Exchange of Wives," with Eleanor Boardman, Lew Cody and Renee Adoree.

"Dance Madness," too, is in its embryo state. S. Jay Kaufman wrote it and Max Marcin adapted it. Two well-known Broadwayites have at last agreed that something is good. It will have Aileen Pringle and Lew Cody in the leading roles.

Monta Bell is directing Marion Davies and Conrad Nagel et al, in "Lights of Old Broadway," Lawrence Eyre's story which Carey Wilson adapted to the screen.

Speaking of Carey Wilson leads to the fact that his story of Naval Academy life, "The Midshipman," directed by Christy Cabanne and starring Ramon Novarro, is nearing the production port. Novarro has lately been changing from nautical to Roman garb to alternate in "The Midshipman" and "Ben Hur" scenes.

The Franz Lehar operetta, "The Merry Widow," with Mae Murray and John Gilbert awaits only some minor transpositions by Eric von Stroheim before it is announced for release. The same may be said for a new Elinor Glyn production about which there is considerable secrecy.

From the Scandinavian sector of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio it is reported that Victor Seastrom is working diligently on "The Tower of Lies," taken from a novel by Selma Lagerlof, a countrywoman of the director. Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer are in it. Meanwhile Benjamin Christianson is starting "The Light Eternal," a story of his own creation and adaptation.

The youngsters of the studio, Jackie Coogan and Sally O'Neill, age 11 and 16 respectively, are competing with their elders in activity. On July 15 Jackie put into effect his new M-G-M contract by starting "Old Clothes," with Eddie Cline directing. And Sally O'Neill, as vivaciously Irish as her director, Marshall Neilan, is making good the fame predicted for her in "Mike."

National Vigilance Committee Pamphlet Hits Ambiguous Advertising of Mix Name

THE Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, as champions of truth in advertising, have placed themselves on record, through their National Vigilance Committee, to wage a vigorous campaign against untrustworthy film exploitation. A recent issue of the association's Trade Service Bulletin contains a forceful article commending the section of the U. S. District Court for the Southern District of California in granting an injunction to Fox Film Corporation against fledgling producers seeking to usurp the rewards of Tom Mix's reputation as a motion picture star.

The article is entitled "Mixing Up the 'Western Fan'" and is a comprehensive expose of the attempts through ambiguous advertising to mislead the public. It is pointed out to exhibitors that they will be interested in knowing that "The California Court which enjoined the imitators of this popular western star is further assisting them to retain the confidence of their patrons by fining in a contempt proceeding the Art Mix Company and its manager for a violation of the decree."

After noting that the motion picture exhibitor whose patrons are partial to westerns is confronted with a curious trade development because of the stellar reputation built up over a period of years in this field, the article continues:

"Recently there appeared on the horizon a producing unit styled 'Art Mix Productions,' also making westerns with a principal star, costumed as Tom Mix usually appears on the screen, riding a horse which, by many who do not know horse-flesh intimately, might easily be mistaken for Tony. Now comes the 'William (Bill) Mix Productions,' also producing westerns.

"Who's next? Shall we have 'Richard (Dick) Mix Productions' and 'Henry (Harry) Mix Productions' also?

"Apparently it isn't necessary to act to get into this game. Such conscientious stars as G. M. Anderson, William S. Hart, Tom Mix and Hoot Gibson seem to have labored quite unnecessarily. All that is needed, judging from these ventures, is a last name identical with that of a star who has already created a reputation. In the Art Mix Productions a hard-riding lad named Kesterson does the heavy work and draws the small type while the name of Art Mix looms with stellar prominence. In the William (Bill) Mix Productions, one Dick Carter, not William (Bill) Mix, occupies the principal saddle, only to have his name subordinated in the advertising. None of these producing Mix's, according to Tom Mix, are near enough relatives to be known to him.

"The experienced exhibitor knows that these pictures, like any other westerns, must succeed or fail on their own merits. He knows that all this 'mixing' cannot put across westerns which would not go over just as well under any other name; and that if the public be led to believe by such advertising that these are Tom Mix pictures, or that any of these Mix's are related to, or like, Tom Mix, the exhibitor who screens them will be the goat. He knows that theatre patrons' opinions of such advertising is analogous to his own irritation at advertisements of 'M. F. Waterman Fountain Pens,' 'Art Hoover Suction Sweepers,' or 'William (Bill) Underwood Typewriters.'

"Knowing the importance of good will in the successful operation of a picture theatre, as in all other business, the intelligent exhibitor is less interested in the recent injunctions of the Superior Court of Los Angeles against the advertising methods of the Art Mix Company and the Bill Mix Company than in the importance of convincing his patrons that they will find upon his screen only and exactly what his lobby display heralds and newspaper copy lead them to expect.

"A recent decree by the U. S. District Court for the Southern District of California deals so vigorously with the advertising of the William (Bill) Mix Productions, however, that a monetary consideration of some of its features is worth while. After providing specifically and exactly how posters, placards, screen titles and billboard paper shall be worded 'and not otherwise,' it further provides that the name of the firm advertised shall be three times the size of the feature performer; if any, shall be twice the size, size being applied not only as to height but also as to consistency, thickness, boldness and prominence.

"Defendant is further ordered to label all photographs of a male performer featured in such exploitation with his own name in readable type. If any of the old advertising material of this defendant is to be employed, it shall be imprinted prominently with the words 'not connected with any other producer or performer of similar name.' The attitude of the Federal Court is based upon the reputation of the common law. It also reflects what every intelligent exhibitor knows to be the public interest."

Work Progressing on Preferred List; Editing "With This Ring"

CAMERAS were focused this week on two new Preferred Pictures at the Schulberg lot in Hollywood where the program of twenty releases for the year is being carried out. Wesley Ruggles began the direction of "The Plastic Age," Percy Marks' best selling novel that reached the record fiction sale established during 1924. This picture which is one of the most important on the new Schulberg schedule features an all star cast headed by Donald Keith, Clara Bow and Gilbert Roland.

"The Other Woman's Story" by Peggy Gaddis was started as the next Gasnier production for release by B. P. Schulberg.

Director Fred C. Windermere is at work in the cutting room assembling the final print of "With This Ring," suggested by the novel by Fanny Heaslip Lea. Alyce Mills, Lou Tellegen, Donald Keith and Forrest Stanley comprise the leads.

Scripts for the next series are now in preparation. These are "Lew Tyler's Wives" by Wallace Irwin, "Shenandoah" the American stage classic by Bronson Howard, and "Horses and Women" adapted from the Saturday Evening Post novel, "The Biography of a Race Horse" by L. B. Yates.

HERE'S HALF A TON OF JOLLY MIRTH-MAKERS

Fox Pictures Exploited at New York Beach Resorts

THE booking of "The Iron Horse," "The Fool" and "As No Man Has Loved" at the big beach resort theatres in and around New York during the past fortnight offered some new and original angles and possibilities for the Fox exploitation staff to work on in aiding the exhibitors to put these big specials across in the manner they deserved. That they responded ably and ingeniously to the occasion was shown not only by the gross figures of a seven day run of "The Iron Horse" at the Strand, Far Rockaway, a four day engagement of "The Fool" at the same theatre and a three day showing of "The Iron Horse" at B. S. Moss' Castle Theatre, Long Beach but also by the stunts employed.

The week's run of "The Iron Horse" at Far Rockaway was preceded by a two week's newspaper advertising campaign in the weekly and semi-weekly papers of that place as well as in four other papers in surrounding Long Island towns from which the Strand draws its regular clientele. An exceptional amount of paper was posted throughout the Rockaways—fifty twenty-four sheet stands alone being used. One hundred and fifty extra three sheet boards were placed throughout the town and its environs to give it the full advantage of poster advertising.

Harry Thoms, the hustling manager of the Strand, broke all precedents at Far Rockaway by securing permission from the authorities there to string shield shaped banners across the street in front of the theatre and on each side for the entire block. These banners were placed four days before the opening and not only forced attention from the residents of the town but also from the thousands of auto transients passing back and forth on the street to the beach.

At the B. S. Moss Castle Theatre, Long Beach, full advantage was taken of its location right on the boardwalk by a lobby flash of banners, signs, lobby photos and a special display of big enlarged photos of scenes and cast from the picture which were originally part of the lobby display during the year's run of "The Iron Horse" at the Lyric Theatre on Broadway.

One of the newest and most ingenious of the exploitation stunts conceived and used by the Fox exploiteer was with several thousand one ounce bottles, of the vial type. In each of these battles was placed a printed message announcing the engagement of "The Iron Horse" at the Castle. In a certain proportion out of every thousand bottles thus used were placed passes for the theatre. On Saturday and Sunday, the last two days of the run and the two biggest days of the week at this famous beach, these bottles were taken out about a half mile beyond the surf line in a motor launch and thrown overboard for miles along the entire stretch of the beach. Tide and wind quickly sent them inshore where they were washed up on the beach to cause a wild scramble among the curious thousands of bathers to see what the bottles contained.

The four days engagement of "The Fool" at the Strand Far Rockaway was exploited in a dignified manner but with the same lavish display of newspaper space and posting as "The Iron Horse." Instead of utilizing the umbrellas at the beach for this engagement several big fifteen foot banners were hung along the ocean front. With the cooperation of the management the Fox exploiteer also played up to the clergy of that vicinity and letters of invitation to see the picture were sent to all ministers, priests and rabbis in the Rockaways. Bookstore displays were used in Far Rockaway for ballyhooing both "The Iron Horse" and "The Fool."

"The Iron Horse" and "The Fool" Receive Lavish Praise from Calgary's Chief Censor

In the lexicon of filmdom the phrase, "commendation from the censor," can be regarded fairly as praise indeed! Wherefore, Fox Film Corporation will be pardoned the indulgence of voicing a justifiable pride over the enthusiastic appreciation expressed by Howard Douglas, chief censor at Calgary, Alberta, Canada, for the William Fox productions of "The Iron Horse" and "The Fool."

Encomiums are not given lightly in official Canada, where law is law, and its execution is unswayed by influence in the slightest degree. The opinion of the Canadian censor on "The Iron Horse" follows:

"This is a wonderfully artistic and measurably realistic production of scenes and incidents, real and imaginative, in the construction of the first American continental railway. It is history, patriotism, romance, humor, wild west show and Zane Grey novel so intermingled as to provide a bill of fare with something to suit the taste of each individual in the most cosmopolitan audience. The picture will appeal to the popular demand for lively entertainment, and, at the same time, will give a certain amount of information of an instructive nature."

Writing of the William Fox production of "The Fool," adapted for the screen from Channing Pollock's stage success, Mr. Douglas said:

"The setting is good, the picture is clean and attractive, and altruistically inspiring, and while the characters portray the extreme of their class, the moral of the plot as a whole leaves an uplifting impression upon the imagination. Appeals in a sympathetic manner to the feelings and the resulting influence should be in the direction of better conduct, arising out of a saner object in life."

Madge Bellamy is one of the featured players in "Lightnin'," the John Golden stage success directed by John Ford for William Fox.

Hook-up With Legion

Ad in American Legion Weekly Arranges for Tie-up With Fox Epic

Exhibitors booking the Fox masterpiece, "As No Man Has Loved," have possible tie-ups with the various American Legion Posts in their neighborhoods as the result of an advertisement inserted by the Fox company in the American Legion Weekly, official organ of the great veterans' organization.

The advertisement carries a straightforward and inspiring message to every legion member and calls upon the Legionnaires to bring honor, profit and good will to their posts or units by sponsoring in their communities the presentation of the Fox motion picture epic.

The ad points to the fact that the picture carries the strongest possible kind of patriotic message, being a throbbing drama of devotion to country, home and family, based on Edward Everett Hale's classic, "The Man Without a Country."

In addition to this the advertisement appeals to the fraternal spirit of the organization members by pointing out that "As No Man Has Loved" was adapted, directed, acted, and staged by veterans of the World War.

Edward Hearn Featured

Edward Hearn is playing the leading masculine role opposite Clara Bow in B. P. Schulberg's forthcoming Preferred Picture, "The Lawful Cheater," directed by Frank O'Connor. Hearn has lately built popularity on account of his splendid work in the title role of "The Man Without a Country."

Jane Jennings in Cast

Jane Jennings, "Cameo Mother of the Screen," whose last work was in "The Little French Girl," for Paramount, has been engaged for the society mother role in "The Danger Line," which Hugh Dircker is directing for Macfadden at the Pathe Studios.

"Merry Widow" Release

"The Merry Widow" is to be released early in November, and will have a preview showing at the Embassy Theatre in New York.

LOWELL SHERMAN
The star of "Satan in Sables," the Warner Brothers picture.

May McAvoy in Cast

This Splendid Actress in Warner Bros. "Lady Windermere's Fan"

Warner Bros. have engaged May McAvoy to play one of the leads in "Lady Windermere's Fan," the world-celebrated Oscar Wilde drama which is to have an important place in the 1925-26 schedule. Irene Rich and Clive Brook have been cast for important parts, the latter being chosen to play Lord Darlington.

"Lady Windermere's Fan" is to be an Ernst Lubitsch production. Following his invariable rule, Mr. Lubitsch is selecting the cast very deliberately and with great care, making certain, before announcing a definite selection for any given role, that the player he has in mind is better fitted for that particular part than any other who could be procured.

Raymaker to Direct "The Sap"

The next picture which Herman Raymaker will direct for Warner Bros., it is announced, is "The Sap," the third contribution which Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore are to make to the 1925-26 line-up. This is a rollicking story with an unusual theme and a colorful romance. Raymaker lately finished "The Love Hour," with Ruth Clifford and Huntly Gordon, and before that directed Kathleen Norris' "Rose of the World," in which Patsy Ruth Miller is starred.

Complete "Compromise" Cast

The cast of Warner Bros. "Compromise," now in production with Alan Crosland directing, is now complete. Irene Rich is starred as Joan Trevore, the principal woman character, with Louise Fazenda as Hilda; Clive Brook as Alan Thayer; Pauline Garon as Nathalie Trevore; Helen Dunbar as Aunt Catherine; Winter Hall as Grandfather Trevore; Raymond McKee as Ole; Muriel Frances Dana as the child, and Lynn Cowan in an important part.

Archainbaud to Direct

Director George Archainbaud arrived in New York to handle the megaphone for an Earl Hudson unit of First National in the filming of "The Scarlet Saint."

New York Critics Praise Irene Rich in "Eve's Lover"

IRENE RICH in "Eve's Lover," a Warner Brothers production, was the feature attraction at the Piccadilly Theatre, New York, last week, drawing large audiences and winning high praise. Excerpts from some of the newspaper reviews follow:

Times: Add one more to the exhibits which prove that if a photoplay is put on well the audience will be content. "Eve's Lover" has a cast and a director. Hence a very entertaining, and therefore successful, photoplay. The actors play well into each other's hands and they play well individually. Willard Louis shows that knack of poking fun at the heavy business man which is individual with him. Bert Lytell adds to his reputation as a deft comedian. Clara Bow is pretty and vivacious and a little more. Irene Rich supplies capitally a tone which is difficult for an actress to catch and which is indispensable as a background for the piece. Nor must we forget one of those little clerk bits by Arthur Hoyt.

Delight Evans in Morning Telegraph: It is entertaining. There is something in it to please every taste. Women, especially, will enjoy the fine work of Irene Rich in a sympathetic characterization. She plays Eve as she always plays other roles—sincerely and earnestly. Bert Lytell is a dashing and humorous count.

American: The picture has been well written and directed. Irene Rich is always lovely. Clara Bow and Willard Louis bring fun to the story.

Mildred Spain in Daily News: A charming and wholly delightful tale. If Irene Rich is one of your favorites—and isn't she?—don't miss this one.

Evening Post: "Eve's Lover" is entertaining. Irene Rich is a good Eve.

Sun: Miss Rich furthers her reputation as an extremely capable cinema actress. This is quite a feat.

Dorothy Herzog in Daily Mirror: The story is frolicsome and snappy, and adroitly handled by Director Roy Del Ruth.

Editing Many Pictures

With several big feature productions completed simultaneously, the cutting rooms are the center of attention at Universal City just now.

Lawrence Trimble's "My Old Dutch," from the famous coster song and English stage play; William A. Seiter's production, "Where Was I?" starring Reginald Denny; "The Beautiful Cheat," featuring Laura La Plante under Edward Sloman's direction; Svend Gade's "Peacock Feathers" and several others, are in the editing stage. Their directors, meanwhile, are preparing new stories to be put in production soon.

Completes "What Price Beauty"

Mrs. Rudolph Valentino has completed "What Price Beauty," her first effort as a film producer, and has started the negative on the way to New York. The fiflm is being shipped in custody of George Ullman, the Valentino business manager.

While in New York Ullman will handle negotiations for a release, all offers having been held up pending his arrival for personal discussion. As an original story and independent production by Natacha Rambova, Valentino's wife, "What Price Beauty" has been the subject of considerable comment.

"Ma" Ferguson Asks Warner Brothers to Produce "The Golden Cocoon" in Texas

GOVERNOR MIRIAM A. FERGUSON of Texas, the first woman ever elected Chief Executive of an American State, is thoroughly alive to anything that will spread the name and fame of the Lone Star commonwealth outside its own wide-flung boundaries. This is evidenced by a telegram received this week by Warner Brothers, inviting them to film their new picture, "The Golden Cocoon," in Texas, where most of the action of the story is laid. The telegram was as follows:

"Sam Warner, Warner Brothers, Inc., New York, N. Y.:

"We understand that your company will film 'The Golden Cocoon,' written by Ruth Cross. This story is laid in and around Austin and the University of Texas. We wish to extend a most cordial invitation to you and your company to film the scenes on the actual locations described in the book.

(Signed) "Governor Miriam A. Ferguson;
"W. M. W. Splawn, President, University of Texas;
"Mrs. Charles Joe Moore, Chairman, Better Films Committee of Texas;
"Austin Chamber of Commerce;
"E. B. Roberts, Manager, Majestic;
"Louis Novy, Manager, Hancock;
"L. R. Guyer, Manager, Queen;
"J. J. Hageman, Manager, Crescent;
"'Skinny' Prior, Manager, Grand Central."

The heroine of "The Golden Cocoon" is the daughter of a northern Texas family, who wins a scholarship and attends the State University, at Austin. She falls in love with a lawyer-politician and marries him just after his election as Governor. Many of the subsequent scenes are laid in the Executive Mansion, where Mrs. Ferguson is now presiding, and others in the Capitol where her offices are.

Warner Brothers, in a telegram of acknowledgment, expressed their deep appreciation of the invitation from the Texans. Ruth Cross, the author, is a native Texan.

"Sally of the Sawdust" Pleases Chicago Critics

"THE new D. W. Griffith picture, 'Sally of the Sawdust,' stands in a class by itself," said Carl Sandberg, motion picture reviewer for the Chicago Daily News, when this United Artists Corporation release had its world premiere showing at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago.

"This 'Sally' picture is good, standing way up among the best of the year. And some will say it is the best Griffith has done since he made 'Broken Blossoms.' If you enjoy that twist of the byway of life where tears and laughter come close to mixing, where pain turns with jokes at itself, and the terms of comedy and tragedy get lost like sunshine and rain during a sunshower, then take a look at Carol Dempster playing Sally, W. C. Fields, as Prof. Eustace McGargle, spieler, faker and three-card man, also is a new development. We recommend 'Sally of the Sawdust' as entertainment, a blend of misery and monkeyshines and majesty."

"'Sally of the Sawdust' is a picture of undoubted box-office strength," said Rob Reel in the Chicago Evening American. "Griffith brushes in characters, pathos and comedy, particularly the latter, with his usual adroitness and, presto, a photoplay that will give many of his other creations a hard run in the popularity race. The picture has been filmed with such a high grade, splendid development of engaging incident that it reaches a high mark as entertainment."

"Comedy is the keynote of D. W. Griffith's latest offering 'Sally of the Sawdust,' a story of circus life," wrote Genevieve Harris of the Chicago Post. "The plot is simple and is presented in a straightforward way. It is good entertainment. The laughter it wins from the audience proves how well its points 'get across.' After all there is no analyzing comedy. It makes you laugh or it doesn't. And this picture makes 'em laugh, which is its sole aim."

"Don't miss "Sally of the Sawdust' which is a masterpiece," said Ashton Stevens, in the Chicago Evening Herald. "It seems to me that the stage art of an actor never has been so successfully transferred to the screen as D. W. Griffith here renders that of W. C. Fields. I shall not attempt to list all the desirable laughs, rail and sawdust,—perhaps the only really laughable bootlegging joke of the year. Don't miss 'Sally of the Sawdust.'"

Theatres Demand Fox Varieties in Advance of Release Dates

EMULATING Oliver Twist, the Broadway exhibitors are asking for "more" of the Fox Varieties releases, even before the date set for the first showing of these film adventures into the land of romance and science around the world. So great has been the demand for these interesting one reelers from the big time theatres that Fox Film Corporation has been obliged to dip into its 1925-26 novelty chest to supply the requests.

Five of the Fox varieties for next season which have been shown at the Colony, Rialto and Strand theatres so far are "West Wind," July 26; "Toiling for Rest," June 28; "With Pencil, Brush and Chisel," August 9; "Sky Tribe," June 28; and "My Own Carolina," May 31.

The diversity of subjects treated in this interesting series is one of the attractive features with exhibitors. The motion picture public has evinced a growing interest in the Fox Varieties since the release of the first of the series a few weeks ago. Some of the films which the demand bids fair to force into premature release include "In A China Shop," a unique subject graphically picturing the history of porcelain making; "Cuba Steps Out," a romp through the picturesque tropical playground of the Western Hemisphere and the sugar and tobacco fields; "White Paper," revealing the transformation of the tree into the modern newspaper; and "The River Nile," a photographic story of mysterious Egypt living today as it did 5000 years ago.

Of the Fox Varieties already appearing on the screen, "West Wind," the first of the releases, won instant popularity. It is a vivid combination of travelogue and autobiography of nature's paradox in its swift journey around the earth. The scenes were taken on the ground by the staffs of Fox cameramen in every clime and more than a dozen countries. Every mood of the west wind is recorded in its swift skimming of the surface of land and sea.

"Toiling for Rest" carrys the jaded stay-at-home audiences on a magic carpet into the heart of the unexplored regions of the picturesque Canadian Rockies, filming hazardous scaling of snow-clad peaks and yawning chasms.

The lurking desire in every human breast to return to the scenes of childhood days finds satisfaction in the quaint "My Own Carolina" with its mossy brooks and sylvan dells.

A close-up of genius at work vitalizes the studio atmosphere in "With Pencil, Brush and Chisel," one of the intimate and unique studies of Fox Varieties. The artistic versatility of Emil Fuchs, famous sculptor, painter, etcher and writer, is a revelation of the intimacy with life secured through the camera lens.

"The Sky Tribe" unfolds on the screen the wonders of the Painted Desert of the Southwest and a thrilling adventure into the high mesas where the Eagle men, the Pueblo Indians, dwell.

To Adapt "Three Faces East"

G. Gardner Sullivan, a dominating figure in the world of screen writing, has been secured by Cecil B. De Mille to prepare a screen treatment of "Three Faces East," the famous wartime secret service play, which is to be filmed at the De Mille Studio under the direction of Robert Julian.

Richard Talmadge is the star of Carlos Productions.

"Don Q" in Boston

"Doug" Fairbanks' Picture to Have Boston Presentation

Harry D. Buckley, personal business representative for Douglas Fairbanks, announces that his latest feature, "Don Q, Son of Zorro," which had had a phenomenal summer run of eight weeks at the Globe Theatre, New York, will open at the Colonial Theatre, Boston, Monday August 17, for a limited engagement of one month.

Practically the entire force used in the Globe presentation will be taken to Boston, and this includes prologue, scenery and artists. Mortimer Wilson, who wrote the musical score for "Don Q," while the picture was in the making at the Pickford-Fairbanks studios, will conduct a special symphonic orchestra at the Colonial during the Boston run.

"Just Suppose" Purchased

J. Boyce Smith, Jr., general manager of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., announces the purchase of A. E. Thomas' successful stage play, "Just Suppose," for Richard Barthelmess' use.

Mr. Smith is particularly enthusiastic over the acquisition of "Just Suppose" for the young star, believing that it will make a delightful and romantic vehicle for him. It is expected that "Just Suppose" will be screened as Mr. Barthelmess' next vehicle for First Nationl release to follow "The Beautiful City," now in production. It is probable that some of the scenes will be filmed in Europe.

Tiesler Organizes Producing Unit

Hans Tiesler, recently returned from Europe, has put all his energy into organizing the Hans Tiesler Productions, and is making a reporter picture, called, appropriately enough, "'His First Story."

The picture is one of a series of six, and the story was written directly for the screen by L. V. Jefferson. The cast includes the charming Gloria Grey, Charles Gerrard, Henry A. Barrows, and Roy Hughes, and Robert M. Brown is directing.

Frank Hutter of the K and H. Film Distributing Company is making a special trip to New York with this picture in order to market the series.

Arthur Somers Roach, the novelist, who has just closed a contract with Warner Bros. for all his novels and he will devote part of his time to assisting in their supervision.

Will Direct Harry Carey

Director and Cast Selected for "The Man From Red Gulch"

Edmund Mortimer, who directed "The Prairie Pirate," the first of the new series of Harry Carey westerns, and according to report, the best Carey picture to date, has been re-engaged by Hunt Stromberg to direct Carey in the second picture, "The Man From Red Gulch."

In addition to engaging Mortimer, Stromberg has also selected Harriett Hammond as Carey's leading lady in this production, and Frank Campeau, Mark Hamilton, Lee Shumway, Doris Lloyd, Virginia Davis and Mickey Moore for the supporting cast.

"The Man From Red Gulch" was adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates from Bret Harte's colorful western story "The Idyl of Red Gulch." It will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation in November.

Big Sets for M.-G.-M.

Construction of two elaborate sets representing cafes in Paris and New York has begun at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. The first of these represents a Parisian cafe in Josef von Sternberg's "The Masked Bride," starring Mae Murray, who plays the part of a cabaret dancer. Francis X. Bushman plays opposite Miss Murray in this Leon Abrams story. The second set is one of the high lights of Robert Z. Leonard's "A Little Bit of Broadway," by Richard Connell, co-featuring Pauline Starke and Charles Ray. This set represents an exceedingly elaborate New York cabaret in which a unique ballet of dancers and manikins coached by Fanchon and Marco, appear in support of Miss Starke, who has the role of a ballet dancer.

World Famous Designer Signed

Cecil B. De Mille announces the signing of a long term contract with Gilbert Adrian to be associate gown designer with Mlle. Henriette Dallett of Paris who is already installed at the De Mille studio.

Adrian is the young Parisian artificer in silks and satins who startled Broadway with his unusual costume creations for Irving Berlin's Music Box Revue of 1922-23. More recently Mr. Adrian made costumes for Rudolph Valentino's "The Hooded Falcon" and Mrs. Rudolph Valentino's "What Price Beauty."

St. Louis Receives Unusual Heralding on Fox's "The Fool"

THE St. Louis engagement of "The Fool," at the King's Garden Theatre, that city, received a smashing campaign at the hands of Al J. Marks and the Fox exploitation forces.

Among other stunts employed was a unique method of distributing special circulars about town, by a systematic house-to-house campaign. Fifty boys were used to distribute the heralds. Each boy wore a large printed card on his cap, reading:

"THE FOOL
STARTS SATURDAY
KING'S THEATRE."

Seven big cars were used to transport the boys to different sections of the city. The cars carried banners reading:

"The Fool—Not the Owner
Of a Star Car
'THE FOOL'
Will be at the King's Theatre—Next Week."

The cars constituted—in themselves—a good exploitation parade.

To make doubly certain that no section of St. Louis was overlooked in the "flyer" campaign, the city was divided into districts. On one day the West side and part of the North side was worked, while the following day was devoted to cleaning up the South side and balance of the North side. The East side of the city was handled by boys on foot and on bicycles.

The effectiveness of this stunt lay in the fact that the exploitation instead of being worked on the downtown streets of the city, or in the vicinity of the theatre—as is generally the case, was in reality brought to the very doorsteps of every home in the city. The bannered cars, the boys bearing signs, and the heralds themselves comprising three separate and distinct exploitation mediums that could not fail to attract attention. This carefully planned campaign reflects great credit upon those responsible for its execution.

"Bill" Hart "Set" to Start for United Artists Corporation

UNIVERSAL CITY as the studio; Aug. 10th as official starting date; King Baggot as director; Wallace Kerrigan as production manager are the latest announcement concerning William S. Hart's first production for United Artists Corporation release, "Tumbleweeds," an adaptation by C. Gardner Sullivan from Hal G. Evarts' novel which ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post and afterward had a large sale in the book market.

Offices, dressing rooms and all facilities for "Tumbleweeds" have been arranged and one of the most effective streets ever constructed is being built. This will represent Caldwell, Kan., as it was in 1889, when the Cherokee Strip was opened to homesteaders. Much of the action of the picture centers about this location.

Another important locale for exterior scenes will be that showing the cattle country and two of the biggest ranches on the Texas Range will be utilized for this purpose.

"Tumbleweeds" is largely an outdoor picture and will mean the use of large crowds of people, big herds of cattle, thousands of wagons, and so on.

J. H. McCloskey will assist King Baggot in directing. The complete cast will be announced shortly, but Captain T. E. Duncan has been engaged to play a military role in the picture and act as military advisor in scenes where United States troopers will appear.

Universal's "See America First" Caravan Moving Eastward Fast

UNIVERSAL'S "See America First" unit, the motor truck and trailer which is filming scenes in various American cities as exploitation for the Second White List and for the Greater Movie Season, is well on its triumphant way across the United States. It now is in the Chicago territory, after having made an eventful run from San Francisco, with stop-overs in Salt Lake City, Omaha, Des Moines and other places. At several of these stops, screen tests were made of local beauties, selected through newspaper contests. As a result several girls have received contracts from Universal and now are being trained at Universal City.

C. E. Holah, in charge of the Universal caravan, reports that each locality has given a royal reception to the "See America First" unit. In each town where a stop has been made, the unique outfit has pulled up in front of the theatre of a prominent Universal exhibitor, who has benefited thereby from the large crowds which gather to look at the motorized bungalow which forms the center of attraction of the unit.

Ray Remains With Chadwick

According to an announcement from the offices of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, Charles Ray is still under contract with that firm. Through arrangement with the Chadwick Company, Ray will make one picture for Metro-Goldwyn. On completion of that production, Ray will return to Chadwick, starting production immediately on the first of the remaining pictures he will make for that company under his present contract. "Some Pun'kins" and "Sweet Adeline," Ray's first Chadwick releases, have been completed.

"The Love Toy"

Having finished "Satan in Sables," the first of the starring productions on the 1925-26 Warner Bros. schedule, Lowell Sherman has started work on "The Love Toy," with Earle Kenton directing. The scenario, by Sonya Levien, is the first this young woman has done since joining the Warner staff. Jane Winton and Maud George have lately been added to the cast of "The Love Toy."

Signs Famous Russian Team

The Imperial Theatre at Moscow, that great dramatic palace of the continent, has sent two of its favorite artists to Hollywood.

They are Laty Floren, famous Russian playwright, actor and director, and his wife, equally famous on the continent as a dramatic actress, theatrically known as Monna Gann. They have just been signed by B. P. Schulberg and will make their American screen debut under the Schulberg banner.

Screen Veteran Reunion

Lionel Barrymore and Henry B. Walthal, veteran screen players, members of the original Biograph stock company, are reunited for the first time in many years as featured actors in B. P. Schulberg's new Preferred Picture, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work." Marguerite De La Motte and Lilyan Tashman are also in the cast, which Marcel De Sano directed.

Radio Debut of Riza Royce

Riza Royce, stage star, signed recently to a long term contract with B. P. Schulberg Productions, made her radio debut last week, speaking through Station WGBS in New York City. Miss Royce is well known in New York for her performance of the "vamp" in Edgar Selwyn's stage success, "Dancing Mothers." She was formerly featured in the Ziegfeld Follies.

Phyllis Haver Signed

William de Mille has signed Phyllis Haver to play the part of Florence Wheeler in his next Paramount production, "New Brooms," the play which Frank Cravens wrote and produced in New York. Clara Beranger, with her usual skill, prepared the adaptation.

So far the cast includes Bessie Love, Neil Hamilton, Robert McWade and Miss Heaver.

Studio Party Visit

A private showing of Erich von Stroheim's "The Merry Widow" was the feature of a private dinner party recently given by Will Hays at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles to a member of close friends, including Mr. and Mrs. Howard Chandler Christy and Mr. and Mrs. William Randolph Hearst.

LILLIAN GISH

First photograph of famous star as "Mimi," in her production of "La Boheme," which King Vidor is directing. Edmund Goulding adapted the story; Mme. Fred Degresac wrote the continuity; Jack Gilbert plays opposite the star. This is a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture.

Warners Change Titles

Warner Bros. have decided to change the titles of three pictures on their 1925-26 schedule. The name of "The Easiest Road," now in production, with Marie Prevost in the stellar role, has become "Seven Sinners." This is an original story by Bradley King. The title of "Kentucky Hills," the adaptation of Charles A. Logue's magazine story, in which Rin-Tin-Tin is the central figure, has become "Below The Line," and Rex Beach's "The Barrier That Was Burned" will appear on the screen as "Barriers of Fire."

Berger Starts "Unfair Sex"

Henri Diamant Berger who has already made two feature productions, "Fifty-Fifty" and "Lovers' Island," for the new season's program of Associated exhibitors, has started a third picture entitled "The Unfair Sex" at the Diamant Studio in Fort Lee, New Jersey.

The cast numbers several names well known to filmdom, including Nita Naldi, Holbrook Blinn, Hope Hampton, Walter Miller, Jack Raymond and Ida Darling.

Metro's Trackless Train

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Trackless Train, now crossing the country from New York to Los Angeles in the interests of better roads and better motion pictures has reached Milwaukee, and has been accorded one of the most sensational receptions in the history of its trip by this city.

Added to Cast

Mathew Betz and Karl Dane have been added to the cast of Rupert Hughes' "Don't," and will play the roles of lunatics in this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, directed by Alf Goulding. Sally O'Neill and Bert Roach have the featured roles.

Ruth Stonehouse in Cast

Ruth Stonehouse has been added to the cast of "The Danger Line," in one of the reatured roles. Hugh Dircker is directing the photoplay being filmed at the Pathe Studios.

First Standard Comedy

Joe Rock has completed actual production work on the first of the Standard Fat Men series for F. B. O. which feature the "Ton of Fun" composed of three of the heaviest comedians known to the screen, "Tiny" Alexander, "Kewpie" Ross, and "Fatty" Karr, whose gross weight closely approaches a ton. Billie Rhodes, famous comedienne appears in this comedy with the heavyweight trio. The production is now in the cutting room and as soon as it is titled will be shipped to the F. B. O. branches for release on September 6.

Title Writers Signed

Two noted title writers have been signed on a joint long term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, according to Louis B. Mayer, production executive at the Culver City studios. They are Katherine Hilliker and her husband, Captain H. H. Caldwell, who together have titled many of the greatest pictures ever made and have been responsible for the titling of many foreign pictures.

Sign Malcolm St. Clair

Malcolm St. Clair has been signed to long-term contract as a Paramount Director it was announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production.

St. Clair was signed recently by Mr. Lasky to direct two productions for Paramount, "Are Parents People" and "The Trouble with Wives." So admirably did he prove himself as director that he has now been given a long-term contract.

"Hero of the Big Snows"

June Marlowe, Willard Louis and Charles Farrell have been added to the cast of Warner Bros.' "A Hero of the Big Snows," in which the remarkable dog actor, Rin-Tin-Tin, is featured. Miss Marlowe had an important part in "Below the Line," a Rin-Tin-Tin picture which was recently finished, and both she and Mr. Farrell are in "The Clash of the Wolves" also.

"The Tower of Lies"

Marian Ainslee's next assignment at the Culver City studios will be the titling of Victor Seastrom's "The Tower of Lies," based on the Selma Lagerlof novel, "The Emperor of Portugalia," now being completed with Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer starred. Miss Ainslee titled Seastrom's greatest success, "He Who Gets Slapped."

Frank Tuttle Resting

Frank Tuttle is spending a three weeks' vacation in Maine following the completion of his latest Paramount picture, "Lovers in Quarantine," in which Bebe Daniels is starred. On his return he will direct the big special "The American Venus," in which the winner of the annual beauty pageant at Atlantic City will be featured.

"Saving a Safe" Completed

Joe Rock has completed Jimmy Aubrey's twelfth comedy for F. B. O. release entitled, "Saving A Safe." This comedy is the twenty-fourth Jimmy Aubrey comedy to be produced by Jimmy Aubrey Productions, Inc., and will be released by F. B. O. September 15th.

Richard Dix and Frances Howard in "Too Many Kisses," a Paramount picture.

Thomas Meighan Goes to Ireland to Make Picture

THOMAS MEIGHAN has gone to Ireland to make a motion picture. With a staff of cameramen, director, technical assistants and fellow players, the celebrated screen actor sailed on the Leviathan, Saturday, July 25th, to spend about four weeks among the picturesque hills of Kerry County.

The picture will have the famous Lakes of Killarney, Muckross Abbey, Ross Castle and Blarney Castle for a background. Some of the scenes will be made on a celebrated race course near Dublin.

Mr. Meighan has long cherished an ambition to make a picture in Ireland, and for more than a year the scenario staff of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been searching the field of literature for an authentic Irish story. Hundreds of novels, plays and short stories dealing with life in Ireland have been read and weighed for their picture values, and at last a suitable story has been found.

Accompanying Mr. Meighan on this interesting film adventure are a number of figures widely known in the motion picture world. Tom Geraghty, supervising director and scenarist of many successful Meighan pictures, and himself an authority on Irish lore and traditions, is in command of the expeditionary force as supervisor. The story is largely the work of Geraghty's pen. Direction will be in the hands of Victor Heerman, who has two recent Meighan successes, "The Confidence Man" and "Old Home Week" to his credit.

The camera work will be in charge of Alvin Wyckoff, one of the best of all cinematographers. Others in the party are Louis A. Sarecky, Ted Pahle, Gaston Longet and Emmet Crozier.

Mr. Meighan is accompanied by Mrs. Meighan. They occupy the premier suite on the Leviathan, the suite originally planned for Kaiser Wilhelm when the ship was under the German flag.

Kinograms Shows Slow and Regular Motion at Same Time

A DISTINCT novelty in news reel subjects is contained in Educational's news reel, Kinograms, No. 5105, released August 1, in a picture showing slow motion and regular motion on the screen at the same time.

This remarkable effect is shown, it is claimed, for the first time in film history, and was accomplished with the aid of a specially designed camera.

The picture was taken by John J. Blythe, Kinograms cameraman for the southeastern district, and concerns a series of views of cadets from the Citizens' Military Training Camp of Atlanta, Georgia, in cavalry practice at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. Colonel Meyer, of the Signal Corps, U. S. A., in command at the Fort, staged the scenes for Blythe, which consisted of expert riders in daring equine stunts, and a series of hurdle jumps.

Blythe, ho has been working on his special camera for some time, took it with him as well as a regulation camera. In the exhibition over the hurdles he first exposed the film on the upper half of the screen showing regular motion. Then he wound back the film and this time exposed the lower half in slow motion, using a special device that allows him to obtain any speed desired.

The effect on the screen is truly startling, and gives more than ever before a real chance for analysis. Here you can see simultaneously a horse jumping naturally and also eight times slower than normal. The picture is easy on the eye and the spectator is given plenty of time to take in the whole effect. Of course the horse in the top half of the picture in regular motion disappears from the screen before the slow motion horse has departed, but in order not to leave a blank space on the top half of the screen the cameraman had other horses follow the first one.

The only manner by which this effect could have been accomplished before the appearance of Blythe's invention would have been by double printing.

Lines Up Big Bookings

Nine Detroit Theatres Sign for Warner Pictures

The Warner Bros.' branch office in Detroit, of which John H. Young is manager, in one week lined up nine theatres in that city which contracted for the entire Warner Forty pictures. These houses were the Rialto, Boulevard, Rivola, Delthe, Maxine, Your, Grosse Pointe Park, Dawn, and Wyandotte.

Starting July 19 there were six Warner runs in Detroit. In that week "Kiss Me Again" played the Adams Theatre and "The Unknown Lover" the Colonial. During the week of July 26, "The Man Without a Conscience" was the attraction at the Adams, "Steele of the Royal Mounted" at the Colonial, "Bridge of Sighs" at the Fox Washington, and "Tracked in the Snow Country" at the Strand.

In addition to these, "The Grocery Clerk," one of the Larry Semon two-reel reissues, opened at the Fox Washington July 26.

Scenes in the Victor Fleming production, "Rugged Water," with Warner Baxter, Lois Wilson and Wallace Beery. Paramount will release this production in August, during Greater Movie Season.

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Hard Luck

Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan, says:

Dear Friend Richardson: Have been putting off writing for some time past but have tried to keep up with the questions and answers in the "Bluebook" school. Have been fortunate enough to hit the "Bullseye" once in a while myself. But our theatre closed for two months and a half, so will probably not answer very many questions until we reopen on account of not being home all the time. I sure am going to keep up all I can on the reading of the department if nothing more.

Maybe in my off moments I can angle for one of those "young whales" like Brother Whitt of Red Bluff, California, caught. How about it, Brother Whitt? Are there any more fish like that one left out there? I'd be almost tempted to journey out there if I thought there were.

Suggestions

I want to make a few suggestions regarding the idea of Brother Hile of the Majestic Theatre, Akron, Ohio, as to placing the change-over cue sheets in the film can. No, I don't believe it could be practical that way, if we paste them in the can. My idea would be to have each projectionist who receives a show with no change-over cue sheet with it to make out one to the very best advantage of every one following him and either fold it up the width of the film and fasten it to the front end of the first reel of the feature by means of a rubber band or paper clip, with instructions to the exchange inspector not to remove it.

Another way would be to type the change-over cue in neat form for each individual reel and place the change-over for each reel on the front end of that reel. It could be pasted permanently on. The man who caused it to be torn off should have honor enough to make a new one for it.

But after all, "be it ever so humble, there's no 'cue sheet' like your own." Make out your own for every show, is my advice.

Tough

'S hard luck, brother, but keep a stiff upper lip and don't let enforced idleness kill your interest in projection. Hope the theatre will open with every new thing you want and need and that the boss will make so much money next winter that he'll just have to get rid of some of it by keeping the show shop open all next summer.

As to the young whales—you just read what I said to Gray. Darn you fishermen, anyhow. Why don't y' get a motorcycle and have some REAL fun. Y' can't hurt anything but your own pocketbook, no matter how you mistreat a motorcycle, and golly what a whallop of a kick there is in the sport. And by the way, outside of towns, there is NO speed limit in Connecticut now. It has been abolished by the legislature. The only time the speed cop'll get you now is for running too slow, and thus obstructing traffic, or for doing something which is dangerous. In the latter event the common belief is that what the court will do to you sense, ride in Connecticut and have g-r-a-n-d sport, without causing either pain or death will be plenty. Motto: Get a Go-devil, use to anything.

Bluebook School

Question No. 344—Here is a very practical question, sent in by a man who, for very obvious reasons, requests that his name and address be kept secret. He says: "You have asked for practical questions. Here is one. Three months ago I took a position in this theatre as Chief Projectionist. It is a fine theatre, seating 1,075. Everything is the best money can buy except the projection machinery, which is old, badly worn and in a miserable state of repair. The owner is the manager. He pays the union scale because he has to, but to get repair parts is impossible, until the part to be replaced is absolutely and entirely worn out. Even then it often means a fight. He buys job lot carbons, and don't seem to care what the picture is, so long as there is one on the screen. He says if it were not for the union he would have a boy "run the machines," and apparently thinks "running the machines" is absolutely all there is to projection.

My practical question is: "How would you proceed to show such a man that his position is wrong, and to educate him to understand that better projection pays?"

There, gentlemen, is a question I ask you to give your very best consideration. It strikes deep at the very roots of one of our greatest troubles and problems—the exhibitor and manager who sees nothing in motion picture projection except the mere operation of a machine. The man to whom a "picture is a picture" and that's that. Such a trouble cannot be cured in a moment, a day, a month or possibly a year. How would YOU go about it?

Question No. 345—What is meant by the front and back end of an armature?

Question No. 346—Describe a generator armature.

Question No. 347—What is a "constant current" dynamo?

I shall only give these four questions this time because the first one I regard as of HUGE importance. I hope Dobson, Bennewitz and all the old guard will set their fans going and give us the benefit of their wisdom on this one.

Bring the String

A projectionist, in a personal letter, tells how he and his manager were down in the basement looking for something. Needing an extension cord to enable them to carry a light to a remote place he instructed the projectionist as follows: "Go upstairs, John, and get a long string so we can have a light over here."

Got a Razzing

C. V. Hile, Projectionist Majestic Theatre, Akron, Ohio, arises, secures the floor and makes the following remarks:

Dear Friend: It seems that projectionist Watkins wants an explanation concerning my suggestion of pasting a cue-sheet in the film container, so here it is. If there is anything in the theory of Darwin concerning evolution, probably the chief characteristic the human family would inherit from its apeian ancestors would be that of apeing, hence, the cue-sheet in the container having illustrated to the man who don't know how a cue sheet is made the method of its production, he could and maybe would try to make one himself.

Well, F. H., from the razzing I got in this town after my suggestion appeared in our department I thought all your opponents were concentrated in this immediate vicinity, but after reading the Chicago brother's letter I learn different. And now I'm going to tell you why some men here are ag'in you. A certain machine operator from Chicago once told several of the men here that you at one time ran a spot light, and when you had to trim the carbons, not knowing how to open the door you used a can-opener, and cut a hole in the side of it! Should you care to refute it I will undertake to see that all the anti-Richardson men read it. Some of the men here actually believe it and bring it up every time your name is mentioned.

A Good Laugh!

Brother Hile, I've had a good many laughs at some of the absurdities brought forward by those opposed to advancement, and therefore opposed to my work and myself, but really this is the limit—if you really mean it for fact. I don't feel called upon to defend myself from such a thing as that, but will say—NOT intending to in any way, shape, manner or form as defending myself, mind you—that the first time I ever projected light in any form was with a McIntosh stereopticon, using lime light, in the Cripple Creek District, Colorado. That was about 1895. And actually I did not use any can opener, either. I took a spike maul, a pick axe and a shovel and dug a hole in its side every time I wanted to open the lamphouse, until, fortunately after two or three months, using it every night, a wise guy from Arkon came along and showed me the door, after which I opened that instead of busting the side in. The next projector I used was a Selig Polyscope, also in Colorado. This time I used a monkey wrench, two cold chisels and a hammer and took the top off. I used a derrick and lifted it off, and after I had trimmed the carbons I hoisted it back on, riveted it fast again and proceeded. But this was a lot of trouble, of course, and finally another Akron man came along and showed me the door to the d———d thing, so all was well. Later I ran a spot (Don't remember this, but as the Chicago man says so it must be so) and you know from the Chicago man how I opened that.

But enough of such nonsense. If your colleagues really do believe such an utter absurdity as that, it is small credit to them.

Personally I would not consider the good opinion of men who believed a thing of such patent absurdity worth bothering about. I have merely used the item to show how hard put the opposition is to find excuses for opposing Richardson. I gather from your letter that not all Akron men are in that class, which is to the credit of Akron.

The best proof of the real value of my work is found in the act that Moving Picture World has continued it for fifteen and one half years, and has increased the space of the Department from one page to five, six and seven—occasionally it has even reached eight.

And believe you me, Brother Hile, an old experienced magazine such as the Moving Picture World does NOT use and pay for matter, and continue to do so for many years, unless experience proves that matter to have very real VALUE. I might also remark that my books are now literally standard all over the English-speaking world, and have been translated into at least one foreign language (French) at the expense of the government of the country.

But after all, suppose the Chicago man's yarn to have been true—what of it? It would haven happened many years ago—at least prior to 1895, for if I knew a stereopticon lamphouse had a door I surely would look for one on a spot lamphouse. I wonder how many of my Akron critics even knew there was such an animal on earth as a "lamphouse" in 1895. Laugh that one off!

In closing let me ask the pardon of my readers for having rather wasted this space. The criticism of such men does not even interest me, but it does get my angora that such drivel can find credence among even the poorest men in the profession.

It Helped

E. V. Close, American Legion, Lawrenceville, Pa., says:

The delay in expressing appreciation for the help you gave us does not indicate any lack of same. By bolting an extension to our old wooden top Powers table we managed to get the lamphouse back until we get a much better light than formerly. So good in fact that even the most consistent kickers admit that it is "pretty good."

We have managed to break every condenser we have put in thus far. The last one broke in a very thin line, which hardly shows even on thin slides, so we will leave it until our treasury accumulates a bit of monetary flesh.

(You mean the collector lens breaks—not the "condenser lens." Why not get the Pyrex condenser? They are guaranteed against breakage, and are not very expensive. They are called the Amberlux and can be had from any good supply dealer. They turn a bit pink after use, but not enough to offset their advantage in non-breakage. It is probable you now have your crater too close to the lens. That means lots of light—yes, but lots of breakage too.)

Our Columbia A. C. White Flame carbons have not been very satisfactory. The cores are not very good, and every once in a while the spot goes jumping all over the projector mechanism.

I wish to thank the department very much for its help. While I cannot offer you pecuniary remuneration, I can say that if nothing happens to our McIntosh apples before picking them, I'll send you a small box of the finest fruit that ever grew.

Don't want your money, friend Close. Had you sent it you would have gotten it back. When those who are able to pay for it want projection engineering information, I let them do it, and sometimes the price is "not so low" either. But things which can be answered in this department, or things men want who run little show shops, and whom I know have to fight for the few dollars they get, are as free as the air they breathe, and they are more than welcome to anything I can do to help them. That small box of apples, though—well, that is something else again. I like good apples, by heck, and if they come you WON'T gettum back. So be careful!

As to the carbons, the National Carbon Company labors hard to put out the best possible carbon, and they are succeeding mighty well too. If you have received carbons with defective cores, I am very sure that if you take the matter up with the National Carbon Company, Projector Carbon Department, Cleveland, Ohio, they will make good whatever is wrong, and be glad to do it. In every large factory, no matter how careful the inspection, an occasional bad bunch of goods will get past, and usually will cost the company anywhere from two to fifty times more trouble and loss than the value the defective goods amounts to.

The National Carbon Company is deserving of high commendation for the work they have done in perfecting carbons for motion picture projection. And that is no mere bouquet either, but a justly merited tribute to their engineering staff and road men—the latter for the work they have done in keeping track of actual working difficulties encountered by the projectionist, and making intelligent report thereof to the factory engineering department. William Kunzmann has done a great deal of this sort of work, and has done it exceedingly well, more power to him!

S. R. O.

THE S. R. O. sign is up in front of the house again.

He hasn't got a first-run picture, either. Nor a big star, nor a box-office hit. But he seems to get the crowd—every night.

He knows that people like to look at clear, life-like pictures, where brilliant illumination and strong contrasts of black and white define the characters and the scenes and give them a sense of reality. He knows that audiences do know the difference between good and poor projection. So he uses a Bausch & Lomb Cinephor Projection Lens.

The difference shows in the box-office count.

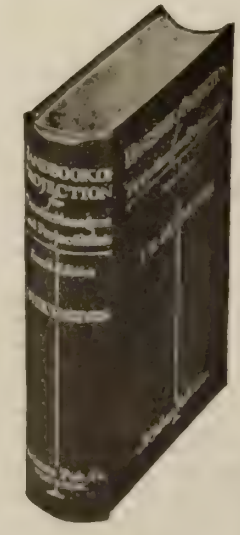
Mr. Projectionist



The quickest way to make more money is to make yourself more valuable than the other fellow.

Thousands of projectionists are rapidly advancing themselves by using F. H. Richardson's 4th Edition Handbook of Projection.

It contains the real "know how."

The knowledge it imparts gives you the balance of power.

And it is just that added power—the ability to guarantee Perfect Projection—that is earning projectionists the most money today.

What Is Needed

J. L. Swearington, Unionville, Missouri, wants to know:

I have an outfit consisting of a Powers Five projector, which was never used much and is in excellent condition. Have mapped out a route of seven small towns where there are no motion picture theatres, and expect to give a show in each of them one night a week.

I think I can make it pay very well, but am a bit puzzled. In five of them there is a three-wire A. C. 110—220 volt circuit from which the Power Company tells me I can use up to sixty amperes. In one there is 110 volt D. C. from which I can only draw a maximum of twenty-five amperes, and in the other there is only a 220 volt circuit, from which I also can take not to exceed 25 amperes.

Under this condition what would you advise me to do? I could use rheostats of course for the 110 volt circuits, but what would be the best for the 220? I now have a 25 ampere 110 volt rheostat.

How to Do It

Presumably you have a Powers Five projector complete, which means it is equipped with a small arc lamp. You could get fair results, by working carefully, with rheostats on the A. C., but if it were me I would get a Mazda outfit (lamphouse and lamp) for those towns and use your 25 ampere rheostat on the 110 volt D. C. To draw 50 amperes you will need another 25 ampere rheostat, connected in multiple with the one you now have.

But that 220 volt current from which you can only take 25 amperes—well, that raises a question. You could connect another 25 ampere 110 volt rheostat in series with the one you have (Connect one binding post of one rheostat to one binding post of the other and connect from the line to one of the other binding posts and from the remaining binding post connect to the projector table switch), which will give you twenty-five amperes, or thereabouts. BUT first ask the one who told you you could use only twenty-five amperes if it will be permissible to pull 5,500 watts from the line—for that is what you would be doing if you took 25 amperes at 220 volts through a rheostat.

True, you would only be pulling 25 amperes, but you would be using just electrical energy equal to fifty amperes from 110 volt lines. The surplus energy, equal to 25 amperes at 110 volts, is consumed in the resistance—the rheostats.

To recapitulate: You can get a Mazda outfit for the A. C. You can get another 25 ampere rheostat and use 50 amperes A. C. at the arc, using your present lamp. You can use your present rheostat on the 110 volt D. C., and your present lamp, of course, using half inch diameter cored positive carbon and about a five-sixteenths Silver tip negative. For the A. C. use ⅝ cored above and below.

As to the 220—well, that proposition is "not so good." If you can take 5,000 watts from the lines you can, as I said, use two 25 ampere rheostats in series, using the same size and kind of carbons recommended for the 110 volt D. C. Very likely they will let you use 25 amperes 220 through rheostats, charging you accordingly. It won't overload the lines, but if the generators are small and pretty well loaded, it might make a difference.

Up to Us

Wm. Burnett, Newton, Iowa, has considered the much discussed head phone stunt, and desires to make the following remarks concerning same:

Don't think because I may miss a few of the Bluebook School questions occasionally, that I am a quitter. Sometimes circumstances force one to lose step for a week or two.

I noticed where you had a little argument with Brother Armentrout, Mason City, Iowa, over the head phone stunt. He apparently is a bit peeved because you approved it. Well, he means all right, but doesn't see it the same as you do. As to his remarks concerning recognition for the projectionist, I think that particular part of it is strictly up to us. We should and must strive for improvement by studying our profession in its every angle, so that we may not only work intelligently and efficiently, but also that we may be able to talk intelligently concerning things connected with projection.

I believe that when we can do that, plus delivering the goods perfectly and efficiently, we will get recognition, and no head phone or anything else will be able to keep us from it.

Of course we don't relish having the "Old Man" take sides against us on a thing like that, but we are prone to forget that there are, not sometimes but always, two sides to an argument, and sometimes it happens that we, yes even "WE," are in the wrong. And if some one tells us so, why should we kick when we ourselves, deep down in our heart, know that we ARE wrong.

Most Men "Stay Put"

Personally I don't believe every theatre will adopt the head phone stunt, because most projectionists DO "stay put." Is not that a fact? And if we don't "stay put" surely we have no one to blame but ourselves, except we be obliged to stay non-put because of duties forced upon us by the management, in which case they could not very well adopt the head phone. In fact such a management is too stupid to recognize the necessity for the projectionist remaining beside the projector.

I believe the man who gets a head phone wished on him is the very man who ought to have it, because he just plain don't and won't attend to his business, and stay where he belongs. That is true, is it not?

And anyhow I believe we all need a bit of advice and a "shaking up" once in a while, and if any one is able to decide when that is and what sort of a lecture we need, it certainly is yourself.

We all hate to have our faults pointed out as forcefully as you have done times almost without number, but "fault pointing" won't do the man who is doing his full duty one bit of harm, and certainly the chap who don't do his full duty NEEDS a jolt.

The "Ball and Chain" gave me a laugh all right, but I guess it does look that bad to some of the boys. As it is now we have buzzers, bells and telephones, which everyone from the orchestra director, manager to the janitor is not at all bashful about using when the least thing goes wrong with the picture. I mean something we can't help happening, of course.

How He Started

Oh, well, it's a great life anyhow, if one doesn't weaken, and since one chap told how he "busted into" the game, I'll close by telling how I did. Way back in 1908, when projectors were little rattletrap contraptions which we had to tie down to the floor to make THEM "stay put," I began, and worked four long years for nothing, just to learn, only to find out that I hadn't more than got well started learning.

We had no projection department or Bluebooks then. Do I remember the old Edison lamp with its "pump-handle" carbon feed? I'll say I DO. Some difference between then and now, eh, "Rich"?

Yea verily there is, and I speak with the voice of the prophet when I say that there will be almost as great a difference between now and twenty years hence—in projection matters I mean.

Interesting Letter

Your letter is both interesting and in every way excellent. You have "sized up" matters very well indeed. You seem to have a broad understanding, and some degree of vision, which so many men lack. As to the head phone, your statement that the man who gets the head phone wished on him will be the man who ought to have it wished upon him—the chap who can "stay put," but just plain WON'T, is correct and tells pretty nearly the whole story.

Your letter is long, and I see nothing to be gained by commenting upon it at length. I will therefore merely add that the "jolts" I hand out are handed out ONLY because I firmly believe they are NEEDED, and that, as you say, they hit ONLY THE MAN WHO NEEDS A JOLT. The fact that a man gets peeved at my criticisms is prima facie evidence that he got personally hit by that criticism, hence he needed it.

S.M.P.E. Fall Meeting

We are informed by J. C. Krosen, chairman, publicity committee (a very able chairman, by the way, that the fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be held at Lakewood Farms Inn, Roscoe, New York, located on the New York City-Binghamton turnpike, about one hundred and twenty miles from New York City.

This is the second experiment of holding a meeting at an isolated country hotel. The 1924 spring meeting was also held at Roscoe Farms Inn. This hostelry lies up on a mountain side, three miles from any town, hence there are none of the distractions the city offers, and since in October the summer season is almost entirely over, the Society has the hotel—a great, rambling structure—to itself, and can get right down to business, with golf, trap shooting, horseback riding, dancing, etc., for entertainment during the evenings, and for the hours of the day when sessions are not sessioning. The place is therefore pretty nearly ideal for such meetings.

The program is, at this time, largely tentative, but Mr. Jroesen says it is already certain it will be well filled with subjects of real value to the industry at large, especially from the studio, laboratory and theatre viewpoints.

We take the liberty of suggesting that the meeting should see a full quota of members present. The Society has much more than amply proven its worth in many ways. One of its features of great practical value is in the bringing together into intimate, personal contact, engineers from all branches of the industry, and representatives of manufacturers, who met under very nearly ideal conditions, swap ideas and become acquainted with each other's work.

Likes It "As Is"

Charles Armentrout, Projectionist, Star Theatre, Mason City, Iowa, arises to remark:

Dear Friend Richardson: In May 10 issue you ask what we desire in the columns of the projection department.

Kindly permit me to suggest that you continue to use your own good judgment. Certainly you are in the best position to know what is best for the profession, and the most pleasing to the greatest number of men who are reading and making a study, or sort of text gook of the department.

I, for one, am well satisfied with the department just as it is now being edited. A friendly letter now and then, no matter whether from a city of a small town man, is a very good tonic. Two or three pages of technical matter is, I believe, sufficient to satisfy the average reader. There are a few technical books as yet unconquered, which the technical enthusiast who wants more can get busy on.

A bit of humor occasionally is most excellent. I know I get a mighty good giggle from some of those wise crackers. "A little nonsense now and then is relished by the wisest men."

Slam Good, Too

Even an occasional slap on the wrist don't do any harm. Just wakes a fellow up from his nap, or maybe from his slumber. Remember that while your views and the views of some of your readers, or maybe all of them, do not always coincide, that does not in any way mean that friendship has been revoked. Far from it. Were we to agree with everything we read or hear, that would mean there would be a lot of things we would never know.

As to the other projection publications, I believe I have read the greater share of them and will say in all honesty that I do not believe any of them can compare in far-reaching value with the pages of the Moving Picture World projection department, though some of them are very valuable indeed.

The American Projectionist is just fine, but who was it made such a publication possible by long years of hard labor in a virgin field? I will venture the assertion that F. H. Richardson, Editor Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, played the leading role. I am "for you" and the department, Old Timer, just as it is.

Brother Armentrout has put his finger squarely on the button of success, insofar as has to do with such a department as this. If it were all technical stuff, which is always dry, it would not be read by any except just a few enthusiastic students—the very ones it is really least important to reach.

What Blackton Thinks

J. Stuart Blackton once, years ago, remarked to me that he read the projection department pretty regularly.

Curiosity prompted me to ask why. His reply was to the effect that I was "always pulling something" and he wanted to see what I'd land on next.

Had the matter been all technical, or all tame, no-kick-to-it, stuff you can bet your last clay pipe that J. Stuart Blackton would NOT have bothered to read it. And what is true of him is almost equally true of the projectionist.

So I try first of all to make the department such that it will be READ, remembering always that in so doing I must do it in a way which will induce the hard boiled "practical experience" chap to, perhaps, inadvertently, absorb something of real value. But I asked the question in all good faith. If our readers care to suggest changes which they believe will make the department better, I want to hear those suggestions; also I will adopt them if they seem to be good.

I thank you, friend Armentrout, for your kindly words of friendship. May I continue to merit your regard as the years roll past.

Oh, yes by, the way, what you have said about lack of appreciation for the vast amount of work done when the doing was distinctly hard, and the man who fought the projection "fight" had to literally pretty nearly fight everybody in the industry, is TRUE. I blame no one for this. It is natural. This department was fifteen years old last January. Of all those who started out bravely AFTER it had pointed the way, and showed that it could be done, it is the only one that weathered the storm.

The American Projectionist went about the matter differently, but could not have succeeded were it not for the self-sacrificing work of such men as Edwards, who gives freely of his time and energy, and gives it free, too. I do hope the little paper will some day get to the point where it can have a regular paid staff, which means probable permanent life for it.

Hooray!

Gray Stone Cottage, Point o' Woods Beach, South Lyme, Connecticut, the summer home of the editor, is wild with excitement. In the front room the radio is going full blast. On the front porch John Griffith, Ansonia, and Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Massachusetts, are parked in easy chairs and the air is all tangled up with light rays, sprockets, diameters, focal lengths and other projection dingbats, while in the kitchen my daughter Nellie (who is my pal) and Mrs. Gray are preparing a festival of eats, which includes swordfish, clam chewder, chowder or whatever it is, choc'lut cake and Gawd knows what else.

I hear Gray gritting his teeth, while John is all ready to come as near swearing as he ever does, so guess I'd better go arbitrate. It's the diameter of the light beam forninst the projection lens—at the shutter plane just now. Heaven knows what it 'll be next. Wish Dobson, Bennewitz, Basson, Fell, Hanover, Hurlbutt, Burnette, Budge and the rest were here, but anyhow I'm enjoying the Gray-Griffith visit thoroughly. Too bad Basson did not get here, as he wanted to.

Later: It's all over now. They're gone, though Gray was with me for three days, which I wish had been at least six. John could not stay so long, but then he is only fifty miles away, and can come most any time. Those two men-boys are REAL, just as I have found most progressives to be. Bennewitz, Dobson, Griffith and Gray I know personally, and they are all real fellows—not tin angels, but regular make-mistakes-occasionally he-men, who believe in the future of the business of projection and who are ready and willing to join in the movement to raise it to the highest level possible.

And while I am talking let me orate a bit more on something else. Local Union 306, New York City Motion Picture Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., for several years pursued a course which discouraged and even disgusted many of us. Under the leadership of Harry Mackler, however, it took a different course, and to a considerable extent has redeemed itself. Harry served two terms as President, and he was a good one, in every sense of the word.

He was succeeded by Joseph Basson, who (and I do NOT say it because Basson is and has for many years been my personal friend) continued the forward movement, ably assisted by Alex Polin, Business Agent for Manhattan, and James Le Fante, Brooklyn Business Agent.

The local is just now taking an action and setting a precedent which it will behoove other locals to examine closely and to emulate. I will tell you all about it as soon as it is in operation. I had absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with its adoption or establishment, but was inclined to throw my chapeau up into the breeze and yell "Hurrah for Local 306" when I heard of it.

Local 306 is the largest projectionist local in the I. A. It ought to be the leader in progressiveness. As matters now are shaping it may be just that before long, which is to the large credit of both the local officers, and the membership as a whole.

Bluebook School—Answers 316 to 320

Question No. 316—Often in making calculations we have to "square the diameter." How is it done? Give examples. What is a killowatt hour?

C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Mass.; W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island; F. H. (Dinty) Moore, Taunton, Mass.; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, New Hampshire; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Illinois; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; C. O. Henning, Iowa City, Iowa; Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico and John Griffith, Jr., all answered correctly.

Gray answered the first part of the question so well, that, though he entirely overlooked the last half, I shall quote him. He says:

Squaring a number means multiplying a number by itself. Thus the square of 5 (5 X 5) is 25. The square of 7 (7 X 7) is 49. The square of 2/5 (2/5 X 2/5) is 4/25, or decimally, the square of .4 (.4 X .4) is .16. The diameter of a circle is a straight line extending from one point on the boundry to a point directly opposite and passing through the exact center of the circle. Or, it is the length of this line. It is generally given with a figure to indicate its length. It represents the thickness of a wire. A wire .125 inch thick has a diameter of .125 inch. "Squaring the diameter" means multiplying the length of the diameter by itself. The square of .125 (.125 X .125) is .015625, so the square of the diameter .125 of an inch in length is .015625 of an inch.

Henning says:

Squaring the diameter means multiplying the length of the diameter by itself, thus, the diameter of a No. 14 wire is 64.1 thousandths of an inch, or 64.1 mils. In order to find the area of the wire it is only necessary to "square the diameter," in thousandths of an inch, or "mils" to have the result in circular mils, and 64.1 mils X 64.1 mils equals 4,108.81 circular mils, which is the area of the wire.

A kilowatt hour means the consumption of one kilowatt (1,000 watts) of electrical energy for a period of one hour.

Doe says:

Squaring the diameter means multiplying the length of the diameter by itself, thus: What is the square of the diameter of a circle ten feet in diameter? The answer is 10 X π 10 feet equals 100 feet, which is the square of the diameter of the circle.

It might be well to remark that the square of the diameter of a wire, expressed in mils., equals its area of cross section in circular mils. See answer to question 310 and page 77 of the Bluebook.

A "kilowatt hour" is the term used to designate the amount of electrical energy consumed when one kilowatt is used for a period of one hour.

Incidentally Johnson asks: Say, Rich, how in h — eck (Heck isn't what he really meant, I think, but what does a little hell amount to between friends?) can you find the area of cross section of a round wire merely by squaring the diameter. Maybe you can, but a round wire is round, and the area of a circle is equal to (He pen-prints something that looks like two TTs with their top bars joined, which we can't print at all, at all, followed by R^2 (which means radius squared I guess), or 3.1416 X radius squared.

I'm right glad Johnson called the turn in this because it made me get down, dig and hunt up the answer. I quote from Hawkens Electrical Guides, page 732, volume No. 3.

"The area of a wire in circular mils is equal to the square of the diameter in mils."

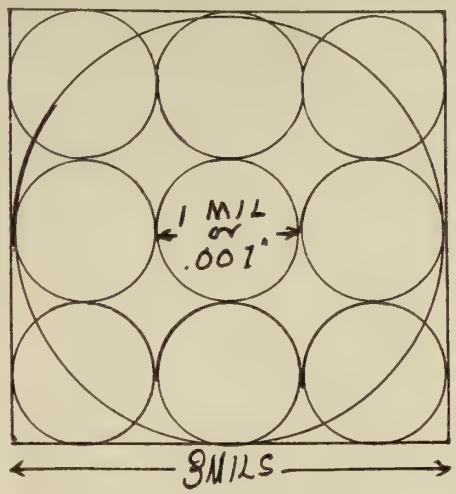

Diagram illustrating circular mils. The circular mil is used as a unit of cross sectional area in measuring wires. It is equal to the area of a circle .001 of an inch in diameter; its value is .0000007854 of a square inch. In the figure the sums of the combined areas of the nine small circles equal the area of the large circle. This is evident from the following: Take the diameter of the small circles as unity, then the diameter of the large circle is three. Hence the sum of the areas of the small circles X ($1 = 4\pi X 1^2$) X 9 equals .7854 X 9 equals 7.0686; area of large circle equals 1/4 π X 3^2 which equals .7854 X 9 which equals 7.0686, therefore since the area of the large circle equals the area of the sum of the small circles, THE AREA OF THE WIRE, EXPRESSED IN CIRCULAR MILS, IS EQUAL TO THE SQUARE OF ITS DIAMETER EXPRESSED IN MILS.

There, Johnson, dagnaby', I hope you're satisfied—and so am I, and all zwell that end zwell, but more than an hour has gone blooy just the same, and that drawing is none the best either.

Question No. 317—As applied to motors and generators, what is meant by the term "efficiency"? How is it expressed?

Everyone before named seems to have replied with at least a fair degree of correctness, though some of you must be rather short of ink or paper.

Moore says:

Efficiency of motors, generators and transformers is the ratio of the power applied to the input terminals to the energy delivered at the output terminals. It is usually expressed in terms of percentage. It is found by dividing the output, in watts, by the input, also in watts, as for instance, a generator which requires an input of ten amperes at 110 volts, or 1,100 watts at the motor which drives it, and which has an output of only 900 watts, would have an efficiency equal to 900 divided by 1,000, or .81 plus or 81 plus per cent.

Gray says:

When we speak of the efficiency of a motor or a generator, we have reference to the ratio of the output to the input energy. The efficiency is ordinarily expressed in terms of percentage.

The function of a motor is to receive a certain amount of electric energy and so apply it that it will perform work in a mechanical way. (At first glance some may question this, but remember that even though the work be the driving of a generator, still it is being driven by the pull of a shaft or belt or gearing, so is really is "applied mechanically.—Ed.) A generator is driven by applied mechanical energy. Its output is in the form of electrical energy. Always a greater amount of energy must be used than can be or is delivered, because where work is performed, energy always is consumed.

In the case of a motor driven generator the losses of the combined machines is easily measured, because it is merely a matter of measuring the input wattage and the output wattage. In the case of a motor alone it often is comparatively difficult to measure the output energy accurately. It is more practical to measure the input energy and compute the losses in the machine itself, thus arriving at the total output energy, the latter of course being equal to the input plus the losses in the machine itself. Efficiency equals output dividend by input, or output divided by output plus losses.

In generators one may more readily measure the output, but unless the machine be motor driven the measurement of the input may be difficult. The method for calculation is the same as for motors.

Question No. 118—Suppose you had a motor generator set, and wished to know the exact percentage of efficiency at which it was operating. How would you proceed to find out?

Every one replied correctly, as also did John Andrews, St. Louis, Missouri and B. R. Schuman, St. Paul, Minnesota.

Cooley says:

With the machine operating at normal capacity, or at the load it ordinarily carries, I would measure the amperes and watts at the input terminals of the motor, and reduce it to watts by multiplying the two together. I would then do the same thing at the output terminals of the generator. I would then divide the output wattage by the input wattage. The answer would be the percentage of efficiency, expressed in decimals.

In calculating input and output wattage one may use the figures on the plates of the motor and generator respectively, if one desired, but to be exact one must measure, as before set forth.

No, brother Johnson, you can't do anything of the sort—take the plate figures I mean. Why not? For the simple reason that by that method you would not be taking into consideration the possible condition of the machine, which same makes, or may make a very great difference indeed. Many a motor generator which showed a seventy-five per cent efficiency when installed, only showed sixty five, sixty or even less after a couple of months in the hands of some horny handed, corny brained good truck driver who busted into motion picture projection under the impression that it was merely a lotta fun and "oprat'in a merchine"—which idea he has never in any degree changed.

Gray puts it thusly:

It is perhaps considerably easier to determine the efficiency of a motor generator set than it is to determine the efficiency of either a motor or a generator considered separately. This, because the input energy of the motor and the output energy of the generator can be read directly with watt meter, and the ratio of the latter to the former easily and quickly computed.

There is a considerable amount of energy consumed in the operation of a motor generator set. There is first, the loss in the motor that is incidental to the operation of all motors. Second, the loss of energy occasioned in the process of the motor driving the armature of the generator. Third, loss in the generator that occurs in the operation of all generators.

If no watt meter is available, the input energy may be ascertained by taking a voltmeter reading of the potential drop across the terminals of the motor and multiplying this sum by the number of amperes flowing in the motor circuit. Then determine the output energy by repeating this process on the generator side of the machine. The ratio of the output energy to the input energy expressed in percentage will be the efficiency of the set.

As a rule, there is sufficient information on the name plate on a set to compute the efficiency from the figures stamped thereon. Assume the readings on the motor plate to be Volts 220, Amperes 35 or K. W. 7. 7. The generator plate reads Volts 70, Amperes 70. The input wattage will be equal to 220 X 35 or 7700, and the output wattage will be equal to 70 X 70 or 4900. 4900 divided by 7700 equals 63.6 and the efficiency of the outfit is therefore 64 per cent. Incidentally, the percentage just arrived at is not far from the average efficiency of the commercial motor generator set used in projection work.

Huh! You are energetically referred to my foot-note to Johnson's reply!

Question No. 319—Upon what law is the electrical action of an electric dynamo based?

Again Gray, I think, words his answer best. He says:

When a wire, or metallic, closed loop is placed in a magnetic field, and is then moved so as to alter or change the number of lines of force passing through it, an induced e. m. f. will be set up that will cause a current of electricity to flow through the metallic circuit, and the direction of this current flow will depend upon the direction of the lines of force and the direction of the motion of the loop.

Cooley says:

All dynamos, of whatever form, have their base of electrical action in the following law: "Electric currents are generated in conductors by moving them in a magnetic field so as to cut the magnetic lines of force." That is how it is stated in Hawkens, page 125, Volume No. 1. The Bluebook, page 7, gives us the same thing, but in words which may be a bit more easily digested. It says: "If an electric conductor in the form of a closed circuit be moved in a magnetic field in such a way that lines of magnetic force are cut, a current of electricity will be generated therein, which will flow in a direction at right angles to the line of motion."

Hanover puts it this way: The law you have reference to is to be found on page 7 of the Bluebook. It is to the effect that if a conductor in the form of a ring or wire coil be moved in a magnetic field, a current will be induced therein, which same will flow in a direction at right angles to the direction in which the coil is moved.

All dynamo action is based on that law. However, I think you committed an error in stating the question. Should not generator have been used, instead of dynamo. Dynamo is, as you doubtless very well know, the term used to describe the direct current generator, "alternator" being used to designate the A. C. generator.

Yes, Brother Hanover, I very well knew that, but you see if I used the word "generator," that would include batteries, because they are electric generators. I might have used both words, and thus have made the question read: "Dynamo and alternator," but thought it unnecessary, and that perhaps it might be confusing to those who do not know that there is a distinction of that sort.

Question No. 320—Explain the action of an elementary dynamo armature.

I think I will just print Gray's answer, which is good, and let it go at that this time, though our new friend Henning also made an excellent answer. Gray says:

An elementary dynamo (in reality an A. C. elementary generator) consists of a metallic loop placed in a magnetic field, and so arranged that it can be rotated around a horizontal axis extending at a right angle to the direction of the lines of force. As the loop is rotated the angle of its plane changes in relation to the plane of the lines of force, and as this angle increases or decreases during a revolution of the loop, so does the number of the lines of force that pass through the loop increase or decrease. This action results in the setting up in the loop of an induced electromotive force, the strength of which is proportional to the density of the magnetic flux (the density of the lines of force comprising the field), and to the rate at which the lines of force threading through the loop are altered in number, this latter being dependent upon the rate of speed at which the loop is rotated. The induced voltage causes a current of electricity to flow through the loop, the direction of which is governed by the relationship of the direction in which the loop is moving to the direction of the lines of force. Thus the relationship which exists while the loop is making the first half of a revolution is completely reversed during the last half. Likewise is the direction of the current flow reversed, and in consequence the resultant generated current is one that alternates in direction of flow twice for each revolution of the loop.

The Scythe Swings

"Old Father Time his scythe keeps sweeping,
While we're waking, when we're sleeping,
Not a solitary moment does he pause to rest."

And this time it is John Strom Speer, president and general manager, as well as the founder of the Speer Carbon Company, who has been laid low by the blade of Father Time.

Mr. Speer passed over the Great Divide and down into the shadows of The Valley on July twenty-seventh. When he left us it was a real loss, for Speer was an honest, whole-souled, capable man. I knew him well, and valued his friendship. When he shook you by the hand you knew he meant it. Nothing spectacular about him. Just plain MAN, but square as a die and twenty-four karat gold in character.

The business will be carried on as before, though whether or not the company will ever again become active in the projection carbon field is not certain. A letter from them recently seems to indicate that such a course is in contemplation, but not at all sure.

Can't Be Done

From a small town in a large state comes this letter:

I have a projectionist's license (Pennsylvania licenses "Motion Picture Projectionists," not "Moving Picture Machine Operators."—Ed.) and am working in a local theatre as relief projectionist.

I have learned all I know from your Bluebook, though all I know to date is not a third of what I ought to know, and some day will, too. I am very willing to learn more, but would like to go to a school or other place where I can get practical experience.

Would you please tell me where I can go and learn to be a real motion picture projectionist? Or couldn't you teach me at least some of the things you know so well if I came to you? Please give me advice and tell me what to do.

Hard to Refuse

It really is hard to refuse such a plea as this, and they reach me quite often, too. But there is nothing I can do. Teaching men myself is entirely out of the question. I have more than I can do right now; also I have no facilities for teaching. There is no school in which you could get "practical experience," so far as I know, or anything else much except a lot of answers to a lot of questions, with no real understanding of what the answers stand for.

Brother, I certainly would help you if I could. So far as I know there is just one thing for you to do, and that is to get a job in a small theatre, where the equipment is not too complicated, work hard, study hard, perfect yourself, and in course of time work out of the small theatre and small town and into a real job. Like so many others, friend, you want to land in the middle of things with one jump. You are not willing to "buck the line," bust in in the way I have indicated, and work and study hard for maybe five or six years before relative success comes to you, and perhaps ten or fifteen before any relatively big success crowns your efforts, though that is the rule in all the other walks of life I know anything much about.

First you have got to "get a job." I cannot tell you how or where. That is your trouble. Use your brains, take time, working at something else meanwhile for a living if you must, watch your chance and get that job.

There's a Reason

Fred Knotts, Portland, Oregon, hands the Power folks a biff, just like this:

Dear Sir and Brother: Note in June 13 number the article concerning Power's magazine valves. It is evident that the Power Company does not believe in the Dodge Brothers slogan: "No yearly models, but continual improvements.

In June 20 issue—Bluebook School—question No. 280—I agree with Brother Bennewitz. I certainly would like to live in the same town with that man. He is my kind. I am sure I could work with him, and he could do the writing. The trouble with me is that when I'm through writing and it gets fairly dry, I can't read it myself. That is why I don't write more. Work is very much more easy for me. If you can't make this out, chuck it in the wastepaper basket and call it a day.

Your writing is "not so bad," but you do not express yourself very clearly. However, if you could see some of the hieroglyphic messes I decipher you'd not mind sending your own at all.

As to the Power's magazine valve location, and their not believing in the continual improvement, why in that you are in error. I can say from personal knowledge that both the Powers and the Simplex people are quick to adopt improvements just as fast as they can. I believe the Motiograph folks are, too.

The thing which seems very simple to men who do not know all the circumstances, may present many complications to the one who does. In the matter of the magazine valve location, I happen to know that it would cost a very considerable sum of money to make the change—a sum I think I would be very glad to accept in lieu of a year's salary. Of course you can't see how that can be. Well, brother Knotts, remember this: Projector manufacturers all want business. They will do all they can to get it, which means they will adopt all improvements they can, but they are making no fortune and cannot afford many things they would like to.

Projector manufacturers, like editors, have to try to do the best they can, and I will say that in my opinion it is little short of a marvel that they turn out such an amazingly accurate, complicated mechanism, with such an accurate optical system for the sum of money charged for it. You must remember that the sum you pay for a projector does NOT all go to the manufacturer, by any manner of means. When the projector is finished, there is the packing, the shipping, the dealer and his not small commission, and sometimes the installation to take care of.

So, brother Knotts, don't you go roasting any of 'em. They are all doing all they possibly can to give you the best possible projector and the best possible service, and that is no mere bunch of idle words either

Eastman Company Announces New Motion Picture Kodak

HOME movies would seem to have been now brought within complete realization with the announcement just made by the Eastman Kodak Company of their development of a new model Cine-Kodak. Practically pocket size, as simple to load, hold and operate as an ordinary Kodak and at a price within reach of all, $70, amateur motion picture taking should now take on the popularity of Kodak snapshooting, it is predicted.

The popularity of home movies, according to the announcement, has been proved and while the more serious worker may still prefer the present electrically-driven Cine-Kodak, the new more compact model will appeal to the world of amateurs at large.

This latest achievement is a thoroughly practical motion picture camera reduced to the same compactness and simplicity of operation that have made the Kodak famous. With its genuine leather covering it has the appearance and is about the size of 3A Kodak closed.

It takes ordinary Cine-Kodak film (16 mm wide) in 50 or 100 ft. lengths, is daylight loading and spring driven. The film is made reversible, that is, through a special process the negative is reversed to a positive and the film actually exposed is used for projection. This eliminates cost of additional film and printing and is an emphatic economy of operation.

The price of the film, it is announced, also covers the cost of finishing at any one of the Eastman laboratories. No tripod is necessary.

This new model is held at waist level, the subject found in the view finder and by simply pressing a spring twenty feet of film may be exposed without rewinding. Steady spring tension provides for evenness of exposure.

The lens is an f.6.5 especially designed for this camera It has a focal length of only 20 mm (less than 1 inch) which gives a broad angle and permits the protographing of large objects at relatively close range. "Close ups" can be made at 4 ft. and distant views can follow with no focusing adjustment.

Further description is contained in the announcement. The weight is given at 5 pounds when loaded, size 8 13-16 inches long by 5 9-16 inches high and 3 1-16 inches wide, and is therefore easily carried. It can be brought into action as quickly as any Kodak and a tripod is not necessary, as the illustrations show.

Indicators on the outside of the camera are convenient helps to the operator. An exposure guide on the diaphragm scale shows which of the four stops to use under various conditions. A footage indicator automatically tells how many feet of unexposed film are left in the camera.

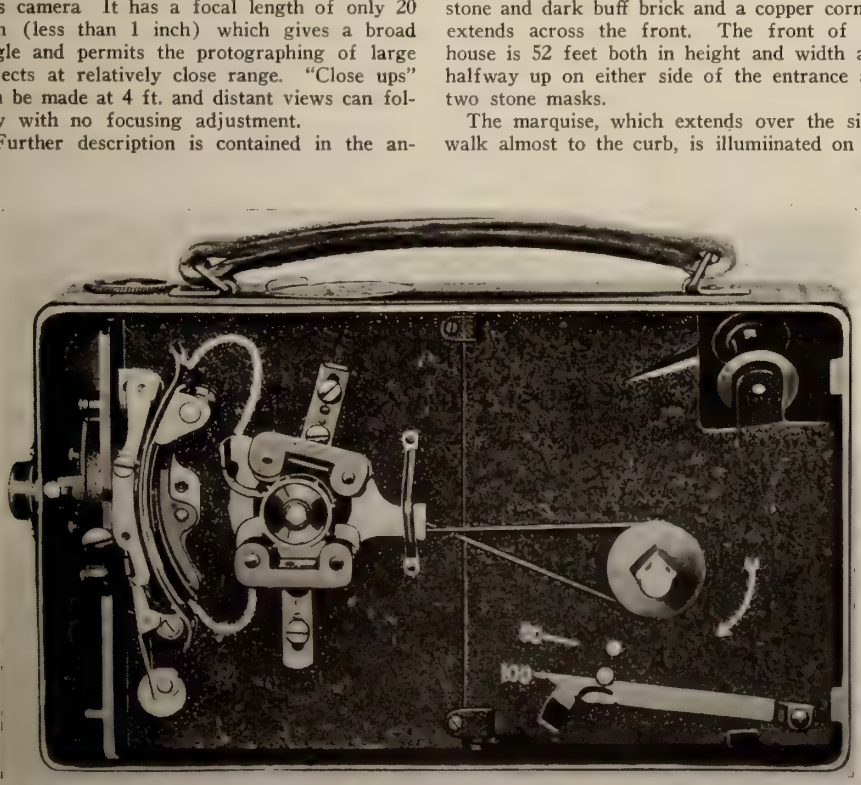
The film reels are opposite each other and can easily be loaded in daylight. Threading can be done very quickly. Pull-down claws in the gate automatically adjust themselves to the perforations in the film. The guide base is at an angle, allowing the film to be wound on the reel without danger of jamming or of loose-winding. Studs in the door prevent closing the camera if the loading of the film has not been correctly done.

The curved gate holds the film accurately in focal plane without danger of abrasion or scratching and also eliminates the necessity of frequently cleaning the gate.

The exposure lever may be locked in operating position so that the operator may place the camera on a firm support and include himself in the action of the picture.

As this new model uses the same film as the original Cine-Kodak no duplication of stock on the dealers' shelves is necessary. It is 16 mm wide, of safety stock, and instead of the usual printing operation, the negative, through a special process, is reversed to a positive so that the identical strip of film that was used for exposure is used for projection as well.

The company announces that while it is not in position to fill immediate orders, plans are will under way to begin deliveries toward the end of the presenth month and to produce in quantities by mid-autumn.



Easy threading is an impressive feature of the new Cine-Kodak. The take-up reel fits over the shaft shown in the right half of the illustration. The supply roll is placed in similar position beside the motor, beyond the partition.

Fred M. Zimmerman's New Lafayette Is Opened at Batavia, New York

BEAUTY of architectural design, safety provided in its construction and careful attention given to the little details for the comfort of its patrons are among the features of the new Lafayette, opened on July 9, in Batavia, N. Y., by the Western New York Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., of which Fred M. Zimmerman is president.

The theatre, built by the Farber Brothers and leased to the Zimmerman organization, is constructed of sturdy building tile covered with light buff brick. It is trimmed in white cast stone and dark buff brick and a copper cornice extends across the front. The front of the house is 52 feet both in height and width and halfway up on either side of the entrance are two stone masks.

The marquise, which extends over the sidewalk almost to the curb, is illumiinated on all sides by large daylight bulbs. Double rows of colored lights around the sign are controlled by an automatic flasher. At the front of the sign the theatre name is displayed in large channel illuminated letters and theatre programs are shown on either side of opalite glass letters. The theatre sign which hangs over the marquise is about 25 feet in height and also has a double row flasher system. Four large photograph frames are hung at the front of the house.

There are 700 seats on the main floor. Each seat is leather cushioned and knee room of 30 inches is allowed between the seat and the seat backs. There are 22 seats in each row—eleven in each section. Four exit doors lead from the auditorium to concrete runways which lead directly to the street.

The manager is James J. Kelly, former manager of the Liberty, in Corning, and the Avondale, in North Tonawanda, who has had 18 years' experience in the theatre business. The ventilating system is of the Typhoon type. The projection booth includes two Powers improved model machines.

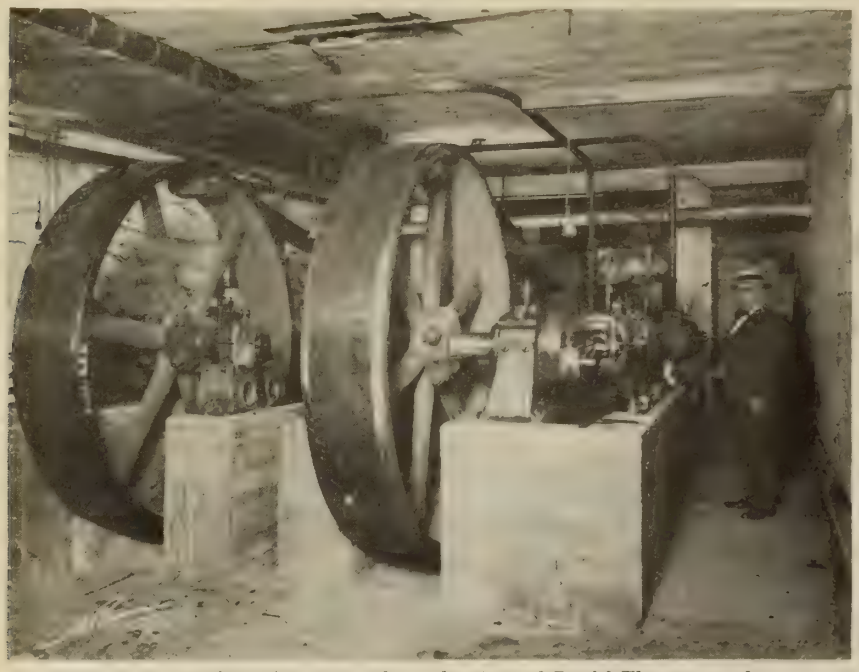
The opening program consisted of "The Thundering Herd"; Larry Semon in "Her Boy Friend"; Miss Ruth Petit, concert contralto; Richard Miller, tenor; Capman Brothers in a jazz band number and organ solos. Prices are 15 to 50 cents.

NEW CINCINNATI THEATRE

Another new movie house is contemplated for Cincinnati, according to a persistent rumor in circulation here. The project is being sponsored by Gilbertson and Beecher, who now operate the Washington Theatre. The new house, which will be located at Peebles Corner, a 15-minute ride from the business section of the city, will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,400 and cost upwards of $200,000.

FAMOUS GETS OTTAWA'S "LEGIT"

The Russell Theatre, the one legitimate theatre at Ottawa, Ontario, has now been acquired by Famous Players Canadian Corp., according to a report at Toronto, the company's headquarters. This will make the third of the Ambrose Small chain which has been secured by Famous Players, this being the Grand theatres at London and Kingston, Ontario.



Machine that keeps the auditorium of Davis' Theatres cool.

Big Cooling Systems Installed in Davis' Pittsburgh Theatres

HARRY DAVIS, general manager of the Davis and Grand Theatres, Pittsburgh, Pa., has installed elaborate cooling systems in these houses at a cost approximating $100,000 for each.

Investigation of nearly every cooling and air conditioning system that has been devised was conducted by Mr. Davis before he decided upon the plan which has been put into operation at both houses.

The installation of the plants at the Grand and Davis Theatres was finished several weeks ago and the intervening time has been used in making tests and establishing to the satisfaction of the management of the two houses that the system would give effective service. The tests have been a success, showing that the air within the theatres can be maintained evenly at a temperature of 70 to 75 degrees, no matter how hot the sun may beat upon the pavements outside. The humidity, recognized as oftimes the greatest cause of discomfort, can be controlled as easily as the temperature. Should the close and damp air out of doors send the humidity to 100, in the theatres it can be maintained at but 55, the entire matter being mechanically and automatically adjusted.

The combined cooling plants of the Grand and Davis Theatres, it is claimed, form the largest cooling system in the world. In each building the machinery necessary occupies large space in the basements and requires also a network of conveyors or ducts which lead from the cooling plant direct to all portions of the auditoriums.

In this way the cooled and purified air is distributed without draft and with evenness to every portion of the houses, gently and effectively supplying the atmospheric comfort which is such an important part of theater enjoyment.

The coolness is achieved by the use of a liquid carbonic refrigerant forced first through condensers and compressors and then into expansion coils where, coming in contact with both air and water, its expansion serves to cool the latter. The carbonic refrigerant employed is harmless and neutral and chemists know it as the chief constituent of fire extinguishers.

Five hundred thousand pounds of machinery was installed in each of the theatres to perfect the cooling plants. These included the coils for carrying the refrigerant, immense blowers, electric pumps, four air washers and revolving discs of spraying water. The air conditioning also required the employment of 500 horse-power in electric motors and electrically controlled panels.

Fresh air is drawn from the outdoors, and before being sent into the theater, it is washed, purified, cooled and placed in the proper condition from the viewpoint of moisture. Fans draw it into the cooling apparatus in the subbasements.

The installation of the cooling plants required practically a transformation in the ventilating systems of the theatres which have been amplified so that they will now take care of 150,000 cubic feet of fresh air a minute.

Schwartz Circuit of Picture Theatres to be Enlarged

Recent announcement from the A. H. Schwartz office relative to the proposed plan of erecting eight more theatres in New York City is borne out by the fact that three of them will be under way before the summer is over.

At Avenue U and Coney Island Avenue, Schwartz's organization is now building the foundations for a 2,000 seat vaudeville and picture house. This theatre is scheduled to open early in the spring of 1926.

The plans for the second Schwartz operation, at Kings Highway and Flatbush Avenue, have been filed and the excavations will be started about August 1. These two theatres in conjunction with the Kingsway, Farragut, Albemarle, Rialto, Linden and Century will give Schwartz eight houses in Flatbush.

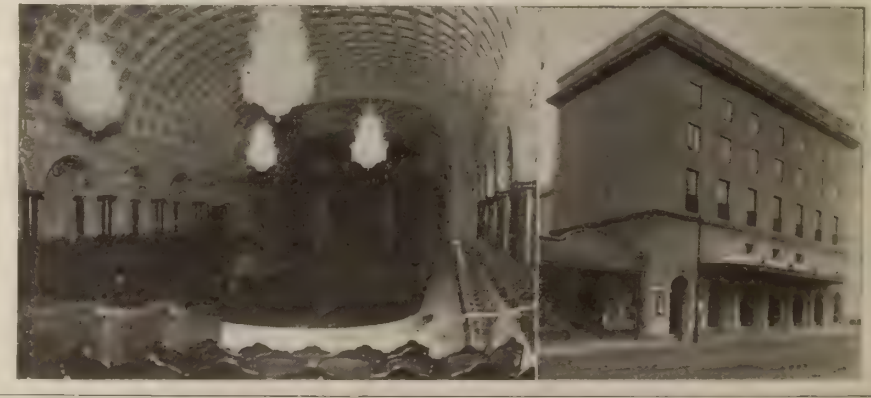
The first of Mr. Schwartz's plans for a string of high class theatres throughout Long Island is located in Flushing, and a large crew is now engaged in demolishing the old buildings occupying the theatre site.

It will have a seating capacity of 2,500.

Following closely upon the 3 houses above mentioned will be theatres in Freeport, Huntington, Baldwin, Corona and Port Washington, with others to be added in the near future.

In addition to these Long Island houses, Mr. Schwartz is now operating the Merrick and Rialto Theatres in Jamaica.

The Palladium Theatre, Stockholm, Sweden, is beyond doubt the most imposing house devoted to motion pictures in Scandinavia. It is owned and operated by the Svenska Filmindustri, better known as the Swedish Biograph. The Palladium has a seating capacity of nearly twelve hundred, and houses all first run pictures in Stockholm. Among the features of theatre construction peculiar to the country is the balcony, which, it will be noted runs along the side of the house as well as the rear. Another condition worthy of note is the fact that there is very little display of theatre front advertising, which is always evident in American houses regardless of their calibre.



It's expected

"Eastman" and "Kodak," in black letters in the margin, identify the genuine Eastman product—the film that carries quality through to the screen.

Eastman Positive Film assures the kind of photographic reproduction that audiences are entitled to—and expect.

Every once in a while. Not often enough, incidentally. Someone moves along and takes a place. Right square in the public eye. (And everyone wonders why they haven't noticed him or her before.)

This is one of those healthy signs. More of them would be in order. Indicating how the younger element are coming along. In picture making. And this is the real stuff. Because it is on the coming folks that the future of this industry depends. Naturally.

Take Malcolm St. Clair. Now with Famous. Been making pictures but a few years. Yet shows unusual and worth while ability. If he continues as he has moved along in the past few months he will be away up front very soon. He knows how to make pictures.

Like Monta Bell he was a newspaper man. His latest—"The Trouble With Wives" has enough clever touches; enough original situations, enough intelligence to make him stand out. As a real director. He had Ford Sterling playing "straight" and scored a knockout. Now he is working with Menjou and Florence Vidor. Here's a bet: two to one it's a mighty fine picture. Yet "The Trouble With Wives" is the first St. Clair picture I have ever seen.

No wonder Al Boyd, after seeing "The Trouble with Wives," immediately booked it for Philadelphia's finest theatre, The Stanley!

"Delightful all the way through," says the Times. "Drawing power should pull 'em in anywhere. Suitable for city and country, big and little houses," advises Motion Picture News.

The HOME MAKER SETS

"The Home Maker"

Universal Produces, With Alice Joyce and Clive Brook, One of the Finest Pictures Ever Made

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"The Home Maker," with Alice Joyce and Clive Brook, will be an outstanding picture of the coming season. Exhibitors will throw their hats in the air and cheer when they see its effect upon their audiences, for in addition to its unquestionable box-office value, it is the sort of clean, wholesome, gripping domestic drama which will do the reputation of the whole industry a world of good. Universal has been making some fine pictures lately and "The Home Maker" will be near the top of the White List if it doesn't lead them all.

This is a box-office picture par excellence for all audiences. It is hard to conceive an audience that will dislike it. The drama is simply done but so tense and absorbing in its import that it will hold the eyes glued on the screen. Women will eat it up, and cry, and men will like it fully as well as the women, for it does man no injustice by putting woman on an unscalable pinnacle.

"The Home Maker's" many points of i terest—and its wonderful exploitation angl —may be analyzed without a single justifiat criticism except that of length, and on th point there is ample ground for argument. Tl general opinion of reviewers who sat e thralled throughout its 7,755 feet was that might be cut a few hundred feet, but nobo insisted that eliminations were imperative. Po sibly the critics couldn't believe that here w a picture which couldn't be criticized. C yes, two of the subtitles are too flowery.

King Baggot is responsible for "The Hon Maker" and Universal owes him a flock congratulatory telegrams and a museum medals.

The picture is really wonderful in the sin plicity of its story and settings and acting. is a perfect emotional unit from start to finis An accident in which the husband is crippl and a fire threatening loss of life might ha been over-stressed, but they have been car fully subordinated to the telling of the story children. In this role Alice Joyce is perfect. She does the ordinary things which we see done from day to day, does them simply and naturally, yet rivets attention on herself. The same is true of Clive Brook. These two accomplished artists—may their tribe increase—bring a wealth of humanity to the picture that assures the utmost in realism. We cannot for the moment recall any picture which is so real as "The Home Maker."

While the entire cast does expert work, two other members deserve especial mention. Martha Maddox is superb as a sour-faced, skeptic old maid. Her work is restrained like that of the others, but remarkably effective.

The other player? Say, you must see little Billy Kent Schaffer. In this picture he ranks with Jackie Coogan, not as Jackie is now, an experienced actor, but as he was when about Billy's age—four years. Little Billy is called upon to sulk and he does it in such delightfully realistic fashion that women's arms will go out toward him; he is called upon to smile and there was never a more winning baby seen on the screen.

In closing, a word about the exploitation angles of this picture. They are there—big and self-evident. The wife takes the husband's place as the wage-earner, having failed to inspire happy children; the husband, a business failure, succeeds in the home. In the end, smiles replace scowls on the children's faces and there is joy.

Don't fail to book this picture. It will please your patrons as few pictures have done; it will do your prestige as a theatre owner untold good. Book it, boost it, get the clergy to see it, for they will preach about it, and you'll live in the hope that the gods will be kind and give you another picture just as good sometime in the not too distant future.

The Editor's Views

BEFORE the editor gets around to his more or less important "Views" this week he has to inscribe a personal message. His readers will probably not be interested in it at all; in fact, the editor can't work up any warm interest himself. But, occasionally, there are uninteresting tasks that must be performed in the interests of truth and accuracy. So, here goes:

Mr. Martin Quigley,
Exhibitors' Herald,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Martin:

Just for the sake of keeping the records straight I am forced to write you this line. One of your hard-working young men experienced an over-enthusiastic moment last week. Writing a house ad to fill a space developed by an emergency he happened to say: "Exhibitors' Herald—after ten years of faithful and enterprising service to the motion picture industry has achieved leadership in exhibitor circulation."

Of course, Martin, you know this is wrong.

And, naturally, after your recent chiding remarks to Bill Johnston about his rash claims and his shy attitude towards the acid tests of A. B. C. audits, you have no personal desire to indulge in wild words.

Moving Picture World has, as you know, a comfortable margin of leadership in exhibitor circulation. A proved margin, a margin of record. No claims, no boasts, no enthusiastic slips—just figures and facts.

Moving Picture World has earned it—as you have earned your own position—by "years of faithful and enterprising service to the motion picture industry."

There's a difference in the number of years of such service—and, probably, since Moving Picture World has undisputed leadership, a difference in the quality of such service.

But that is a catty remark. And I had no such intention when I started this brief note.

I merely wanted to keep the record straight. Because I know that both you and I are interested in the records. Particularly in these days when Bill Johnston is getting by without any records.

Yours, in the interests of fact,
BOB WELSH.

IT has taken us several days to develop a desire to write the brief note printed above. Primarily because we don't believe that readers are a darned bit interested in the petty arguments of one editor and publisher with another. And we cling to the old-fashioned idea that papers are published for the reader.

The exhibitor subscriber to Moving Picture World has paid CASH for that subscription. He has done it because, for some reason or other, or for a number of reasons, he WANTS Moving Picture World.

He doesn't care two toots in a jazz band whether I can write funnier house copy than Martin Quigley or if Bill Johnston can lick us both at golf.

Running a picture theatre is a bread and butter business with him; he doesn't put any cash on the overhead that hasn't a business reason for being there; if he has subscribed to Moving Picture World, or The Exhibitor of Philadelphia, or Amusements of Minneapolis, he has done it for a business reason.

It may be wonderfully comforting to me to know that more exhibitors have felt that business urge to pay their CASH for Moving Picture World than for any other paper. It most certainly is of intense personal concern to the advertiser who is seeking the utmost for his advertising dollar—but it isn't helping to bring a dollar into the box-office of the exhibitor subscriber or save him a dollar of overhead to hear me spouting about the other fellow.

So I close this page with an apology—to my readers. And plead in justification merely a sincere desire to keep the records straight, truth triumphant, and facts paramount.

Scenic Brought Him New Patrons

By C. M. PATTERSON

GEORGE C. GREENLUND, manager of the Rialto, Tacoma, Wash., believes in the value of his short material as a valuable part of a well rounded program and he will not buy a comedy without a screening.

"I spot buy all my comedies," says Mr. Greenlund, "and they must contain between fifteen and twenty laughs before they will pass my standard. People come to a picture show to be entertained. They learn to look for their comedy favorites just as readily as their featured stars in the feature pictures. While I only give a line of a little box to my newspaper advertising, and perhaps but a framed one-sheet in my lobby, unless the subject contains some special appeal I want to put over, the name means much to the patron and the presentation I give the comedy impresses it on their minds and sends them out happy."

In regard to special exploitation of short subjects, Mr. Greenlund takes advantage of any local happening or gathering of people. For instance, there has recently been a convention of Norwegians in Tacoma. He secured a beautiful scenic of Norway, advertised it in the Norwegian papers, gave good lobby space to it, additional mention in the daily papers, counting on the strong love of the Mother Country, which actually brought in many patrons whose faces were new at the box office. He presented the scenic with a snow machine and a special musical setting that transformed it from an ordinary scenic to a highlight on the week's bill.

While practically always adapting a scenic to fit and harmonize with a feature, Mr. Greenlund selects his comedies to have an exactly opposite appeal so far as possible. Short subjects are given an organ presentation. News reels are a vital part of the program, and much can be done with these by cutting, rearranging and adding items of local interest, which when advertised by a card in the lobby always are good for extra admission.

Flattery Seeks Valuable Serum

M. DOUGLAS FLATTERY, managing director of Marcus Loew's State and Orpheum Theatres in Boston, patron of art, lawyer and financier, is financing in Europe the making of new experiments on his own ideas in an attempt to find a cure for the hoof and mouth disease, which recently killed American cattle worth $5,000,000. Mr. Flattery has just returned from a European tour with Mrs. Flattery

Among Mr. Flattery's many projects was that of five years ago when he established a research medical foundation at the University of Lyons, France. There the special vaccine now is being tested and within a few months the results of the experiments will show whether it is of any value.

Officials of the United States Department of Agriculture have been notified of Mr. Flattery's ideas that a simple and cheap mercury compound might cure the fatal cattle disease, and through much correspondence have represented themselves as being convinced that the best method at present in the United States is to kill immediately any animal found stricken with the hoof and mouth disease. They suggested that experiments, which involved use of the disease germ, might better be carried out in France or Germany where the disease has taken a firm hold.

Mr. Flattery's interests are varied. Besides being general representative in Boston for Marcus Loew (he is financially interested in the Loew theatres in Boston) he is interested in other thatrical and commercial enterprises. He is an attorney, writer, chairman of the committee of medical research, a member of the Harvard Cancer Commission and a member of many organizations.

Shorts Often Saved O'Kelly

FIELDING K. O'KELLY, the live-wire manager of the beautiful Metropolitan Theatre at Morgantown, W. Va., who has always considered the short subject films as an important unit in the programs he presents to his audiences, is authority for the statement that in many instances the shorter length subjects have gotten extra business for him when the feature films failed to do so.

Mr. O'Kelly says: "I have noticed that patrons in looking over my lobby displays are sometimes disinterested and that when, walking away, they happen to glance at a photograph or an announcement concerning any of our current short subjects, be it the news, comedy, cartoon, novelty, et al., their decision is reversed. We get many an admission this way that we would not otherwise get. I do not say this to discredit feature pictures, but it only proves that in some instances a small part of our program appeals to somebody who is not interested in the feature. But those extra admissions would not have come to our box-office if we had not advertised our short subjects."

Mr. O'Kelly expressed the opinion that Moving Picture World is deserving of much credit for emphasizing the value of short subjects. It has been his contention for some years past that eventually exhibitors would wake up to the fact that the "shorts" are just as essential to the success of a program as the feature or added stage attraction.

"Some exhibitors have realized this angle and others have not," he said. "Personally I devote just as much time, or even more, to building up my programs with short subjects as I do in selecting future bookings."

Mr. O'Kelly feels that an injustice is done the public when it is not fully informed as to the nature of the entire entertainment that is being presented at the theatre, saying:

"An injustice, not only to short subjects but to the public, is done when the ordinary 6 or 8 point type line is inserted at the bottom of the customary newspaper advertisement. A portion of our lobby displays are always devoted to these divertissements, and exhibitors may be assured that we reap the benefits of our endeavors, as I have previously explained. To my mind, the short subject is a most important cog in public amusement wants. For instance, when patrons leave the theatre, they run into an announcement in the foyer advertising 'Our Gang' or whatever comedy we might have scheduled for showing in the near future. It is surprising the amount of interest these announcements create. My belief is that if exhibitors ignore the calibre of short subjects, why take the trouble to run them at all?"

Mr. O'Kelly has not only put forth some sound arguments in favor of advertising the short subjects in a big way, but he also has proved where the "shorts" have brought him business when the feature film failed, and he promises World readers that he will send along some good short subject exploitation stunts for these columns within the near future.

Survey Shows People Demand Clean Pictures

By FRANK WHITBECK

LOEW'S WARFIELD THEATRE in San Francisco, operated by the West Coast Theatres, Inc., has just completed a survey of likes and dislikes among the motion picture theatregoer of that city.

Every differing neighborhood, every class of inhabitant, every varying portion of the business and financial districts of the western city was included in the survey which was made by Therese Fitzgerald, newspaper woman, press agent and fiction writer—a woman with an understanding of and an appreciation for this work.

The outstanding feature of the entire survey, a canvass which covered more than a thousand varying peoples, was: "Let the pictures be clean; sacrifice, if need be, some of the thrill so that we may take our youngsters to the theatre."

Something for both the producer and the exhibitor to ponder over, the latter really more than the former for it is the exhibitor, after all, who can govern the output of the producer.

Perhaps one of the most interesting facts revealed by the survey was that 20 per cent. of those who attend Loew's Warfield Theatre are attracted by the policy of the theatre for they answered: "It's a habit and because the Warfield is the best show in town."

Some months ago Loew's Warfield took for an advertising slogan, "San Francisco's Greatest Entertainment," and every piece of copy turned out of the publicity department since has borne this line. Is this, then, a result of consistent hammering on one catch line?

Loew's Warfield in its advertising campaign uses 60 per cent. newspaper display space, 30 per cent. billboards, with the remaining 10 per cent. of the advertising appropriation covering a tie-up with radio K-P-O, the dash-boards of the Market street car line and exploitation stunts. Yet the answer of those interviewed gave practically an equal division among all the various mediums. Friendly advice and conversation that showmen term "mouth-to-mouth" advertising, ranked high in swaying a doubtful theatregoer.

"What sort of pictures do you like best," brought almost a constant repetition of "Any kind, just so they are clean." If any advantage was to be placed over another, "Romantic Drama" had the edge, with the added advice of "but no costumes." The leading star vote had Colleen Moore leading the field, with Norma Shearer second and Norma Talmadge a close third. Among the men—and this was unusual because Loew's Warfield had been the topic of conversation between the investigator and those interviewed—Tom Mix was the favorite, and the Mix pictures are never shown at the Warfield. Milton Sills was next with, hardly any choice for a male star. Harry Langdon led in the comedy leads.

Less than a one-half per cent. of those interviewed could give an intelligent answer to the question, "Do you understand the picture situation?' The investigator augmented this with, "Do you know how the theatres secure the pictures, where they are made and what stars work for certain producing companies and what theatres release the pictures of these stars and producers?"

This fact brings home the thought that more serious informative publicity should be given by the theatre press men as to the releasing companies, the producers and under what banner a star is playing. The investigator reported that the average person was interested in this phase of the motion picture situation but had never read anything concerning it.

Eight and a fraction per cent. were attracted to Loew's Warfield by the music and stage entertainment. This is considered a fair average for this house, which makes a feature of its Fanchon and Marco stage presentations and the Lipschultz and the Music Master orchestral offerings.

The entire survey cost the theatre less than $60 and this included both the time of the investigator and the printing of the questionnaire. A trifling sum, in the opinion of General Manager A. M. Bowles of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and Frank Whitbeck, in charge of publicity and exploitation, for a new and interesting insight to just what the present and prospective patrons of Loew's Warfield Theatre wanted in their entertainment, in the appeal that was to be made to them to gain their patronage and the manner in which they were to be treated after they had spent their money at the box office.

Bender Boosts Short Reelers

ROBERT BENDER, manager of the Columbia Theatre, one of Seattle's leading downtown houses, with a choice location on Second avenue a few doors below Pike street, is a firm believer in properly advertising short subjects. This effort, he believes, is rewarded by added patronage at the box office.

Mr. Bender's policy does not apportion any stipulated amount for the advertising of these shorts, and as a whole would average less than 25 per cent. of the total advertising appropriation. However, when presenting a special short reel, either novelty, scenic or scientific, he frequently gives the subject matter fully 25 per cent. of the newspaper space.

For instance, the novelty reel, "Isle of Vanishing Men," was given a quarter of the advertisement in the papers and a lobby trim, and a tieup was arranged with a lecturer who was in the city giving addresses on the South Sea Islands, whereby he called attention to the reel in his lectures over the radio.

With another novelty short "The New Jerusalem," Mr. Bender circularized Jewish residents of the city, carried large ads in the Jewish newspapers and held a special showing for rabbis, prominent Jewish people, etc. A large proportion of the week's excellent business was a direct result of this publicity. When playing Educational's "Secrets of Life" Mr. Bender carries special advertising in the University district newspaper, ties up with the zoology classes and in addition carries good space, usually boxed, in his regular advertisements.

All short subjects played at the Columbia are exploited in a lobby frame and frequently in an easel, in addition. Marquee lettering shows the title of the comedy. Newsreels are cut and adapted to the occasion and are given orchestra accompaniment. Following this plan, the reel is arranged to open with a snappy scene that calls for a brisk march. Often a bit of a scenic, or local shot is included. It ends usually with the same vigor as the opening scenes. In this manner, there is nothing to drag and the audience is lifted up and ready for the balance of the program.

Special calls and notes of congratulation are frequently sounded by patrons to the management of this theatre, which may be said to enjoy an excellent family patronage in spite of being a centrally located downtown house. Among these are a number commenting exclusively on the short subjects, special reels and the like.

Some weeks ago Mr. Bender carried a number of special three-unit shows, wherein feature, music and short subjects were given equal exploitation both in newspaper advertising and lobby exploitation. These were held on alternating weeks and proved very satisfactory. This live-wire manager never overlooks a bet. He carefully analyzes his program and has proved to his satisfaction that time and money spent on bringing out the strength of his short subject matter registers added admissions at the box office.

Famous' School for Managers to Open with 45 in Class

The first session of the Paramount Theatre Managers Training School, Inc., will open August 17. Sessions of the school will be held on the fifth floor of the New York Theatre Building, 1520 Broadway, where the lecture room has been equipped as a miniature theatre with stage, complete lighting equipment and projection booth. Adjoining this miniature theatre is a reception room, library and offices.

Students who have been accepted for the opening session will report to New York August 14. This will give three days to clear up preliminary details of registration. The students come from all over the country. Despite the very short time since the project of opening this novel school was broadcast, about five hundred applications have been received by the school authorities. These came from every state in the Union. University graduates and university officials were particularly interested in the new school.

Forty-five applicants were finally determined upon to make up the first class. These were chosen after personal interviews during which the purposes of the school were completely explained and the qualifications and testimonials of each applicant thoroughly examined. The successful applicants realized that they were expected to pay a tuition fee of Three Hundred Dollars ($300) for the six months' course and that during the six months' training they would receive no remuneration and would be expected to pay their own living expenses while residing in New York. The average age for the applicant selected for the first session is twenty-seven. Among these accepted students are represented two West Point graduates, twelve theatre managers, four hotel managers, one lawyer, one civil engineer, one mining engineer, two newspaper editors, two sales managers, two projectionists, two statisticians, one member of the consular service and graduates from universities with varying periods of business experience. Besides the men who have had experience in theatre management, most of the accepted applicants have had experience in affilliated work such as advertising, publicity, decorating and salesmanship.

AVERTS DORCHESTER PANIC

Telling the audience that there was a slight fire in the upper part of the building, Frank Vennett, manager of Gordon's Cadman Square Theatre in Dorchester, Mass., succeeded in having more than 1,000 adults and children leave their seats in an orderly manner during the matinee on Thursday, August 6.

State Rights Sales

Henry Ginsberg of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation has completed the sale of his product. The Exhibitors Film Exchange, Inc., of Washington, D. C., has the territorial rights for the entire output of Banner and Royal for the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia. Contracts for Michigan were signed by W. B. Hurlbut and J. L. Saxe of Detroit. In the West, George L. Mayne, representing Preferred Pictures and Independent Super Attractions of Salt Lake City, has the territorial rights for Utah, all counties in Idaho south of Idaho county, and the part of Wyoming west of and up Rock Springs. This completes the balance of the open territory.

Coming and Going

Jimmy Finlayson has secured a leave of absence from the Pathe studio and sailed from New York, August 1, on the Baltic for a short vacation in Europe. Finlayson plans to visit his home in Scotland and also spend some time in England and France.

Lloyd Hughes returned to New York last week.

Blanche Sweet arrived in New York from Hollywood last week.

Thomas Spry, manager of First National's Boston branch, and A. J. Herman, manager of the Albany branch, were visitors at the home office last week.

Monta Bell has left Hollywood for New York, where he will complete arrangements for filming "King on Main Street."

Christian Hemmick has arrived on the Berengaria.

H. C. McIntyre, veteran exhibitor of Australia, and his wife were in Chicago last month calling on some friends in the trade. They were on their way east to look at the New York houses.

Sessue Hayakawa arrived in New York a few days ago on the Leviathan.

W. A. Steffes arrived in New York from Minneapolis last week.

E. A. Eschmann is back in New York from the Coast.

Emil Shauer of Famous is due back in Manhattan from Europe this week.

Will Hays is back in New York after an extended visit on the Coast.

Attorney Charles Pettijohn is back in the New York headquarters of the M. P. P. D. A. after an absence of several days.

Joe Brandt of Columbia Pictures is vacationing in New England and Canada.

Louis Weiss of Artclass left this week for a business trip through the Middle West.

Albany Strand Interests Acquire Regent Theatres

The Strand interests in Albany took over the Albany and the Regent Theatres in that city on Saturday, August 8, according to an announcement made by Uly S. Hill, managing director of the several theatres being operated by the company in Troy and Albany. The deal is of much importance, giving the Strand company two additional houses in the Capital City, with another house shortly to be constructed. The Albany and Regent Theatres have been operated for several years by the Sucknos, Samuel Suckno, a pioneer in the business, having run the houses up until the time of his death a year or so ago, after which the two theatres were conducted by his son and daughter, Walter and Noma Suckno. The Strand interests will take over the houses on August 31.

The Albany Theatre will be continued as a first run house, while the Regent will not be changed in its policy of second runs.

MILLION FOR CLEVELAND RENTAL

The Star Theatre, Cleveland, in the heart of the downtown business district, for many years famed as a burlesque house, is being entirely remodeled, and has been leased to Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., for a period of ten years, at a reported maximum rental of around $1,000,000. The house, when it reopens, will be known as the Cameo Theatre.

Two Big Foreign Men Get High Posts in New York

Joseph MacHenry and Max Gooseman, two of the American film industry's most widely known foreign representatives, have just made important new connections.

MacHenry, who has represented big film companies in nearly every country in the world and who returned a short time ago to the United States from India where he proved a big factor in marketing Fox product, is now aligned with Producers Distributing Corporation. There he bears the title of district representative, being responsible for that unit's exchanges in New York, Albany, Buffalo and Philadelphia. MacHenry is particularly well known in all of these territories, having thoroughly combed them dozens of times for other companies.

Max Gooseman is one of the true pioneers of the industry. As special representative he has in his new capacity an executiveship with J. Charles Davis, with whom in previous years he was associated as a producer. Gooseman is one of the industry's most widely traveled men. During his nine years in the game he has built up an enviable reputation for his knowledge of detail and conditions in the industry the world over. Gooseman, in order to accept his present important position with Davis, is said to have relinquished a big executive affiliation in the Fox home office.

ROWLAND & CLARK PICK "BEAUTY"

The contest which has been held in Pittsburgh for the past several weeks, by the Rowland and Clark Theatres, to select the city's most beautiful girl, so that she might be named "Miss Pittsburgh," and be sent to Atlantic City's annual beauty pageant in September, to compete against representative beauties of other cities, for the title of "Miss America," came to a successful climax at Kennywood Park on July 30th, when Miss Mildred Walker, a seventeen-year-old, won.

N. Y. Money Backs Cal. Park Plan

Four million dollars of New York capital has been pledged for the building in the California cities of Los Angeles and San Francisco of amusement parks modeled after Palisades Park, popular New York and New Jersey resort.

This announcement has just been made as the result of a conference held in Dodge City, Kansas, between the Schenck Brothers, owners of Palisades Park. Joseph Schenck, Hollywood film producer, and Nicholas M. Schenck, New York theatre magnate are the brothers, and they will have a large share in the syndicate.

Reports credit Joseph M. Schenck with stating the entire $4,000,000 has been pledged, and the corporation will be a closed one. He is quoted as having said the complete details will be announced after the close of Palisades Park in September. Following the closing, Nicholas M. Schenck will visit the Coast to select sites and prepare for building activities.

Education Making Exhibitor an Ace at Booking and Bookkeeping

By Tom Waller

OVER-PRODUCTION, theatre-corralling and playdate bewilderment talk fail to dampen the ardor of Colvin Brown's emphatic declaration to Moving Picture World which has to do with the rosiness of the ensuing season for the industry. A full bloomed American Beauty—not a delicate tea rose—will be the floral symbol for the average producer, distributor and exhibitor. By "average" F. B. O.'s vice-president in charge of distribution describes producers whose quotas are within reasonable and salable bounds; exhibitors who can gauge their over-head by books well balanced through astute audience study.

Brown, before he became an executive part of the industry, devoted twelve years to newspaper reporting, newspaper editing and newspaper managing. Thus he weighs every question with the exactitude of an attorney. His replies are naturally devoid of the sensational. They are framed with anything but the newspaper headline in view, if the facts, in Brown's opinion, do not honestly merit a headline.

Outstanding of the reason of his optimism are two points derived from the activities of his own corporation. They are the fact that Film Booking Offices has broken eight of its sales records during the past ten weeks and that this summer has recorded in F. B. O. books less than 10 per cent. of the normal cancellations of bookings.

Although he acknowledges that his prediction for rosiness is based principally upon the local angle, yet he maintains that the momentum of any reputable producer or distributor may be judiciously termed a barometer by which filmdom may determine with all competency its financial weather.

During the four years he was in the old Mutual Film Corporation's publicity offices in Chicago; later, when he went into the foreign field for that organization; again when he became vice-president and eastern representative for the late Thomas Ince; now in his high executive capacity with Film Booking Offices—Brown has always made and is always making a careful study of the men that use the product.

As contrasted with the past few years, a demand is manifesting itself in many of the small towns, and even in some of the cities, for dramas of the more intense category, Brown asserts. It is his belief, based upon contact with such showmen and listening to their recounting of audience reaction, that in such territories the society melodrama does not wholly appease the fan appetite the same as the thrilling action melodrama.

Another observation by Brown, which may be considered of vast importance, is that the average small town showman is becoming independent of first runs. By that Brown explains such exhibitor is not reaching the stage where he is ignoring a picture just because it is a first run, but that he is benefiting by his study of the box-office and booking the types of pictures which his fans like, whether they be of the first water or whether they have been quite suddenly dusted from long repose on the shelves of some producer.

A successful exhibitor today has to be a student—he cannot blindly book anything that comes along. This may be responsible for the change in attitude toward booking, Brown says. His studies include a thorough analysis of the box-office receipts at the end of each day. These he very carefully records on his books. Not only that, but by keeping in touch with his neighbors through the service departments of the trade press, he should be fairly able to tell by the end of even a month the calibre of star his crowd wants and the type of story that works the applause.

Thus the educating of the exhibitor is bringing bookings back to the old plane of variety, Brown observes. It has definitely resulted in quashing the solo sales argument that because a picture has been projected in a Broadway house it will "be eaten up in yours." The exhibitor in many cases is inclined to regard the Broadway subject as a lesser point in the Missourian "show-me-ness" which audience study has inculcated in him, Brown says.

Accordingly, F. B. O. has adapted its newest program of fifty-six pictures to meet the latest attitude. F. B. O. salesmen do not try to "wish upon" the exhibitor this entire block, Brown says, adding: "They would find it difficult to do so because the exhibitor is getting to be an ace at bookkeeping and can tell pretty well just how many pictures he will really be able to screen."

That F. B. O.'s variety program of twenty-four features and two series of eight action melodramas; twenty westerns, and twelve specials, all variety dramas, meets with Brown's study of the box-office situation, is well illustrated by the fact that the sales last week topped by over 50 per cent. the sales of any one week in the history of F. B. O., Brown declares.

As to his prediction for rosiness, Brown says: "Of course, there are lots of pictures this year that are not going to earn even their negative cost. That, however, is not the fault of economic conditions. Individual delusions are simply to blame for this. Business at the box-office this year is far better than it has been in years."

Shuberts Delay Big Theatre Plan in St. Louis

The Shuberts will lease the Rialto Theatre, Grand boulevard near Olive street, it is now reported in the inner theatrical circles of St. Louis. It is said that the big New York theatrical interests have abandoned, at least temporarily, their plans to build a $1,000,000 theatre at Thirteenth and St. Charles streets.

As is known, the present lease of the Shubert-Jefferson Theatre, Twelfth and Locust boulevards, expires within a few months and the Union Electric Light and Power Company, owners of the building, are not inclined to grant the theatre a very long extension. The power company wants the theatre space for offices.

Some time ago it was announced the Shuberts would build at Thirteenth and St. Charles streets. However, it has since been learned that the deal for the site did not go through.

With the Orpheum Amusement Circuit using the new St. Louis Theatre, Grand boulevard at Morgan street, which is scheduled to open in September, the Rialto would face the alternative of remaining dark or dropping into a second-run motion picture class.

LASKY HEADS RELIEF

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has been elected president of the Motion Picture Relief Fund of America, an organization of wide scope, designed to assist those connected with the industry in times of need, ill health or distress. Joseph M. Schenck, retiring president, becomes first vice-president. He was first president of the organization, which had its inception a year ago.

Other officers chosen are Mary Pickford, second vice-president; William S. Hart, third vice-president; Harold Lloyd, fourth vice-president; Victor H. Clarke, treasurer; the Rev Neal Dodd, secretary. Elected to the executive committee are Frank E. Woods, Fred W. Beetson, Donald Crisp, Joseph De Grasse, Mitchell Lewis, E. D. Moore, Arthur P. Statter and William P. Wyatt.

Made Fortune in St. Louis; Now Plans Return to Greece

HECTOR M. E. PASMEZOGLU, who plans to retire from the motion picture business and return to his native Greece for a rest, has concluded deals for two of his four remaining theatres. Previously he had arranged a lease on his Criterion Theatre, Broadway near Olive street, to H. Fierato of New Orleans for $22,500. The houses affected by the latest deals are the Delmar and adjoining airdome, 4938 Delmar boulevard, and the Congress, 4023 Olive street. Pasmezoglu has also under consideration offers for his Plaza Theatre on Etzel avenue and the Yale on Minnesota avenue. He plans to dispose of all his houses before returning to Greece.

George Skouras has leased the Congress for $12,000 a year and Maurice Stahl the Delmar at $20,000.

George Skouras and Stahl are interested together in the Aubert, Aubert and Easton avenues, and the Chippewa, Broadway near Chippewa street. Stahl is also interested in the Union and Mikado Theatres. They also have booking arangements with several other houses in St. Louis.

Pasmezoglu came to St. Louis in connection with the Olympic Games held at the Louisiana Purchase World's Exposition in 1904. Following the close of the fair he decided to remain in St. Louis and for many years acted as Greek Consul in St. Louis. His first picture show venture was the Mozart Airdome on Delmar boulevard just east of his Delmar Theatre. Later he build or bought his five houses. The Mozart Airdome was dismantled several years ago.

CHANGES IN WINNIPEG

Important changes have been made by H. M. Thomas of Winnipeg, Western Division manager of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, in the way of managerial appointments. Pete Egan, manager of the Strand Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, has been taken from that house to fill the post of manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, the key theatre of the Famous Players Western chain, while Harold Bishop, formerly assistant manager of the Winnipeg Capitol, has been appointed manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, which has just been reopened after being remodeled. Bishop has succeeded W. F. Davis at the Winnipeg "Met," Davis having been promoted to the head office of Famous Players to launch the Scrip Book plan for 57 of the corporation's theatres in the Dominion.

Greater Movie Season Proving Real Stimulant, Big Showmen Wire Hays

Ten Times Bigger

"Greater Movie Season is going over ten times bigger than we expected." This statement was made by Jerome Beatty, publicity head of the drive, at this weeks conference of the Hays organization with the New York trade press.

Beatty said that about 5,000 theatres are now actively participating in the campaign. He stated that the Hays organization up to date has released 9,000 press sheets on the movement.

Referring to his files the Hays official declared that he found every state in the Union included. Arizona, he said, was probably the state manifesting the least interest while Michigan and Texas were behind the move "close to 100 per cent."

KANSAS CITY REFUSES INCREASE

Downtown and suburban houses of Kansas City are divided in the controversy between exhibitors and the operators, who seek an increase of approximately 10 per cent. in the wage scale. Downtown first run exhibitors last week signed a contract calling for 7½ per cent increase to the operators, but the suburban houses are "standing pat," refusing an increase grant.

M. P. P. D. A. Head Issues Personal Statement Telling of Invaluable Influence Campaign Has Upon Public Thought—States Thanks

ENTHUSIASTIC reports of the nation-wide celebration of Greater Movie Season continue to reach Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., of which Will H. Hays is president. While it is yet impossible to supply accurate figures concerning the number of towns embraced in the drive, the total is likely to exceed that contained in previous announcements; for in many centers exhibitors, having realized the advantages of the season, are only now arranging the necessary organization to join in the drive.

Letters and telegrams from important theatre executives throughout the country reveal the extent to which the box-office has gained by Greater Movie Season.

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York: "I am pleased to report that the Greater Movie Season has been a stimulant to business at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres. The ultimate result of the movement will undoubtedly be far-reaching and will encourage added attendance at the theatres for many weeks to come."

Major Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol, New York: "You may ask what, if anything, the Greater Movie Season has done for the Capitol Theatre. I can only say that the Capitol has been packed to capacity afternoon and night of every performance, but what is due to Greater Movie Season and what is due to the entertainment provided, I am unable to say. At least the business has been unprecedentedly large, especially for this time of the year."

David Barrist, editor of "The Exhibitor," in reviewing the Philadelphia drive, states: "There has been a noticeable improvement in business the current week, which is most certainly due in a large measure to the activities of the campaign. In Atlantic City the business has been nothing short of phenomenal and exhibitors there do not hesitate to credit the Greater Movie Season Campaign this increase."

Stanley Chambers of the Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kans.: "Greater Movie Season showed twenty per cent increase over the same period of last year. The campaign is a big success. We certainly want another next year."

Carl A. Porter, Victory Theatre, Salt Lake City: "All theatres show a nice increase and are well satisfied with the campaign. The public is very much interested in the movement. We want another season next year."

Maurice F. Barr, Saenger Amusement, New Orleans: "While we are unable to ascertain by a definite check of New Orleans exhibitors what Greater Movie Season results have been, we believe the effort well worthy of repetition each year. Organizations should be kept intact to systematize details and exploitation and secure still better results."

Lloyd Dearth, Pantages Theatre, Memphis: "Greater Movie Season campaign showed a material increase in all houses and without a doubt will put the month of August through a winner in spite of the fact that we have extreme hot weather here and an uphill pull to get them in during the hot spell. Let's have a season every year."

Ralph Kettering, general manager Chicago campaign: "I believe the theatres will increase better than twenty per cent this week. The campaign is a huge success and exhibitors are happy to make it an annual affair."

Jay Means, vice-president of the M. P. T. O. of Missouri: "Greater Movie Season opened with a big smash in Kansas City. Business good all over the city. Many stunts are planned to keep up the publicity. Everybody seems pleased with the campaign and is enthusiastic over future prospects."

Movie Season Starts Musician-Showman War in Kansas City

A BLOT has been cast upon the co-operation and hard work in Kansas City's plans for a mammoth Greater Season celebration, which may result in one of the greatest local inter-industry wars in many years, according to the World's correspondent in Kansas City.

The fight, which appears inevitable, was brought about when the Kansas City Musicians' Union refused to allow musicians to ride on a banner-bedecked motor truck, which was to have toured the down town districts. The tour of the truck was to have followed an enthusiastic luncheon of the South Central Business Association, a civic organization, in honor of Greater Movie Season. The musicians were from the Pantages Theatre. Just prior to the starting of the truck the musicians were notified they would be fined $100 each if they made the trip, due to the fact that their contract with the Panages Theatre prohibited such engagements. Union officials were appealed to by exhibitors and exchange men alike, as it was too late to alter plans, but the union officials were firm and the tour was abandoned. The musicians union, at a meeting of its board of directors, also refused to donate the services of a few musicians as a means of co-operating with the Greater Movie Season committees, according to a formal announcement made by A. C. Miller, treasurer of the union, to C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri.

"Such a narrow and radical attitude is intolerable," said Mr. Cook. "Following expressions on all sides of me by scores of theatre owners, there is every probability that this action will lead ultimately to nothing more or less than a majority of the theatres replacing their orchestras with non-union men. Greater Movie Season is just as much the interest of musicians as it is others connected with theatres. Theatre managers are giving their time gratis, as well as all of us. Not only that, but we all have contributed liberaly in raising $5,000 for the celebration, to pay for pennants and decorations.

"The M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri now is sponsoring a non-union operators' school and action along similar lines can be taken very easily as far as musicians are concerned. The musicians union has bellowed in the past about wage scales, yet they are willing to do nothing to better conditions in the industry. The sentiment of exhibitors has been aroused and it will not "blow over" with the morning sun. If the union wants strife and disagreement it will get it—just as much as it wants. We always have been more than fair and we expect to be treated the same way."

Movie Season Proves Stimulant

Details of many excellent campaigns continue to be reported to the Hays office. Newark, Atlantic City, Camden, Ocean City, Asbury Park and Paterson key points in New Jersey—all put on pretentious drives. J. E. Firnkoiss, in charge of the Rialto Theatre, controlled the Newark campaign, which included a contest tie-up with the Newark Star-Eagle, special radio broadcasting and a poster display of seventy-five twenty-four-sheet stands. Co-operating with the National Retail Jewelers Publicity Association, Mr. Firnkoiss secured window displays in almost every jewelry store in Newark.

For a month prior to the opening in Philadelphia the Daily News devoted a full page every day to Greater Movie Season; one hundred and twenty-five 24-sheet stands were used, and the territory was divided into zones each controlled by sub-committees which secured an unprecedented number of window displays. As a climax three Pitcairn aeroplanes flew across the city and dropped 25,000 tickets of admission to the participating theatres.

Will Hays' Viewpoint

"Since the season opened I have been in Los Angeles, Denver and Chicago, where excellent drives were conducted. With motion picture production centered so largely in Los Angeles and therefore with many players available to inspire popular interest in the celebrations, a successful start there was natural enough. But in Denver and Chicago some thousands of miles removed, with only the exhibitors' initiative to bring the season's message before the public, all factors of distribution and exhibition worked side by side so harmoniously that the public response was equally as huge. I am pleased to learn that Atlantic City had one hundred per cent. representation in the drive, and the box-office told the result. Atlanta and Dallas exhibitors have telegraphed the hope that Greater Movie Season may be an annual affair. Atlanta reported gains of from ten to forty per cent. over the business of the past three months, with the neighborhood and smaller houses showing the biggest increase.

"The movement contemplates especially the service to the small exhibitor working from month to month who heretofore could only hope that July and August would be no worse than last year. We believed that this was a means to make those dead months better, that the summer depression could be overcome by inducing exhibitors who face the same problem to cooperate. The final analysis probably will show that Atlanta's experience has repeated in many cities.

"Will Greater Movie Season be an annual event? Yes, if the exhibitors wish it; and naturally our future plans in this respect depend largely upon their wish. There is apparently a nationwide satisfaction with the results this first demonstration has shown. But we are seeking still fuller information. In almost every instance the chairman or general manager of local activities is the head of a large theatre or circuit, or the principal executive of an exhibitor association. During the next few weeks we will ask their advice and suggestions based on their knowledge gained this month. If the consensus favors another season next year—as I believe it will—our campaign nationally will further embody their ideas. The splendid co-operation of the exhibitors is thoroughly appreciated.

"Apart altogether from the increased business engendered by Greater Movie Season, the film industry has won the active co-operation of every agency that influences public thought. United for this demonstration of its power and purpose to serve, it has earned the commendation and support of the nation's leaders, writers and educators. That support, thus gained, will not be withdrawn as long as every factor in the industry by contributing its utmost to the public good justifies the public confidence that the season has inspired."

EMPRESS, DANBURY, OPENING

The Empress Theatre in Danbury, Conn., will open Labor Day with a split week vaudeville and picture policy.

Kills Parades

Following the Greater Movie Season parade in Chicago last week Moving Picture World's correspondent there writes that the police department has issued an order prohibiting all parades in the loop district on business days.

When questioned on this point, Jerome Beatty, publicity chief of the drive at the Hays headquarters, termed the order "more a boost than a knock."

Beatty said that for some time the Chicago police have been contemplating this move. It is the outcome, he volunteered, of complaints by trolley companies who have maintained that the congestion caused by such manifestations has delayed their schedules.

West Side Building Race Is Interesting All Chicago

A BIG question on the west side, Chicago, is who is really going to build the new theatre on Crawford avenue near Washington boulevard? The first one to announce a theatre project for that site was Marks Brothers, who said the new theatre they planned would cost about two million including equipment and have a jeweled dome that could be seen for miles. A week or so later the National Theatres Corporation of which the Cooney Brothers are the directors announced they were also going to build a huge movie theatre in that neighborhood and gave their house a jeweled tower and the latest report is that the company is selling stock to the folks in that part of the city who might be interested in such a fine new house. Last week Balaban and Katz circuit in connection with the Lubliner and Trinz circuit sent word to the newspapers that they had commissioned Rapp and Rapp, their architects, to draw plans for a new house on the north side of Washington boulevard extending back to West End Avenue and their project would cost in the neighborhood of four millions and include some features that were even new to the movie public of this city.

Other Building Activities

Peter and N. Geannopolous and G. N. Kikolopolous have organized the Logan Square Auditorium Building corporation with a capital of $200,000 to build a theatre and amusement building on North Kedzie avenue.

More new theatres for the Chicago territory were announced during the past few weeks. Among them is a house to be erected at Cicero avenue north of Belmont by the Belmont Park Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., to cost $450,000.

Will Kallenbach has announced plans for a new movie house to be erected on Irving Park boulevard between Drake and Central Park avenue to cost a quarter of a million dollars. Work will start next month on the new Piccadilly theatre and hotel to be erected by the H. Schoenstadt and Sons circuit at the southeast corner of Hyde Park boulevard and Blackstone avenue giving that populous district its first big moving picture theatre. The main entrance of the hotel which will be twelve stories in height will be on Blackstone avenue while the theatre will have its main entrance on Hyde Park boulevard.

Work on the new Reckas theatre to be erected at Halsted and 35th streets will not start until September, and it is expected to be ready for opening on May 1 next year.

A big event this month in Chicago will be the opening of the new Uptown theatre of the Balaban and Katz circuit that is scheduled for August 17. The Central Uptown association of merchants are cooperating with the management and a big holiday pageant will be staged by the merchants to tie up with the opening week festivities of the new theatre. Several well known movie stars are expected to appear during opening week, and it is expected the new house will bring fifty thousand people each day into the Wilson avenue district.

Warner Bros. Buy Ochs' Piccadilly

Warner Bros. announced the purchase this week of the Piccadilly Theatre at Broadway and 52nd Street, New York City, from the Piccadilly Playhouse, Inc., of which Lee Ochs is president and managing director. Warner Bros. have taken official possession of the house. The Warner offices announced that the consideration involved in the deal will not be made public.

George H. Dumond, head of the Warners' theatre department, will be new managing director succeeding Ochs, who will retire, it is understood, to accept an executive position with Warner Bros. A 28-piece orchestra will be installed, just double the size of the present musical force, and the theatre will feature an eight-unit program where it has only been running five and six units.

ENTERTAINS 10,000 CHILDREN

An outing for the "kiddies" of Pittsburgh was given on Tuesday, August 4th at Kennywood Park by the Rowland and Clark Theatres of Pittsburgh. The picnic program included all kinds of races for both boys and girls, swimming events, ball throwing contests, and dancing in the evening. More than 10,000 boys and girls were presented with amusement tickets, refreshments and novelties.

Stanley Gets Four Wilmington Houses

Four leading motion picture theatres of Wilmington, Del., have been acquired by the Stanley Company of America, and beginning August 17 will be under the direction of that organization. Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, who sailed several weeks ago for Europe, began preliminary negotiations with James N. Ginns and H. Topkis, just before leaving Philadelphia and it was necessary then only to complete the plans. It is the intention of the Stanley Company to continue the policy of the various houses, making such improvements in direction as are typical of the Stanley organization.

The acquirement of the four theatres—the Queen, the Arcadia, the Majestic and the Garrick—represents a deal involving several million dollars. Each of the houses is of the first class and each is extremely popular.

Rapf Host at a Novel Screen Party in Los Angeles

One of the most novel parties ever given in Los Angeles, and with a million dollars' worth of screen talent attending, took place at the home of Harry Rapf, M-G-M studio executive, Sunday evening, August 9.

It marked the completion and opening of Mr. Rapf's miniature theatre, built on the rear of his estate. The high priced talent was made up of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stars, players, executives and writers who assembled for what proved the most enjoyable evening any of them had spent in many months.

Following an elaborate supper the guests viewed a unique film production in which everyone present participated. The film presented scenes directed by M-G-M directors showing them as other directors would stage them. For instance, Jack Conway staged a scene as Von Sternberg would present it and so on. Estelle Clark and Antonio D'Algy played in this film, impersonating the different M-G-M stars and in the supporting cast were Louis B. Mayer, Irving G. Thalberg, Harry Rapf, Eddie Mannix and other executives. The film was a riot of laughter, helped along by Joe Farnum's titles.

Another film showing Hobart Henley as an actor ten years ago was a knockout. The presentation of the films was followed by dancing and "a great time was had by all."

Among those attending the novel party were Louis B. Mayer, Irving G. Thalberg, John Gilbert, Eddie Mannix, Mae Murray, Ramon Novarro, Norma Shearer, George K. Arthur, Eleanor Boardman, Mae Busch, Estelle Clark, Lew Cody, Antonio D'Algy, William Haines, Carmel Myers, Conrad Nagel, Aileen Pringle, Monta Bell, Tod Browning, Christy Cabanne, Benjamin Christianson, Jack Conway, Edmund Goulding, Hobart Henley, Robert Z. Leonard, Fred Niblo, Al Raboch, Marshall Neilan, Victor Seastrom, Josef Von Sternberg, King Vidor and Pete Smith.

Koplar May Sell to Skouras Now Lichtman's Suits Ended

THE dismissal of two suits filed in the St. Louis Circuit Court several months ago by Al Lichtman of New York to collect money alleged to be due him as commissions from deals involving certain St. Louis theatres has revived the report that Harry Koplar may sell his half interest in the St. Louis Amusement Company to Skouras Brothers for $375,000. The St. Louis Amusement Company is rated at $550,000 and Skouras Brothers now own the other half interest.

This deal has been reported as "on" several times, but Skouras Brothers have never confirmed it.

In one suit Lichtman asked $25,000 from Koplas as commission for finding a buyer for his half interest in the St. Louis Amusement Company chain of fourteen neighborhood theatres and airdomes, etc.

In the other action he asked $49,000 from Koplar and the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation for negotiating a lease of the new St. Louis Theatre, Grand boulevard at Morgan street, to the Orpheum Amusement Circuit for $100,000 a year for ten years plus 50 per cent of the net profits of the theatre.

Counsel for Lichtman has stated that he obtained a cash settlement prior to dismissing his suits. The amount was not given out.

Goldman's Suit Progresses

The taking of depositions in William Goldman's suit against Harry and Sam Koplar, Sam Hamburg, Jr., David Sommers and the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation will be resumed on August 17, according to an announcement made by Edward W. Foristel, attorney for Goldman.

Foristel stated that the recent action of the Missouri Supreme Court in refusing to issue a writ of certiorari sought by Goldman to have that court review the action of the Circuit Court of St. Louis in excluding certain testimony in the case would have no bearing as it did not affect the merits of the suit, simply the procedure.

On June 25, when Harry Koplar and David Sommers were questioned by Foristel they were asked certain questions the answer to which would tend to show Koplar's interest, if any, in the St. Louis Theatre, Grand boulevard at Morgan street, being erected by the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation.

When Koplar and Sommers declined to answer the questions, Special Commissioner Leo Rassieur, Jr., ruled they did not have to answer. Later Circuit Judge Falkenhainer upheld that ruling. It was then Goldman sought the writ of certiorari from the Supreme Court to have that tribunal review the actions of the Circuit Court. The writ was refused.

Goldman in his suit charged that the defendants conspired to deprive him of his interest in the St. Louis Theatre. He claims to have originated the idea of building a theater on the site. He asks damages to the amount of the assets which he claims were taken from him.

"U" Employees' Picnic

The greatest outing ever held by the Universal Pictures Corporation was staged August 8 for the 500 employes of the Universal Home Office, the Big "U" (New York) Exchange and the Universal laboratories at Fort Lee, N. J. The entire crowd was transported up the Hudson River to Indian Point, near Peekskill, N. Y., where the day was spent in athletic games, bathing, swimming and dancing contests and other picnic activities. Practically the entire Universal force was present, including E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of the corporation; P. D. Cochrane, secretary, and Arthur S. Kane. Among the guests present were representatives from various trade papers, other figures in the industry and several film heads from out of town, including Morris Joseph, "U" manager in New Haven, and V. H. Carrick, of the Interstate of Philadelphia.

RESTRAINS "PICKETERS" IN WESTFIELD

Judge Franklin T. Hammond in superior court at Springfield, Mass., has issued a decree, approving the decision of the special master in the case of the owners of the Rialto Theatre, Westfield, Conn., against the Motion Picture Operators' Union. The case was the result of labor troubles at the Rialto nearly a year ago.

In the decree the defendants are restrained permanently by injunction from interfering with the business of the plantiff by picketing the theatre or in any other way.

Incorporations

Albany, Aug. 12.—With nine companies incorporating in the motion picture business during the past week, the slump which has existed for several weeks from the standpoint of new companies entering the business in New York State took an upward turn, with the result that this week's record showed companies entering the business not only in the metropolis, but also in various sections of the state. The companies, with the amount of capitalization and the directors, were: Ace Film Exchange, Inc., $10,000, Samuel Brasch, Edward M. Behrman, Hyman Binder, Brooklyn. S. J. R. Producing Company, Inc., $50,-100, Selma Jacobs, Jennie Cohen, H. W. Berg, New York. Catskill Operating Company, Inc., Catskill, $50,000, William W. Farley, Albany; Vincent J. Farley, Charles R. O'Connor, New York City. James J. Fox Holding Corporation, Hudson, $45,000, William S. Decker, A. A. Elliot, B. Frank Parker, Hudson. West Shore Theatres, Inc., Kingston, $1,000, Isaac Miller, Brooklyn; Philip and Eva Sherry, Kingston. Suxten Enterprises, Inc., $10,000, Henry and Abraham L. Suchman, New York City; Benjamin Tendler, New York; the capitalization of the following not being stated: Thirtieth Century Productions, Inc., Matie Hammerstein, Beatrice Zelenke, Irving H. Greenfield, New York City. Herkimer Liberty Corporation, Gloversville, George F. Wallace, P. W. Gloo, Herkimer; A. J. Van Waggeren, Ilion. Joyce Amusement Corporation, Irving Bloom, Lillian Singman, Anna Abrams, New York City.

Among the recent Ohio incorporations are The New Linden Amusement Company, Columbus, Ohio, by W. C. Pullin, F. F. Smith and others; The Meyer-Mayo Amusement Company, Springfield, also The New Southern Theatre Company, Akron, capital $10,000, by Edward S. Sheck, Frank S. Nied et al.

The Goodman & Harrison circuit which operates the Marshall Square Theatre, the Illington, the Dougless, the Western and other theatres in Chicago has incorporated their Marshall Square house under the name of the Marshall Square Building Corporation with a capital of a half million dollars. Julius Goodman, Louis H. Harrison and A. M. Goodman are the principals in the new organization.

Montreal's 55 Houses Yield $45,492 Tax

Inside figures regarding the theatres of Montreal, Quebec, Canada's largest city, are given in the annual report for 1924-25, just issued by the City Treasurer, the fiscal year ending March 31. In his statement, the civic official points out that the local theatres are one of the most profitable license features in the list.

There are 55 theatres in Montreal and the total annual tax derived from them is $45,492. This is collected as a seat tax, the fee being 85 cents per seat per annum, regardless of the size of the house. The total seating capacity of the 55 theatres is given as 53,521. The population of Montreal is around 800,000.

"Roxy" Incorporates

With the filing of papers in the secretary of state's office by S. L. Rothapfel, otherwise known as "Roxy," the Roxy Theatres Corporation was incorporated during the past week, for the purpose of erecting motion picture theatres in New York State. The company is authorized to issue 350,000 shares of stock having no par value. The incorporators and directors include S. L. Rothapfel, H. G. Kosch and M. H. Reuben, of New York City.

BENNETT'S STUDIO PARTY

The acquisition by Whitman Bennett of the Glendale Studios at Glendale, L. I., was celebrated on the evening of July 31 by a studio party which was attended, despite a downfall of rain, by 250 people. The guests were transported from New York by motor buses and private cars. An elaborate supper was served and then the evening was given over to dancing and merrymaking.

M.-G.-M. NEW TITLE WRITER

William Conselman, former assistant to Pete Smith, head of the publicity department of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, has been promoted to the editorial department of that studio as a title writer.

PARAMOUNT DIVIDEND

At a meeting this week the board of directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2 per share on the common stock, payable October 1, 1925, to stockholders of record at the close of business on September 15, 1925. The books will not close.

Statisticians Show Columbia Has Most of Canada's Fans

The average paid in amusement taxes in a year by the people of various Provinces of Canada is shown in an interesting table of statistics which has just been issued in the Dominion for the year 1924. The figures show that the residents of British Columbia paid an average of 95 cents each during the year regardless of whether they went to the theatres or not, the total revenue being divided by the official population total. This average is considerably higher than that for any other Canadian Province, the next in line being the Province of Manitoba with a per capita total for the year of 46 cents in amusement tax.

The third heaviest per capita rate for amusement tax for 1924 is found in the Province of Ontario, which has, by far, the greatest number of theatres along with a large population. The per capita average in Ontario is 43 cents for the year. Alberta, in the West, is in fourth place with an average of 35 cents per head and Nova Scotia, on the Atlantic Coast, comes fifth with 26 cents per person. New Brunswick was sixth with only 16 cents per head and the small insular Province of Prince Edward Island had the smallest average in amusement taxes for the year, this being five cents per capita.

There are no figures for the Province of Quebec for the simple reason that Quebec has no Provisional Amusement Tax, this having been abolished by the Quebec Government several years ago. The cities of Quebec take advantage of a law, however, which permits them to collect a ticket tax, the proceeds of which go toward hospitals and charities.

Toronto Exhibitor Head Cooperates with Reformers

Col. J. A. Cooper of Toronto, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, which is affiliated with the Hays organization, is succeeding in his efforts to secure the co-operation of the social reformers in the Dominion. Col. Cooper adopted the policy of co-operating with the organized social workers of Canada and has been urging them to assist the moving picture men with suggestions instead of throwing verbal and other brickbats.

Col. Cooper recently secured a valuable feature in this connection by the publication in "Social Welfare," the official magazine of the Social Service Council of Canada, of an article, "Safeguarding the Movies," which was written by a social worker, in which the objects and the successes of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada were described. References were also made to the work of the Hays association in the United States, and excerpts from addresses by Will Hays were used. It was stated that Col. Cooper had been co-operating with the various censor boards of Canada and praise was offered for the move to establish "Saturday Morning Movies" in Canada, when selected pictures are shown for boys and girls.

REMODELING PONTIAC THEATRE

A. J. Kleist, president of the Okland Theatres Co., at Pontiac, announces that the Orpheum Theatre on which work was halted some time ago, will be completed immediately and will include a recreation building. An expenditure of about $300,000 will be made.

Perrin's Break with Buckley Startles Albany

As the result of differences which cropped out between C. H. Buckley, owner of the Leland and the Clinton Square Theatres in Albany, as well as the Empire in Glens Falls, Oscar Perrin, managing director of the houses suddenly resigned the fore part of the week after having associated with Buckley for several years. Announcement that Perrin was no longer connected with the theatres came as a decided shock to the local film row as well as throughout the entire city, for Perrin has long been recognized as one of the most successful exhibitors in this part of the state.

In announcing Mr. Perrin's resignation, Mr. Buckley stated that Alex Sayles, former city editor of the Albany Evening Journal, but who has been managing the Clinton Square Theatre for some time past, has become house manager of the Leland, and that some one will be selected to look after the Clinton Square Theatre.

"U" and French Company to Adapt Hugo Novel

As the result of a contract entered into by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, and the Duke D'Ayem, president of the Societe Generale de Films of France, Mary Philbin is to be starred in a master production of Victor Hugo's famous novel, "L'Homme Qui Rit," (The Man Who Laughs), to be made in France by the co-operative efforts of Universal and the French company. Svend Gade, Danish director, has been selected to direct it.

The contract between Universal and the French firm specifies that Universal shall supply the leading woman, the leading man and a third actor—for the role of Ursus, the man with the bear in the story. This is an ideal role for Ernest Torrence and Universal is taking steps to obtain his services for this production.

New Fox Comedies Are Humdingers

Just came back from a special showing of four two-reel comedies and one scenic at the William Fox projection room. Short Subject Sales Manager Quimby certainly must have felt sure of his product to give the reviewers five subjects, in all nine reels, in one dose, but his confidence was justified.

Full reviews will be published in next issue, but we just can't wait to tell you that every one of these subjects is a humdinger. You already know the Imperial Comedies and the Van Bibber Stories are laugh-getters, and the new season's offerings are even better than before. Then there is a crackerjack O. Henry story, "Shoes," and the first of the new Helen and Warren stories of newly married life, which sets a pace for others to shoot at and promises big box-office business for the series.

Keep your eye on Fox. He is there with the goods.

C. S. SEWELL.

Myer Lesser

Warner Bros. Designate a Big Man for Director of Advertising, Publicity and Exploitation — Lesser Explains "Bonded Advertising."

By C. E. HASTINGS

MYER LESSER has been designated director of advertising, publicity and exploitation for Warner Brothers. In other words, Warner Brothers have added "a big man" with "a big name" to their roster of executives.

Lesser is the owner and president of the Blaine-Thompson Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, advertising experts. His hobby is planning and executing national advertising campaigns. Witness the Warners' national "smash" of two years ago, on such pictures as "Main Street," "Brass," "Babbit," "The Gold Diggers," etc. Lesser did that.

The page ads. in the New York newspapers, which appeared during the last few days, focusing attention on Lubitsch, Barrymore and the Warner product (a campaign which will extend to more than forty key cities), were planned and carried out by Lesser. And bigger things lie directly ahead.

Take the "Bonded Advertising" plan of Warner Brothers. Ever hear of anything quite like it in this industry before? I think not. And you can check up, and credit it to Lesser.

"In addition to advertising TO the exhibitor, in the trade papers," said Mr. Lesser, at his desk in 1600 Broadway, yesterday, "we propose to advertise FOR him in the medium that will prove his greatest help—his local newspaper. We shall apply NATIONAL advertising LOCALLY.

"Briefly, our bonded advertising plan provides that when an exhibitor contracts to book Warner Brothers pictures, and our contract department approves the contract, we forward to the newspapers with which we hold contracts in his city our order for space, fourteen inches on one column, with a number of variations for each picture. The paper holds this matter for release. When the local exchange is given the play date, the paper is directed to insert the ads, as per order.

"On his part, the exhibitor goes right on with his house advertising as usual, but he may direct attention to the publicity campaign we have given him. We advertise our product, and he advertises the fact that he is showing these pictures, with the dates. This service does not add a penny to his contract. Following the signing of the contract, we deliver our bond to the exhibitor, and under this bond we agree to co-operate with him in his local advertising, as well as to give him the benefit of our national advertising. As this plan has to do with advertising, the bond will carry the signature of the advertising director.

"One can readily see what obstacles we had to overcome in putting this plan into actual operation. The great difficulty has been, that in the past certain men made promises which they did not keep. A few ciphers between friends, you know. Somebody said 'we will spend $750,000' and perhaps $75,000 (or part of it) was spent in some form of co-operation. Exhibitors have come to be wary. And of necessity. We state that we will spend $600,000, and that is what we mean. 'Copy' is ready on the first thirty pictures on the Warners 1925-26 program, which will carry us into the Spring of next year.

"It is an immensely satisfying campaign from my personal viewpoint. We are dealing with human beings, scintillating personalities, engrossing stories—not with shoes, carpets, soap, etc.

"We shall reach out for the entire American public. We shall use one hundred newspapers in forty-three key cities for our full page advertisements. The 100 papers, with 12,000,000 circulation, gives us 50,000,000 readers. The campaign will extend over a period of six months. We shall use not less than 1,000 daily newspapers in more than 700 cities to advertise each Warner picture as it appears in the theatre. This adds 10,000,000 circulation, with 40,000,000 readers.

"Warner Brothers will advertise, also, in motion picture magazines in the so-called 'fan' class. There are five of these specified in our advertising: Photoplay, Classic, Picture-Play, Motion Picture Magazine and Screenland.

"Our plan for publishing in the newspapers serializations of our stories will reflect in increased business at the box-office. We have prepared serials on our first seven releases for next season, and we have received acceptance from newspapers, to date, indicating

Plattsburg, N. Y., Exhibitor Gives Yeast Cakes Free Ad

The secret is out. The reason for the pep shown by Jack Matthews, a well known exhibitor of Plattsburg, has at last become known. Simple, too. Just the mere matter of a yeast cake. Whenever Mr. Matthews tackles anything, or in fact whenever he starts the day off, he indulges in a yeast cake, and what is more, he is such an exponent of the beneficial qualities of yeast that he has several friends and exhibitors who are also firm in the belief that a yeast-a-day-keeps-the-wolf-away. As a fisherman, however, Mr. Matthews may be all right, but when he had an opportunity to prove the piscatorial advantages of the Saranac a week or so ago, he fell down completely. You see Mr. Matthews had been rather inclined to brag about the pike taken from the Saranac. So the other day when a couple of friends were in town, he rigged himself up in lumberjack coat and instructed his chauffeur to be careful and not drive the new Hudson over 25 miles an hour, and cautioned his pet bulldog not to get into trouble before his return, then hied away for the Saranac. Two hours, and never a fish, even though Mr. Matthews took his favorite yeast before he started out. But the river was high and that may have been responsible.

Here's the way Ollie Stacey of the Majestic in Albany described business on one of the recent hot days. "As good as could be expected," said Mr. Stacey, as he wiped his brow, "and that's terrible."

Al Bothner, who is connected with the Smalley chain of houses, has a new job these days although still connected with Mr. Smalley. Mr. Bothner has been entrusted with looking after things generally at the three dance halls which Mr. Smalley runs, and when it is necessary Mr. Bothner can help out the orchestra with a song or two.

There is a new cat at the Troy Theatre in Troy. In fact there is a new cat every two or three days. For some unknown reason, kittens have a penchant of wandering into the lobby and making friends with Mrs. Walter Roberts, cashier and wife of the manager, who likes cats as well as the cats seem to like the theatre. She keeps a dish of cream on hand, and then after the cats have had their fill and taken a snooze, she escorts them to the entrance.

Oscar Perrin, who handles the Buckley houses including two in Albany and one in Glens Falls, decided to take a day off last Sunday instead of journeying up to the Warren county city. Mr. Perrin went to the baseball game, but what he saw in the way of a game convinced him that he should have chosen some other means of diversion. But then Mr. Perrin has been more accustomed to the big leaguers than the bushers.

The contract for the erection of the new $500,000 picture theatre in Albany by the Strand interests was let during the past week to Shapiro and Son of New York City, who will start in at once razing the old building that now occupies the site. This company erected the State Theatre in Schenectady, the Troy in Troy and the Capitol in Albany. Plans call for the completion of the new Albany house by the fore part of March.

When an exhibitor can hold a crowd of 250 persons on a rainy day in the lobby at this time of the year and for the second show of the day at that, business is not to be sneezed at. This is what Mrs. A. E. Walton of the Happy Hour in Lake Placid did the other day at the showing of "The Making of O'Malley."

While her husband handles the farm, Mrs. A. Sequin, of Rouses Point, brimful of energy, looks after the affairs of the New Liberty Theatre. Between the two of them, they are doing very well, thank you.

There is one thing certain and that is that William Smalley, of Cooperstown, will never be a big city exhibitor. He is perfectly content with houses in up-to-date villages. Mr. Smalley was in town the past week on his way back from Connecticut, where he had spent two or three days with his mother. In connection with running "The Ten Commandments" in the various theatres in the Smalley chain, and which incidentally will consume a matter of thirty-seven days, Mr. Smalley is using a seven-piece orchestra. His matinees have been exceptionally good. In every place he has solicited business from the heads of all churches, Protestant and Catholic alike, and in many cases the picture has been recommended from the pulpit. As for the ordinary run of pictures, Mr. Smalley says that he can bank on Tom Mix to draw the crowds every time.

Charlie Marshall, who runs the Bridge Theatre in Ausable Forks, has a rather peculiar house, but that fact alone brings him in many a dollar. The theatre has a stage at least 50 feet deep, and when the pictures are over it is an easy matter to put on a basketball game or a dance on the stage. Mr. Marshall owns a number of buildings in the northern town, which at

The Lawlor Theatre in Greenfield will reopen Labor Day with a split week policy of pictures and vaudeville.

A picture theatre and three stores, all in the same building, will be built in Springfield by Hyman Kronick. The total cost will be $75,000. The building will be one story and will be 56 by 165 feet.

Lory Lorenzi, formerly assistant to Gordon Wrighter, manager of Poli's Palace Theatre in Springfield, has been managing the Poli summer stock at the Court Square, Springfield.

Harry Gould and Robert Crooks of the Bowdoin Square Theatre in Boston are on a motoring and fishing trip to Maine. Big hauls are anticipated, for Harry and Bob are known as expert anglers.

The Keith-Albee interests have acquired the St. James Theatre in the Back Bay section of Boston and will reopen it late in September with a combination policy of photoplays and vaudeville. For the last five years George A. Giles, well known Boston exhibitor, has presented a dramatic stock company at the St. James. He is retiring from active management of the theatre to devote more time to his extensive real estate enterprises.

Rosenberg and Stoneman have disposed of their Strand Theatre in Lowell to Famous Players. The company already had the Merrimac Square in that city.

A picture theatre may be erected in Auburn, Me., by the Cosmopolitan Theatre and Film Company of Boston. Although Auburn has 17,000 residents it has no picture theatre, houses in the twin city of Lewiston attracting the amusement patronage.

The Roslindale Rialto Theatre, Inc., has acquired Gorman's Theatre, Roslindale, Boston, from the C. J. Gorman's Amusement Enterprises, Inc., at a cost of nearly $100,000. The theatre will be improved and the capacity enlarged to 2,000. The reopening will be in the fall and the Rialto will be conducted by the New England Theatre Operative Company of Boston.

THIS DEPARTMENT WELCOMES LETTERS FROM EXHIBITORS

Albany, N. Y., Exhibitor News

the present time resounds with the hammer and saw as buildings are erected to replace those destroyed by the recent fire.

The American Theatre in Troy is slated to reopen at 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, August 15. At first it was planned to reopen in the evening, with a big splash but later on it was decided to get under way with the afternoon performance.

It looks as though William Rafferty of Syracuse and Bill Shirley of Schenectady would shortly be numbered among those who own real estate in Florida. The two of them were in New York last week on their way south, and as the pair can write their checks for better than $100,000, it's a safe bet that they will never return north without doing a bit of investing.

The biggest surprise of the week came with the announcement that George Roberts, managing-director of the Berinstein chain of houses for several years, with headquarters in Albany, had resigned, and that his son, Ormond, who has been handling the Hudson Theatre in Albany, followed suit. Mr. Roberts has been with the Berinsteins for eight or nine years and his son for about four years. At one time George Roberts was a partner with the late W. W. Berinstein in handling the Hudson Theatre in Albany. Julius Berinstein, who has been managing the Palace in Troy, will look after the two Albany theatres as well as the Troy house, leaving the management of the Elmira houses to the two brothers residing in that city.

There may be a time when the announcer on some one of the sightseeing yachts at the Thousand Islands, will point to a beautiful mansion on an island and will then be heard to declare: "On the right is the home of Uly S. Hill, former managing-director of the Strand motion picture theatres in Albany and Troy." Some day Mr. Hill hopes to own a home at the Thousand Islands, and when Mr. Hill sets out to do a thing, he generally comes through.

The benefit which Louis Buettner recently gave at the Majestic in Cohoes for the fire sufferers of that city netted $275. Mr. Buettner isn't going to take any vacation this summer, having just moved into his new home and liking it so well that he can't possibly see any reason for suffering the inconveniences of the ordinary run of summer hotels.

The Bradley in Fort Edward is scheduled to reopen on September 1, following extensive improvements including new wiring, redecorating and new seats, involving an expenditure of about $8,000. Lew Fischer, who runs the house, played the part of Santa Claus on Film Row the other day when just by way of conversation he invited all the girls in the Pathe exchange to have a dish of ice cream with him. Much to his surprise, the entire crowd accepted but Mr. Fischer was game and paid the bill.

If you ever happen to be in the vicinity of Tupper Lake and want to cash a check, look up William Donovan who runs the Palace Theatre there. If he is not at the theatre, he will be at his gents' furnishing store. He carries a roll of greenbacks, and yellows, too, that would choke the proverbial cow. Of course Mr. Donovan is called upon to cash many a check for the woodsmen who float into town.

Jack Campbell, assistant manager of the Griswold in Troy, is away on his vacation. J. A. Fitzgerald, manager of the theatre in Hudson Falls, is back from a vacation on the Maine coast. Walter Suckno of the Albany and Regent theatres in Albany went to New York recently for a day and then stayed a week, making it unnecessary to ask him when he plans to take his vacation.

Summer camps seem to be all the rage among the exhibitors in this part of the state. Al Barton of the Playhouse in Ticonderoga enjoys his spare hours at a camp on Lake George. Charles Derry of the Empire in Port Henry has a fine camp two or three miles out on Lake Champlain. Nate Robbins has a cozy lodge in the Adirondacks and journeys up from Utica. Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal in Albany, has one on Crooked Lake, while Mike Kallet of Rome has one at Old Forge.

The Empire in Glens Falls inaugurated a new policy last week, giving four changes of program weekly. It is believed that this will brace up the Sunday shows. Alec Sayles of Albany has been handling the theatre while John Garry is recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

The many friends of William Benton of Saratoga Springs will be pleased to know that his young son, whose life hung in the balance for several days, is on the road to recovery.

Are you picking any winners at the track these days? This is addressed to Ben Apple of Troy, who is right down in front with the bookies. If things break as well as a year ago, Ben ought to retire the last of the month with a good sized roll. Mr. Apple has always been able to pick the mud boys, and with rain every day he should be in his element.

Here's the kind of an exhibitor Tony Veiller, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, is. When his car showed signs of giving up the ghost in Lake George the other day, with Troy 72 miles away and with Tony due to open at noon after having been away for a week's vacation, he just naturally began negotiations for an airplane. The car finally gave a wheeze, and after doing many a mile in record-breaking time, Mr. Veiller showed up at the theatre with ten minutes to spare. When Tony came back from New York, he brought many new ideas, one of which has improved the projection at the well known house.

Pop Linton of Utica, busy getting his new house under way, was in New York the past week.

Even President Coolidge couldn't rush Jake Rosenthal of Troy into a decision. At least Jake says so, and he must have meant it, for the statement came the other night after four hours spent with a couple of film salesmen. And what is more to the point—or at least Jake so states—he will never die of enlargement of the heart.

Hats off to Mrs. A. T. Mallory of the Star in Corinth. She can make the best pumpkin pie in the whole Adirondack region. Yes, there were three pieces left last week, that is until a couple of friends struck town. Along with helping out at the theatre, Mrs. Mallory is a cateress, and that may explain just why her pies are so good and also why she is in so much demand at all the functions in town.

Pat Quinlan of Tobin and Quinlan, who run the Ideal in Chateaugay, lives within four miles of the Canadian line and proudly boasts that he has never taken a drink in his life. Mr. Quinlan does the booking for the house. He has a great habit of sticking his feet on top of the desk, and after booking a picture never fails to impress the visitor with the scenic beauties of the Adirondacks and cautions the party not to fail to see Chateaugay Lake.

By this time, Bob Yates, who is helping his mother-in-law, Mrs. Carpenter, run the Arcade in Lake George this year, must have covered that first 500 miles with his new Buick sedan. Mr. Yates, who is on big time vaudeville a good part of the year, wants to speed up a bit. In order to get the first 500 miles over with, he has been bringing the operator back each night to Warrensburg. Gasoline means nothing to him just now.

Pittsburgh

John M. Stahl expects to have his fifth and finest theatre in Homestead ready for opening to the public by October 15. The new house will seat 1,500, 1,000 on the ground floor and the balance in the balcony. The first 200 chairs in the balcony will be loge seats.

George Riester, for several months manager of Rowland & Clark's Manor Theatre in the Squirrel Hill district, has been assigned to Erie, where he will act as general manager for the R. & C. circuit of four theatres in that town. Mr. Riester has already taken up his new duties in Erie. The new manager at the Manor is Robert A. Morrison.

Forrest F. Shontz, manager of the Kenyon Theatre on the Northside, was married on August 4 to Miss Ethel Parker. After a short wedding trip the couple will make their home on the Northside. Congratulations.

Louis Meyers of the Star and Dreamland Theatre, McKeesport, is vacationing with his family for three weeks. The party is making an automobile trip, visiting Atlantic City, Philadelphia and New York.

Ely J. Goldstein, manager of the Morris Theatre, Northside, is vacationing in Florida.

Among the local exhibitors who have recently spent their vacations in Atlantic City are included: Sam Gould, Northside; Jake Richman, Pittsburgh; Hyman Goldberg, Pittsburgh; George Panagatocas and Milan Salowich, Johnstown, and Nick Notopoulos, Altoona.

Bart Dattola, owner of the Alhambra, New Kensington, is the proud recipient of a check for ten dollars as prize money to him from the Universal exchange, for his having built one of the finest lobby displays to exploit "The Fighting Ranger" serial.

Mrs. McGinley and her daughter of the Grand Theatre, Elizabeth, recently visited Film Row, making the trip to Pittsburgh in their classy Pierce-Arrow car.

T. J. Vincent, manager of the Dreamland Theatre, McDonald, accompanied by his family, is vacationing in Philadelphia, Atlantic City and New York. Vincent is visiting his old home in "Philly."

Among the recent exhibitor visitors to Film Row were: Jake Silverman, Altoona; Mike Rosenbloom, Charleroi; Jake Smith, Barnesboro; Charles Feinler, Wheeling, and Carl Becker, Butler.

Marion Davies greets Rear Admiral Vogelsang, U. S. N., between scenes of Monta Bell's "Lights of Old Broadway," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production.

Chicago

The new Rialto Theatre going up at Bushnell, Ill., will be ready for an early fall opening. This is the house that was erected because the little city voted for an open Sunday recently.

The Tangerine Grove Theatre at 6839 to 6855 Stony Island avenue, Chicago, will be opened next month. The building was sold last week by Nathan and Samuel Bloomfield to M. L. and Phillip A. Weinstein for a reported $293,000. The new owners have not yet announced their plans.

H. J. Searry, cashier of the Bandbox Theatre at 127 West Madison street, Chicago, was held up last week by a lone robber and forced to turn over the receipts.

Tom Reed, theatre manager of Duquoin, Ill., has returned from a trip to the West Coast. Harry Redmond, owner of the Majestic at East St. Louis, Ill., is also back on the job after a pleasant sojourn in the Yellowstone Park country.

W. M. Savage, well known exhibitor of Alton, Ill., has been re-elected president of the Illinois Poster Association and W. L. Busby of the Empire Theatre at Quincy, Ill., treasurer. B. W. Robbins is secretary and David Jarrett is vice-president.

Joseph Desberger, manager of the Washington Square Theatre at Quincy, Ill., will close it for a few weeks to rebuild the ventilation system, rearrange the seats and make other improvements.

Nate Wolf of the picture department of the Orpheum circuit has returned from his honeymoon trip to the West Coast and the boys are giving him the glad hand.

Kansas City

Lawrence Lehman, manager of the Orpheum, Kansas City, has returned from Colorado Springs to prepare for the opening of the theatre August 23. The Auditorium Theatre, the "boards" upon which Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett once paced with many a tragic gesture, will be the home this season of the "Midnight Follies," burlesque.

Glen W. Dickinson, who owns theatres in Lawrence, Kas., Junction City, Kas., and Manhattan, Kas., has purchased the New Lewis Theatre in Independence, Mo., from W. T. Boles and C. M. Purcell.

So youthful appearing is Bruce Fowler, new manager of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, that the Kansas City Star, by way of introducing him to theatre patrons, published a cut and story of liberal space of him the other day.

Among the changes in management of theatres in the Kansas City territory in the last week are: Royal Theatre, Carrollton, Mo., leased by A. E. Jarboe to H. Waybill; Savoy Theatre, Palmyra, Mo., purchased by S. N. Graham, former owner of the Rex Theatre, LaGrange, Mo.; Park E. Sherlock, former advertising manager of the Gayety Theatre, Kansas City, has been appointed manager, succeeding Fred Waldmann.

A brand new rumor going the rounds in Kansas City has it that Marcus Loew, as well as Metro-Goldwyn, is connected with the new $3,000,000 theatre and office building project, which is being promoted on the site of Linwood boulevard and Troost avenue, Kansas City.

Earl T. Cook has been named manager of the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City. Mr. Cook, whose experience covers fifteen years, comes to Kansas City from Detroit where he was manager of the Miles Theatre.

Fred Sears, who was named manager of the Empress, Kansas City, the other day, arrived Monday to make preparations for the opening of the house, which, he announced, would be August 23.

ALICE ARDELL

This is the young Parisian girl who is starring in a series of two-reel comedies which Joe Rock is producing for F. B. O.

Ohio

"Tommy" Carroll, among the most popular of Cleveland managers, has again assumed control of the State Theatre in that city. With the exception of the two past seasons, one of which was spent in Detroit, Carroll has been managing Cleveland theatres for a decade. This is the second time he has been in charge of the State, having resigned from that house two years ago to spend a season in Europe. His other managerial duties included the Mall, Standard and Euclid Avenue Opera House.

Emory Downs, who has been managing the Dome Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, is back in Cleveland again, having charge of Loew's Allen Theatre. Years ago Downs managed the Knickerbocker Theatre in Cleveland.

E. F. and Mrs. Harlan, who own and manage the Gem Theatre at Fremont, Ohio, received a visit from the stork recently. Mother and son are doing nicely.

A. A. Broiler, who has been manager of the Kaypee Theatre, Mt. Gilead, Ohio, since the house originally opened three years ago, has resigned and has been succeeded by Griffith Granger.

The Opera House at Mansfield, Ohio, is off to a flying start for the new season. Manager W. A. Partello is quite enthusiastic over the outlook for the coming months and has booked some of the season's biggest.

The Princess Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, in reopening for the new season, announces that all features will be shown for the entire week, instead of playing a split-week policy as heretofore. The Princess is an exclusive Paramount house.

The Pictorium at Dennison, Ohio, and the Vale Theatre at Uhrichsville, Ohio, both of which have been in possession of L. Cowan, have been sold to G. M. Jardon.

The Fairbanks Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, which plays a policy of pictures and legitimate during the regular season, is showing picture and will continue to do so for the remainder of the summer. Manager E. C. Paul announces that his programs will be changed daily.

The New Palace, Toledo's newest picture house, which is scheduled to open at an early date, will show all the better first-run releases, according to a statement by Howard Feigley of the Toledo Theatres Company, who have the house.

Evelyn Brent is "Lady Robinhood" in the forthcoming F. B. O. special.

Detroit

Vacation seasons are practically over in the film trade in Detroit. Thomas D. Moule, general manager of the Kunsky theatre, is back from a three weeks' motor trip; Jack Saxe of the Favorite Film Co., is back after covering 2,500 miles to the West in his car, and Fred North, manager of the First National Exchange, is back at his desk after two weeks in the open.

George F. Koppin, who operates about twenty-two theatres in the neighborhood sections of Detroit, is giving a corn roast at his Halfway Subdivision for film men on August 15. There will be athletic sports, a band concert and plenty to eat.

The Butterfield offices in Detroit report that the Strand is the only house now open in Grand Rapids. Butterfield recently purchased the control of five downtown theatres operated by Consolidated and has closed them for alterations. They will open early in September.

Kimmel Bros.' new theatre at Nine Mile Road and John R street, is nearing completion and will be ready for opening August 25. The house will seat 1,000 and will have a 20-foot lobby.

J. A. Carrier, manager of the Broadway Strand, has been appointed Detroit pageant official to select the most beautiful girl in the city to represent the Motor City at the annual Atlantic City pageant.

West Virginia

The Metropolitan Theatre at Morgantown, W. Va., owned by the Comuntzis Brothers, celebrated its first birthday on July 20, and in honor of the event the owners of the theatre held "Open House Week." Each day during the week, from 11 until 12 o'clock, the theatre doors were open so that the general public could see the "insides," such as the projection room, the ventilating system, the lobby display studio, offices, etc. Large crowds of Morgantowners took advantage of this opportunity to see the workings of a modern theatre. Uniformed attendants were in charge of the guests.

Following is the efficient house staff of the Metropolitan: Fielding K. O'Kelly, manager; Jimmie O'Kelly, assistant manager; Edward H. Bubert, director of publicity; Leo Schlagel, orchestra conductor and H. K. Kelly, projectionist.

Canada

The Tivoli Theatre, the second largest exclusive picture house in Toronto, has reopened with considerable eclat, the first attraction, "The Unwanted," a British production from G. B. Samuelson, proving a big magnet. The success of this feature was so great that the picture was held over for a second week at 35 and 50 cents by Manager Tommy Daly. Incidentally, Luigi Romanelli and his orchestra, one of the best musical organizations of the Ontario Capital, is back at the Tivoli as a permanent feature.

Manager John Arthur of the Toronto Hippodrome got the Regent Theatre under way again on August 15 with the Canadian premiere of Charlie Chaplin's "The Gold Rush." The Regent is Toronto's big time picture hall, with performances being given twice daily at special prices. "The Gold Rush" has been booked for an indefinite engagement, after which it will tour the provinces, playing at all theatres of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

Manager Howard Conover of the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, provided accommodation on Friday afternoon, August 7, for 800 children who are attending the Daily Vacation Bible Schools of Montreal, this being the annual theatre treat for the pupils of the special summer schools.

A unique policy has been arranged by Manager John Hazza for the Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, a big Western Canadian cenema, affecting the performances on three days of the week only. On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of each week all seats are reserved for the evening performance and only two shows are given, one at 2:15 and the other at 8:15 p. m. For the rest of the week performances are conducted continuously and seats are not reserved.

For years the York Theatre, Yonge and Bloor streets, Toronto, was unique in that it carried out a definite policy of changing programs every day in the week. This was when the house was owned by the late Harry Brouse of Ottawa, who died one year ago. This custom has been discontinued by Manager Clarence Tremblay, however, with the result that the usual plan now is to have three program changes weekly, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

John T. Fiddes, proprietor of the Playhouse Theatre of Winnipeg, has hit upon an interesting side attraction to boost interest in the house. He has arranged a "Made in Winnipeg" exhibition which is to cover a period of thirty days, the various exhibits being changed at intervals. This exhibition is presented in the spacious lobby of the theatre.

D. Leach has bought the Empress Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, and is managing the house himself. The Empress is one of the brightest of local neighborhood cinemas.

Leonard Bishop, manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, a Famous Players house, has been appointed manager of the Russell Theatre, Ottawa, which the corporation interests recently acquired for special presentations. Mr. Bishop, who returned recently from a lengthy visit in California, will have charge of both the Regent and the Russell in Ottawa.

When a great many of the regular patrons of the Strand Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, went to Burlington Beach, the nearby summer resort, for the hot weather, Manager H. E. Wilton of the Strand decided to keep in personal touch with his holidaying customers with a series of weekly letters which were sent by mail to their summer homes. These letters tell of current features and coming attractions, while interesting news is also included. Many have told him of the receipt of these letters.

Minnesota

Universal officials answering a letter of a Minneapolis newspaper put an end to rumors that a first-run house would be built here. The house will not be built for the time being," according to the letter. It is known that Finkelstein & Ruben recently signed a first-run Universal contract for the Twin Cities.

The latest rumor is that Balaban & Katz will build a house here. It is know that several theatrical firms have been looking over a choice site on upper Hennepin avenue. Balaban & Katz are said to be among them.

Al Steffes returned from the Detroit meeting, spent a day in conference with representative exhibitors and then disappeared for parts unknown. Al took time to deny several rumors regarding his affiliations before leaving.

The harvest season is in full blast in Minnesota and the Dakotas and the small town exhibitors are wearing smiles in anticipation of the coming season's business. Conditions look the best of any time since the war for the small town exhibitors. Crops are good and the farmers are rapidly getting back on their feet.

Oklahoma

C. Lyle and E. B. James will open their new theatre at Holdenville, Okla., in the near future.

Key and Spaulding have opened their new theatre at Braman, Okla.

The Rex Theatre Company will erect a new theatre at Wewoka, Okla.

C. M. Hartman and Mr. Coons are each building a theatre building at Carnegia, Okla., which will make three theatres for Carnegia.

W. H. Clover has purchased the Liberty at Wirt, Okla.

The Liberty at Seminole, Okla., will close for repairs but reopen in the near future.

Mr. Woods has purchased the Hamley at El Reno, Okla., from Mrs. Hamley, who has managed the theatre since the death of her husband a year ago.

Dr. Baumgarten will soon erect a new theatre building at Cordel, Okla.

Omaha

In spite of considerable discouragement in Omaha, Clayton Lynch, chairman of the Greater Movie Season movement in Omaha, and Stuart Gould, advertising man of the Omaha Bee, have succeeded in going ahead with the movement here. The string of theatres here owned by A. H. Blank of Des Moines was the only group of picture show houses that agreed from the first to go into the thing and co-operate. The other big houses flatly refused, giving one reason or another. The smaller or suburban houses also refused. However, the chairman and the Omaha Bee continued to fight for the movement and now have it going nicely.

The Frank Amusement Company, headquarters at Waterloo, Ia., has just acquired a number of additional theatres including the Grand at Oelwein, Ia.; the Isis, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; the Orpheum, Clinton, Ia. Three other Iowa theatres are under option and by January 1 it is expected that this company will be operating a chain of ten theatres. This company was already operating the Plaza and Rialto theatres at Waterloo. The Plaza is undergoing remodeling and redecorating and will in the future seat 1,250 instead of 670, as previously.

H. F. Shorty has been made manager of the Rialto at Missouri Valley, Ia. He was formerly connected with the Princess at Missouri Valley.

Union musicians at the Strand and Rialto in Omaha are asking for an increase in wages of $10 a week. Ralph Goldberg of the World Realty Company, Omaha, announced that the Sun Theatre will not pay the increase. Edwin G. Stevens, secretary of the musician's union, said that unless the increase is forthcoming the musicians will not renew their contracts on September 1. Mr. Goldberg said that the theatre may use pipe organ music exclusively. The Strand and Riolto managements last week were not ready to announce their decision.

Lopez Makes Orchestration

Vincent Lopez, noted orchestra leader, has completed an orchestration of "Little Annie Rooney" as a compliment to Mary Pickford's portrayal of Annie Rooney in her new screen play of the same title.

The Lopez orchestra will broadcast "Little Annie Rooney" at all its concerts. An innovation is promised in that the Lopez orchestration will include the first fox trot arrangement of the famous old song. It will be a complete combination of the fox trot and waltz orchestrations to be played as an accompaniment to the picture in all theatres and radio programs.

LOOKING OVER THE NEW NEIGHBOR'S FLAT

No, it wasn't curiosity that caused Marion Harlan, playing the lead in "Shoes," first Fox O'Henry, to visit Kathryn Perry, who plays Helen in the Fox "Helen and Warren" series. It was done in a true friendly spirit. But Marion didn't miss a thing in the flat built to house the series Fox is making from Mabel Herbert Urner's delightful stories of "The Married Life of Helen and Warren." According to what she told Madge Bellamy and Alma Rubens, co-workers on the Fox stage, Warren isn't a bit stingy and Helen has very good taste. The pictures are real oil painting, her library is full of valuable first editions and her phonograph is a "wow"; real mahogany, houses a radio and has every new device.

Denver

Greater Movie Season opened in Denver on August 1 with the largest parade seen in Denver in many years. Because August 1 is a state holiday more than the usual number of people were free to view the parade, which was three and a half miles long. The most elaborate float was that of the Rivoli Theatre, which was lavishly decorated with ladies of the chorus. The most distinctive was that of the Ogden Theatre, which contained a typical pioneer scene with the pioneers dressed in costume and Indians hovering about.

H. E. Huffman announces the installation of a new ventilating system in his Bluebird Theatre, one of the popular suburban houses in Denver.

Jacob Eppler, for many years manager and stockholder in the Ogden Theatre, one of the largest and best patronized suburban houses of Denver, has terminated his connection with that theatre. He has purchased a new sedan and will drive it to his home in San Francisco, where he will live until he decides to make some new connection. Mr. Eppler was an active member of the M. P. T. O. of Colorado and of the Denver Joint Board of Arbitration. He made a great success of the Ogden Theatre and was very popular with everyone in the motion picture industry in this territory. He will be succeeded as manager by Harvey A. Goodridge.

Fire broke out in the booth of the Palm Theatre on West Colfax avenue in Denver last week. It was caused by the buckling of film in the machine. Through the prompt action of the employes and the Denver Fire Department it was extinguished without much damage. The total damages will be less than $300 and that was largely confined to the damage to the prints.

Frank Bronte, owner of the Gem Theatre, Yuma, Col., is seriously ill. He is leaving immediately for Rochester, Minn., where he will visit the Mayo Clinic and submit to an operation. All his friends extend best wishes for a speedy recovery.

W. E. Renzleman of the Wray Theatre, Wray, Col., is in Denver endeavoring to purchase another theatre.

E. W. Footman, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Colorado Springs, was also a visitor on Film Row last week, buying film to amuse the tourists. Mr. Footman announces that there are more tourists visiting the Pike's Peak region this year than ever before.

W. H. Reno of Trinidad, Col., has purchased the Palace Theatre of that city from L. L. Stonebraker.

W. T. Sterling has sold his Crystal Theatre in Carrizozo, N. M., to George Dowdle, who owns the Alemento Theatre in Alamorgordo, N. M.

Fred Muller has closed his Montenair Theatre in Taos, N. M., for remodeling and repairs. He expects to reopen within the next few weeks.

F. A. Kennedy, manager of the Movie Hall at Mack, Col., has also closed his theatre for repairs. He expects to open with brand new equipment about September 1.

Other visitors in Denver last week were Ed Anderson of the Colonial Theatre, Pueblo, Col., and William Delahoyde, of the Garden Theatre, Lusk, Wyo.

"Lame Brains"

Joe Rock has put into actual production his first Blue Ribbon Comedy, which will be titled "Lame Brains." In this production Alice Ardell is starred. She makes her screen debut in this comedy. Chester Conklin is the male star co-featured in this production, which will be released by F. B. O. in September.

Use the tips; follow the advice of exhibitors who agree with your experience on pictures you both have run.

Send tips to help others. This is your department, run for you and maintained by your good-will.

Associated Exhibitors

CHECHAHCOS. Star cast. Good scenic. Not so much a story, too long in fact too much snow stuff, but at that it's fine for those who like it. All classes town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

F. B. O.

AMERICAN MANNERS. (5,200 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Our first one and seemed to go across good with the young folks. The print was poor and had three stops. Hope the next show will have a better print. Plenty of action all through. Tone, okay. A family picture. Not a special. Good appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

BANDIT'S BABY. Star, Fred Thomson. Fine Thomson picture that pleased them all. Why say more? Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

BLOOD HOUND. Star, Bob Custer. A good north western picture and will please your western audience. This is a fairly good little star and will be a big one some day. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 75 per cent. Industrial class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky

BREED OF THE BORDER. (4,920 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Just another western with Lefty Flynn miscast. He makes the same impression with an audience of being a western hero as Wallace Beery does playing a parlor vamp. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Average appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania

CHEAP KISSES. (6,538 feet). Star cast. Our audience did not like this picture, as it is sickish. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, 60 per cent. J. M. Blanchard, Lone Rock, Kossuth County, Iowa.

CLOUD RIDER. Star, Al Wilson. This was a fairly good stunt picture and should do good for the boys on Saturday night crowd. I played it on Saturday to fair business. I, however, do not consider it as good as the former one, "The Air Hawk." Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

CRASHING THROUGH. (6 reels). Star, Harry Carey. Just a fair western. Not as good as those he is making to-day, but will pass. This is old, but you will always show a little credit on our friend Harry's pictures. Tone, good. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Special, no. Fair appeal. Mining class, town of 150. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glen Alum, West Virginia.

JIMMIE'S MILLIONS. Star, Richard Talmadge. A picture full of action and a fair story. If you have a patronage that likes action pictures you can't go wrong on these Talmadges. They are all consistently good. F. B. O. usually delivers the goods. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 85 per cent. General class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

LAUGHING AT DANGER. Star, Richard Talmadge. Plenty of action and excitement. My second Talmadge and I am sure pleased with them. About one more and he will be made here. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Appeal, 90 per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

RIDING COMET. Star, Yakima Canutt. Very good western with lots of action and some good stunts. Didn't draw on account of being new star, but he has the stuff to make real western pictures. Tone, okay. Audience appeal, 90 per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SPIRIT OF THE U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star, Mary Carr. Showed this on the Fourth and found it most suitable for that date. It's a very good picture and the sob stuff will make a lot shed some tears. All in all, this kind of picture once in a while is good, especially for the small town. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, 85 per cent. Mining class, town of 150. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glen Alum, West Virginia.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. Star, Fred Thomson. A mighty fine western that pleased everyone. Best from Thomson yet. Lots of action and thrills. Will please anywhere. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Appeal, 100 per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

THERE'S MILLIONS IN IT. Star, Clive Brooks. A fair program show that we lost money on playing against a baseball carnival. It has some interesting shots of English scenery in it. There are some thrills in it. Tone, good. A family picture. Not a special. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHITE FANG. Star cast. "Strongheart" in this picture. It drew a nice business and pleased. We class it above the average program and should get you more money. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 90 per cent. General class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

WHITE SIN. Star, Madge Bellamy. Pretty good little program picture with pretty little Madge Bellamy doing some wonderful work. Picture plot was an old one done over, but the director held the attention of the audience from beginning to end and several patrons voiced their approval of this one. Fine acting by all actors and the photography was good. Film in fine condition. Tone, fair. Sunday, don't know. Special, no. Good appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHITE THUNDER. Star, Yakima Canutt. A fair western with little action. This fellow is too slow. Does not have enough action to his pictures and no punch at all. Will do if they like westerns. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class, city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

First National

CHICKIE. Star cast. Drew pretty well, but only pleased 60 per cent of those that came. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

DINTY. Star cast. A very good program picture. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 85 per cent. Mining class, town of 150. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glen Alum, West Virginia.

HUNTRESS. (6,236 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. This picture gave more satisfaction than any program picture we have used in many months. A good picture of the outdoor type, and while it has but little drawing power of itself, will please everyone who sees it. Used it with vaudeville that pulled a record house. Tone, good. Sunday, questionable. Special, no. Fine appeal. All classes, town of 1,312. Admission 10-20. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

IDLE TONGUES. (5,447 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. A fairly good program picture that will please the average movie goer. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 75 per cent. Industrial class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

IF I MARRY AGAIN. (7,401 feet). Star cast. I saw this picture some time ago. I considered it one of the most wonderful dramas I had ever seen. So I bought it at the first opportunity. First night's business was ordinary. The second night doubled the first. The reports on it were all good. Bosworth and Frank Mayo were extra good. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

I WANT MY MAN. Star, Milton Sills. You can't buy a better one anywhere. Ran "Sally" last week and broke my record, but this one almost drew as well and I believe it pleased everyone. Many came from surrounding towns. It will pay you to advertise it heavily and use trailer. Would class this among very best. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

JUST A WOMAN. Star, Conway Tearle. Good picture and pleased the majority. Some exhibitors said First National did not have the picture this year. You're badly wrong, boys. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats)(Sandersville, Georgia.

MADONNA OF THE STREET. (7,507 feet). Star, Nazimova. This is inclined to be drawn and exaggerated, although Nazimova and Sills do some wonderful acting. The picture did not please here. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. All classes, city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

MAKING OF O'MALLEY. Star, Milton Sills. For his first starring vehicle this is good. It will please all who see it and I think you'll be surprised at the many friends Sills has. He should have been starred long ago. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, 95 per cent. Industrial class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats). Hazard, Kentucky.

MAKING OF O'MALLEY. Star, Milton Sills. If they give Sills this sort in the future he is made for sure. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. All classes, town of 9,000. Admission 15-30. R. J. MeLeon, Palace Theatre (225 seats), Washington Court House, Ohio.

QUO VADIS. Star, Emil Jannings. Best foreign made picture in months. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, 90 per cent. R. J. McLeon, Palace Theatre, Washington Court House, Ohio.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. "Sally" drags for the first reel or two, but after that it picks up and turns out to be an extra good comedy drama. It is far above the ordinary, but it has not the box office attraction of "Flaming Youth." Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. The prize picture of them all. Anything from Coleen is well received here. This is by far the best she has ever done. As stated before, Coleen is most popular by far of all actresses here with exception possibly of Norma Talmadge, but I can't pay the price for her pictures, therefore haven't run one in long time. For real delightful entertainment Sally surely can't be beaten. R. L. Lowell, Idle Hour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SELF MADE FAILURE. (8 reels). Star cast. Good one day comedy drama for the small towns. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

SILENT WATCHER. (7,576 feet). Star, Glen Hunter. This was a fairly good, interesting picture which attracted the usual business for Saturday. However, I do not consider it the type of picture for that day. I heard no kicks registered so therefore must consider they were satisfied. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, No. Appeal, 70 per cent. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SILENT WATCHER. (7,576 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Another of First National's slow moving "dramas." Some wonderful acting in this production by Glenn Hunter, but had several walkouts. Patrons nowadays want more action and less sentimentality. First National has been grinding out quite a few slow moving, long drawn out pictures lately, consequently the brand doesn't draw like it used to. Tone, fair. Sunday, maybe. Special, no. Fair appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TALKER. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Just another program picture and not up to the standard of Stone's recent releases. Don't go after this one too much. It isn't there. Special, no. Appeal, 75 per cent. Industrial class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

TARNISH. (6,821 feet). Star cast. Good picture. A little above program schedule. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

THIEF IN PARADISE. (7,251 feet). Star cast. First National scored a big bet on this one. You couldn't ask for a better picture I am sure. Pleased every single one and business was very good. The cast is perfect. Don't hesitate a minute to boost this one to the sky, for it will please anywhere. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre, Monroe Georgia.

THIEF IN PARADISE (7,231 feet). Star cast. Best picture shown here this year and had many tell us so. Bought right. Boost it and don't be afraid to. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes. Admission 10-25-35. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

VOICE OF THE MINARET. Star, Norma Talmadge. An excellent picture in every way. You do not need to be afraid of this one. Tone, none better. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. Town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission, 15-25. O. G. Odell Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. (8 reels). Star, Helene Chadwick. This proved a real surprise, as it pleased the majority. Fine comedy drama of to-day. A title that will have your patrons talking. This picture caused a row between a man and his wife who attended the theatre. They differed in technicalities as to "Why Men Leave Home." Splendid program picture. Tone, very good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Good appeal. Mining class, town of 150. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glen Alum, West Virginia.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

While I was away—

A card arrived, announcing that our good friend, L. O. Davis, Virginia and other theatres, Hazard, Kentucky, had acquired a bouncing baby boy, "a booster for the World twenty-five years from now," says L. O. "Our Gang" will join me in wishing L. O. lots of prosperity so that the boy can grow up to step in and help him run a big chain of houses.

Also there came fine letters from Ed. Malhiot, up in Canada—from Guy Sawyer, in Vermont—from E. N. Prescott, of Union, Maine.

These will be printed soon; have not time to get them into type for this issue, but when they appear you will be glad to read them.

All set for a big boost in the tips, now, folks. Shoot 'em in as quick as you get your houses open or hit home after you've had your vacation.

Let's make it a Greater Reports Season.

VAN.

Fox

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A good western and Jones is very good. This picture drew remarks from my people. Some were good and others not good, but on the whole it did very good for me. He is not well known here. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star cast. If your audience likes lots of action this one has it. The automobile racing is fine. Advertise this strong. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, 80 per cent. Farming and lumber class, town of 450. Admission 10-20-25. C. E. Dellinger, Doric Theatre (240 seats), Wardesville, West Virginia.

DANCERS. (6,656 feet). Star, George O'Brien. This show was liked by a majority. Played to satisfactory business. Believe O'Brien is a comer. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

FOLLY OF VANITY. Star cast. A fair program picture that flopped. Fifty saw it first night and twenty-five pleased. Can't do anything with Fox pictures. R. L. Nowell, Idle Hour Theatre, Monroe, Georga.

GERALD CRANSTON'S LADY. Star cast. The title hurt attendance. Of all the bad titles I have seen I believe this is the worst. The picture itself is very entertaining and pleased all who saw it. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

GOLD AND THE GIRL. Star, Buck Jones. Played this picture two days to big business. Picture liked by all. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

HONOR AMONG MEN. Star, Edmund Lowe. No good and registered so at the box office. Not as good as John Gilbert's productions. Tone, fair. Possible for Sunday. Special, No. Appeal, 40 per cent. Farming and lumber class, town of 450. Admission 10-20-25. C. E. Dellinger, Doric Theatre (240 seats), Wardesville, West Virginia.

HUNTED WOMAN. Star cast. Three days to good business. Picture was a fair show. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

IN LOVE WITH LOVE. Star cast. Oh what a lemon. It might get by in a larger place, but not in a small town. This is one of Fox's so-called specials and get a special price for it. Say, if this is a special other producers could call their regular program pictures specials and super-specials. Tone good, as there is nothing to it. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No appeal. Town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

IT IS THE LAW. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Good picture of its kind. Did not do any business. Doing business on pictures is a thing of the past. Sunday, no. Special, no. All classes, town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

MARRIAGE IN TRANSIT. Star, Edmund Lowe. A very good program picture and Lowe made a lot of friends here in this one. Real snappy five-reeler. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes, city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhoit, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

OH YOU TONY. (6,802 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Not up to Mix's standard. Not the kind of story for Mix. However, Tom and Tony pull them in. Tony is a wonder horse. Farm and lumber class, town of 450. Admission 10-20-25. C. E. Dellinger, Doric Theatre (240 seats), Wardesville, North Virginia.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Personally thought this was a good special, but most of my patrons did not think so. Only ran one day, but my opinion is that it should go two days in the smaller towns. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

VAGABOND TRAIL. (4,502 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A fair program picture that somehow failed to hold up at the box office. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WARRENS OF VIRGINIA. (6,000 feet). Star cast. An excellent Civil War picture. Business was better than usual. Where pictures of this nature are popular it should prove an excellent box office attraction. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. National Theatre (430 seats). Graham, Texas.

Metro-Goldwyn

DENIAL. Star, Claire Windsor. Press sheeted by the producers as "A stirring drama of the Spanish American war" but it was anything but that. I invited the Spanish American war veterans who were in Convention near here, to attend this and felt very foolish at this misrepresentation. Oh, h—l! Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Fort Orchard, Washington.

EAGLE'S FEATHER. (6,500 ft.) Star cast. A mighty good action picture that will please your western fans. Action and comedy fine, but some patrons said, Kirkwood should have given Lester Cuneo, and Siegman, a good beating to make it one hundred percent. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Mining class town of 150.

Admission 15-25. John Cleva Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glen Alum, West Virginia.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 ft.) Star, Alice Terry. Received many favorable comments upon this one, and no kicks. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Very good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 ft.) Star cast. Pleased all who saw it. Some thought it extra fine production. Personally I can't see material enough for a production. Special, no. Good appeal. All kinds town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

LADY OF THE NIGHT. (5,441 ft.) Star, Norma Shearer. Rather a thin story but Norma puts it over. Just a nice program for a good clientele. Drew fair business. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

RED LILY. (6,975 ft.) Star, Ramon Navarro. Patrons didn't like this. Poor business. I guess they thought it was another Apache story and stayed away. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

SINNERS IN SILK. (5,750 ft.) Star cast. Was disappointed in this one. Not many liked it. It's not up to Metro's standard. Don't promise very much and you will get over it. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

UNINVITED GUEST. Star cast. Good picture, business poor. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

YOLANDA. (10,125 ft.) Star, Marion Davies. A good costume picture but my people do not care for costume and so I did not do so well. Marion Davies does some splendid work. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. No appeal. Al classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats,) Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

Paramount

ADVENTURE. Star, Tom Moore. This is another good one and for me it was a change. My people liked it very much and in spite of extremely hot weather it held up good. Of course Jack London as the author was an attraction. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats,) Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

ALASKAN. (6,736 ft.) Star, Thomas Meighan. Fine picture of "Alaska." Meighan is well liked here and goes fine. Story "The Alaskan" being read by everyone helps at the box office. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five percent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats,) Loyalton, South Dakota.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 ft.) Star, Ray Griffith. Delighted rather small crowds but established Griffith as a comedian of promise. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats,) Jonesboro, Arkansas.

CHARMER. (6,076 ft.) Star, Pola Negri. Good picture did not draw well. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777 ft.) Star, Constance Bennett. A good western that should appeal to any western picture audience. The author is the appeal to this as a western as the stars do not. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats,) Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,771 ft.) Star cast. This is a very pleasing picture. Several reported it extra good, but at the box office it proved to be the weakest of the Zane Greys. The fire scenes in natural colors are something to rave about. They are beautiful. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Fair appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

Error Creeps In

H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre, Galt, California, writes regarding a report published over his name on "Monsieur Beaucaire."—

"It is all wrong; you have put my name to some one else's report, as I have never played 'Monsieur Beaucaire' but have it booked for showing in the near future, but as I am getting it for a fair price I don't want my name below that report."

Sorry as I can be. Old reports have been filed away and I haven't been able, so far, to locate the original report slip on which the tip came in, so I can only apologize now and ask you folks to let me know which one of you sent in a tip on "Beaucaire" that began: "Fine story, photography, acting and sets."—etc.

COMING THROUGH. (6,522 ft.) Star, Thomas Meighan. I have had to stop raising my prices on the Meighans. So I ran this one as an ordinary program picture. It went over fine. Did a nice business and pleased those who saw it. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats,) Graham, Texas.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 ft.) Star cast. Good picture above program schedule but not a special. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California

FEMALE. (6,176 ft.) Star, Betty Compson. This picture didn't appeal to people here and thought it Miss Compson's poorest picture. Business was also off. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels.) Star, Pola Negri. A sensuous treatment of an objectionable theme that Mr. Hays should have prevented distribution of. Tone, rotten. Sunday, no Special, no. No appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats,) Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GARDEN OF WEEDS. (6,250 ft.) Star, Betty Compson. Good picture. Good program offering worth seeing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California

MADAME SANS GENE. Star, Gloria Swanson. Had the director of this picture attempted to make the worse possible box office attraction for this town he couldn't have made a better job of it. Very few came out to see it and half of them walked out before the picture ended. Just another of those d——foreign pictures; they said. At one time Gloria was a box office attraction here but now she is fast going the way of Pola Negri. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 ft.) Star, Glenn Hunter. This was a very pleasing picture, furnished in settlement of the very poor physical condition of "Wanderer of the Wasteland." Drew fairly well and pleased most of those who came. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 1,312. Admission 10-20. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 ft.) Star, Bebe Daniels. This picture failed to please people here and also played to poor business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 ft.) Star, Bebe Daniels. A fine comedy that pleased one hundred percent. One of Paramount's best. Raymond Griffith is a real comedian. Don't be afraid to tell them about it. It's fine entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

NIGHT CLUB. Star, Raymond Griffith. Good entertainment but cannot see why the title comes in except at the introduction of the picture. Griffith is gaining popularity. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats,) Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

OLD HOME WEEK. Star, Thomas Meighan. A fair program picture. It is not up to the Meighan standard but you can get by with it if you are careful in buying. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats,) Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 ft.) Star cast. Stood up well under a heavy campaign and registered good draw at box office. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats,) Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TOO MANY KISSES. (6,750 ft.) Star, Richard Dix. A clever comedy that pleased our patrons very much. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats,) Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 ft.) Star, James Kirkwood. A good program picture with stirring situations. The flood scene is one of the best I have ever seen on the screen. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five percent. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (659 seats,) Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

TO THE LAST MAN. (6,965 ft.) Star, Richard Dix. Good acting and good story. You can boost this one to the limit. My patrons complimented great on this one. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Farming and lumber class town of 450. Admission 10-20-25. C. E. Dellinger, Doric Theatre (240 seats,) Wardesville, West Virginia.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. Star cast. Greatest picture ever produced at last. In a class by itself. Wonderful. Pulled full houses five days in a dead town in middle of July. A record. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats,) Decorah, Iowa.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 ft.) Star, Gloria Swanson. Pleased the women very much and drew better than any recent offering. Tone, okay, Sunday, yes. Special, yes. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats,) Jonesboro, Arkansas.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 ft.) Star, Jack Holt. This picture might be fair if all the film could be shown. This was absolutely the poorest print I ever tried to run. Booked it for 3rd and 4th of July, expecting the first night to advertise it for second. It did, business fell over fifty percent the second night, and that too on a holiday. Just sixty-six misframes in the print. All classes town of 1,312. Admission 10-20. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats,) Thornton, Arkansas.

Pathe

GIRL SHY. (7,457 ft.) Star, Harold Lloyd. Fine. Keeps them on their toes. Nice clean comedy all the way through. Lloyd is about the best drawing card I have here so why shouldn't I boost him. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Great appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats,) Galt, California.

HOT WATER. (5,000 ft.) Star, Harold Lloyd. Not as good as some of his previous pictures, but they all can't be best and this one gave satisfaction to good business, why worry them. Farmers and merchants town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats,) Greenville, Alabama.

Principal

HELEN'S BABIES. (Principal Pictures). Star, Baby Peggy. Picture was only fair. Box office the same. People didn't seem to like the paper. Had no comments. No one knocked it, no one praised it. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

HOUSE OF YOUTH. (6,050 ft.) Star, Jacqueline Logan. An average program feature which failed to attract average business for me on a two day run. This Producers Distributing Corporation certainly has the pictures with titles which makes them stay home and listen in for WGY or KDKA. Tone, average. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats,) Emporium, Pennsylvania.

MIRAGE. Star, Florence Vidor. Nothing to rave about. Failed miserably at the box office to attract enough to pay film rental, small town guys lay off this one. Two days to less than average business. No tone. Sunday, no. Not a special. No appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats,) Emporium, Pennsylvania.

RAMSHACKLE HOUSE. (6 reels.) Star, Betty Compson. Fine picture in Florida Everglades. Exciting and very interesting picture. Fine acting. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats,) Loyalton, South Dakota.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. Ran on Wednesday to pretty good crowd. Carey always gives good ones. Would make a good Saturday picture for western fans. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. A good picture but lacked the drawing power of Carey's westerns. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five percent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats,) Havana, Illinois.

TROUPING WITH ELLEN. (6,462 ft.) Star, Helene Chadwick. Don't need to be afraid of this. Neat little show. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats,) Decorah, Iowa.

Universal

CHAPTER IN HER LIFE. Star cast. This picture was not liked here. Was too slow. Sob sister stuff too obvious and the story weak. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

DARING CHANCES. Star, Jack Hoxie. Fine picture, good western. Business rotten. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

DON DARE DEVIL. Star, Jack Hoxie. This is a fair Hoxie western and not what he has been making as he has made better pictures than this. Lots of action. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (185 seats,) Piqua, Ohio.

MERRY GO ROUND. (9,175 ft.) Star cast. Gets attention of seventy-five percent. Business rotten. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 ft). Star cast. Very good picture not a special just good program. Tone, okay, Sunday, yes. All classes town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

STORM DAUGHTER. (5,302 ft.) Star, Priscilla Dean. Seems that Priscilla Dean is coming back. This picture did a nice business and was generally liked. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TURMOIL. (7 reels). Star, Eleanor Boardman. A very good society picture. Miss Boardman takes her part in a very pleasing manner. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. J. M. Blanchard, Lone Rock, Kossuth County, Iowa.

UNIVERSAL PICTURES. Fellow exhibitors, if you are down and out sign Universal's complete service contract Stand by the distributor that is giving you a chance. Universal has the pictures. Farming and lumber class town of 450. Admission 10-20-25. C. E. Dellinger, Doric Theatre (240 seats,) Wardesville, West Virginia.

WINE. (6,220 ft.) Star, Clara Bow. Never knew of Gasnier directing a poor picture. He always puts the stuff in them but this picture was badly named for us and meant nothing at the box office. Our box office suffered for two nights and we lost money. Jewel meant nothing at our house. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats,) Havana, Illinois.

Vitagraph

HAPPY WARRIOR. Star cast. A very good program picture. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

ONE LAW FOR THE WOMAN. (6 reels). Star, Cullen Landis. Just fair to me. I was disappointed as most reports led me to expect something better some way. The flood scenes did not look real. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

REDEMING SIN. (6,227 feet). Star, Nazimova. We expected this to be a knockout, but some didn't care for the show at all while others praised it. Special no. Farmers and merchants town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

REDEEMING SIN. (6,227 feet). Star, Nazimova. All her pictures are alike, will do for anybody that likes her style of acting. Nothing much to it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

STEELE OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. Star cast. Just another Curwood story. If it can be bought right why not run it. Has lots of action and a fair cast. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, good. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

TWO SHALL BE BORN. (6 reels). Star cast. Different from the regular run of dramas, but very good and at a price that a small exhibitor can pay. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Mining class town of 160. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glen Alum, West Virginia.

Warner Brothers

LITTLE JOHNNY JONES. (6 reels). Star cast. Good program picture as you would want to run. Pleased all who saw it. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

ON THIN ICE. Star, Tom Moore. Hot weather so did not pull. Pleased those who came. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

Comedies

CRUSHED. (Educational.) Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Another Hamilton comedy that brought shrieks of laughter from our audiences. This had some new stunts in it that registered great. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Good appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DIRTY HANDS. (Educational.) This was fair. It did not bring very many laughs. The dogs were well trained in this one. A few good gags at spots brought some laughs. Tone, okay. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DIVING FOOL. (Fox). Just a fair comedy with a few laughter provoking repetitions. Can't brag on this, though, as it wasn't up to the usual Fox standard. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Weak appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FAMILY LIFE. (Educational). Good comedy. Gets lots of laughs. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Georgia.

GOOD SPIRITS. (Educational). Star, Walter Hiers. This one was better than his last one. A few good laughs in it. Walter does not take very good in this house for some reason or other. Tone, good. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HALFBACK OF NOTRE DOME. (Pathe). As good a comedy as I ever saw. Plenty of laughs and impossible stunts. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

HORSESHOES. (Vitagraph). Star, Larry

Semon. Very good slapstick comedy. I seldom get a Semon comedy that fails to please. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

KING COTTON. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Lloyd Hamilton in an action comedy. That's what we've been howling for all the time. From the opening scene to the final fade-out this comedy was a scream. Southern exhibitors and patrons will go wild over this one. A very realistic cotton picking scene starts off the show and Lloyd begins to do his stuff. You should have heard them roar. Oh, Lloyd, give us more like this one. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Almost a special. Appeal, one hundred per cent. comedy. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SIT TIGHT. (Educational). Star, Jimmie Adams. Jimmie Adams in a fast moving story with a good deal of action but for some reason there were not many laughs. Probably the reckless motorcycle riding had them too thrilled to laugh. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHY WORRY. (Universal). Star, Wanda Wiley. Not a laugh in it. One exhibitor near here says they are the best two reel dramas he has seen. I am beginning to think he is about right. The girl is good looking, and is a pretty good comedy actress, but her comedies are the worst things I have seen in a long time. Out of the present group (which will be my last). I have found one good one and one fair one. The rest have not been worth express charges to me. Given a director, a comedy story and some support I believe Wanda would be a favorite. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Serials

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Good serial, gets attention. W. D. LaFerry, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Gorgia.

Short Subjects

BRAINS AND BRAWN. (Pathe Sportlight). Very good interesting single reel educational. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

STEREOSCOPICS. (Zowie). (Pathe). This novelty drew many to see what it was like, and then they told the others and brought them out to show them the second night. Very novel and drew well. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. All classes town of 1,312. Admission 10-20. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

Independents

BROAD ROAD. (State Right). Star, May Allison. A fair program picture that seemed to satisfy everybody. City of 110,00. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

COWBOY PRINCE. (Arrow). Star cast. A fair western picture, and nothing to get excited about. Will do for anybody that likes western pictures. Tone, good. Snuday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

DUPED. (Independent). Star, William Desmond. Time for Helen to retire. Patrons don't want her for heroine. Picture weak and director J. P. McGowan (who also loves to "act") didn't put his customary pep in this one. James Thompson, as the tramp, stole the picture and his every appearance was greeted with laughter. This is the last of the Holmes Desmond pictures, thank goodness. Boys, watch out for the six sheet as it is misleading. Nothing like it in the picture. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Weak appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FOOLISH VIRGIN. (State Right). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. Was here considered good picture and did a fair business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HARBOR PATROL. (State Right). Star, Al Ferguson. A little program picture that did surprisingly nice business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HEARTS OF THE WEST. (State Right). Star, Lester Cuneo. A fair program picture that played to fair business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

I AM THE MAN. (Chadwick). Star, Lionel Barrymore. A dandy program picture and Barrymore made more friends here. The acting was good and my patrons liked it very much. The title is weak. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

LIGHTNING ROMANCE. (State Right). Star, Reed Howes. Was nothing like as good as we expected from this star. Only pleased a few, but the Fox special, Reed Howes played in was a knockout. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

MIDNIGHT GIRL. Star, Lila Lee. Pretty fair program picture but the first reel contains the filthiest title and scene I ever saw in a picture. Cut it out before showing. Tone, doubtful. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

MARRIAGE MARKET. Star cast. Pulled fair crowd one day and all spoke well of it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

MY NEIGHBOR'S WIFE (Davis Distributing Division). Star cast. Splendid example of "story-within-a-story" type of picture. In general it's very well done. It's especially good in character drawing and suspense which I've always maintained are the two most important mental elements in a screen drama. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Sunday, yes. Special, no. A. S. Rittenberg, Fulton Theatre (1,800 seats), Jersey City, New Jersey.

SURE FIRE FLINT. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. This picture was well liked by all. Many favorable comments and no kicks. Hines is fast becoming a favorite. Tone, good. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 1,312. Admission 10-20. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

TAINTED MONEY. (State Right). Star, Eva Novak. Eva Novak supported by William Fairbanks but it is not much of a picture. Story drags too much. Has some action. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (185 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

WALLOPING WALLACE. (Enterprise). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Good western with lots of action. A new star here but they seemed to like him. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

WESTERN PROMISE. (State Right). Star, Lester Cuneo. Rotten. Nothing to it. Some of these Lester Cuneo pictures have been fair westerns of the cheap variety but there was nothing to this one. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

ZEEBRUGE. (State Right). Here is a picture that all exhibitors should run. The detail is good and shows clearly what actually took place. A sailor who took part in the fight declared it true to the occasion. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats), Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Discouraged One Tent Show Invasion With Special Cash Discount Tickets

WITH the exception of a very few states with drastic state legislation, one of the most vicious forms of summer opposition is the traveling tent show. This does not so much apply to the large circuses as to the carnivals, repertoire and medicine shows that come along and stick around for a week or longer.

These shows are under comparatively small expense. Salaries are small, the license fee seldom what it should be, and the lot rental is but a trifle compared with the cost of a regular theatre building. Many of these shows cost less to run than a second rate film show, and yet they do an enormous business, in proportion to the town.

Generally the manager of the local house, who has a permanent local investment, has to stand idly by and watch his customers flock to fill the coffers of the visiting pirate.

McCormick's Idea

Last year a repertoire company came into Canon City, Col., and stayed for two weeks, drawing considerable money from the Jones Theatre, now managed by C. P. McCormick, in conjunction with the Liberty and Rialto theatres, of Florence.

This year the same show pitched in a nearby town and found business so good that it stayed a second week. Canon City was next on the list.

But this time McCormick was on the job, having taken over the house through the winter. He is far too good a showman to fight competition with abuse. He knows that will serve only to make sympathy for the competitor.

He figured that the better way would be to make the visitor manager plumb sick of the town, and there is just one way to do that—cut into his receipts.

Spoiling the Fun

He figured that if the tenters had a poor opening, they might not be so enthusiastic as they were the previous year about a second week. He figured, too, that if he could keep the people away there would be less verbal advertising: fewer persons to go out and praise up the show. And if he could get them over to his house, he would get that verbal advertising.

His regular admission is a quarter. He flooded the town with rebate tickets, sending a pair to each R. F. D. box number. His ticket will not reproduce, because it is on green stock, but the copy runs:

> This is your money saving coupon. Present this at Jones' Theatre, Ticket Window, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday Nights, June 15, 16, 17, 18 and get all your Adult Tickets for 10c each; Children's, 5c each. Without this coupon you pay regular prices.
> This Coupon good for 4 nights. Keep it! Use It!

Limited to Four

It will be noted that this ticket is limited to the first four nights of the week. It also specifies that the ticket is necessary to secure the rebate. As a matter of fact there were about 25 full price tickets sold the opening night to those who for some reason had not obtained a rebate ticket.

Mr. McCormick made it a rebate instead of a straight reduction because he figured that people would argue that if he could sell the show for a dime one week, he should be able to make the same price the next. But a rebate was practically a gift, and he could not be expected to hand out presents every week.

How It Worked

With a straight program feature, he played to $40 more cash on Monday than for the similar week the year before. He played to more business on the week than the corresponding week last June.

And by Wednesday the tent show was advertising "One week only."

Sunday morning it left town with the mental note that Canon City was not as good a stand as it used to be. And the following week no one complained that the price was still, (and not "again,") a quarter to see the Jones show.

Other Stunts

Mr. McCormick knows from long experience that it pays to be generous. Every year he lets the local paper run a rebate coupon. This year he ran it for twelve consecutive Mondays. He made better than usual money and at the same time he drew back a lot of people who had dropped away. They came in on the ten cent charge and came back to pay a quarter on other nights, having revived their interest in the pictures.

Mr. McCormick gives his kid matinees on Monday afternoons instead of Saturday morning. He offers the same program he does in the evening, but makes certain that the entire program is suitable for children, saving the "sensations" for other nights when he uses them.

The last Monday of each month of the school year he personally visits each grade school and presents passes to all children who have attained a mark of 85 or better.

When a competitor sought to have this practise discontinued by the School Board the entire teaching staff rose up in protest, declaring that the incentive of the pass had materially improved the standard of scholarship.

Plays to the Children

And Mr. McCormick knows that it does, for frequently some child will stop him on the street to assure him that he will get a pass "next month."

And the odd part is that while this represents a free ticket to a majority of the pupils, his cash takings on that matinee are better than at any of the other three in the month.

And not only that, but Mr. McCormick knows from the comments of the parents that they appreciate what he is doing to induce the children to work hard at their studies. It has created a good will that is of incalculable value.

And it has stood the test of eight years of use.

Laugh that off.

Nighted It

Pat Argust figured that the quicker he got them talking about Paths to Paradise the sooner he would start to fill the Rialto Theatre, Colorado Springs, so he worked the midnight matinee the evening before the announced opening.

A Paramount Release

HIGH HATTING RAYMOND GRIFFITH WAS AN AID TO GOOD BUSINESS IN AUGUSTA, GA.

Fifteen cutout silk hats for the star name was the way Frank J. Miller put over the star at the Modjeska Theatre. This was worked on Paths to Paradise, but it can be worked for any title and would be good if made permanent for Griffith stories. Show them the hats and they will know they will see a snappy play. Cardboard hats would be better than cutouts.

Ties Iron Horse to Canadian Road

Adding a picture of The Countess of Dufferin, the Canadian Pacific's first locomotive, to six stills from The Iron Horse, has given the Fox picture a special one sheet in every station between the two oceans, not to mention the various city ticket offices.

THE SPECIAL ONE SHEET

As the C. P. covers virtually every important town in Canada, the value of the stunt to Canadian exhibitors can be appreciated.

Sold in a Bunch

Having booked the Fox product for this season, the Grombacher theatres took large space in which to advertise the fact in a reading story, mentioning the chief titles by name, feeling that as these specials come along they will be easier since the amusement public already is waiting for them.

It's a good idea for any block of bookings at this time of year, and makes is easier to sell off the individual titles later on.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Greater Movie Season was auspiciously ushered in with the screen version of John Golden's big stage success, 'Lightnin,' as the feature photoplay attraction, accompanying which were four musical presentations and the Topical Review. The whole show ran 2 hours and 5 minutes, of which time "Lightnin'" took up 1 hour and 26 minutes, and as 8 minutes were required for the Topical Review, there was a period of 31 minutes of musical numbers.

The overture was Flotow's Martha. This was lighted as follows: two medium eryth Mestrum floods on the orchestra from dome; foots and borders in blue; purple spangled draw curtains closed across the production stage, with green foots and flooded by 4 arch spots also of medium eryth. Overhead spots of steel blue on vases and decorations in windows at either side. Six minutes for the overture.

Following the overture came a three-minute xylophone solo number, a special arrangement of Nola, by Harry Breuer, the popular xylophonist of the orchestra. All lighting remained the same as in the overture with the exception of one flood on the orchestra, which changed to a spot on Breuer.

The premiere danseuse and six members of the ballet corps were presented in "Dance Divertissements," composed of two dances. The first, the Scarf Dance, by Chaminade. For this, the front gauze covering the production stage was used, which was backed up by an electrical effect from Kliegl. Ten feet back of this were antique gold draw curtains flooded with various colors. The lights: two overhead light blue spots; and purple and magenta from the sides. The second part of this number was The Swan, by Saint Saens by the premiere danseuse in white ballet costume in front of a black cyclorama. Light blue spots from the sides and overhead were the means of lighting. Six minutes for this ballet number.

After the Mark Strand Topical Review came the final stage number preceding the photoplay, 'Lightnin.' Neapolitan Songs and Dances required 14 minutes and included 7 numbers. The setting consisted of an Italian drop with gondola, balustrade, lanterns strung in carnival style, cloud effects, and water ripple on back drop; two stone benches on stage. The artists were attired in Italian costume. The ballet which appeared in the earlier presentation also participated in this offering. There was a complete change of lighting with each number. A Frangesa by the Ensemble; Toselli's Serenade by a soprano; Mari Mari by a baritone; Addio Napoli, a contralto-basso duet; Tarantella by the ballet corps; O Sole Mio, by a tenor; and Funiculi Funicula as the finale were presented in the order mentioned.

In Two Parts

There was a double angle to a herald recently gotten out by H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala. It was a four pager on good grade buff paper, printed in dark blue. The outside was printed up "Two new and immensely interesting accomplishments." The two were Quo Vadis and a new rug dye, each getting one of the inside pages.

The dye people took up part of the cost of the folder and saw to the distribution of 2,000 of them. It was a real help to business.

Everyone Talked

Not only did Oscar White get the Better Films Committee and the Rotary Club of Greenwood, S. C., to talk about Charley's Aunt at the Liberty Theatre, but he got the ministers to mention the attraction at various church gatherings, telling their congregations that there was plenty of clean fun in the feature.

His black cats were not vocal, but they had red tissue mouths illuminated by electric lamps, and they got almost as much attention and as much business.

TWO STUNTS ON THE SEA HAWK FROM FRANCE; A THEATRE FRONT AND A SPECIAL SHOWING

The front is that of the Cameo Theatre, Paris, where the design is worked both above and below the house sign. The other picture shows the deck of the battleship Province, flagship of the French Mediterranean fleet, with the screen rigged for a showing of the picture to the staff and crew, including Admiral Dumesnil, in the harbor of Toulon. Of course this was news and was used as such.

A NICE COOL LOBBY ON INTRODUCE ME FROM BIRMINGHAM

D. Roscoe Faunce framed this for the Strand Theatre on Doug McLean, with Doug and the bear on the mountain top and icicles all over the frames. That's not saying that the picture was a frost. Quite the reverse was the case.

Newark Reports on First Wow Contest

The first report on The Heart of a Siren Wow contest is made from Newark, where the Cranford Theatre collaborated with the Star-Eagle in putting over a contest for the best definition of the word coined in vaudeville to express a sublimated hit.

The winners of the local contest are automatically entered in the national contest, which closes December 31, and the winning definition will be incorporated into the Dictionary of Slang to be published by E. P. Dutton & Co.

The local management provides a small cash prize (in this instance $25), and Duttons gives a thesaurus for second prize. Other ticket prizes may be added at will. It is chiefly valuable as a circulation scheme for newspapers, and also gives good reading matter when the definitions are cleverly done.

The Star-Eagle not only gave much front and inside page space, but it posted its fleet of eleven delivery trucks, which cover practically the entire city, and it brought an unusual business to the Branford on The Heart of a Siren, which was a local wow.

The winning definition was "Something unexpected, unrivalled or extraordinary, that prompts a spontaneous outburst of enthusiastic approval." Fifteen definitions were printed each day for a week in advance and through the showing, which is a lot of space for $25.

Paid to Advertise

For several days before he began his regular campaign, Rodney Bush, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., used the lost and found section of the classified ads to announce: "LOST—A WIFE. If found please return to the Galax Theatre."

He received about 200 telephone calls, not all of which were intended to be humorous, and he had his public all ready for the formal announcement of the picture.

Icicle Lobby is a Seller for McLean

D. Roscoe Faunce strongly influenced the sale of tickets to Introduce Me at the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., with a "cold" lobby that lined them up at the box office.

The centrepiece was a section of the Alps with Doug and the Bear doing their stuff in cartoon style, as suggested by the press book cuts. A panel was blanked to let in some stills. The panel was a dark blue, contrasting nicely with the white and green-blue of the ice, and was illuminated by hidden lights.

Concealed illumination also served the lobby side frames, which also were covered with painted ice, and more icicles hung pendant from the ceiling. It cooled you off just to look at it.

He also used a Limerick contest with ten pairs of seats for the best last line. This was made into a throwaway instead of being sold off to a newspaper, and 3,000 were put out. More than half came back, which is an unusually good response.

You'll Like This

If you have booked Play Ball, you'll be interested in the put-over used by Lee Harvey, of the Orient Theatre, Philadelphia.

He got out a circular cutout, printed up as a baseball on both sides, and used different copy for the serial on each side, calling the sections "innings" instead of "chapters."

Some 5,000 of these were distributed at the "twilight" games in the neighborhood, where they would do more good than if thrown out at Shibe park.

Perhaps you can arrange for the cutouts, and cut your costs. The address is 62nd St. and Woodland.

Had a Sample

Sale by sample seems to be popular. When Charles R. Hammerslough, of the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, N. Y., sent a young woman around town in an automobile with a liveried chauffeur and a page boy, banners announced that it was The Little French Girl, just arrived from Paris to appear at the Broadway. The sign was in both French and English.

HOW THE NEWARK STAR-EAGLE TOOK UP THE HEART OF A SIREN WOW CONTEST

Working with the Branford Theatre, the newspaper gave front page stories for fourteen successive days, and devoted considerable inside space to the various definitions. The theatre gave a prize of $25 in cash and a Dutton's Thesaurus. The winners are automatically entered in the national contest being conducted by the publishers and First National.

Has Special Strip For Bernie's Band

To collect on the engagement of Ben Bernie at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, Ed Olmstead, the publicity acquirer, got out a special slip about 14 by 27 inches to tie up with the Vocalion records. These were sent to all Vocalion dealers in and near New York for window display, and most of them were used, because it advertised the records and roused greater interest in them, since most purchasers are more interested in the records of the bands they have heard play or can go to hear.

THE RIVOLI POSTER

The poster is an attractive issue with the orchestra in light blue and white against a black ground. The main lettering is orange for the leader and the house name in white and light blue. It is striking, yet sufficiently restrained to get into the better class windows.

Preparing the Way

Getting his patrons ready for the regular advertising, Warren Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., started off several days in advance with scatter two twos reading: "Are Parents People? You'll know Sunday."

Then he built up on that with about a thousand hand-written postals with merely the title and "I.T." for Imperial Theatre. The stunt paid a nice profit.

A Fox Release

A LOBBY DISPLAY THAT COST $4.90 BUT LOOKS A LOT MORE

This was planned by J. Bonner Sams, manager of the Auditorium Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C., and George Higgins, his publicity grabber. They credit the horseshoes with the luck they have had. More credit should go to the ingenious log effect.

Got the Sports

Herschel Stuart had The Night Club at the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, the week of the Stecher-Zybysco hugging match, sometimes referred to as wrestling.

He figured that the title should appeal to the sports, and that he would have a lot of sports to work on, so he arranged to send over some kids with 50,000 heralds and a lot of those who accepted the invitation declared Griffith to be much funnier than the wrestlers.

Edgar Hart Helped The Manicure Girl

Free manicures between four and six for three afternoons was one of the stunts used by Edgar Hart to put over The Manicure Girl at the Colonial Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H.

He talked the leading local shop into setting up a booth in the lobby and providing an expert operator two hours each day. Of course there was plenty of advertising for the shop, and you could get a manicure there any old time. The stunt was worked on Friday and Saturday before the Monday opening, and on Monday itself.

He also got 3000 samples of a new face powder from a Boston concern, the latter printing up a special envelope with the house advertisement, and supplying a girl to take care of the distribution. It cost nothing and was a real novelty in the town.

Then he arranged for a wire from the star; rather a chatty affair referring to the fact that the last time they had met she was touring her home state of Texas and he was running the Palace at El Paso. It also praised the cooperation of the local manicure parlor, and that gave for more local interest.

With a fine drug store window on manicure articles, he got a fine showing and large business.

IT MAY BE OLD BUT IT STILL IS A GOOD SUMMER BET

Frank J. Miller used this front on the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga. It depended upon its bigness for most of its appeal, but Buster's eyes were motorized like a fire department and rolled and rolled until it rolled the patron in.

New in Sumter

Because it was a new idea in Sumter, S. C., the man who laughed himself sick was a knockout when John Hammon worked it on Charley's Aunt at the Rex Theatre.

He worked it in a clothing store window, with a dummy in bed and the announcement card on the foot of the bed.

There is a lot of stuff that sounds old to you because you have read about it so often, but it is new to your patrons? If it is, it's good.

ONE OF THE SHARES

Nicely printed in green and black, only the border and the seal being in the latter color, this made a sightly herald that not only sold the picture, but gave emphasis to the cooling system used by the theatre. The reproduction is rather small but you can get some idea of the exceedingly nice job the printer turned out.

Church Used Cut on Ten Commandments

When C. T. Perrin, of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Col., ran The Ten Commandments, two churches announced The Commandments as the text for sermons and one church, the First Presbyterian, borrowed a cut from the theatre with which to illustrate its advertisement. All of the advertisements were run on the same page by arrangement with the publisher, and the churches were well pleased with the attendance gained through this co-operation.

This closed a campaign wherein the ministerial approval of the picture was featured on the front page of the newspaper.

Church co-operation on this picture should be one hundred per cent. Don't wait for the churches to come to you. Go after their pastors and start early enough to permit them to lay out a campaign that will parallel yours, giving you the benefit of their work while they equally profit from yours.

Offer to carry screen announcements for any church making the decalogue the subject of a screen preceding the opening. Print the fact in your newspaper announcements. Help the ministers, and you'll help your business for many weeks to come.

This is the perfect picture for church co-operation, and you lose part of what you are paying for unless you get it all.

Peepers

For Old Home Week J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, used an old fashioned house, well back on a shady lawn, for his lobby display. One of the upper story windows was cut out and a sign invited the curious to "Look inside." If they did they read "Thomas Meighan in his greatest picture, Old Home Week."

Just another peep hole idea, but nicely carried out.

To clinch good business he permitted the United Daughters of the Confederacy to sell tickets the week in advance, their share going to the Society's treasury.

Filmed the Divers

Because they were selecting a Miss Oklahoma City, Pat McGee, of the Criterion Theatre, got a lot of extra business.

He had a special reel made of the selection and ran that the following day along with The Light of Western Stars. Then the last two days of the run he had the winner "in person" and the box office receipts beat the thermometer going up.

Trailed Along

Raymond B. Jones got a lot of publicity for the Melba Theatre, Dallas, Texas. He had nothing in particular to hit the newspapers with the other week, and yet he is publicity man for the house.

But a newspaper was working a coloring contest with a food products company. Jones supplemented the "grand" prizes with tickets for the Melba and he rode all the week on the other fellow's story.

It cost only forty admissions, and it meant a hook in to a live issue and it helped business as well as the contest.

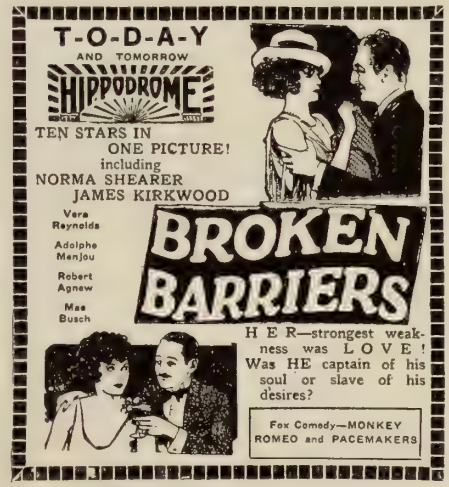
but apparently the space has been cut down from three to two columns through the summer and the ad man has not gotten used to his new quarters. This display for The White Desert is not poor, but setting the sales talk in six point, leaded, instead of eight would have given a better balance and would have made a vast difference in the appearance of the 65 by 2. There is plenty to talk about in the story, for it is a fine summer subject, but it would have looked better in a smaller face, and that applies even more strongly to its appearance on the page, for with all the lines run clear to the rule, it cannot fight the adjoining spaces as well as the usual Loew ads.

A Smaller Display Is Better Showing

Leonard J. Edrick, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Gloversville, N. Y., a Schine house, sends in two displays; one for The Mad Whirl and the other for Broken Barriers. He writes that he was restricted to a two tens on the latter, while permitted to go to seventeen on the Whirl. Personally we like



A Metro-Goldwyn Release

FOR BROKEN BARRIERS

the smaller display the better. It is not as large, but it bats over the appeal in a much better fashion. We do not exactly like the negative style in the bank of sales talk. There is a definite statement about the girl and a question regarding the man. It is a better appeal to make both alike, either questions or statements. To switch causes a slight mental pause, perhaps not enough to spoil the sale of tickets, but enough to rob the argument of its fullest appeal. It is well to remember that a smooth reading advertisement, others things being equal, will sell more tickets and it does not make for smooth reading to switch treatment. But the display is better because the title gets a better showing and the valuable names are all at the left where the reader naturally starts in to read. Names will sell this story better than the statement that "her strongest weakness was love," so the names are better where they are. In the longer drop there are two sales approaches, the better being: "What a girl this is. She beats him today and marries him tomorrow!" That is much better than "Youth of today—so careless with love. What is it coming to?" It is so much better than the position if the two appeals should have been transposed to give the best appeal a first chance. This does not matter so much in a space comparatively free of type. The centre cut gets the eye, but the star and title in reverse do not stand out as well as they would in black on white. Evidently the cut has been cropped to get it into this space. It might have been better had the cut been left out to let in a type announcement that would put the star and title over to better advantage. We think this would have sold just as well in ten inches as in seventeen. It is not so much the size as the display that counts, and the best display is in the smaller space. Of course a two seventeens takes up more space on the page, and possibly gets a better chance that way, but it is what you say and the way you place it to be read that counts for more than mere size. And almost any show can be put over in twenty inches if the right argument is used and cuts are held to their proper service as attractors.

On the Scent

Back in Birmingham, Ala., for the third time, Rodney Bush, of the Galax, felt that it was up to him to get attention for The Thief of Bagdad and he had his artist paint a scene with Doug flying through the clouds on the magic carpet. Stills were worked into the design; which was placed in the lobby.

Then he burned incense at the intake of a ventilating fan which threw its blast through the lobby into the street, and this helped a lot of persons to discover the lobby display, with the result that he not only got a lot of new people but resold those who already had seen the picture at another house.

More Hankies

It has been some time since the handkerchief stunt has been reported, but Keith's Palace Theatre, Cleveland, used it for As No Man Has Loved, the Fox version of The Man Without a Country.

News, Comments of the Week and Guide to New Material

THE PROGRAM'S THE THING

NOT only the picture but the entire program which surrounds it must be properly threaded to attain guaranteed repeat patronage. There can be no set or standard program for all theatres. Audiences differ in various localities. It should be the duty of the producer to study the temperaments of the majority of the patrons, that is, as a class, and to emphasize such elements in the musical and presentation features as are sure-fire in their appeal. This will win good will, the greatest thing a producer can hope to attain. Keying the entire musical program in the various divertissements to the feature picture is the only standard one can achieve. Keying programs should be according to audience demands, not producers' whims.

RAPPE SAILS FOR EUROPE

ERNO RAPPE, who for the past year has been the General Director of the new Fox Theatre, Philadelphia, sailed for Berlin where he has been made General Director of a string of theatres. This new work will keep him in Europe for about fifteen months, following which he expects to return to the United States. Mr. Rappe is one of the most eminent conductors which the First Run Theatre generale can boast. For three years he was musical director at the Capitol Theatre, New York, and was directly responsible for the development of the present orchestra in that theatre which is compared in the New York dailies with the Philharmonic and the Symphony. Mr. Rappe has established some new records for artistic presentations and theatre orchestral features.

RHINESTONE SETTING DEVICE

A Company specializing in costume manufacturing is offering a clever device for setting rhinestones on costumes and fabrics. The device is easy to manipulate, of light weight and inexpensive in cost. It sets three sizes of stones and the construction of the device will permit long use with satisfactory results.

"SIEGFRIED" PRESENTATION

JOSIAH Zuro, who for the past six years has been Director of Presentations at the Riesenfeld theatres, is about to enter his new offices in Steinway Hall, New York City, where he will devote his efforts to creating and staging independent productions. He will have charge of the presentation and musical interpretation of "Siegfried" UFA superproduction, which is to begin a limited engagement of four weeks at the Century Theatre, New York City, on August 23. There will be an elaborate scenic and vocal program built about the picture. An orchestra of sixty accomplished Wagnerites will play a score especially synchronized to the film from Wagner's immortal opera, by Hugo Riesenfeld. In addition, a Prologue and Epilogue have been planned. The picture is a unique form of production, in that it is the first to have a music score by a great composer synchronized by its action.

PRESENTING ORGAN NOVELTIES

LOUIS C. Shimon, assistant manager, and Les Hoadley, organist, both of the Milwaukee Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., have developed some organ novelties to supplant orchestral features. According to all reports these features have proved a sensation with the audiences. The numbers are a combination of selections and slides with singers introduced during the number. Plans are underway for some very unusual musical features at this theatre under the devisement of the two men named.

HEADS DANCE SCHOOL

IT has been announced that Ester Gustafson has been engaged to head the dance department of the new Eastman School of Dance and Dramatic Action in connection with the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, New York. Miss Gustafson, who is well known for her interpretation of music through the dance, will conduct classes in all forms of the dance with many of her groups appearing during the season on the Eastman Theatre stage.

TO DEVISE "PHANTOM"

UNIVERSAL PICTURES CORPORATION recently offered $1,000 to anyone who would successfully produce a "phantom" during the prologue of "The Phantom of the Opera," which opens for a New York run in September. Thurston, the well known magician, accepted the challenge, and has made several stipulations regarding the condition under which he will endeavor to produce the illusion. These include that he will be required to give no advance public demonstration of his ability in this respect; that his presence will not be required at the theatre; that he reserves the right to produce any kind of a "phantom" that lies within his power; that the orchestra will be discontinued at a certain time which he will advise before the opening, and that the stage and the theatre will be thrown into absolute darkness during that period. It is expected that his demonstration will be one of the features in an unusual presentation offering of this spectacular romance.

PICCADILLY THEATRE CHANGES

WITH the purchase of the Piccadilly Theatre by Warner Bros. from Lee A. Ochs it has been reported that extensive changes will be made in the stage and orchestra pit. The orchestra is to be augmented, the pit enlarged, and the stage to be increased in size to permit the proper production of presentations and prologues. It is the plan to offer a program of eight units.

RASCH BALLET IN "PHANTOM"

IT has been announced that Albertina Rasch will present a new group of her famed ballet dancers in the pretentious prologue which will accompany the New York showing of "The Phantom of the Opera." Miss Rasch has just returned from Europe to fill several contracts for motion picture houses along with her other professional activities. "The Phantom" showing will be her first appearance on Broadway following her return.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Detailed information relative to the production of the presentation suggested are printed herewith. Permission is given to any producer or exhibitor to use the Colby Harriman suggestions appearing in this section. Any other information desired to stage the presentation may be secured upon request.

"POSTER MADNESS"

A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

THE suggestion this week is one which can be readily adapted to serve as a prologue-presentation for practically any picture of general program calibre. The subject matter herewith does not necessarily limit the suggestion as to the poster both in its art work and lettering, and the producer can adjust this to suit the particular picture with which the presentation is used.

The general routine embraces a large billboard upon which is painted a poster resembling the "billboard art work" common today. A poster artist dressed in the garb of his trade, white jacket and cap, is seen at work painting one of the figures or finishing some of the lettering. The figures can be partly completed, even the lettering can be laid in and only portions of it finished. The artist pauses for an interval of rest and as he lapses into a day-dream the figures in the poster come to life, and a general action ensues, which includes the characters represented in the poster and the artist himself. The poster characters are silhouetted against the plaque and with a zone lighting treatment the poster artist can stand out in bold relief against a more subdued foreground.

Ground Plan—Fig. 3

The setting consists of a large frame of a billboard placed center in one. Back of the billboard is placed a platform, the top of which is on the left with the top edge of the lower cross piece of the frame. The entire area occupied by the platform is enclosed in a silhouette box herein detailed. A foliage border with a half leg drop is hung in one at left. Set pieces constructed to resemble planks in a fence are placed right and left of the frame to mask, and carry off. A sky drop is used as a backing and hung in three.

Silhouette Box—Fig. 2

Silhouette box can be easily constructed out of flats or a frame can be constructed and attached to the platform over which curtains may be draped, thereby giving the same effect. The primary reason for the silhouette box is to prevent a spill light from the area of the billboard, enabling the lights to function properly in giving the effect of the illusion—painted characters suddenly appearing animated. The entire box can be fastened to the platform and the platform trucked. The frame in front should be about a foot wide so as to give good proportion. The opening of the frame should be covered with a light muslin upon which can be traced faint outlines of the characters and the lettering of the poster. When the lights in the silhouette box come up the tracings on the surface will disappear. The backing or back surface of the silhouette box should be painted in a silver tone. The reason for this is that it aids materially in proper silhouette effects. The top of the box should be covered with some opaqued material. Heavy cur-

Big First Run Presentations

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Ten Commandments" (Paramount)

Music

The programmed overture was a selection from "Queen of Sheba" (Goldmark), played by the Rivoli Orchestra, with Drago Jovanovitch conducting. This number, however, was omitted during the week owing to the length of the performance permitting the presentation to be featured in this spot. Marian Lax sang during the final scenes of the picture.

Tableaux Vivants

Two large plaques constructed to represent the "Tablets of Stone" were placed right and left of the proscenium in the orchestra pit area. They were painted a dull gray, bearing the Hebraic characters in double line style. The Tableau is one of the most daring in its display of the female form that has been attempted in the motion picture theatre, and the artistic treatment and conduct of the numbers together with the gradual development towards a well-conceived climax succeeded in getting this number over.

(a) On the Nile

A silhouette treatment, sky drop hung in two; this was toned blue from the sides, with a water rippler operating through a canary medium. The ripplers were used right and left. A set piece constructed to resemble an Egyptian arch was placed at center. Two palm trees extreme right and left—seven characters were used in this number, all dressed in Egyptian costumes. The principal dancer was discovered kneeling in the arch at center, two girls were discovered standing right and left holding baskets of fruit. Four dancers were grouped at the back, two on either side of the principal dancer. The action was silhouetted against the background.

(b) Moses

A strip of film depicting storm clouds with lightning flashes was thrown upon the close-in curtains. These were drawn and the moving clouds were more distinct on the sky drop. At extreme left a set piece painted to resemble a mountain precipice was placed, and the character of Moses was barely visible. When the flash of lightning appeared in the picture a light placed to highlight the character of Moses was flashed on, revealing the player holding the "Tablets of Stone." This was only a flash, then curtains drawn.

(c) The Slave Mart

The black plush hung in one. About ten girls dressed in gaudy costumes of Oriental and Egyptian type paraded from left to right with an amber spot thrown upon them from the front. After the crossover the black plush was drawn, revealing a very colorful tableau of the girls grouped around the image of "The Golden Calf," which was surmounted on a pedestal with steps leading to it. A dark blue fabric was used as a backing. The area occupied by the performers was highlighted with magnenta, canary and light blue from the sides, with amber being used to spot; reds and blues in the foots, and borders blending in a rich purple. The dancer is brought in by a slave, the silver garment is taken from her, and she does an exotic number; she falls on the floor, the Nobleman who is standing amid a group of girls orders her to be placed as a sacrifice to the idol—the slave picks up the girl and ascends the steps, placing her over the back of the image. At this moment a panel of the blue fabric backing is drawn, revealing the almost nude form of a woman posing as a goddess; a silver backing is used and light blue from the sides highlights the character. We may add in closing that this is a very simple and highly colorful number to accompany the showing of "The Ten Commandments," as it is purely atmospheric in its construction.

COLONIAL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Homemaker" (Universal-Jewel)

Music

The Colony Melody Masters, conducted by E. Charles Eggett, played selections from "The Chocolate Soldier," by Strauss, with "My Hero" as the concluding number. John Priest is at the Console.

The Garden of Enchantment

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Petching are presented in a musical novelty which introduced many electrical and mechanical musical instruments, providing good entertainment. The set represents an exterior, particularly a garden of a farmhouse. The setting consists of a cut wood netted drop in two with a farmhouse painted at right, and a trellis with foliage clusters at left. A rural landscape drop is hung in back. A green topped set tree is placed right of the arched opening center, and a pink flowering tree left of the opening. In the foreground are two flower strips about 6 ft. long. There is an opening of about 4 ft. in center between the two strips. During the course of the action these are revealed as "musical plants." Azalea banks are used right and left of the strips to dress, and also up center right and left of the opening. Rustic chairs are placed up right and left center. Character dressed in overalls enters and picks up an instrument which is camouflaged with a flower and plays a tune upon it. This starts the introduction of several musical instruments well camouflaged, such as a series of horns, the bulbs painted to resemble pears; a rake, the tines of which are whistles, etc. The general lighting scheme consisted of magenta on the back drop with greens and ambers to highlight the various foliage pieces of the performing area.

Miss Dolores Farris, who has been so popular at the Riesenfeld theatres, is a welcome visitor at the Colony. Miss Farris appeared in a syncopated fantasy, and with the increased stage facilities which this theatre has to offer succeeded in doing better work than on previous appearances at the other theatres. A very simple background but one which is highly colorful is used. Light gold fabrics are hung in three. Upon this surface lights in various colors, purples, blues, ambers, green, magenta are played in shaft formation from the sides. Blue foots and border with reds mixed. Light amber spot on the dancer, who is in shell pink costume.

Operatic Interlude

Mr. Roger Dixon, tenor, sings the Aria, "Vesti la giubba," from "Pagliacci." Black plush hung in one, blue foots and borders brought up about half. The soloist dressed in white silk clown costume appears suddenly at center through the plush curtains. He sings the Aria in a light blue spot. He exits at center. This singer is to be commended for his excellent rendition of this very popular number. It is one of the best interpretations we have been permitted to hear in a long time.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Wild Horse Mesa" (Paramount)

Ben Bernie and His Orchestra

The popular Jazz organization which has been holding forth at the Rivoli Theatre for the past four weeks has been transferred to this theatre, where they are introduced to appreciative audiences in a novelty concert program. The Rialto stage has been enlarged for the Bernie engagement. A new proscenium arch has been installed and one of the most attractive curtains and alcove panels which we have seen are also introduced this week. It is worth a trip to this theatre to look at the curtains. Bernie presented some excellent numbers, and his style has improved during the last four weeks; the current offering is perhaps among the best which he has given. He introduced a travesty on a banquet in which Ben and various members of his orchestra make comedy speeches. The stage numbers consist of Tandy McKenzie singing "The Rose of Picardy," Semon Krevoff, a very talented youngster in a clever dance; Doris Vinton in a dance selection, and four members of the Rivoli Ensemble in a "Charleston." The setting consists of a drop hung back. This has been used before and is painted with a silver mosaic center upon which a white crane is emblazoned over a flower motif of asters at the base. Gold panels are painted at right and left of the drop. Two set palm trees gilded and placed down right and left in front of the returns, which are in light blue and gold metallics. Amber and magenta from the sides with canary and red foots and borders are used to headlight the performing area. Light amber spot to work.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Sally of the Sawdust" (United Artists) (Second Week)

The same program accompanying the featured picture is retained for a second week's run of the latest Griffith production. The program includes a prelude played by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra and a special prologue devised by Joseph Plunkett, which is a very excellent atmospheric feature for this particular picture.

CAPITOL THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "Drusilla With a Million" (F. B. O.)

Music Features

The Capitol Grand Orchestra with Albert E. Short conducting, in a specially arranged number entitled "Down the Mississippi." Banks Kennedy renders an organ novelty. The presentation included "Milady's Fan" with three principal characters as The Lady, The Dancer and The White Fan, and sixteen girls in a tableau, Eugene Thomas in a piano presentation of the Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody by Franz Liszt; The Revue of "Neptune's Daughters"—three numbers introducing the following: (a) The Artist's Studio with the Artist and four girls; (b) The Changeable Beach with the Mystery Girl and eight bathing girls; (c) On the Boardwalk, introducing "Miss Chicago" and her retinue departing to participate in the contest for the title of "Miss America" at Atlantic City; a song entitled "Miss Chicago" is also sung, and the Boardwalk Ballet with eight girls is introduced.

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Unholy Three" (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer) (Second Week)

The same program surrounding the first week's presentation of the featured picture is held over for a second week. The program includes the musical features, overture, "Maritana" by Wallace; Brass Sextette of the orchestra (Capitol) Sextette from "Lucia di Lammermoor" by Donizetti.

The presentations include the Capitol Male Quartette in a group of Negro Spirituals closing with a song giving a photographic background with a Bruce "Overture" scenic; Gambarelli and Ballet Corps in "The Little Toy Soldiers"; "A Duet of "Caprice Viennois" and Gambarelli in a solo number (new this week) "Valse Bluette" by Drigo; Hazel Simonson, Salvatore Solt and Ensemble of Twenty-Five in Finale of Second Act "Forza del Destino" by Verdi.

EASTMAN THEATRE
Rochester, N. Y.

Featured Picture: "The Shock Punch" (Paramount)

The music features include the overture "Mignon" by Thomas played by the Eastman Theatre Orchestra with Victor Wagner, conducting; Robert Berentsen, organist, renders a selection from "La Tosca" by Puccinni. Guilio Nardella, tenor, makes his first American appearance singing two numbers (a) Aria—"Vesti la giubba" (On with the Play) from "Pagliacci" by Leoncavallo, and (b) Serenade by Toselli.

PICCADILLY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Kiss Me Again" (Warner Bros.) (Second Week)

The same program is retained for the second week's run of this Lubitsch masterpiece. The music includes the interlude, "Habanera" from the opera "Natoma" by Victor Herbert, and a violin solo "Kiss Me Again," Herbert, played by Fredric Fradkin. As a stage novelty a radio demonstration with guest announcer and several well-known radio artists including Les Stevens and His Orchestra, are presented in a novelty setting.

STRATFORD THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "Night Life in New York" (Paramount)

The program features include "Georgette" the captivating dancing violinist; Moss and the Manning Sisters, in an alluring dance divertissement; Lela Warwick and the Frisco Harmonists, and Doris Gutow at the organ, playing "That Melody That Made You Mine."

tains can be hung at the ends of the box. The lamps to give the silhouette effect should be placed on the floor of the platform and hung directly under the opaqued top, the characters working close to the surface will be silhouetted in distinct outline.

Scenic Treatment

The setting should be painted to represent an exterior. The frame of the billboard can be painted dull green; the set pieces right and left of the frame painted to represent brownish boards in a fence, some vines can be painted upon the fence if desired. The foliage border and leg should be painted in woodland green, and the upper part of the tree which is visible over the fence in a "tree-trunk brown." A sky drop to be used.

Lighting Treatment

A mixture of red and blue with the red predominating should be used in the foots and first border; the second border reds and blues on with the blues predominating; third border the blues on full, reds omitted. Spot set right and left off stage in one to highlight the working area of the poster artist. Use orange amber at right and a blue and dark amber variegated medium at left. Place a baby spot in the rigging and set same to work at left center. This is used to highlight the artist when he sits in front of the fence left. Green from left to highlight the foliage border. Bunch lights placed back of the silhouette box with blue and green mediums thrown on the sky drop. The lamps in the silhouette box should be white.

Properties

A small painter's ladder will be necessary and a paint-box, brush, rack and one or two paint pails are required by the artist.

Two Experts Discuss Art of Costuming

Note: A series of weekly reviews on valuable books to producers and musical directors. We shall be very glad to put you in touch with the publishers of these excellent aids.—Harriman.

"COSTUMING A PLAY" by Elizabeth B. Grimball and Rhea Wells. This is a valuable book for producers in that it covers the general subject of costuming, together with suggestions of how to devise the various costumes in an inexpensive manner. The book contains an enlightening treatise showing that every costume is a development from the tunic, skirt and cloak. This is followed with a chapter on Color, its use dramatically in a production. First primitive colors and how and when the different variations of shades and combinations were introduced are discussed in the notes on each period. This is followed by chapters on Dyeing and Decorating Textiles, Lighting and its effect on different materials and colors, and the various kinds of materials used in the costume manufacture. Under the heading of Costume chapters, there are plates in the following periods: Egyptian, Assyrian, Greek, Roman, Medieval, Early Renaissance, Late Renaissance, 17th Century, and in the 18th Century, Directoire, Empire, Mid-Victorian and Civil War. There is also information on costuming religious subjects, the historical costume of Biblical periods, and the conventionalized Medieval costumes for the miracle and morality plays. Producers will find this book of value and the line drawings accompanying the text will make it easy to duplicate. Following each period of bibliography is added which will permit the producer to secure any added information he may require from libraries, etc. The various characters are also suggested for which these costumes are particularly adapted. The cost of the book is low in comparison with the wealth of material which the text contains.

"Wild, Wild Susan"

Paramount Offers Bebe Daniels in the Type of Story in Which She Has Scored Her Strongest Hits

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

"Wild, Wild Susan" is not as wild as the title would seem to suggest, but it's a great box office title and it's a fine little box office farce with Bebe Daniels as a hoydenish society girl who wants to live her own life and not marry a goggle-eyed family friend just to please her father.

The story gets off to a lively start with Bebe racing the fire engines up lower Fifth Avenue. She beats the engines to her own home, which has been afire, and gets out of arrest by explaining that she was merely leading the way. Her nerve wins her exemption. This is the fastest sequence in the play, for the action sags, since it is impossible to keep up the tempo. But there is plenty of fast comedy, including a leap from the Leviathan already outbound, to the gangway. These scenes are all authentic, as is a later sequence on upper Fifth Avenue and many in the still more fashionable Park Avenue section.

The action works up to a machine-made mystery sensation that will not appeal to the critics, but which seemed to please Rivoli audiences immensely. After her fling at real acting in "The Manicure Girl," Miss Daniels is back to her old impersonation of herself as the scenarist paints her. Her personality and vivacity sweep the rather trite play along and sustains the interest.

Rod La Rocque gives good support as the rich would-be author who drives a taxi to seek story material. The others are all in the picture, but there is no other outstanding role. They merely support, for most of it is given Miss Daniels and the rest goes to La Rocque.

The picture should prove itself at the box office, for it possesses abundant action and the magic of the authentic New York atmosphere.

Scenario by Tom J. Geraghty.
Directed by Edward Sutherland.
Length, 5,774 feet.

Story

Susan Van Dusen, daughter of an affluent New York family, craves excitement and gets much of it from her automobile. Her father hopes to marry her to the son of his friend Waterbury, but the elder son has left home to seek fiction material as a taxi driver, and the remaining son is a callow, spectacled youth, just out of college. It is arranged that Susan is to go to Europe with her married sister and the Waterburys. She gets her first glimpse of the young man on the steamer deck and makes a leap for the already withdrawn gangplank. After a run in with her father she leaves home and gets a job as detective with a private agency, meantime meeting the other Waterbury, whose real name she does not know. Her father, and the returned Waterburys, learn of her ambition and Susan is given an "assignment" in which there are enough carefully planned thrills to discourage her ambitions and she marries the unspectacled Tod Waterbury, to her own and her father's great content.

"The Girl Who Wouldn't Work"

Simplicity and Directness of New Director's Treatment of Story Enhances Its Dramatic Value

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Adapted from an English novel, the B. P. Schulberg production, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," introduces as a feature Director Marcel De Sano, who has achieved success in handling screen comedies. The story concerns a girl who shirked work. Her pursuit of pleasure brings about an affair with a wealthy philanderer and results in her father killing another girl under the impression he is saving his daughter from a life of shame. This tragedy brings both principals to their senses and leads to the customary happy ending.

Lionel Barrymore as the rich idler is exceptionally fine and more congenially cast than in some of his recent pictures; Marguerite De La Motte in the title role runs him a close second. Henry B. Walthall as the father and Lilyan Tashman as the hero's mistress score heavily.

The acting of the players is marked with extreme naturalness. They go through the situations more as people in real life would than is frequently the case before the camera. This seems largely due to Mr. De Sano's direction, for it fits in with his entire treatment of the story, which shows unusual simplicity and directness. He hews straight to the mark, shunning extraneous matter, and there is a noticeable absence of heroics, posing or striving for theatrical effect. The subtitles are in the same vein—nothing flowery, just everyday language. Instead of explanatory titles he lets the action unfold the story. This concentrates the interest and increases the punch, but also tends at times to cause confusion. For instance, Forrest Stanley's actions seem strange until it is later revealed that he is the girl's fiance.

No attempt has been made to soften the effect of the early actions of hero or heroine, which are such as to alienate sympathy. The appeal is staked on arousing interest in the situations and dramatic force of the plot, and in this it succeeds.

The keynote of the picture is a sex situation. The very boldness of its treatment robs it of suggestiveness or offense, although one title might be smoothed down. The directness, unexpectedness and daring handling of the climax where the father calmly fires several shots point-blank at the woman in bed, believing her to be his daughter, packs a tremendous punch and gets intense drama out of a melodramatic situation.

Although Mr. De Sano has refrained from a long trial scene, using an insert of a newspaper story to quickly straighten out the tangled threads, the picture will stand cutting, especially following the climax.

The average patron will probably not be aware of the difference in the handling of the story, but at the same time we believe it has increased its audience value and that the majority will find this picture entertaining, forceful drama.

"Wild Horse Mesa"

Stampede of Wild Horses Furnishes Climax in Zane Grey Story Directed by George B. Seitz

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Still another Zane Grey novel, "Wild Horse Mesa," has reached the screen. This one serves to introduce as a Paramount feature Director George B. Seitz, who is well known to a large motion picture clientele as a producer of action serials.

Like other examples of this prolific author's works, so many of which have reached the screen, "Wild Horse Mesa" is a story of the great open spaces, and as usual Mr. Grey succeeds in getting his plot and characters sufficiently away from the usual formulas, while retaining the general atmosphere of a western, to arouse the interest.

The picture starts off auspiciously by introducing a beautiful white horse as the leader of a drove of a thousand head, and you anticipate that he is to be the center of the action. It soon develops, however, that it is the human characters that carry the plot.

Two sets of characters are introduced and the story cuts from one to the other for considerable time before their activity merges and the plot gets really under way. All this preliminary ground work is worked out with much detail, and the situations have been developed to an extent not commensurate with their effect on the advancement of the plot, so that consequently the story interest lags. Apparently everything has been subordinated to the big climax and there is a dearth of vigorous action before it is reached.

There is a thrill when the immense drove of horses start their stampede and the hero rides right into their path, but the apparent ease with which he causes the leader to swerve to another path robs it of some of the punch.

There are a number of attractive backgrounds and the technical details are high class. The picture also has the advantage of a thoroughly efficient cast, with such box-office names as Noah Beery, Jack Holt, Billie Dove and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Then, too, there is the magic of Zane Grey's name to be reckoned with; but the picture would be considerably improved by a free use of the scissors in several of the situations.

Length, 7,164 feet.

Story

Good-natured Lige Melborne runs a general store in a little Western hamlet but is facing failure when Bent Manerube sells him the idea of using a large quantity of barbed wire he has on hand to fence in a part of a mesa over which wild horses roam. The scheme is to catch and sell them. Soon after they arrive on the location and get the wire in place, Chane Weymer, a horse buyer who has been chased by Bud McPherson's gang, arrives in camp thoroughly exhausted and is nursed back to health, and falls in love with Sue Melborne. Chane finally persuaded Lige that his scheme is not humane as the horses will rush into the wire and be slaughtered. Bent is so enraged that he joins with McPherson to put through the scheme anyway and start to stampede the horses. Chane succeeds in diverting the drove and captures the leader but due to Sue's pleading lets him go, and Sue promises to become Chane's wife.

"The Circus Cyclone"

With Art Acord in Stellar Role Universal Offers Entertaining Western With Circus Atmosphere

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A combination circus and western story with the circus atmosphere predominating is unfolded in the Universal Blue Streak Western, "The Circus Cyclone," with Art Acord in the stellar role.

The story deals with a girl in the circus who performs with a trained horse. When she resists the advances of the bullying owner of the show he beats the horse. A cowboy comes to the rescue and by defeating the bully in a ring fight wins the horse. The bully frames the girl's father, who is about to be lynched as a bank thief, but the hero chases the bully, gets back the money, saves the father and wins the girl.

By a choice of good though familiar situations in both circus and western types of stories and the addition of the prize fight, the story is kept moving at a pace that does not allow the interest to lag and provides an abundance of action. Some of the situations, for instance, the climax where the hero and villain fight while the auto keeps moving along a twisting mountain trail, with no one paying much attention to the steering wheel, stretch the credulity.

The cast fully measures up to requirements and Cesare Gravina does particularly good work in the pathetic role of the aged clown who is the father of the heroine. The work of the horse is distinctly pleasing, for this animal not only is efficient when it comes to trick stuff, but proves his mettle when the hero rides him in pursuit of the thieves. The climax, with the auto containing the villain falling over a cliff, which is conventional, is very well handled.

Altogether, "The Circus Cyclone" should prove above the average for patrons desiring melodrama with plenty of action.

Story

Popo was a clown and his daughter Doraldina an equestrienne in a circus. Brandt, the owner, an ex-pugilist, tried to force his attentions on Doraldina and she fled into the tent occupied by the horse. Brandt came in and started to beat the horse. Jack, a cowboy came to the horse's rescue and it was arranged to have a ring fight. Jack won and got the horse but Brandt insisted that she steal the horse back. During this time Jack and Doraldina, thrown together had fallen in love with each other. Brandt to get rid of Popo had his henchman rob the bank and frame Popo who is arrested. The crowd prepares to lynch him, but Jack learning from a boy who overheard the crooks talk of the robbery chased them and finally got the money, bringing it back in time to save Popo and win Doraldina.

"The Snob Buster"

Reed Howes' Newest Rayart Production Has Pleasing Story and Plenty of Stunts and Action

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Of the same general type as his previous starring vehicles in the series for Rayart is Reed Howes' newest production, "The Snob Buster." It is a romantic melodrama with an abundance of action interspersed by comedy, and the star has several opportunities for athletic stunts.

The story should strike a responsive chord with the average audience, for it deals with a chap who starts out as a snob, becomes thoroughly democratic as the result of the war and, much to the disgust of his family, pals with his buddy, an ex-prize fighter. In the end, he wins the girl of "the masses" by licking a pugilistic champion, and even succeeds in reconciling his father to accepting her as a daughter-in-law.

The theme has been obviously built with the box-office in view and situations have been introduced with an eye to their audience appeal rather than from strict logic. Events have been shaped so that Hr. Howes is kept busy every minute. First he has a time escaping from his home as his father wants to have his sanity tested. Then he dodges detectives. This gives a chance for thrills in scenes where he climbs up fire-escapes, walks a plank from one building to another at a great height and slides down several stories on a rope. These stunts provide good thrills and are photographed from such angles as to show that they are the real article, with no chance for faking. Then, too, there is a good prize fight with a novel twist and extra punch when the place is raided and the hero takes his rival to the top of a skyscraper and finishes the job.

Howes has a pleasing personality and his role is well suited to him in every way. Gloria Grey does good work as the girl and David Kirby is particularly good as his buddy.

While somewhat more mechanical and not quite as snappy as some of his early pictures for Rayart, "The Snob Buster" should prove a satisfactory program attraction for the average theatre.

"Mary, Queen of Tots"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Hal Roach in a novel way introduces the majority of the "gang" in "Mary, Queen of Tots." Little blonde Mary essays the role of a rich girl tired of her long lashed and beautifully gowned dollies. She is delighted with a gift from her mother's gardener of four crudely clad images. These represent the handicraft of an Italian workman who uses living models from which he fashions his wares. The images are readily recognized as those of the rest of the "gang." After setting them about the room, amid her toy dogs and horses, the little girl falls asleep. Trick photography permits the substitution of Micky, Farina and the rest of the crowd to appear in diminutive size. They romp about the sleeping form of Mary, who appears like a giantess in their midst. When she awakes the dolls are all back in their original positions. A nurse throws them in an ashcan and when Mary later finds the models playing on the street she believes that they are her fairy dolls returned to life. She dines them in her spacious home, when they proceed to resort to the antics characteristic of their other productions. This two-reeler will help to raise the standing of any theatre in any community. Some of the myth-like shots are beautifully executed. Children will be immediately sold on this and grown-ups will find in it an abundance of laughs.—T. W.

"Won by Law"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Century Comedy distributed through Universal presents Wanda Wiley, the star, in the role of a girl who is almost too lazy to live, until a handsome young Northwest Mounted Policeman comes along. Then she brightens up, rescues him from a gang of moonshiners, marries and promptly subdues him. While this idea runs all through the picture, several more or less familiar and improbable trick and slapstick comedy situations have been introduced, such as scenes where she is dragged across a lake, also where fish jump out of the water when a magic flute is played. Quite a little ingenuity has been used in planting the extreme laziness of the heroine. There are several amusing moments but the type of picture is not as snappy or as well suited to Miss Wiley as many of her former releases.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 34"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

"From the Inside Out" is the feature of "Pathe Review No. 34." The camera lens is apparently under water and records how fish are disturbed near a certain beach by divers, plunging horses and splashing dogs. "Some Moroccan Matters" shows how wives in some parts of Morocco hitch up with the oxen in ploughing the fields. "The Waters of the Niort" is in Pathecolor. It shows a canal town in France. On the whole this one-reel offering should prove a valuable program attraction.—T. W.

"Speak Easy"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

No, this Universal single-reeler distributed by Universal, starring Charles Puffy, is not a comedy of bootleggers or blind tigers. Puffy has a rival in love and the efforts of these two to outwit each other furnish the action. One situation shows the girl's father discovering both are cheap skates and offering her hand to the first to produce a thousand dollars. Puffy wins because he accidentally runs an auto containing a thief who has stolen the police department safe directly into the station house. This reel contains more average slapstick and shows less originality than the earlier ones in the series.—C. S. S.

"Seven Ages of Sport"

(Pathe—"Sportlight"—One Reel)

Grantland Rice in "Seven Ages of Sport" shows that healthful humanity from the lusty cry and shaking rattle to the exchanging of checkers in the gloaming of life is comprised of a good percentage of muscular activity. He shows the boy in the school playground and under the supervision of the scout master; then the collegian pulling on the varsity team and rushing the pigskin oval; the middle-aged business man making a birdie on the golf course, and the gray-haired but tanned veteran completing his active career at the checker board. The picture is one that all should enjoy. It is one confined to the refreshing out of doors.—T. W.

"Stand Up and Fight"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Jack Perrin, the star of this Universal reissue, appears in the role of a fighting parson. He invades a saloon, licks the owner who threatens him and this results in the gang attending church. He then aids the girl's father to sell stock in a mine. The bartender blows up the mine and arouses the townspeople by telling them the preacher did it. It develops, however, that the blast uncovered a rich vein of gold. Everybody is made rich and the preacher wins the girl, while the villain is driven out of town. There is a good fight and the story is of fair interest for Western fans.—C. S. S.

"Be Careful"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Jimmie Adams Comedy made by Christie and distributed through Educational is filled with amusing action, including a lot of rough and tumble stuff and slapstick, but at the same time is built around a central idea and not thrown together, and a number of the laughs are due to the situations. Jimmie's role is that of a good-natured guy who helps a couple to elope, and when he finds out that the man is a thief, chases the pair and uses just as much ingenuity to prevent them from getting married. A situation sure to get laughs is where he takes the shoes belonging to the man and woman, puts them on his own hands and feet and then on a colt, to deceive the bloodhounds. The stunts he pulls, including the luring away of the justice of the peace by means of a fire alarm, should also prove amusing. It is a fast-moving comedy that the majority should like.—C. S. S.

"Pleasure Bound"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Fish and flivvers furnish the opportunities for the laughs in this Jack White production for Educational, written and directed by Norman Taurog, with Lige Conley in the leading role. The girl's family start to accompany father on a fishing trip, a rival offers his car but it meets with an accident and Lige comes to the rescue with his flivver. Certainly a very fertile imagination has been used in devising the various things that happen to this machine. After doing all sorts of crazy stunts, it opens out like a telescope and the rear gets knocked around until it is twisted like a tete-a-tete chair. There has been an epidemic of flivver stunts but this one is new and should get the laughs. A lot of good slapstick situations have been introduced at the fishing grounds which should prove thoroughly amusing. Altogether, it rates high in the list as a speedy and amusing slapstick comedy.—C. S. S.

Story

Theodore Pendergast, a young snob, goes to war and Butch McGuire, an ex-prize fighter, becomes his buddy. After the war, Theodore, now known as Ted, returns home with democratic ideas, bringing Butch with him, and his father even goes so far as to attempt to have his sanity examined and to try and put him in a sanitarium. Ted, however, escapes and goes with Butch, whose sister Molly runs a restaurant in a tough neighborhood. Ted falls in love with Molly and is welcomed by the gang, all except Kid Lowry, a prize fighter. Finally they arrange for a grudge fight in the ring, but Ted's father has him kidnapped and placed in a padded cell. Ted escapes and arrives in time to fight, and is losing when Molly rushes in and tells him to win for her sake. Ted's father, who denounced Molly, realizes she is true blue. The police raid the place. Ted escapes with Kid and leads him to the top of an apartment house where he thoroughly licks the Kid. Ted then proposes and Molly accepts him.

"The Unholy Three" Proves "Big Draw" at N. Y. Capitol

"THE UNHOLY THREE," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production starring Lon Chaney, ushered in Greater Movie Season at the Capitol Theatre, New York, and has already established itself as one of the greatest motion pictures ever filmed. It has packed the enormous Capitol to the doors at every performance and undoubtedly will create a new box office record at that house.

Critics of the New York dailies have seldom, if ever, praised a picture as they have "The Unholy Three." The New York Times said, in part, "Not often does one see such a powerful photodrama as 'The Unholy Three.' It is a stirring story stocked with original twists and situations, a picture that teems with surprises and one in which the suspense is kept as taut as the string of a bow."

The N. Y. American says: "I can heartily approve of the choice of the Capitol Theatre in booking such satisfactory entertainment as 'The Unholy Three' to celebrate Greater Movie Week," and the N. Y. Daily Mirror has this to say: "This is the masterpiece of crook dramas. It is superbly directed, superbly acted and superbly picturized. It's one picture in a million, greater in our opinion than that wonderful picture, 'The Miracle Man.'"

The Morning Telegraph says: "Is a better picture than 'The Miracle Man' and should achieve the same wide popularity as George Loan Tucker's masterpiece. 'The Unholy Three' will interest everyone. It should be a great money maker." The Evening Post praises "The Unholy Three" in this way: "Splendid entertainment that is not lacking in thrills. The plot is unique and the acting far above the average. Anybody who has been longing for something new in crook pictures should try this one." Says the N. Y. Evening World, "In it Chaney puts over another of his compelling characterizations. His work is convincing and realistic."

Ascher Brothers of Chicago Book All Century Comedies

ADVICES from Leroy Alexander, Universal manager in Chicago, to H. M. Herbel, sales manager of Century Comedies, state that a big deal has just been closed by which the Ascher Brothers, owners and operators of one of the most important circuits in Chicago, get the entire output of the Century Comedies for 1925-1926 for their screens. "Little Red Riding Hood," a two-reel novelty, also being put out by Century, is included in the deal.

The Ascher theatres in which the Centuries will be shown are the Oakland Square, Forest Park, Metropolitan, Commercial, Vista, Portage Park, Frolic, Lane Court, Calo, Terminal, West Englewood and Crown.

The comedies included in the deal are the new series of twelve Buster Brown-Century Comedies, adapted from R. F. Outcault's famous newspaper cartoon comics; a series of twelve Wanda Wiley Centuries, a series of twelve Edna Marian Centuries and an assortment of comedies by starring popular male stars.

"Little Red Riding Hood" is a novelty picture, featuring Peter the Great as the wolf and Baby Peggy as Little Red Riding Hood. It is heralded as one of the most unique novelties to be offered in the short product field this fall.

Presentations of Century Comedies in the Ascher houses will begin immediately. Among the first Centuries to reach the screens of these important Chicago houses will be "After a Reputation," starring Edna Marian; "Paging a Wife," an Al Alt comedy; "Won By Law," starring Wanda Wiley, and "Crying for Love," made with Eddie Gordon. The first of the Buster Browns will be shown late in August or early in September. It is "Educating Buster," reported from the West Coast as being a box-office puller. It recently had a successful run at the Forum in Los Angeles.

Joan Meredith Signed

Joan Meredith, under a long term contract to the Chadwick Pictures Corporation, will be seen in an important part in Larry Semon's latest starring vehicle for Chadwick, "The Perfect Clown." Miss Meredith was discovered by I. E. Chadwick and put under contract by him after seeing her in a small part in one of his productions. Miss Meredith will also be seen in an important part in "Blue Blood," the coming George Walsh production. Others in the cast will be Cecille Evans, Philo McCullough, Harvey Clark, Robert Boulder, Eugene Borden and G. Howe Black.

Wray Beats Schedule

John Griffith Wray, who directed "The Winding Stair," Fox Film Corporation's adaptation of the A. E. W. Mason novel, made a record on this, his first production under Fox contract. He completed the picture in eight days less than schedule, and that, too, in spite of the fact that injuries of several members of the cast delayed work several days. Edmund Lowe and Alma Rubens play the leading roles in this picture.

Escaping from the police, the crook gang finds a shelter in the mountains. Here Hercules, the giant; Tweedledee, the dwarf; Rosie O'Grady, the pickpocket, and Echo, the ventriloquist, hide from the law. Fox Executive Finds Exhibitors Will Cooperate in Exploiting Short Films

AS befits his association with Fox Film Corporation, a pioneer in the movement to advance the standard of short subject films and one of the leaders in the drive to impress exhibitors with the importance of properly exploiting the little features, Fred C. Quimby, short subject sales manager of the Fox organization has sounded exhibitor sentiment and formed definite plans of action to effect fullest co-operation between his company and the theatres booking its short subject output.

Mr. Quimby has returned to New York from a tour of the principal cities of the United States, where he had heart-to-heart talks with any number of exhibitors, large and small. During the course of his trip he visited every Fox exchange, inaugurating a new short subject sales policy.

Because of his reputation as a short subject expert, the findings of Mr. Quimby, although mostly about his own company's activities, are printed herewith because they reflect the trend of things concerning all short subject producers, distributors and exhibitors.

Among the more important observations made by Mr. Quimby are:

That exhibitors are more than willing to co-operate with producers in the proper exploitation of the short films.

That a number of exhibitors have been ahead of the producers in appreciating the box-office value of the one and two-reelers and have been giving them a just amount of attention in all advertising and publicity, and, when their importance and popularity merited it, subordinating the feature to play up the short subject.

That exhibitors generally have grown as discriminating about their short subject bookings as they are about their features and insist on full information regarding them before signing contracts.

That the big exhibitors who have been passing up comedies for other presentations are realizing this is not in accord with their audiences' wishes, and are cutting down on prologues and other attractions to make room for one and two-reel comedies.

That all the exhibitors talked with promise to be more than fair and equitable to their short subject bookings in advertising and other publicity.

And that the box-office results where short subjects were properly exploited were most gratifying and attested better than any words could the importance of the little features and the high regard in which they are held by the public.

Summing up, Mr. Quimby says the campaign inaugurated at the meetings of the short subject producers and distributors to convince the exhibitors of the value of properly exploiting short subjects is bringing the most satisfactory results. Exhibitors everywhere, he says, are waking up to the value of their one and two-reel attractions, and many who never thought of advertising them before are doing so now with the ones who are increasing the space formerly allotted.

Mr. Quimby was more than pleased with the outlook for the Fox company's short subject product. He claimed that exhibitors everywhere look upon the Fox schedule of short film releases for the 1925-26 season as the best balanced and highest class announced. He said they are showing appreciation of this fact by booking it 100 per cent., with the result that the Fox short subject sales to date are 200 per cent. better than last season.

The Van Bibber comedies, Mr. Quimby found, have won a warm spot in the heart of the exhibitors. As a result of their tremendous success with the public, many of the theatres booking them give them an equal amount of space with the features in advertising, publicity and lobby displays. The presence of eight more of these comedies on the new release schedule is sufficient argument to many exhibitors to book the entire Fox short subject output, he said.

Mr. Quimby said that the exhibitors were full of praise for the way the Fox company went about building up and strengthening their short subject schedule. Many remarked that the quality of production of the little features has more than kept pace with the feature productions, adding that this statement was made after taking into consideration that the Fox schedule of Supreme Attractions and Starring Features this year forms a most imposing and formidable line-up of box-office attractions.

The fact that Mr. Fox has spent and is spending millions of dollars on his short subject pictures and is going to untold lengths to secure the best possible humorous material is appreciated by exhibitors.

As a consequence Mr. Quimby found a majority of those on whom he called in a mood receptive to closing for the Fox short subject product 100 per cent.

Mr. Quimby said the exhibitors were fully aware that millions of dollars could not buy the publicity behind the names of Richard Harding Davis, O. Henry and Mabel Herbert Urner, the trio of great American fictionists whose picturized works form important units in the Fox two-reel release schedule.

Exhibitors' praise for Fox News was tremendous, Mr. Quimby says, while the sales increase for this one-reel release borders on the sensational. All the exhibitors he talked with boosted the news reel and said they considered it the most up-to-date and modern reel released. One exhibitor told Mr. Quimby he would no more leave Fox News off his program than he would omit his feature.

One of the outstanding features of Fox News, as pointed out to Mr. Quimby by an exhibitor, is the fact that never at any time is it morbid or depressing, it being carefully edited to keep out gruesome subjects that would induce these effects. This same exhibitor said the Fox News reel had a greater appeal to women and children than any other reel for the reason that, while it is never distasteful or shocking, it is always tensely interesting and entertaining. He added that for beauty, grace and well arranged selection of subjects, Fox News is in a class by itself.

The Fox short subject sales manager said he was gratified with the reception accorded the new Fox Varieties by the exhibitors. He pointed to the fact that the demand for them was so great that it was necessary to dip into the 1925-26 releasese to keep pace with it. He said he found Fox Varieties an integral part of the programs of innumerable big first run houses and that the management of those theatres said these one-reelers mirroring the world we live in added distinction and class to any show.

The plans of the Fox company to aid the exhibitors properly to exploit their short subject attractions, as explained by Mr. Quimby, are comprehensive and should be productive of excellent results.

In the first place, complete press books will be issued by the Fox company with each two reel series. These books will be exactly alike, except in the number of pages, the books now issued with the starring features and supreme attractions produced by the company. They will be complete in every detail with synopsis, cuts and mats, publicity stories, reviews and exploitation suggestions. For lobbies and outdoor advertising the Fox company will get up excellent one-sheets of real magnetism which will be the work of a recognized specialist. In addition to this there will be an ample supply of stills for newspapers and lobbies.

For Fox News and Varieties attractive stock and current issue one-sheets and slides will be available.

In connection with exploiting the Fox comedy series Mr. Quimby pointed out the decided advantage of the Fox product over the general run of releases owing to the big names of the authors from whose works three of the series will be adapted. He explained:

"Names like O. Henry, Richard Harding Davis and Mabel Herbert Urner are bywords in every American home and the mere display of any of them is sufficient to attract immediate attention. At the same time they are what you might call 'newspaper copy names' and exhibitors will find editors ready to print every story about the productions based on the works of these literary giants, and they will get notices worthy of most feature films.

"Stories by such celebrated authors have never been bought for two-reel comedies before. Mr. Fox has dignified the short comedies by seeking the works of real literary celebrities and has made them worthy of editorial attention. And make no mistake, these productions will be the talk of the country before the season is over. They are great. In addition to being adaptations from the best literary material, the casts, direction and settings of these two reelers will stand comparison with any feature production ever made. They are five-reel stories and productions crammed into two reels."

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" to Be Made as Super Picture by Universal

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN," Harriet Beecher Stowe's world famed novel, is to be picturized by Universal as a super-special production, it has just been announced at the Universal home office. It will be put into work immediately.

The entire facilities of the vast Universal studio plant at Universal City will be placed at the disposal of the executives and technicians entrusted with the making of the picture.

The production will have an all star cast. No definite selections have been made yet, but the studio executives are combing the list of eligibles for the right players.

"Steppin' Out"

Columbia Pictures Ready for Comedy Demand With Fine Offering

Anticipating the great public demand this season for comedy, Columbia Pictures has responded with the third production scheduled for the 1925-26 Columbia series, "Steppin' Out."

Camera work has been completed on the feature which has been adapted from "The Lure of Broadway." Prominent in the cast of well known character players is Ford Sterling, the famous comedian.

The picture was made on a scale that justifies the world "lavish." Harry Cohn, Production Manager for Columbia gave orders that no expense was to be spared to make it one of the most elaborate productions that has yet been released under the Columbia banner.

In line with these orders from Mr. Cohn, the whole company, consisting of over two hundred and fifty people was taken to Venice, California, where the famous La Riga Cafe and its orchestra were engaged for the big cabaret scene which is one of the many strong punch scenes in the picture.

A cast of favorites and character actors of repute in "Steppin' Out" includes such names, besides Ford Sterling, as Robert Agnew, Cissy Fitzgerald, Ethel Wales, Tom Ricketts and Lotus Thompson.

"Steppin' Out" will be ready for distribution to exchanges throughout the country very soon, as the cutting and titling are now completed.

The Editor's Views

WE have just enjoyed a real treat. And with it, come upon what strikes us as the outstanding novelty for presentation as part of Greater Movie Season.

With the cooperation of those pioneers, Thomas A. Edison and E. S. Porter, "The Great Train Robbery" and a number of still earlier releases have been combined in a single reel novelty that is certain to arouse no end of discussion during the industry's jubilee celebration.

Here is ready-made ad. copy. "The first word—and the last word in motion pictures"—a linking up of the short reel novelty to the current feature. Here is certain copy for photoplay editors.

And, aside from business thoughts, for picture men here is a treat that you don't want to miss. It will bring back many happy memories, give you many a chuckle.

New York Critics Praise "Sally of the Sawdust"

NEW YORK newspaper critics like D. W. Griffith's latest screen feature, "Sally of the Sawdust," just as well as the audiences at the Mark Strand Theatre seem to like it in its New York premiere, and are just about as unanimous in voicing their written approval as the audiences have been in giving their approval by frequent and spontaneous applause.

"Judging by the mirth and tears it elicited from an audience that packed the Strand to overflowing, 'Sally of the Sawdust' will reap a harvest of gold," said the reviewer for the New York Times. "It is quite obvious that Mr. Griffith intended this picture to be a commercial success, and with that end in view he aimed the shafts of his love story at the hearts of flappers and youths, balancing his adolescent appeal with the inclusion of clever comedy. In 'Sally of the Sawdust' Mr. Griffith not only nods to art, but he bows low to the box-office."

"D. W. Griffith offers a box-office picture in 'Sally of the Sawdust' which probably will make more money than any picture on Broadway this week," said Richard Watts, Jr., in the Herald Tribune. "There is no denying the entertainment values of the photoplay."

"'Sally of the Sawdust' is among the finest of all motion pictures yet made," wrote Quinn Martin in the New York World," and I am not so sure but that it is the screen's classic in mature character delineation. It has as lovely a story as the films have told, acted superbly, drawn in figures of living, breathing human beings, and all so exquisitely moulded as to form a moving and still a joyous drama of persons and circumstances."

"The Griffith genius for playing on the emotions flares forth in 'Sally of the Sawdust,' giving us a picture that is Chaplinesque in its comedy perfections," said Louella O. Parsons, in the New York American. "Combined with this excellent comedy tempo there is drama that is Griffith at his best."

"There's a glorious experience waiting for you at the Strand," said Mildred Spain in the New York Daily News. "Something new in movies. A movie that can shake you into laughter with horseplay or make you taut with emotion. A regular rogue of a movie. D. W. Griffith may have made better movies than 'Sally of the Sawdust' but I doubt it. At least this one will be the most universally liked."

"D. W. Griffith is a juggler—a juggler of laughter and tears. He tosses a tear away only to clutch at a laugh and he never makes a slip," wrote Dorothy Day in the Morning Telegraph. "But Mr. Griffith is more. He is a great director, and for proof of this let me refer you to 'Sally of the Sawdust.' It is a delightful business to be able to record that the audience at the Strand almost 'stopped the show' several times with their applause at the antics of Carol Dempster and W. C. Fields. The picture is full of touches such as Mr. Griffith knows only too well how to make. You'll love 'Sally of the Sawdust,' and if you don't there's something the matter with you."

"'Sally of the Sawdust' is so excellent a film, thanks to the combination of D. W. Griffith and W. C. Fields, that a poor movie fan who sees inferior pictures weeks upon weeks will be pardoned if he enjoys the luxury of shouting his head off in praise," said the reviewer for the Evening Telegram.

"'Sally of the Sawdust' is a good picture and it is an interesting picture as well," said the critic for the Evening Post. "Sally and her 'Pop' are the picture, and they are quite enough."

Stirring Response in Cleveland to Lavish Exploitation on William Fox's "Lightnin'"

AN exploitation campaign of unprecedented proportions preceded the Cleveland showing of the William Fox picture "Lightnin'." That the effort was prolific of results was amply substantiated by the crowds that stormed B. F. Keith's Palace Theatre on the opening day. For despite the sultriness of the weather, "Lightnin'" opened to capacity business on Sunday afternoon, and the evening attendance record completely smashed the high record recently achieved at the Palace by another Fox picture, "The Iron Horse."

A well-organized special newspaper campaign was conducted in the four Cleveland newspapers. The Plain Dealer carried the "Lightnin' Liar Contest" on Wednesday of the week before the picture opened and carried a daily story on the contest up to the Tuesday after "Lightnin'" opened. Over 350 replies were received on the contest before the opening. The contest being arranged to bring out and publish the biggest lies ever told. The first prize offered being $10; the second, $7.50; third, $5.00; twelve pairs of tickets were offered as minor awards. The judges were Ward Marsh, photoplay editor; John R. Royal, manager of the Palace, and the Fox exploitation representative.

Three hundred invitations were sent out for a special screening of the picture, which was held on Tuesday before the opening. The screening was attended by prominent people, leaders of clubs and local associations. Refreshments were served by the management after the screening.

On Sunday, the opening day, each program issued by the Palace contained a postal card, upon which patrons were invited to express their opinions of the picture. These opinions were used in various newspaper ads. One striking point about the post cards was that many of them came from towns in Ohio that are quite distant from Cleveland, proving thereby that the opening draw was not confined to Cleveland alone.

The Postal Telegraph Company cooperated in the campaign by using in their eight branch offices a special window sheet displaying a telegram from Jay Hunt and Madge Bellamy, and stating that Postal Service was "Lightnin' Service," etc.

A hitherto unused exploitation device was the use of bee "exploiters." This consisted of ten hives of bees in glass-enclosed cases, so that they could be seen swarming over the cones making honey. Two of the hives were placed on tables in front of the theatre, and eight cases were displayed about town in advantageous locations. Cards on the cases read: "These are the bees that 'Lightnin' Bill Jones drove over the desert in midwinter—See 'Lightnin' at the Palace."

Honey was also employed as an exploitation medium. Three thousand small jars of honey were used with special labels on the jars reading: "This honey was made by the bees used in "Lightnin' at the Palace." The jars were given out at the four newspaper offices, in all departments. Several house employees also distributed the honey to all the offices in the City Hall, city courts, police headquarters, and even in the city jail. This stunt attracted considerable attention.

"Havoc," Fox Picture, Gets Street Parade in St. Louis

AN outstanding feature of the exploitation campaign that accompanied the St. Louis showing of "Havoc" was an auto parade that toured the streets for several days preceding the showing.

The auto parade was made possible by a tie-up arrangement with the Durant motor car company, who loaned fifteen new star cars for the stunt. The cars bore large banners reading: "You Won't Play Havoc If You Buy A Star," "Buy A Star and You Won't Play HAVOC With Your Bank Roll," etc. Other banners also carried the names of the cast, and play date.

Two laundry wagons, one car advertising a shock-absorber and two Chevrolets also took part in the turnout. The laundry wagons carried signs reading: "The National Laundry Won't Play HAVOC With Your Wash," with the car demonstrating the shock-absorber, and the Chevrolets carrying similar Havoc signs.

The great length of this stunt touring all the principal thoroughfares attracted great attention, and undoubtedly contributed largely to the successful engagements of "Havoc" at the Kings and Rivoli theatres. The parade comprised the biggest film exploitation stunt ever seen on the streets of St. Louis, and reflects great credit on Al J. Marks, the publicity man who staged it, in cooperation with the Fox exploitation department.

Dependable's New Franchise

A. C. Snyder Buys New England From Astor Distributing Corp.

A. C. Snyder, general manager of Dependable Pictures Corp., of Boston, announced this week that he had acquired the franchise of New England for all of the Astor Distributing Corporation product. This includes eight Bernarr Macfadden True Story productions, the first of which is "The Wrongdoers," starring Lionel Barrymore, and the second of which is now in production, "False Pride," starring Owen Moore and Faire Binney. Included also are the Madeline Brandeis production, "The Shining Adventure," starring Percy Marmont, with Mabel Ballin and Ben Alexander; "The Business of Love," a Jess Robbins production starring Edward Everett Horton, with Zasu Pitts and Barbara Bedford in the cast; and the Astor Aristocrat production, "Child Wives," which will be a special picture on a big theme, to be released in the Fall.

Mr. Snyder's name is a new one in the franchise field but he has been actively interested in motion pictures for a number of years, having financed numerous motion picture projects and being a silent partner in others. His policy, he said, would be "not how many pictures, but how good and concentrating on the good ones."

To Film "Morals for Men"

Work is under way for the casting of the Tiffany Production "Morals For Men" suggested by "The Luck Serum" by Gouverneur Morris.

According to M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the company, who is at present in Hollywood, this picture will be produced in the same lavish manner as "Souls For Sables."

A Ton of Fun

Joe Rock, producing Standard Comedies for Film Booking Offices release, has completed work on the first of these series, entitled "Tailoring." This comedy stars the three funniest fat men of the screen, "Tiny" Alexander, "Fatty" Karr and "Kewpie" Ross, who will achieve film fame under the sobriquet of "A Ton of Fun."

Celebrated Players Contracts for Truart's Series of Novelty Films

J. S. GRAUMAN, president of the Celebrated Players, Inc. of Milwaukee announces that in addition to having the franchise for the Tiffany Big Twelve by famous authors and the Six Truart Blue Ribbon features, he has contracted with Truart Film Corporation for their series of Four Novelty Productions featuring Rex, the Wonder Dog and Black Beauty, the Marvelous Horse and the series of Four Cinemelodramas and the Special Truart feature "Romance Road" featuring Raymond McKee. This deal was consummated by John N. Weber, representing the Truart Film Corporation.

On his trip to the Middle West, Mr. Weber accompanied by Jerry Abrams, District Manager of the Renown Pictures, Inc. of Chicago, also sold the franchise for the St. Louis territory which embraces Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri for the Tiffany Big Twelve by famous authors, the Four Novelty Productions and the Four Truart Cinemelodramas to the Columbia Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Weber also closed the deal for the Four Truart Novelty productions for the Minneapolis territory which embraces Minnesota and North and South Dakota, to L. H. (Mickey) Coen general manager of the Screen Classics Corporation.

Exploiting "Lightnin'" in Cleveland

from Hollywood to John Royal, wishing "Lightnin'" a successful engagement. The wires were mounted on a three-sheet board and displayed in the lobby throughout the engagement, together with enlargements of criticisms of the picture culled from New York newspapers.

One of the most extensive billboard campaigns ever put on in Cleveland, was also a feature of the "Lightnin'" drive.

The Cleveland critics treated the production very well, giving the picture and story splendid notices. A few excerpts from the reviews follow:

"This super-film is a worthy cinema production of the original drama. . . . If we judge the picture in its entirety, it is unquestionably a splendid contribution to the films of high grade produced by the Fox Company . . . we have nothing but commendation for those responsible for this production of 'Lightnin'' . . . Jay Hunt's acting as Bill Jones, is delightful; he catches the spirit of the old ne'er-do-well, and plays with a consistency that impresses one with 'Lightnin'' Bill's lovableness. . . . We are satisfied that this Fox film will take its place among the screen dignitaries."—J. Wilson Roy, Times.

"The film follows the stage play as faithfully as a devoted dog tags after a kind and tolerant master."—W. Ward Marsh, Plain Dealer.

"They will undoubtedly experience a strange feeling of pleasantness while viewing 'Lightnin'. It is a relief to get away from the wild jazz parties and false atmosphere one generally finds in pictures—if only for a couple of hours."—Harry O'Rourke, News.

"The movie follows the stage play faithfully."—Davis, Press.

JULIAN ELTINGE TRIES OUT WIGS AND DRESSES FOR "MADAME LUCY"

Julian Eltinge tries out wigs and dresses for "Madame Lucy." The most famous man who ever wore a skirt dons his wig for the first day's shooting on the new Al. Christie feature comedy. Scott Sidney, who will direct, is the husky gentleman, while the others are Norman McLeod, gag man; F. McGrew Willis, who has adapted the French farce; and Anton Nagy, head of the Christie photographic department and Gus Peterson, cameraman on the picture.

Maurice B. ("Lefty") Flynn, star of F. B. O.'s "Hands Up," is saluting his exhibitor friends with a "Greater Movie Season" card of huge proportions.

"Thru Three Reigns"

Red Seal Featurette Tops Program at the California, 'Frisco

An interesting example of the importance of good short subjects on the exhibitor's program was made apparent when "Thru Three Reigns," a Red Seal Featurette, played at the California Theatre, San Francisco, last week.

"It is hard to imagine a two-reel picture walking away with a whole program," said the Chronicle reviewer, "but that comes very near to being a true statement of fact regarding the program at the California Theatre. 'Thru Three Reigns' is a vivid object lesson in the tremendous significance of the motion picture to posterity.

"Three decades are spread out before you; history itself marches before your eyes through the magic of a thing that but yesterday was considered a toy. Here are actual scenes of Victoria's funeral procession, Edward, Prince of Wales, soon to be Edward VII, rides beside his first cousin, Kaiser Wilhelm. Time passes, and at Edward's funeral one sees the Grand Duke Ferdinand of Austria. He has only four years to live, and his death will plunge the nations of the earth into the most terrible conflict since time began. Here is drama. The puny product of fictioneers who write for the screen seems as nothing compared to this."

A Big Trailer

John C. Flinn, vice president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, who is now in Los Angeles, has arranged for the preparation of a 1,500-foot "trailer" consisting of comprehensive scenes from the first ten productions to be released by Pro.-Dis.-Co. during the 1925-26 season.

Prints of this mammoth trailer will be sent to all Pro.-Dis.-Co. exchanges as a direct-from-the-studio aid to the sales department, and it will be used as concrete evidence of the quality of the productions which the exhibitors are now being asked to book.

"Our Gang" on Pathe Program For Week of August 23rd

TWO-REEL comedy honors on the Pathe release schedule for the week of August 23rd are shared by Ralph Graves and "Our Gang" in vehicles from the Mack Sennett and Hal Roach Studios, respectively. A Grantland Rice "Sportlight," a chapter of the Patheserial "Play Ball," "Topics of the Day," "Aesop's Film Fables," Pathe Review and Pathe News complete the program of short subjects.

Ralph Graves appears to decided advantage in "Don't Tell Dad," one of Mack Sennett's funniest two-reelers. Graves is a youth who is completely dominated by his father until the fond parent atempts to tell him whom he should marry. Then the son rebels. But in dodging the girl of father's choice he falls in love with her and after much fun all ends well. Natalie Kingston is the girl and Marvin Lobach is seen as a rotund detective employed by the boy's father.

"Our Gang" comes to the fore in a very novel comedy production in "Mary, Queen of Tots." The Hal Roach staff has concocted two-reels of very genuine fun. Little Mary is presented with dolls, exact replicas of all the boy members of the "Gang." Then the little queen falls asleep and in her dream "Our Gang" comes to life in diminutive doll-size, while Mary feels quite gigantic. When Mary awakens the real "Gang" arrives and then a jolly party takes place.

"Play Ball," the Patheserial written by John J. McGraw and adapted by Frank Leon Smith, reaches chapter six, entitled "The Show Down." Allene Ray, in her role of Doris Sutton is decoyed to a river-side hut by agents of the villain.

"Seven Ages of Sport," the new Grantland Rice "Sportlight," reveals that "Today the world is a sporting stage from the cradle to the grave and that there is always some form of play which appeals to the millions in all periods of life." J. L. Hawkinson produced this subject.

Pathe Review No. 34 presents three highly entertaining subjects: 'Some Moroccan Matters," incidents in the life of a race of conquerors; "The Waters of Niort," Pathecolor views of the canal town of Southwest France; and "From the Inside Out," a fish-eye view of what goes on under water.

Completing the Pathe schedule of August 23rd are "Over the Plate," one of the "Aesop's Film Fables"; "Topics of the Day," the reel of wit and humor; and two issues of Pathe News.

Grauman and Mayer Sign for "Ben Hur"

To the tune of fifteen hundred hammers, wielded by carpenters erecting the gigantic Circus Maximus set for "Ben Hur," Louis B. Mayer and Sid Grauman signed contracts for the premiere presentation of that picture on the Pacific Coast. The contract involves the most pretentious booking in the history of motion pictures, both from the standpoint of money and artistic presentation.

Acting in the official capacity of witness to the signing of the agreements, Will Hays was the third party to the consummation of a film deal which calls for the run of one or more years of a film production at one theatre.

Seated on nail kegs and using a pile of lumber as a desk, Messrs. Mayer and Grauman signed the agreements as the big Circus set grew before their eyes, after making a tour of the set which lasted an hour.

A peculiar angle to the contract signed by Messrs. Mayer and Grauman is the fact that the arrangement does not call for the presentation of the picture in any specific theatre in Hollywood, although it is believed the film will be shown at Grauman's Egyptian. The western premiere under Grauman's supervision will take place the latter part of the fall.

"We will start immediatey on the preparations for the presentation of this great production," said Mr. Grauman after signing the agreements. "It will take us months to work out the plans we have in mind for this presentation. Just as Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have made this picture the biggest thing in the history of film production so will we attempt to make this the biggest thing in the exhibition of films. I am delighted over the fact that I will be privileged to present this epoch-making picturization."

Mr. Mayer expressed equal enthusiasm over the fact that Sid Grauman will present this picture for the first time on the West Coast. "We are indeed fortunate in having the genius of Sid Grauman in the presentation of 'Ben Hur,'" he said. "We know we can expect a marvelous setting for this picture from him."

MARCEL DE SANO

Educational Is Exploiting All Its Current Releases

THE exploitation division of Educational Pictures has gone in for a campaign on current releases that can be used anywhere.

A precedent for exploitation of two-reel comedies on Broadway has been established through a window display tie-up in one of the most prominent locations on the Great White Way boosting "The Tourist," the first of the 1925-26 series of Tuxedo Comedies, released by Educational, which is showing this week at the Rialto Theatre.

The display arranged by the Rialto Theatre is in the big window of the Picard Motor Sales Company, Inc., authorized Ford dealers, on Broadway between 51st and 52nd Streets, opposite the Piccadilly Theatre.

A life size painted cut-out of Johnny Arthur, star of "The Tourist," showing him seated before a dilapidated Ford, the engine of which serves the tourist as his complete kitchen equipment, is featured in the window display opposite a new Ford coupe. In the foreground of the window are displayed ten stills from "The Tourist," mounted and each carrying a caption tying up the comedy, the Ford car and the Picard Company. A card, the size of a one-sheet, mounted on an easel, announces prominently that "The Tourist" is showing at the Rialto Theatre.

A publicity and exploitation campaign of unusual scope for a two-reel subject is being worked out on the Educational Pictures Special, "Wild Beasts of Borneo," a thrilling adventure picture which Educational is releasing for first runs in August.

Several big news photo services and a window display advertising service are broadcasting photographs showing some of the startling scenes of ferocious animals taken by Mr. and Mrs. Lou C. Hutt during their two year expedition into the darkest jungles of Borneo.

Educational is issuing a concise but complete press sheet to assist exhibitors in their local exploitation. Several advertising and publicity cuts are illustrated and the press sheet provides publicity stories for newspapers, suggestions for type ads, program paragraphs, etc., and a number of valuable suggestions for exploitation stunts.

Cooperation of the National Biscuit Company, manufacturers of Barnum's Animal Crackers, has been obtained to arrange window display tie-ups with local grocers. The 2,200 salesmen of the National Biscuit Company throughout the country are being instructed to assist grocers in arranging tie-ups which will exploit the animal crackers and "Wild Beasts of Borneo."

Marcel De Sano Signs New Contract With B. P. Schulberg

AS a result of the conspicuous success he made with his initial picture, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," Marcel De Sano director find, has signed a new contract which secures his exclusive services to B. P. Schulberg for an extended period of time.

De Sano's treatment of this first story is said to be sensational and following the West Coast preview overtures for his services were made by three of the largest producing organizations in the industry.

He has selected, however, to continue work under the supervision of B. P. Schulberg who became convinced of his ability some months ago and gave him his first opportunity to produce a feature picture.

De Sano's work, is is asserted, follows a new technique that makes his advent into film-making of equal importance to that of Monta Bell, Dimitri Buchowetzki and others of the "new school."

The next Preferred Picture to be assigned to his newly arrived director will be an elaborate and spectacular version of Bronson Howard's Civil War Play, "Shenandoah." Filming is scheduled to begin late in August. In the meantime, De Sano is supervising work on the script.

"The Wild Girl" Completed

"The Wild Girl," the second of the Truart Novelty Productions in which Rex, the wonder dog and Black Beauty, the marvelous horse are featured is now finished and is being edited by Frank Hadden Ware. It is scheduled for early Fall release on the Truart Program.

Fay Wray Signs With Universal

Fay Wray, popular and petite young leading woman in comedies, has signed with Universal, and will play leads with that company. She formerly was under contract with the Roach Company.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. (left), handing Lupino Lane, the famous comedian, a contract for six Lupino Lane comedies. At right, these gentlemen are seen on one of the sets which Lane is using while making his first Educational release.

HARRIETT HAMMOND

Hunt Stromberg has signed Miss Hammond under a long term contract to appear in his productions, with possible stardom in the near future. Miss Hammond, who is known as "the loveliest blonde in pictures," will make her debut under her new contract as Harry Carey's leading woman in "The Man From Red Gulch," Stromberg's new Harry Carey feature for Producers Distributing Corporation.

Reichenbach Organizes

To Have Own Exploitation and Representation Offices—Marc Lachmann Associated

Harry Reichenbach, prominent exploiteer and the man that paved the way for big exploitation of big motion picture presentations, announces the organization of his own publicity, exploitation and representation offices. Marc Lachmann, formerly with Universal and Thomas H. Ince who recently resigned from Metro-Goldwyn to manage his own free lance bureau the past year, will be associated with Reichenbach in the new venture.

The new organization has taken offices in the Straus Building, 46th street and Fifth avenue, New York, and will function on or before August 10.

It is Reichenbach's plan to represent his clients and to handle all their business affairs as well as see that an individual exploitation and publicity campaign will blanket the entire world for each client. The scope will include independent attractions, organizations, stars and personalities of public life.

Reichenbach needs no introduction in the film business. His last affiliation prior to his departure for Europe was with Famous Players. His last big campaign was on "Grass" at the Criterion.

Leonard With Bray

Frank Leonard, sport cartoonist, has joined the staff of the Bray Studios. He was elected a member of the "Gag" committee and will be one of Walter Lantz's assistants in the production of the new Dinky Doodle series and the Unnatural History series, which F. B. O. will release during the season of 1925 and 1926.

Tom Tyler's Picture

"Let's Go, Gallagher," a story by Percy Heath and James Gruen, will be the first vehicle for Tom Tyler, new F. B. O. star.

"Goose Woman" Has Premiere; Miss Dresser's Work Lauded

"THE GOOSE WOMAN," the Universal-Jewel Second White List picture made by Clarence Brown with Louise Dresser and Jack Pickford in the featured roles, had its New York premiere this week in the Colony Theatre, Broadway at Fifty-third street, and was received by New York as one of the season's outstanding pictures. In Louise Dresser, critics and public are hailing a new screen luminary.

Without exception, the New York newspaper critics lauded the picture as of extraordinary interest. In this they echoed the opinions of the trade paper reviewers, who, seeing the production two weeks ago, unanimously characterized it as a remarkable film.

As the latest Clarence Brown Production, "The Goose Woman" adds new laurels to the long list of Universal successes that director has had, and both trade and newspaper critics pay due credit to his ability in translating "The Goose Woman" to the screen. Rex Beach, the popular author of the story, in an enthusiastic letter to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, rendered high praise both to Miss Dresser and to Brown.

In appreciation of Miss Dresser's work in this picture, her first big screen role, Mr. Laemmle has arranged for a professional matinee at the Colony Theatre Friday, at which her many friends on the New York stage and screen may see her triumph in the new field. As a stage and musical comedy star, Miss Dresser is known nation-wide. To her credit goes the popularization of many songs and ballads which were the rage a few years back.

As a special tribute to this phase of Miss Dresser's career, Edward Kilenyi, musical director at the Colony, is arranging a musical presentation for Friday's professional matinee in which various songs made popular by Miss Dresser when she was a musical comedy star, will be used. Among these will be Miss Dresser's three favorites, "My Gal Sal," "I Remember You" and "On the Banks of the Wabash."

The New York Times said: "'The Goose Woman,' the present film attraction at the Colony, is an unusually interesting production. In this picture Miss Dresser demonstrates her talent as a screen actress. Her performance is so remarkable that it has been the talk of Hollywood for the last six weeks."

The Herald Tribune: "A striking characterization by Louise Dresser and some shrewd direction by Clarence Brown make an arresting photoplay out of Rex Beach's novel 'The Goose Woman.' The picture is essentially Miss Dresser's triumph. She is poignant, sincere and always believable as the old woman."

The New York American: "It takes something more than everyday ability to portray a thoroughly sordid character and make the audience understand and condone. In doing this, Louise Dresser has unexpectedly proved herself an unusually fine actress."

The New York Sun: "One of the most striking character studies that have made their way into the movies in many a day."

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Schildkraut learn a thing or two about making "movies" from son Joseph, who entertains his parents between shots of "The Road to Yesterday," in which he plays the male lead under Cecil B. DeMille's direction. This production is a Producers Distributing Corporation release.

Four Warner Productions Soon Ready for Shipment

FOUR of Warner Brothers' big comedy hits of the year are now in the cutting room and soon will be shipped east.

"Bunker Bean," the Harry Leon Wilson farce that Harry Beaumont has made with Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore is being edited. This story is regarded as an American classic by all and sundry. The fact that it was written over twenty years ago and is still modern speaks for itself. Matt Moore as the dreaming stenographer who is told he is the re-incarnation of Napoleon is supreme. He fits the role perfectly.

"Syd" Chaplin's first picture for Warner Brothers, "The Man on the Box," is finished and being cut and titled. Those on the inside say it far surpasses anything this comedian has yet played. When Harold MacGrath wrote this story he had little idea it would ever be made into a motion picture but as a stage play it was a huge success. In the picture version, Chaplin and his director, Charles Reisner, have topped that.

"The Love Hour," a comedy drama directed by Herman Raymaker, was finished last week. Ruth Clifford, Huntly Gordon, Louise Fazenda, John Roche and Willard Louis have the leading roles. This story has some great situations rising to the dramatic on one side and rare comedy on the other.

"Seven Sinners," change from "The Burglar Alarm," is also being edited. This is the first picture to be made by the new director, Lewis Milestone, a former scenario writer. This, too, is a comedy drama and with a great cast. There are only seven people in the entire picture and each one a sinner. They are Marie Prevost, Olive Brook, John Patrick, Claude Gillingwater, Mathilde Brundage, and a policeman.

This is the first time Clive Brook has played a comedy role in pictures, but when one remembers his first part as leading man on the stage was in Avery Hopwood's "Twin Beds," they know he is more than capable of handling such a role.

Helen Dunbar in a scene in "Satan in Sables," a Warner Brothers picture starring Lowell Sherman.

First Eight Releases of Warner Bros. "40" Classics

THOUGH exact dates are yet to be decided upon, Warner Bros. have fixed the order of release of the first eight of the forty productions on their program of Screen Classics for 1925-26.

"The Limited Mail," adapted from Elmer E. Vance's play, a thrilling melodrama starring Monte Blue, is to be the first release.

"The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted," from Gertie de Wentworth James' novel of domestic life and political intrigue, comes second. Irene Rich is starred in this production.

"Bobbed Hair," a Marie Prevost starring vehicle, the picturization of the celebrated novel whose twenty chapters were the work of twenty different writers, comes third on the list.

Then follows, "Below the Line," adapted from Charles A. Logue's melodramatic magazine story, the first Rin-Tin-Tin picture on the new program.

Patsy Ruth Miller will star in "Rose of the World," a dramatic offering picturizing the popular novel by Kathleen Norris.

The sixth release is also the first Matt Moore-Dorothy Devore comedy on the schedule, "His Majesty Bunker Bean" from the play by Lee Wilson Dodd, which was based on Harry Leon Wilson's novel.

"Syd" Chaplin's first comedy in the list is the adaptation of Harold MacGrath's novel and play, "The Man on the Box."

Release No. 8 introduces Lowell Sherman in "Satan in Sables," an original story by Bradley King.

This list, covering a wide field in theme, character of entertainment and personality of stars, is typical of the entire forty on the Warner 1925-26 schedule.

Willard Louis and Louise Fazenda are ripping in comedy—so much so that Warner Bros. are now considering a suggestion to star them as a comedy team.

"Souls for Sables" Completed

The second of the Tiffany Big Twelve "Souls For Sables" has been completed and is now in the course of cutting and titling. Claire Windsor and Eugene O'Brien are the featured players and are supported by a well-known cast of players including Claire Adams, Eileen Percy, Anders Randolf, George Fawcett, Robert Ober and Edith Yorke.

Ernst Lubitsch and Warner Bros. Stars Win Praise of N. Y. Critics for "Kiss Me Again"

WARNER BROS. "Kiss Me Again," Ernst Lubitsch's latest production, scored such a decided hit at the Piccadilly Theatre, New York, last week that Managing Director Lee A. Ochs held it over a second week.

With a unanimity that is rare, picture reviewers acclaimed this one of the most delightful and most expertly handled photoplays which has ever been presented. Extracts from reviews in the daily papers follow:

American: "The word masterpiece has been so often misused that it no longer means very much. But this comedy really deserves to be called a masterpiece of directing. Lubitsch has made a picture so fascinating that you dread the end. Then the end comes, just when it should, and is only an added delight. The cast is splendid. The three actors and two actresses are so capable that they would probably have been good anyway, but under Lubitsch's direction they give a flawless performance."

Daily News: "The direction is champagne. The plot whipped cream. And altogether let it be said right now that this is one of the best pictures of the year. You'll fairly purr with delight. It's the witty, sophisticated film stuff that is so rare. Lubitsch is a wonderful storyteller. He's disarming and subtle, risque and blandly innocent. Marie Prevost makes Loulou a charming little scamp. A story of this sort is her metier, if that means what I think it does. The performance of Monte Blue is unquestionably the best thing he has ever done."

Times: "Is directed with such ease and charm that one is kept in a merry mood for its full length. It has many deft and delightful touches. Miss Prevost and Monte Blue are delightful in their roles. Mr. Louis is capital as the lawyer. This is an admirable production, in which one sees Lubitsch's genius."

Daily Mirror: "With the skilled hand of the artist, Lubitsch has shaped a scintillating comedy from a bubbling, vaporish story. It is handled with delicious effectiveness, and the ending, especially, bears the stamp of the one and only Lubitsch. Marie Prevost and Monte Blue achieve brilliant histrionic heights under Lubitsch's direction. Marie plays with a delicate subtlety hitherto foreign and Monte inspires chuckles. The other three principals also do good work."

Herald-Tribune: "Ernst Lubitsch, master of the smart and sophisticated in film comedy, has found the screen equivalent of spoken wit in 'Kiss Me Again.' It is perhaps the most coldly brilliant and sparklingly gay thing that has ever been seen in motion pictures. Certainly there is no comedy in New York, either on stage or screen, as suave and distinguished as this picture. Lubitsch is the Oscar Wilde of pantomime, the Max Beerbohm of shadows. There are hundreds of delightful directorial touches, bits of shrewdly humorous pantomime and scenes of subtle interplay of character. The playing seems perfect. Monte Blue and John Roche are here brilliant comedians. And those piquant young actresses, Marie Prevost and Clara Bow, play with enormous skill, while Willard Louis makes even a bit memorable."

ERNST LUBITSCH

Morning Telegraph: "Sophisticated audiences will eat it up and every other kind of audience will enjoy it too, for Lubitsch has inspired his popular cast to put over somewhat racy humor in gay and innocent style. It is as good and if not better than 'The Marriage Circle,' with more human appeal. From the very beginning it is sheer delight. Lubitsch, expert skater on the thin ice of farce, has never performed more gracefully. It takes a Lubitsch to appreciate a Marie Prevost. In his hands she becomes one of the most charming comediennes on the screen."

Evening Graphic: "Lubitsch has added another gem to the already glittering crown of his cinemo achievements. 'Kiss Me Again' is a rare treat. It bubbles over with wit, charm and vivacity, is as Frenchy as the Champs Elysees, and its situations are handled in the deftly sophisticated manner that has placed Mr. Lubitsch at the head of the list of very capable directors. Marie Prevost is charming as Loulou. She plays her at just the right tempo. Monte Blue is well cast, John Roche gives a fine account of himself and Clara Bow is perfect. You won't want to miss seeing 'Kiss Me Again.' It contains all the ingredients necessary to make a perfect picture. Ernst Lubitsch has rung the bell again."

Evening World: "When weighty minds get together months hence to catalogue the year's best offerings they will be in duty bound to give this one a place very near the top. Through it all can be detected the deft hand of Lubitsch, and all of the players have caught his artistry and arisen to unwonted heights. Marie Prevost and Monte Blue do the best characterizations of their careers. In the hands of Lubitsch Miss Prevost, particularly, is revealed as one of the most delicious comediennes of the screen."

Evening Journal: "First of all, 'Kiss Me Again' ought to have a sub-title, 'See This Again.' It is an exceptional comedy—sophisticated, brilliant, frothy, clever—absolutely delightful, and with a lilting leitmotif, if that means what we think it does. It's just the kind of plot which Lubitsch, with his inimitable touches, can make a piquant pleasure. Marie's a great little actress, and Monte and Roche are perfectly cast. And the direction of the entire production is so deft, the situations are so sparkling, and the acting is so understanding that we insist—no we urge—you to go see it."

Sun: "A delightful photoplay, abounding in delicate, subtle pantomimic wit. It is to the average photoplay centering around the age old triangle as champagne is to skimmed milk. Indeed, it is quite, quite brilliant, and I think it will be enjoyed to the utmost by all lovers of the naughty, the true and the beautiful. The acting is the most satisfying since 'Forbidden Paradise' (also directed by Lubitsch) came to town. Marie Prevost is a joy, never striking a false note, and never overplaying even by a hair's breadth. She is alert and vibrant and understanding. Excellent samples of high comedy acting are also donated by Monte Blue, John Roche, Willard Louis and Clara Bow."

West Coast Girls En Route to Paramount East Studios

ESTHER RALSTON AND GERTRUDE ASTER, charmink Paramount players, have left Hollywood and are en route to New York, for work in the Long Island City studios of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Miss Ralston, the beautiful blonde Mrs. Darling in "Peter Pan," is to play the role of the fairy gadmother in Herbert Brenon's forthcoming production of "A Kiss For Cinderella" for Paramount. She is now on her way to New York from California.

The choice of Miss Ralston is a result of Director Brenon's growing conviction that he is working on a greater picture than "Peter Pan." Before starting he submitted the script and screen tests to Sir James Barrie, as he did before beginning "Peter Pan." As in the previous instance, Mr. Barrie chose Betty Bronson for the leading role and Mr. Brenon began work hoping he would have the rare luck he did a year ago in finding perfect types for other important roles.

Several well known players have been tested for the role of the fairy godmother. They have worn the costumes designed for the part, have been rehearsed by Mr. Brenon and even given screen tests. As the search has proceeded he has stated repeatedly that it was a rare piece of good fortune that made three screen finds possible in "Peter Pan."

A few days ago he phoned Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production, who is in California, that he is convinced only Miss Ralston will play the role satisfactorily. Mr. Lasky agreed with him and a quick effort to arrange the production schedule to make this possible was carried out.

As a result two of the girls who have become famous since the release of their first important effort last Christmas will be seen in another Christmas picture by the author and director.

After a successful season on the screen in Hollywood, Miss Aster is on her way to New York for an important part in Gloria Swanson's new Paramount starring production, "Stage Struck."

Miss Aster was chosen for a part in Miss Swanson's next production by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production. "Stage Struck" is from the Saturday Evening Post story by Arthur Stringer.

Lawrence Gray will play the lead opposite Miss Swanson, and Allan Dwan will direct the production.

To Direct "Unguarded Hour"

Lambert Hillyer has been selected by Earl Hudson to direct "The Unguarded Hour" for First National.

On board T. Coleman Du Pont's yacht "The Tech," used in "The Midshipman," Ramon Novarro's first starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Director Christy Cabanne, Harriet Hammond, who plays the leading feminine role, Lieutenant Commander Lowry, of the Navy Welfare Office; Commander Herbert A. Jones, who is supervising the production and William A. Orr, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer representative.

J. Stuart Blackton, who is to make four pictures for Warner Brothers during the year.

Myer Lesser Discusses Bonded Advertising

166,165 columns of space in 533 newspapers. We hope to reach the 300,000 column mark, basing our calculations on figures now under analysis.

"The 'paper' for the newspaper serializations, as well as the introduction to each installment of a serial, will reflect Warner Pictures in no doubtful way. The serials will be coupled with local showings, whereever possible, and in addition to this, we shall furnish box-office ammunition in the way of nation-wide publicity, commercial tie-ups, exploitation, etc., carried out on a large scale."

Myer Lesser was born in Chicago, attended school in the Windy City, and studied law at the Northwestern University. He practiced law in Chicago for several years, and with his brother, Lee J. Lesser, now one of the most prominent real estate men in Chicago, Myer went to Cincinnati about twenty years ago, and started a mail order business. Following a brief period, Myer turned to advertising, and began work as a solicitor for the Blaine-Thompson Company. He liked it so well (scoring one success after another) that he finally bought the business. He keeps in touch with his office in Cincinnati, no matter where he is, and three times a day he talks to his associates there. Mr. Lesser is married, and has a family, and is establishing himself in a home in New York City. This will lessen his cares, in some degree, but he plans to travel a great deal during the next two or three months, visiting the Warner Bros. Exchanges.

Kenneth Webb to Direct

Kenneth Webb, who is directing Richard Barthelmess in "The Beautiful City," has been selected to direct the young star in "Just Suppose," his next production for First National Pictures. Mr. Webb is now well into the production of "The Beautiful City," which is an original story of the New York East Side by Edmund Goulding.

F. B. O. Builds Program For Five Western Stars

THE insistent demands among exhibitors for high class western pictures impelled Film Booking Offices to add another western star in the person of Tom Tyler, to its rapidly growing roster of outdoor players.

With the new stellar addition, practically every department of athletics is represented by the company. Fred Thomson, Maurice ("Lefty") Flynn, Dick Talmadge, Bob Custer and Tom Tyler all hold world's or American record marks, and each star demonstrates his own particular athletic prowess in the productions which are selected for him.

Tom Tyler, for instance, holds the American and world's record in weight lifting in two events; the one hand "clean and jerk" at 240½ pounds and the two hand "snatch" at 213 pounds. He is also considered the strongest man in Hollywood, as one should be who can "muscle-up" two hundred and forty pounds in one hand. He is an expert horseman and has also played a lot of football, and is a track and field star of note. All these qualifications were taken into consideration when his first story, "Let's Go Gallagher!", was selected. The production which is being directed by James Gruen and Robert De Lacey from the script by Percy Heath, deals with the difficulties of an insolvent young cowboy who suddenly finds himself made foreman of a ranch belonging to a girl. All the men under him, save one rheumatic relic named Bendy Mulligan, have it in for the new foreman as well as for the pretty owner. Thrilling fights and several sequences depicting Tyler's superior strength are high-sopts in the picture. The cast is adequate all around, and Tyler himself is a wallop in the title role.

Fred Thomson, who is fast coming to the front as one of the greatest exponents of he-man roles on the screen, is known as a man of unusual stunt ability and forceful personality. He was world's champion all-around athletic for three years, 1910, 1911 and 1913. and still holds the world's record for highest number of points scored by any athlete, 7577. This record has never been equalled. His own brother, present champion, is his nearest opponent with 7,519 points. Thomson's new pictures are being made along novel lines, with plenty of wallop and originality injected without destroying the Western atmosphere which has always proved so popular.

"Ridin' The Wind," by Marion Jackson, who was responsible for most of Thomson's previous phenomenal successes, is serving Thomson as his next vehicle, following "The Wild Bull's Lair." Shooting on "Ridin' The Wind" will be completed this week, and Thomson, in his newest starring picture, again proves his ability as a rider and champion athlete. Silver King, as in previous Thomson productions, has a fat part. Del Andrews is again directing.

Bob Custer, the handsome young Texas Ranger, who is being starred in a series of western by Jesse Goldburg of Independent Pictures Corporation, completes this triumvirate of he-men. Bob is now at work on "A Man of Nerve," a story of the great open spaces, replete with fights and gun-play.

Sixteen N. Y. Circuits Take F. B. O.'s 1925-1926 Program

THE superior quality of F. B. O. productions and the company's reputation of making money for exhibitors because of its fair dealing in its selling arrangements has impelled sixteen of the largest circuits in New York to book the F. B. O. program for 1925-26 in its entirety.

Charles Rosenzweig, manager of the New York exchange, reports that the following circuits will play the F. B. O. product 100% in all their theatres:

Grossman & Joelson Circuit, Blinderman and Steinman, Meyer & Schneider Circuit, William Fox Theatrical Enterprises, Chrystmas & Roth Theatres, Greob and Knoble, Le Bracker Theatres, Small Straussberg Circuit, Barr Bros. Motto Circuit, Max Pear Circuit, Katz & Rosenzweig Circuit, Haring & Blumenthal Circuit, Henry Horcher Theatres, and the Jack Ungerfeld Theatres, New York.

F. B. O.'s line-up for the new season consists of 12 Gold Band productions, including "Drusilla With A Million," Parisian Nights" and "If Marriage Fails—" which played the Capitol and Colony Theatres, New York; "The Last Edition," Emory Johnson's tribute to the profession of journalism; "Happiness," another Johnson special which the young director-producer expects to film in Sweden; "The Futurity Winner," a turf drama by Louis Joseph Vance; "The Midnight Flyer," a railroad melodrama from the pen of Arthur Guy Empey, famous war hero; "The Keeper of the Bees," a story by Gene Stratton-Porter now running serially in McCall's Magazine, which James Leo Meehan transferred to the screen and which will appear in book form early in September; "When His Love Grew Cold" and "A Poor Girl's Romance," two of Laura Jean Libbey's most widely read romances, and "The Isle of Retribution," a novel of the frozen North by Edison Marshall.

The star specials include four Fred Thomson productions; eight melodramas starring Evelyn Brent, one of which, "Smooth as Satin," played the Capitol Theatre, New York, to capacity audiences; eight Maurice "Lefty" Flynn comedy dramas; eight Richard Talmadge stunt action dramas; eight Bob Custer westerns; and eight westerns starring Tom Tyler, the newest stellar addition to the F. B. O. roster.

Calcagni With Associated

David Calcagni, a leading pioneer Italian producer in this country, who has been production manager and chief cinematographer associated with Universal, Pathe, Metro and Fox since the earliest days, has at last realized a long cherished dream to produce pictures independently according to his own artistic ideals.

Mr. Calcagni, who is head of the Vera-Art Pictures, Inc., signed a long-term contract with Associated Exhibitors to produce a series of eight high-class pictures, which they will release and distribute through Pathe. Work on the first picture, which will be of metropolitan life, will start in about a few weeks at the Ideal Studios at Hudson Heights, N. J. A well-known director, now under consideration, will handle the megaphone.

Lantz Completes Scenario

Walter Lantz, Director General of the Bray Productions and his own scenario writer, has completed the scenario for the first of the Unnatural History series which the Bray Studios are releasing through F. B. O. The title of the first subject will be "How the Elephant Got His Trunk." Lantz and Charles Walters, the child star, will act in conjunction with the cartoon characters.

Writing Titles

Marian Ainslee, the title writer, is rapidly completeing the titling of Erich von Stroheim's "The Merry Widow," in which Mae Murray and John Gilbert have the starring roles. Director von Stroheim and Benjamin Glazer adapted this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production to the screen from the operetta produced by Henry W. Savage.

Warners Sign Scenarists

Phil Klein, son of Charles Klein, author of "The Third Degree," "The Lion and the Mouse" and other great plays, and Walter Morosco have been been added to the Warner Bros.' scenario staff. Morosco is the husband of Corinne Griffith. Both Klein and Morosco are now working with Charles Logue on "His Jazz Bride."

"The Big Parade"

Joseph W. Farnham, whose prominence in the motion picture world was doubled by his excellent titles for King Vidor's production of "Proud Flesh," featuring Eleanor Boardman, has been assigned by Irving G. Thalberg of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio to title Vidor's picture "The Big Parade," starring John Gilbert.

New Preferred Picture

On August 15 is scheduled the release of "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," the second Preferred Picture for the new season, according to a definite announcement just made by J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution of B. P. Schulberg Productions.

The first print of the production was received this week in the New York office of Preferred Pictures.

Percy Heath With F. B. O.

Film Booking Offices has just added Percy Heath to its scenario staff, it was announced yesterday. Mr. Heath will assist Fred Myton, Scenario Editor, in the preparation of scripts for the F. B. O. stars.

HELENE COSTELLO

Who has been selected to play the feminine lead with Lowell Sherman in "The Love Toy."

Hines Finishes "Live Wire"

After ten weeks of intensive studio and location work "The Live Wire," Johnny Hines' initial starring vehicle for First National, has reached the cutting and titling stage. John Krafft, whose sparkling titles proved a highlight of Hines' preceding picture, "The Crackerjack," has been engaged by C. C. Burr to write the lines for "The Live Wire." According to Mr. Burr, the number of comic sequences will give Mr. Krafft great play for his humorous bent.

Charlie Chaplin at this Midnight Show

A special midnight performance with Charles Chaplin appearing in person will be given at the Mark Strand Theatre on Saturday, August 15, for the Chaplin comedy "The Gold Rush," Joseph Plunkett, managing director, announced this week.

Mr. Plunkett issued this statement:

"On Saturday night, August 15th, at 12 o'clock midnight at the Mark Strand Theatre a gala performance of 'The Gold Rush' will be given in honor of Mr. Charles Chaplin who will appear in person for this performance only.

"All seats will be reserved and the scale of prices will be announced in the theatrical advertising columns of the newspapers in a day or two. Seats available to the public may be had by mail order and will be filed and filled in the order of receipt."

Reservations for the public should be sent to Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh Street.

At all other performances, beginning Sunday August 16, the regular Mark Strand prices will prevail.

Chaplin was confined to his suite in the Ritz-Carlton for several days last week, owing to a slight illness.

Girls Wanted

Robert Z. Leonard has begun the selection of beautiful girls to support the principals in the cast of "A Little Bit of Broadway." Harry Rapf, associate production executive at the Culver City studios, has expressed a desire to secure new material for future stock players from this picture. Pauline Starke is to be co-featured with Charles Ray in "A Little Bit of Broadway," with Lilyan Tashman in a prominent role.

Just Spooks

The thirteenth Dinky Doodle subject completed at Bray Studios and the last to be made under the Standard Cinema contract is entitled "Just Spooks." This subject varies from the previous Dinkly Doodles inasmuch as the former subjects have been burlesques on well known fairy tales. This subject is a cartoonized burlesque on the vogue for mystery plays. It is scheduled for release, through F. B. O., September 15.

Story for Fred Thomson

Milton Gardner, production manager of the Fred Thomson unit, announces that Frank Richardson Pierce's well known magazine story, "All Around the Frying Pan," will be the next vehicle for Fred Thomson F. B. O.'s famous western star. This will follow "Ridin' the Wind," now nearing completion. The Alturas Rodeo, a cowboy round-up of national reputation in Northern California, will be filmed in its entirety by the Thomson troop. Fred and Silver King will be an integral part of the rodeo.

"Three Wise Goofs"

Joe Rock, who is producing a series of Standard Comedies for F. B. O. release, has placed in production "Three Wise Goofs," in which appear the trio of fat men who are known as "A Ton Of Fun." Jimmy Davis is directing this production which stars "Tiny" Alexander, "Fatty" Karr, and "Kewpie" Ross.

Alice Lake Heads Cast

Alice Lake will head the cast of the second Waldorf release which is being distributed by Columbia Pictures. Tony Gaudio, celebrated for many of the fine camera accomplishments of motion pictures will handle the megaphone. Quite a large cast will be assembled to play the important roles, according to production manager Harry Cohn.

Warner Bros. Casting

In addition to the players already announced, Charles ("Heinie") Conklin has a place in the cast of Warner Bros., "Red Hot Tires," having the role of the coachman, Frank Hagney has been assigned a part in "Hogan's Alley," Fred Kelsey has a role in "Seven Sinners," and John Dillon is in the cast of "The Pleasure Buyers."

Book F. B. O. Product

Mayer & Schneider Circuit, New York City, has booked the entire F. B. O. 1925-26 program 100%, including the twelve Gold Bond productions, 44 star productions and 6 series of comedies.

Lawford Davidson Signed

Lawford Davidson has been assigned the role of "Marty" in Robert Z. Leonard's forthcoming production of "A Little Bit of Broadway."

How to Use This Chart

First—Bookings! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play Date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over- and under-length programs.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Pitcure World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Wrong Ideas

From a southern city comes the following:

I purchased one of your Bluebooks and find there is plenty in it. I want to know if you will send me a form of answer so I can stand the I. A. examination. There is too much in the book to try to learn in six weeks.

As I have projected pictures one and one-half years, and therefore know a little about it, so send me this at once, if you will, C.O.D. If you will not, or cannot, please answer at once and tell me what you have that will help me.

My friend, the Bluebook is NOT intended to help you or any other man "pass an examination," except in so far as it provides you with genuine, bona fide knowledge and information concerning motion picture projection.

If you have been projecting motion pictures for a year and a half, what have you been doing all that time and during the time of your previous apprenticeship? Why did you not get a Bluebook when you STARTED, instead of waiting until six weeks before you were to be examined? From your letter it appears that you want to "Cram" for examination.

If I helped you in that sort of thing I would be acting both unfairly and dishonestly by the I. A. and by the motion picture industry. You say "send it C.O.D." It is a cold fact that if your certified check for one thousand dollars had accompanied your request for that sort of thing, it would have been returned to you WITHOUT the desired "dope." I may be no angel, but up to date I don't think any one has accused me of being deliberately dishonest. And if I sent what you want—if I could send it—I certainly would be dishonest.

How?

As a matter of fact, though, how could I or any one else send that sort of thing, unless one knew just how competent the union examining board is and along what lines you would be examined. I am sorry to say that many union examinations consist largely of some questions on some phase of practice in practical projection. In many instances such an examination amounts to very nearly nothing at all, in so far as has to do with determining the competency of the candidate. It is a fact that really competent examination questions are very often deliberately avoided by examiners. This may be either for the reason that they fear they could not themselves answer the questions, or because they know too little about the technique of projection to ask them intelligently. I am very sorry to have to make that assertion, but I have myself listened to "examinations" which were nothing short of laughable.

A competent examination seeks not only to determine what the man actually knows about practical work in projection, but also what he knows about technical matters.

Here is one question which involves practical work and technique very well: Suppose you are using an ordinary arc light source, and find yourself troubled with excessive condenser breakage. What would you do?

The incompetent man would probably merely say that he would "pull the arc back," which would be accepted as a competent answer by many examiners, whereas it really is in the nature of an absurdity.

The competent man would answer something like this: "First I would measure the horizontal diameter of the positive carbon crater. Then I would consult the Griffith lens chart and see if the distance of the crater from the face of the collector lens were less than it should be, and if it were, then I would change the focal length of the condenser in accordance with the provisions of the lens chart, until the correct crater distance was established.

If the crater distance be correct, or if it be incorrect, and after making the alteration necessary to make it correct, the breakage persisted, then I would examine the lamphouse ventilation and be sure it was open, free and ample. I would see if the arc flame touched the upper edge of the collector lens, or came too near to it. If it did, then I would attach an asbestos baffle to the lamphouse wall in such manner that it came between the upper edge of the lens and the flame tip, if that were practicable without interfering in the cone of light collected by the lens. If not, then I would install a converging lens of sufficiently greater focal length to increase the crater distance enough to stop the trouble. I would also carefully examine and see that the collector lens was properly held in its mount, with ample room for expansion, and either with metal touching clear around the lens, or the lens held entirely away from the metal of the holder by means of asbestos.

Real Understanding

Such an answer, not necessarily in those exact words, but conveying the ideas set forth, proves that the applicant really understands the subject, and knows how to handle it intelligently. Merely to say he would "pull the arc back" means nothing at all, because if he did that without changing his condenser focal length, he either was working inefficiently before, or would be after the change were made. The answer "pull the arc back" would NOT be accepted by a competent examiner. It would, instead, be marked with a great big O.

My southern friend, I am not just discouraging you when I say to you that I would earnestly advise you to continue at work as you are for another year, meanwhile studying your Bluebook, this department and such other sources of projection information as are available. If you work hard, combining your practical work with intelligent study, by that time you should not fear any competent examination.

A Whole Year!

But a whole Y-E-A-R! I think I hear you exclaim in horror. Well, why not? If you think that is long, suppose you try trying for a position as Locomotive Engineer, which requires far less accurate, detailed knowledge than motion picture projection demands of the competent projectionist, and see if you can get by in less than SIX OR SEVEN YEARS! Or try to be a plumber, a bricklayer, a carpenter or an electrician and see if you can become a "Journeyman" in less than two years, and perhaps three.

The trouble is, that without much of any real knowledge you can project pictures, but your projection is equivalent to the wall built by a one-year-apprenticeship bricklayer. It is a wall, BUT——! Your picture is a picture, BUT—— your work is in the very nature of things, inefficient, poor, bungling and expensive to the motion picture industry. That you may be "as good as the men around you" means nothing, if they too are lacking in expert knowledge.

Bluebook School Questions

Question No. 348—Practical question submitted by George L. Erdman, St. Joseph, Missouri. If the orchestra leader insists on the musicians being permitted to have fifty watt mazdas, and the manager lets him get away with it, what is the best method of reducing the bad effect as much as possible?

Question No. 349—What is a "field rheostat" on a generator, what is it for and how does it operate?

Question No. 350—What is the purpose of insulation and what class of substances do we call "insulating materials?" Name a few of them.

Question No. 351—Of exactly what does rubber covered (R.C.) insulation consist?

Question No. 352—Under what conditions is coating copper wire with tin necessary and why is it done?

High Intensity Problem

Messrs Thoreau and Clark, Projectionists, Vancouver, British Columbia, ask for a criticism of their optical line-up. Their layout is as follows:

Projection lenses seven inch E. F., three-combination Kenolite, which has a working distance of one and one half inches. Free diameter of projection lenses one and nine sixteenths inches.

Carbons are National 11 mm. White Flame High Intensity. Amperage 80 to 85. Free diameter condenser lens is four and eleven sixteenths for the five inch plano convex collector, and three and seven eights for the converging lens to aperture, twelve inches, parabolic lens. Minimum distance face of maximum distance 20 inches. Minimum distance crater to face of collector lens three inches, which same we have used without serious trouble with condenser breakage.

We would like to know the proper combination and "Y" distance for both the five inch diameter plano convex converging lens and for the parabolic."

Um, I see I misread a part of your line-up. You have one parabolic and one five-inch diameter plano convex converging lens.

Your craters were five sixteenths of an inch in diameter and are well formed. Their depth was about half their diameter, which is approximately correct. I sent the whole thing to Griffith. Here is what he has to say about it.

Griffith's Remark

With the three-combination Kenolite projection lens it is unnecessary to consider the Y distance, insofar as has to do with getting the light into the lens, but when using a five-inch diameter plano convex converging lens a very considerable Y distance would be necessary in order that the gas ball which forms in the crater be magnified sufficiently to cover the aperture opening. In this case the gas ball cannot very much exceed 3/16 inch diameter. In the Powers demonstration (June 13th issue) the gas ball was about 3/8ths of an inch in diameter, which would permit this set up (Five-inch-diameter converging lens) to be used effectively.

Using a five-inch-diameter converging lens, a long Y distance is necessary in order to reduce the diameter of the light beam at the shutter plane, else the definition will suffer.

Taking the thing as a whole, I believe the Cinephor would give much the better results, because by advancing the crater slightly the shell light is eliminated at the aperture, while the beam diameter at the shutter plane is reduced by the same action, and that too without using a long Y distance, which greatly reduces the efficiency of the optical system as a whole.

Elastic

The whole system is very elastic when using a Kenolite projection lens and Cinepor parabolic for converging the light. In view of the fact that in this case, it has been found practicable to use a 3-inch crater distance, I would recommend the use of a 6.5 focal length plano convex collector lens, in conjunction with a parabolic, and that the Y distance be extended until the crater distance is such that excessive condenser breakage is just avoided, which same will make a very efficient set-up.

By the way, it has occurred to me that it would be a good stunt for High Intensity users to drill a pin-hole in the center of the inside dowser, to the end that when lighting up they may observe the setting which best serves to confine the ball of gas within the crater.

P. S.—This is not exactly what the doctor ordered, but I don't consider it worth while to fuss with plano where the light source is so small.

Taking a Crack?

As to that post script, I wonder if John is taking a crack at something I have told these boys. In July 4 issue I said I thought probably a 2-combination projection lens would be best under your condition, with which Griffith does not seem to agree. Well, when it comes to projection optical problems I am glad to yield to Griffith, or to any one else who I think knows more about it than I do.

One thing I am not clear on, though, and that is just why you say reducing the diameter of the light beam at the shutter plane will improve the definition. Matters have come up recently which make me believe there may be something in that, though I'm darned if I am able to see why it should be so. Will brother Griffith kindly explain the matter in extended detail?

When I had written that last I stopped to discuss the matter with a friend—a projectionist—who had dropped in for a chat as he motored past. He took me to task for admitting in print, that I did not understand the matter. In effect he said: "You just give your opposition something to grab hold of when you admit that you don't understand something."

Don't "Know it All"

My reply was: "Brother, the man who poses as an I-know-it-all, is just a plain d—d fool. If any man imagines that I know everything there is to know about motion picture projection HE is just a plain d——d fool; also he is one who knows very little about projection and its problems. As to giving the opposition something to 'grab hold of,' why I'm delighted to render them even that assistance if they need it."

There has been a great deal of argument concerning the three-combination projection lens, ever since Sabo made the first one in New York some six or eight years ago. Prior to the introduction of the Cinephor parabolic condenser I held that they served a most excellent purpose where the projection lens working distance was long, but not otherwise. Since the introduction of the Parabolic condenser I have held otherwise, because of the fact that with a parabolic condenser the working distance of the projection lens looses much of its objection, while the third lens of the 3-combination projection lens sets up an added and unescapable loss of at least eight per cent of light.

I would like to have Griffith's analysis of the situation as it now is. I am beginning to think I have need to "brush up" on such matters. Just lately things have come up which have rather treed me and I don't like being "treed."

In my position I just MUST have a comprehensive general knowledge of about all the problems which may arise in practical and theoretical projection, and they are so numerous and so widely divergent that it is not so easy to do it. It is not at all necessary that I have complete, detailed understanding of them all, but I must know the underlying principles which govern, and will therefore ask Griffith to get busy and explain just why the diameter of the beam at the shutter plane affects definition.

Griffith Denies

Later: Since writing the above Griffith has visited my home and we have talked matters over. He denies that he ever differed sufficiently nonsensical to be laughable, or would be were it not for the fact that in one sense it is true, though not in any degree in the sense they mean. It is true in the sense that they would be "helping Richardson" to help the business or profession of motion picture projection and the men engaged therein.

We now have from six to seven pages to there is ample opportunity for those men who are truly interested in improving motion picture projection, and raising it to a higher level of recognition to jump in and give active help.

Inverse Law

In conversation with Griffith he made the assertion that I was in error in saying that the inverse square law applies only to an open light source—that the intensity of illumination decreased inversely as the square of the distance.

Griffith holds that this law applies to any beam of light, including the light from a projection lens. This I both concede and dispute. I concede that it applies to the beam from a projection lens, but dispute that it applies in just the same way. The light in a beam from a projection lens will decrease inversely as the square of the distance, provided that this does not always apply close to the lens; also I hold that it is stretching things to apply the inverse square law to the directed beam in the same way it is applied to the open light source.

I am well aware of the fact that I could be cornered in this and put in a position where I would not exactly know how to prove my view correct, but all the same I do hold that, while granting the law to apply in both cases, still there is a difference. I think, however, the statement in the third paragraph of page 125 of the Bluebook is altogether too strong. I was in error when I made it, but I certainly am not satisfied that the law—oh darn it all I can't seem to put my real thought into intelligent words.

Bluebook School—Answers 321 to 325

Hey you slackers! Whassa mafia? Busy? So am I! Tired? So am I! Vacation? None for me! You made a strong start, but—well, what does the "but" stand for, huh? I'm asking you!!!!

Question No. 321—In many problems we are told to "Square the Diameter?" What is meant by that? What is meant by the radius of a circle? Knowing the diameter of a circle, how would you find its circumference? Its area?

W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island; S. Glauber, Brooklyn, New York; C. O. Henning, Iowa City, Iowa; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico; Richard Kuester, Brooklyn, New York; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama; and Allen R. Gingenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana, all make correct replies. Budge says:

"Squaring the diameter" means to multiply it by itself. The radius of a circle is the distance from its exact center to its edge, or circumference at any point. It is one half the diameter. Knowing the diameter of a circle and desiring to compute its circumference you do so merely by multiplying the diameter by the constant 3.1416. The area of a circle may be computed by multiplying one half of the circumference by the radius, or by squaring the radius and multiplying by 3.1416.

Henning tells it this way: To square the diameter is to multiply it by itself. The diameter of a No. 10 wire is 101.9 mils. In this instance (which is an isolated case and does not apply to finding the area of a circle in square inches) to find the area in circular mils we "square the diameter" by multiplying 101.9 by 101.9, which equals 10,380 circular mils, the area of cross section of the wire.

The radius of a circle is one half the diameter, or the distance from center to outer circumference.

The circumference of a circle is found, when the diameter is known, by multiplying the diameter by the constant 3.1416.

To find the area of a circle, multiply the radius squared by the constant 3.1416.

Note: This got me all het up. Brother Budge sent in four different ways to find the area. I have a standard arithmetic by me, in which appears the rule "half the circumference × radius, or radius square × 3.1416 equals area of a circle. Those rules of Budge's did not all seem to work out the same, so I cut all but the two the arithmetic man said was correct. I've been figgering until steam has begun to come out of my ears, so I'm done. Mebbe all Budge's ways are correct, but I can't seem to make them work out right.

Question No. 322—What is a kilowatt? A kilowatt hour? What amount of power does a kilowatt hour represent?

Every one named "came through." Doe says:

A kilowatt is merely the convenient way of expressing one thousand watts. It is 1,000 watts. A kilowatt hour expresses the power used when one thousand watts (one kilowatt) have been used for a period of one hour, or half a kilowatt for a period of two hours, etc.

One kilowatt represents (746 watts in one horsepower) 1,000 divided by 746 equals 1.34 plus horsepower. In application it expresses that amount of power in work performed, less the frictional and other losses inherent in the device or devices employed in applying the power, or converting the electrical energy into mechanical energy.

Question No. 323—As applied to motors and generators, etc., what is meant by the term efficiency, and how is it measured?

This question was a repetition. It was also asked in question 317. Please accept my apologies for the error.

Question No. 324—Which has the highest efficiency, a motor generator, rheostat, mercury arc rectifier or a transformer? Don't merely give us the rated efficiency, but discuss relative results, thus: A transformer has a high rate of efficiency as to operation, but—well, in projection we don't call it efficient just the same, since with it we have A. C. at the arc.

This one added Arthur Gray and John Griffith to the list. IT SHOULD HAVE BROUGHT AT LEAST FIVE THOUSAND ANSWERS. Such a question is one calculated to permit a projectionist who has real pride in his business to show how much he really does know about the electrical end of his profession. I honor those men who have tackled a question of this sort, even though they may not have the best answers, and don't think those whose replies are not published failed. The fact is that most of the answers are very creditable, but some are much more than that. Gray says:

In considering the efficiency of a current rectifying device to be used for motion picture projection work, we must pay attention not only to its electrical economy, but also to its relative efficiency as compared with other devices which might be used, more or less advantageously, for the same purpose.

Under practically all conditions of projection work the rheostat is perhaps the least efficient of any of the devices named in the question, if considered merely from the standpoint of electrical economy. Under no condition, however, may it be considered as efficient where alternating current is used at the arc, except from the point of performance alone. (I think that was a slip, Brother Gray. How could it be efficient in performance as compared with a transformer?—Ed.) The discussion of the rheostat, therefore, will be confined to A. C. alone, unless otherwise specifically noted.

As the difference between suuply (line) voltage and arc voltage increases, so does the voltage which must be broken down by, and from the viewpoint of electrical efficiency, wasted in the rheostat increase, hence whereas the rheostat is very inefficient when used in connection with a projection arc and any ordinary commercial voltage, it becomes increasingly inefficient as the supply voltage is increased, until at 220 volts it becomes, to all intents and purposes, prohibitive. Of course where the difference between the line and the arc potentials is less, the rheostat functions on a more efficient basis, either when considered as adjunctive resistance to the arc, or when compared with relation to the efficiency of a motor generator set, or a similar device.

When considered from the viewpoint of efficiency in performance as an aid in stabilizing the arc, the rheostat must be rated high, and considered as a valuable and practically indispensible adjunct to projection where D. C. is used at the arc, though the necessity for resistance stabilization may be either partly or wholly rendered unnecessary by certain characteristics present in "constant current" generators used in certain motor generator sets.

The function of a transformer (Compensarc, Economizer, Inductor, etc.) is exclusively confined to alternating current. Its electrical efficiency is, by comparison with the other devices named in the question, very high. It is somewhere near ninety-five per cent, the exact figure being to a considerable extent dependent upon design and construction.

In connection with the operation of an alternating current arc supplied by a transformer, it may only be considered as efficient from the standpoint of economy in consumption of electric energy. This is because of the fact that the crater area is divided, and the screen illumination will have certain objectionable characteristics due directly to the quality of light produced by the alternating current arc. When viewed from the standpoint of high grade screen illumination, the transformer cannot be considered as either efficient or desirable.

On the other hand, if the light source be an incandescent filament (mazda), then the most efficient possible combination is to heat the said filament with alternating current, using a transformer of special design to reduce the line voltage to that required across the terminals of the lamp.

For the purpose of discussion we may now roughly divide or group D. C. to D. C. motor generator sets and rotary converters under one head, and Mercury Arc Rectifiers and A. C. to D. C. motor generator sets under another, and while considering them both primarily as being devices to provide D. C., at arc voltage, to the arc, we will consider them as two types, each applicable to a phase of projection work different from the other.

Devices in the first group named may be efficiently and effectively used where there is comparatively high D. C. line voltage, and a loss of from thirty to forty per cent in changing from line to arc voltage is preferable to the greater loss inherent in the rheostat. The higher the line voltage the greater the relative reduction in waste, as compared with using a rheostat; also the greater the electrical efficiency of the device.

(Note: The "rotary Converter" Gray has in mind is not of the type used to convert A. C. to D. C., but a machine which reduces D. C. voltage. I mention this because projectionists are more familiar with the A C. to D. C. sort, of which the "Wagner" is one type.—Ed.)

When we consider the function of the second group (In which the A. C. to D. C. "rotary converters" should be included.—Ed.) to that of converting, or changing A. C. to D. C., and providing D. C at arc voltage, instead of the former at the arc, we find them to all be about equally efficient in the matter of converting the current and lowering the voltage, differing from each other in electrical efficiency by a maximum of perhaps fifteen per cent, within the range of about fifty-eight to seventy-three per cent (One motor generator generates at, I believe, 110 volts or thereabouts, using a rheostat to break down the voltage, hence it could not come within your limits.—Ed.)

Thus, a series type constant current motor generator set generating approximately arc voltage is somewhat more efficient than a multiple set using rheostat resistance between the arc and the generator, and a set employing a polyphase motor is also, in turn, somewhat more efficient than a set with a motor running on single phase current. Also, sets built for the same purpose, but designed by different manufacturers, will undoubtedly to some extent show a variation in electric efficiency. The efficiency of this group of devices as compared with a rheostat, approximate those in the D. C. to D. C. group, being proportionate in all cases to the difference between the arc and line voltages.

The electric efficiency of a mercury arc rectifier is probably as high, if not higher, on both 110 and 220 volts than any of the devices before mentioned, but they have some inherent disadvantages, and are made, so far as I know, only in 30 and 50 ampere capacities, hence do not have the range of usefulness possessed by the rotary devices.

In conclusion, I would like to start an argument by saying that I suppose the most efficient device and conditions possible under modern projection practice, when we consider quality of screen illumination and the electrical cost of putting it there, would be an A. C. to D. C. series type constant current motor generator set, designed to deliver approximately 22 amperes, at arc potential, to the arc of a reflector type lamp.

An excellent reply, with one or two weak spots. A "summing up" would have added considerably to it, I think. Griffith discusses the matter thus:

Practically every electrical device has a "rated efficiency," which of course refers to the relation of the consumption of power to its power output, or in other words the amount of work put into it as compared with the amount of work it will do.

But the ratio of efficiency as thus expressed is only a part of the consideration when we come to examine into how efficient it may be in projection work.

The transformer has what is probably the highest ratio of efficiency of any electrical apparatus used in projection, yet it is one of the least efficient when we come to consider screen results. Its ratio of electrical efficiency is about 96, but its screen results efficiency are on the minus side.

The mercury arc rectifier comes second in electrical efficiency, being about 70 per cent. It also is fairly efficient in projection results. The A. C. to D. C. motor generator without outside ballast (resistance) has a ratio of efficiency of about 65 per cent, less whatever the loss in the rheostat may be, which latter will be dependent upon the difference between the generator and arc voltage.

The rheostat with 110 volt supply has an efficiency of fifty per cent, about. (Depends upon arc voltage, which may vary considerably, though in modern practice I doubt if many arcs are less than fifty to fifty-five volts.—Ed.) With 220 volt service the efficiency would be 25 per cent.

Real efficiency, however, consists in getting satisfactory screen illumination with a minimum of wattage consumed from the line, hence real efficiency depends not only upon the electrical efficiency of the electrical apparatus, but also upon the efficiency of the optical system.

As an example (Wow! I'll get murdered by Mazda men.—Ed.), the most efficient electrical equipment is the Mazda outfit, but the reflector type of arc gives more highly efficient results, for the reason that its optical system is more efficient. The Mazda equipment uses a transformer, which has a ratio of efficiency of 96 per cent. The reflector type arc uses a generator, which has but about 65 per cent efficiency, but it will put a higher candle power on the screen per watt consumed from the line than will the Mazda.

Doe says:

It seems to me this need not require a very lengthy discussion. To my mind there are three natural divisions, and those are not a matter of devices so much as theatres.

Efficiency, as here used, appears to me to be not so much a matter of the consumption of electrical power as it is what we get on the screen after the power is consumed. I would consider a device which put a 100 per cent perfect illumination on my screen at a fifty per cent efficiency as regards electrical consumption to be far less efficient than a device which gave me an inferior screen illumination but operated at a far higher electrical efficiency.

We have, roughly, three classes of theatres to consider, viz.: (1) the large city theatre where expense is as nothing compared to results, and fifty amperes more or less of current means relatively nothing, if it adds to the excellence of results upon the screen. (2) The smaller theatre where good results are demanded, but much attention is paid to getting them as cheaply as possible, and (3) the small town and village theatre where every nickel must be watched, and ten dollars a week added income, or loss of income, is a very serious matter.

In the first class having A. C. supply there is no machine so suitable to the work as the motor generator, because it may be had in any capacity, and is very elastic in the matter of current output. When the supply is A. C. there is, in fact, no other machine available which will give the required results, which merely resolves the matter into a possible difference in efficiency as between sets of various make, which is not, as I understand it, germain to the question.

In the second class we have the motor generator, the mercury arc rectifier, the rotary converter and, if the supply be D. C., the rheostat.

The rectifier we may leave out of consideration, because of its limited capacity and lack of flexibility in current output—though of course it has a certain amount of the latter. I do not know the efficiency of the rotary converter. The motor-generator has from 65 to 72 electrical efficiency, and what we might call a 100 per cent possible screen efficiency. If the current be D. C., then a rheostat may be used if the supply be 110, but only at about fifty per cent electrical efficiency, but its "screen efficiency" is equal to anything available. If the supply is more than 220, then a D. C. to D. C. motor generator will give equal screen efficiency, and at a much higher electrical efficiency.

In the small theatre (Like the common people, there's a lot of 'em) the question is a much harder one, and it requires wisdom greater than mine to say how far one should go in placing screen efficiency before electrical economy. I believe that the most efficient device for them is the Mazda, with its transformer and high electrical efficiency, or the new Reflector Type Arc, which has much less electrical efficiency (about 95 to 65 would be the comparative figures, I think) but a higher screen efficiency.

A very excellent answer, I think. Also Glauber made some excellent replies, but failed to number them and I am unable to tell with certainty just where one leaves off and the other starts, as they all are run together. Kuester's answer was very good also. In fact, his replies were, as they usually are, all good. I hope Kuester will 'stick,' but don't see anything more from him just now.

Question No. 325—Have you any suggestions to offer for the improvement of the Bluebook school?

This brought several suggestions.

Kuester suggests that, in order to interest a greater number of projectionists in answering the question, at the end of a certain time, or when the Bluebook Questions are finished, I, or the Moving Picture World rather, present to each one whom I may think has given proof by his answers that he understands projection matters fairly well, a neatly printed certificate.

Glauber suggests that it would be an improvement if only two really competent questions be asked each week. He suggests one electrical and one optical.

Griffith says:

A man will never really exert himself unless there is competition of some sort, or something to strive for. That is true, even when he knows it is for his own good. Why not, therefore, make the school competitive? Award a certain number of points to each question, simple ones earning less points than difficult ones, so that the total number of points for the entire set would be 100, with an extra merit mark for an unusually good answer. Give every one an even start and publish the ten best averages each week. If a man lays off a week his average would drop. I'll bet there would be a real effort made to carry on.

Gray speaks at length, but his comment is so excellent that I will print the whole thing. He says:

To make the Bluebook "School" most successful—meaning making it of greatest interest to the department readers—it is first necessary to create an interest among the contributors in the subjects put forward for discussion, and to sustain this interest equally through each series of questions. The "School" caters to the reader, but in order to successfully do this it must first appeal to the potential contributor. I think that when any one of us sets out to answer any individual question he prefers, and wants to answer all the questions in that series. Range of knowledge concerning the subjects involved is not, however, the sole limiting factor in determining the completeness of the answers, in many cases, under the present method, or at least that is my opinion.

Rather, it is a question of the time that is available for this work between series. The questions, taken as a whole, vary greatly in scope, and warrant treatment varying considerably from each other with regard to length. A preponderance of questions in any one series that calls for extended discussion tends, in the average case and under the general conditions of labor and play by the projectionist, to limit him to covering one, or perhaps two of the questions in a manner that the subject warrants, and which, quite possibly, he is qualified to do. He must then either scrimp on the remaining questions—which crosses his grain if he is built right—or omit them entirely, which is neither to his advantage nor to the general interest of the reader. On the other hand, if the questions can all be disposed of in a single paragraph, or perhaps a couple, then the result is not all that could be desired either.

It seems to me to be a matter of more importance to select the questions in regard to the length in which they can be fully answered—thus balancing each series in this respect—than is the matter of sequence in which they appear in the Bluebook. I do not advise by this to jump indiscriminately from one subject to another, but that if it is necessary to jump ahead a dozen questions or so to get some that will balance up a particular series, then do so. They will all be asked eventually. It would seem as if one or, at most, two questions in a series might be broad enough in scope to warrant an argumentive discussion, or perhaps we might call it a short article. I think that one question propounded as a concrete problem to be mathematically solved would be of general interest. One question to each series carefully worded, and put by a projectionist would hold interest, I think, but this type of question must be specific, leaving no room for doubt regarding what the questioner wants. Any vagueness in wording such a question, or suspicion of "trick question," will kill interest in this phase very quickly. I think the fifth question might well be simple in scope, but interesting in subject, and of a nature that can readily be answered by some contributors less able than others to get their ideas and words on paper.

I think that comment by the Editor in the form of a footnote to each and every published answer is advisable. It offers encouragement to the contributor, if in the form of commendation, and enlightens him if the comment takes the form of additive information or constructive criticism. I think the "School" is both interesting and instructive as it stands, else I would not be interesting myself in it. It is helpful to the reader, and more so to the contributor if he will exercise the energy necessary to make him one. It constitutes a source of valuable basis knowledge for the student of projection, and takes the form of equally valuable review work for the projectionist who has been through it once but has let more or less of it "get away from him."

The foregoing is not intended as voicing any dissatisfaction of the writer regarding the present method of formulating a group of questions. It is an "answer to a question."

These comments are the ones which seemed best of all those made. I am willing to undertake the "certificate" suggestion if you approve of it, only you must all understand that I would have to rely upon my own judgment as to who was entitled to them, AND I would not issue one to my own son unless I considered that he deserved it. It is up to you. Let me hear from you.

Unavailable

Griffith's suggestion is really most excellent, but it is unavailable, for the simple reason that it would be more work than I could possibly manage.

Gray's suggestion is, I believe, good, and I shall, beginning next week, try to follow it by asking two real questions each week and three of lesser importance, or if you all think a less number of total questions would be better, say so, I am willing to be guided by you in that matter.

Traveling Projectionists

The I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. announces the following scale as having been agreed upon between the International Theatrical Association and the General Office of the I. A. for traveling projectionists. It really is too bad that the name of the organization obliges the publication of the scale by the International Office as being negotiated for the "operator of a moving picture machine," since that, in effect, announces him to the exhibitor and the Theatrical Association as being just the attendant of a machine, and nothing more. But I suppose until the time comes, if ever it does, when the name of the organization is changed to conform to the facts and to common sense, it will have to be.

The scale is as follows: Straight contract, $85.00 per week. Production contract where only one city is played in any one week, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday, $100.00. Where more than one city is played in any one week, commencing Sunday and ending Saturday, $105.00 per week.

Other Provisions

The scale is effective September 6. It is further understood and agreed that the first paragraph of the road contract shall be construed to read: "To furnish sleeping car accommodations consisting of single lower berth, when traveling at night is necessary."

That so favorable a scale has been negotiated is distinctly to the credit of the international office. It is an increase of from ten to twenty-five dollars per week, as against the scale now effective. The new scale agreement is for two years.

Joplin, Missouri

Thomas L. Jackson, Joplin, Missouri, sent in some printed pictures of old Edison projectors, together with description of same. Sorry, but what I wanted was photographs of the actual projector.

Jackson then remarks:

Don't bother paying the least attention to what the "machine attendants" and "operators" say about you, Brother Richardson. They don't know any better, and such men just must do so much knocking anyhow. Once in a while I hear some smart Alec hand you a slam, but pay no attention to it, because I think I know good work when I see it, and am thankful to you and to all those other boys who have, through the Department, helped me and helped motion picture projection.

The Pioneer

I think, brother Jackson, I may fairly, and without seeming to boast, say that I am not only one of the pioneers in motion picture projection, but THE pioneer. By that statement I mean that I was the first one to see anything whatsoever in it, except the mere operation of a machine. I don't think even those opposed to the progress I try the best I can to represent and to preach, will have the nerve, to dispute, or even question that statement.

The chief value of such work as I have tried to do is not so much in the solving of individual projection problems, as in causing—in fact in some instances compelling—men to think. The man of real mental ability may stumble along with his mentality used but little, until something attracts his attention and starts him thinking, which usually is the beginning of better things for him.

"Use Your Brains"

Remember this, brother Jackson—and all you thousands who read this:

"ARMS AND LEGS (MUSCLES) ARE CHEAP—USE YOUR BRAINS." Had I satisfied myself with merely using my muscles (and they WERE USED when I projected pictures, for we cranked every foot of it then) when I started projecting pictures I would still be projecting, and might have reached the lofty (?) sum of the union minimum scale, with some dollars over and above it—that last being, of course, problematical.

I used the rather poor brains the Creator gave me to the best purpose I could. Result: In a comparatively short while I no longer cranked—I turned into a crank which, through years of strenuous labor, made possible the use of the "BETTER PROJECTION PAYS" slogan without bringing a sneer to the Hon. Manager's classic countenance.

Pay? Well, I'll solemnly assure you that I'll have to slip back quite a long ways before I'll be "scabbing" on any union scale. You may say: "Sure, that's all right! YOU could do what you did, but how am I to get ahead. It can't be done."

Can Be Done

It CAN be done, BUT don't think the road to advancement and success is paved with velvet, has ice cream stands every ten feet and easy chairs in which to rest. I have worked like a Roman galley slave. I have fought battles and have dared and double-dared the whole dad blamed works, time and again, with success or obliteration in the balance.

The worst fault is that so many of you want to get ahead, but you just WON'T get down, DIG IN and WORK, using every ounce there is in you through a series of YEARS. You dig in and work like a slave a month or two, or maybe even for six months. There are no immediate visible results, and you chuck it all in disgust, with the remark: "Aw what's the use of me slaving when I don't get anywhere?"

No Soft Snap

Golly, man, I worked HARD for THREE YEARS in projection before I saw one single item of results. It took me that time of grubbing to accumulate enough material to form even a frail raft of real knowledge to bear me up in the slough of ignorance.

I VENTURE THE ASSERTION THAT RIGHT NOW ANY MAN OF AVERAGE ABILITY WHO WILL UNDERTAKE TO DEVOTE THREE YEARS OF HARD, UNREMITTING TOIL IN THE ACCUMULATION OF SUPERIOR KNOWLEDGE COUPLED WITH CAREFUL WORK IN THE PROJECTION ROOM, PLUS AN INTELLIGENT EFFORT TO IMPRESS THE EXHIBITOR WITH THE FACT THAT "BETTER PROJECTION PAYS," AND THAT HE REPRESENTS BETTER PROJECTION AND HAS COMPETENT KNOWLEDGE OF ALL THINGS ALLIED TO PROJECTION, CAN RAISE HIMSELF OUT OF THE PROJECTION ROOM AND INTO SOMETHING BETTER IF HE PERSISTS LONG ENOUGH.

Sell the Idea

But remember this: Not only must you "have the goods" and "deliver the goods," but you MUST SELL THE IDEA TO THE EXHIBITOR THAT EXPERT KNOWLEDGE IN THE PROJECTION ROOM PAYS—THAT BETTER PROJECTION PAYS. The really BIG item of it all is to "sell the thing to the exhibitor." Once that is done he, the exhibitor, will demand what goes with it, and will be willing to pay reasonably for it too.

TWENTY YEARS OF PROGRESS

Marks Bros. Announce $2,500,000 Theatre for Chicago's West Side

MARX BROS., of Chicago, have completed plans and are about to start building one of the largest and finest first run theatres in the world.

The new house, to be known as Marks. Bros. Paradise, will be erected at Madison St. and Crawford Ave., one of Chicago's busiest sections, and the West Side's greatest business center, at a cost of approximately $2,500,000, and is planned to be the show place of the West Side.

Title to the property was taken last week, and the plans are being completed by J. H. Woodworth & Son, architects, and the loan has been made from the American Bond & Mortgage Co., for $1,650,000.

In announcing the new theatre, Marks Bros. strike another blow for independence and cast their hats into the first run ring, as Louis L. and Meyer S. Marks, owners of the projects, state that their latest venture is only one of the many theatres to be erected, or now under construction by them, their building program covering an expenditure of $20,000,000.

The new house will be built on a lot fronting 275 feet on Madison St. and will be 175 feet deep, in a section where thousands of people pass daily in the midst of department stores, banks, and all public utilities, and where the traffic is so great that the services of two traffic officers are necessary.

It will contain many features new in theatre construction. The crowning triumph of this stupendous masterpiece of art will be the massive, jewelled dome, inlaid with millions of jewels, all colors, imported from India, and the walls will be treated in like manner. Here and there, draperies and tapestries heavily laden with jewels, which have hung for centuries in the ancient castles of the Indian Rajahs and in the Royal castles of Spain, will be in evidence throughout the theatre.

Hundreds of concealed spotlights, so placed as to shine like radiant sunbeams upon the massive dome and jewelled walls, which will be dazzling with brilliancy and splendor.

Immediately adjoining the proscenium arch are stage balconies, one on either side of the stage. At these, singers or speakers may appear. The stage will be 70 feet wide, 48 feet high and 38 feet deep, capable of staging the biggest, most elaborate and colorful presentations, prologues and revues.

It will contain a concealed tank on the order of the New York Hippodrome, which will be used for aquatic presentations, and a revolving stage so that settings may be changed at a moment's notice for any occasion. The orchestra and organ, by a special device, will be elevated into view for the rendition of overtures, etc., after which they will be lowered into place.

In order to insure the comfort of their patrons, Marks Bros. have spared no expense in the installation of a mammoth refrigerating system with a daily capacity of 400 tons of ice.

Capable of accommodating over 5,000 people, which makes it one of the largest theatres in the world, the theatre has a sense of spaciousness, a condition enhanced by the fact that the auditorium is 95 feet in height with nothing to detract from the interior appearance. Immediately above the foyer are the children's playroom and lounge room. The former enables the parent with small children to attend and enjoy the performance without disturbing the rest of the audience, as a great plate glass window overlooking the auditorium commands as good a view of the screen as any seat in the house.

Tulsa, Okla., Will Have $500,000 Theatre; Ralph Talbot in Charge

ANOTHER milestone in the development of picture conditions in Oklahoma was passed with the announcement of plans for a $500,000 theatre to be erected on the rear of the Culbertson property at Tulsa, Okla., by Ralph Talbot, managing director of the Ritz Theatre Inc., a corporation organized by Talbot, Harry Castle and associates to handle the property.

The site has a frontage of 140 feet on Fourth by 200 feet on Boulder. It was leased for 98 years from the Gillette Kerr Investment Co., which recently secured a 99-year lease from the owner. It will probably be finished by April, 1926.

The theatre is designed after the Capitol in Chicago. The foyers are to be atmospheric in detail, with an effect of outdoors gained by attractive wall treatment of trees, vine covered walls and clouds floating among the stars in the blue sky. A dome, three stories high, will crown the foyer, and a two-story dome will cover the main auditorium.

The outside construction is to be of steel and concrete, fireproof and the latest type of architecture. Inside the foyers are to be of such size as to care for waiting crowds and a grand stairway is to lead to the balcony. A mezzanine promenade is to be a feature. It will be a sort of passageway from the lounge rooms to the substory that permits reaching backstage without going upstairs or passing through the main auditorium.

The plans further involve a modern refrigeration system of such size as to permit running a branch line into the air washing room at the Majestic Theatre adjoining. This will provide Tulsa with three such cooled theatres, as the Orpheum recently installed a $35,000 cooling system.

"Ten Commandments" Opens Lockport Theatre

The Palace, erected in Lockport, N. Y., by Lock City Theatres, Inc., and leased by Paramount's theatre department, was opened to the public Saturday evening, July 18, when overflow audiences witnessed the premiere.

Following an introductory talk by Manager George T. Cruzen, Congressman S. Wallace Dempsey spoke, complimenting those responsible for the new house. Charles E. Dickinson, of Lockport, who promoted the project, also talked briefly, as did A. Edmund Lee, president of Lock City Theatres. Then followed a bugle call from the loft of the stage which was the signal for the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

As this number ended, the velour curtains were drawn aside displaying the entire proscenium opening, and at the same time there was demonstrated the vari-colored lighting system of the house, with which several beautiful color schemes are possible in lighting the auditorium. The orchestra then played the "Titania" overture, at the end of which the Pathe News was shown.

The organ console was raised to concert position after the news reel and Bob Demming of Buffalo, the organist, played "The World is Waiting for the Sunrise" to display the possibilities of the organ.

Then came the opening feature, "The Ten Commandments," which, the management announced, was shown in Lockport for the first time at popular prices. Joseph Pomeranz, of Buffalo, is conductor of the Palace orchestra of eight pieces. C. Austin Taylor is stage manager, Martin Heibeger, chief projectionist; Harry Le Valley, floor superintendent and Corey Rohde is in charge of the poster department.

Prices range from 35 to 75 cents and in the fall, Manager Cruzen announces the Keith vaudeville will be added to the picture program. Mr. Cruzen has been associated with the Hostetter Amusement Company in Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska and for the past two years has been on the West Coast serving in various capacities at the studios. Fred W. Greene, Jr., district manager for New York state for Paramount's theatre department, was in Lockport for a week in advance of the opening assisting in preparations for the premiere.

Fred Niblo and Screen Stars At Beverly Theatre Opening

RISING majestically at the intersection of two of Southern California's most travelled boulevards, and in the center of the Movie Colony, the Beverly, owned and operated by the Hollywood Theatres, Inc., associated with the West Coast Theatres, Inc., opened in gala display on the evening of May 18.

A tremendous throng attended the big opening, and among those present were scores of Filmdom's most notable stars and screen celebrities. Director Fred Niblo was Master of Ceremonies, and was introduced by Executive Director J. L. Swope, of the Hollywood Theatres, Inc. Mr. Niblo called upon all the stars who were present to appear before the spotlight, and applause greeted each one. In fact, it was acclaimed one of the premier theatrical events of Southern California during the current year.

The officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., including Messrs. M. Gore, President; A. L. Gore, Vice-President; Sol Lesser, Secretary, and Adolph Ramish, Treasurer, were also introduced amid applause.

The big theatre is of strict East-Indian design, with the same motif followed out in the auditorium. Architecturally speaking, it is without question one of the most magnificent show palaces in the entire country, and in decorative scheme is wonderful.

Part of the equipment consists of a huge Wurlitzer Orchestral pipe organ. An eight-piece orchestra will be part of the house staff.

The house is under the resident managership of E. S. Kuykendall, under the supervision of J. Leslie Swope, Executive Director of the Hollywood Theatres, Inc. The policy of the theatre programs will be high class motion picture entertainment, coupled with magnificent stage presentation and high calibre vaudeville.

Situated, as it is, in the heart of Beverly Hills, which is motion picture folks' own community, this theatre takes an added significance because of the fact that anywhere from a dozen to two score celebrities can always be found among the audience. It is anticipated that the Beverly Theatre will be one of the most popular of the entire chain.

Joseph Stern Building Five New Houses in New Jersey

Joseph Stern's Theatrical Enterprises of Newark, N. J., has procured land and is having plans drawn for a theatre in Red Bank, N. J. This will be equipped for vaudeville, motion pictures and dramatic shows and will seat 2,000. William E. Lehman of Newark is the architect. The estimated cost is $300,000.

Plans are being drawn for a theatre in Cranford, N. J., land having been bought. The house will seat 1,500 and cost about $250,000. William E. Lehman of Newark is the architect and the contractor is the Fatzler Company of Newark.

Mr. Stern also has the following theatres in the course of construction:

Royal Theatre, Bloomfield, N. J., capacity 1,950, cost $500,000 to open November 1.

Ritz Theatre, Newark, N. J., capacity 2,000, cost $400,000, to open December 1.

Sanford Theatre, Irvington, N. J., capacity 1,800, cost $350,000, to open March 1, 1926.

POWER'S INCANDESCENT EQUIPMENT

MADE IN THE POWER'S PLANT
A GENUINE POWER'S PRODUCT

POWER'S INCANDESCENT EQUIPMENT

ADVANTAGES

1. Adaptability

An arc lamp gives a whiter, steadier, more effective light on direct current than on alternating current. Since the current supply to the theatre is usually alternating it is necessary to use an expensive motor-generator set to convert to direct current.

The MAZDA lamp operates equally well on alternating and direct current and with equal illumination.

2. Steadiness

The MAZDA lamp provides a constant source of light. The intensity of illumination on the screen does not change. The MAZDA lamp does not vary in intensity and operates always in a fixed position. It assures continuous uniformity of screen illumination. This combination greatly reduces the possibility of eye strain.

3. Simplicity

The projectionist has no adjustments to make during operation. After the initial setting, no change is necessary during the life of the lamp. This permits more attention to the other details of presenting the picture in a successful manner.

4. Cleanliness

The MAZDA lamp is a hermetically sealed light source and because of its greater cleanliness inspires a cleaner general condition in the projection room.

5. Economy

The 900-watt MAZDA lamp compares favorably with a 40-amp. direct current arc. The advantage from an illuminating standpoint is in favor of the MAZDA lamp. Assuming an alternating current source of supply, the arc requires 60 volts at 50 emperes, and with converter losses, consumes 4 kw. per hour. The MAZDA lamp (including all losses) requires approximately I kw. per hour. The power bill is, therefore, cut to about one-fourth.

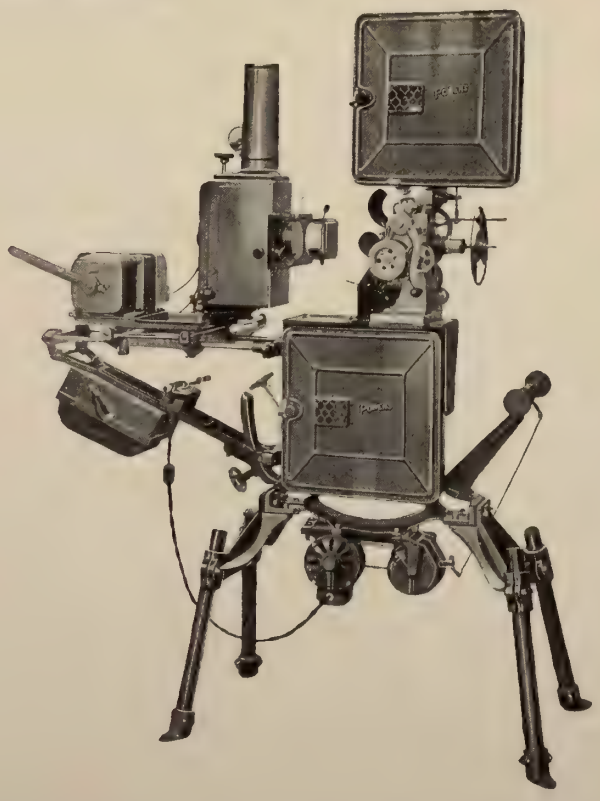
6. Utility

The new Incandescent Equipment can be used successfully in theatres having a main floor seating capacity up to 1,000 or having up to 16-ft. picture, or having a throw of approximately 100 feet. It gives better results than an alternating current arc and is the equal of the direct current arc up to 40 amps.

Power's Incandescent Equipment represents eight years' development and test in laboratories and theatres. It is therefore now possible to offer a reliable projection device, using a MAZDA lamp as the source of light, not only for theatres but also for schools, lodge rooms, community centers, and industrial establishments.

IMPROVEMENTS and REFINEMENTS

Moulded Composition Knobs and Handles Thruout, and a New and Superior Vertical Adjustment on the Lamphouse. The Slideover Tracks are now Cold Rolled Steel, accurately finished and securely fastened to the top of the base casting.



Crystallized Lacquer Finish replaces plain Japan finish—all steel parts are Dull or Polished Nickelplated. New Mirror and Power's Aspheric Condenser Mount are much superior to those heretofore supplied.

The Quality 52

WHEN we announced our August money-winners, "THE UNHOLY THREE," "A SLAVE OF FASHION" and "ROMOLA," we told you that was just the beginning. Here's what you get in September: "PRETTY LADIES," the Follies show in pictures; "NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET," the picture that did $63,118.25 in one July week at the Capitol; "SUN-UP," the two-year Broadway stage hit and "THE MYSTIC." Every week a money-maker.

FOX NEWS FOREIGN SERVICE NOW RECOGNIZED AS LEADING THE WORLD'S NEWS REEL FIELD

Many Camera Expeditions into Every Continent Now Under Way

The entertaining, the beautiful, the unusual. With these three qualities in mind, Fox News cameramen are today penetrating the out-of-the-way places of the world, searching for material that may prove acceptable in Fox News American and foreign editions.

One hundred feet of negative found worthy of inclusion in one issue of the news reel is sufficient incentive to send a daring Fox News representative into the mountain retreat of some Balkan overlord; into the frozen wastes of the Far North; through the jungles of the equator.

Time, expense, comfort are subordinated to the task of getting the new, the interesting and the lovely for presentation to a picture public of approximately fifty million persons.

The following Fox News expeditions are now just completed or are under way:

Russell Muth into the Balkans and seldom visited spots in Scandinavia.

Ben Miggins through Egypt, Turkey and the Near East.

Ferdinand Delgado through the West Indies, Spain and South America.

Charles Lehmann into the interior of Ecuador.

Ferd Fordham to the islands of the Pacific.

Len Roos through Australia and New Zealand.

Patiently, painstakingly and alertly these men are hunting finding pictorial news and features for Fox News in the odd corners of the globe.

Fox News Wins High Praise from Exhibitors

From far and wide throughout the country come expressions of praise from exhibitors who are using Fox News. For instance: "The wide range of subjects is really marvellous"—The Midway, Montreal; "When it comes to new thoughts and originality I must take off my hat to Fox News"—Geo. M. Krupa, Hamilton and Aldine Theatres, Lancaster, Pa.; "A theater without Fox News is like a bank without funds"—Herman A. Schwahn, Eau Claire Theater Co.; "There is not a company on the market that has more up-to-date or more exclusive news than Fox News"—John P. Freman, Strand Theater, Malden, Mass.

Every week, more and more exhibitors throughout the country are contracting for Fox News, convinced by the timeliness of its service, the originality of its subjects, its use of color and the excellence of its photography and printing that it is the best on the market.

Thousands of Dollars in Camera Equipment

To keep pace with the rush of world events and to supply the constantly increasing staff of cameramen with the best in mechanical equipment, Fox News has recently spent thousands for the latest type cameras, lenses and mounts. Two Akeley high speed cameras, the last word in photographic equipment, have been acquired for New York office at a cost of $4,000. Three new Bell and Howell cameras also have been added at a cost of $9,000. Extra lenses, up to seventeen inches focal length also have been bought. This in addition to previous equipment valued at over $25,000.

More Staff Men Added to Camera Corps in America

Every Important Center Covered—Great Strides in South and West

"Know where hell is going to break loose next—and have a man there," was the recipe for journalistic supremacy advanced by a famous editor. The editors of Fox News endeavor to go farther. They place their best cameramen at strategic points throughout the United States to get motion pictures of things as soon as they "break loose."

These star staff cameramen are men of proven initiative and imagination. Their territory extends many miles beyond the cities in which they are stationed. When a hot tip comes to their ears—and their ears are attuned for such tips—they rush away to the place where the news is.

Staff Cameraman Roy Anderson of St. Louis, one evening last March, learned that many towns in Southern Illinois were being devastated by a tornado. Anderson had the tip as soon as the newspapers. He grabbed his camera, caught the Red Cross relief train to the scene, worked three days without sleep and got his pictures to Broadway hours in advance of his rivals. All in the day's work for Anderson.

Recently Fox News has greatly augmented its staff in this country, particularly in the South and West. Among new appointees are Tracy Mathewson, the veteran, in Atlanta and the South, and Jack McFarland in Texas and the long stretches along the Rio Grande. There is now no section of the United States that cannot be reached by a Fox News cameraman, in a matter of one or two hours. When "hell breaks loose" a man is there or gets there—fast.

The others were forced down. The Fox News pilot persisted. Near Gary, Indiana, he came down in the night. Battered, he walked to a farm house, hired an automobile and drove into Chicago. At dawn, he delivered the negative to Talley and the cutters. Two hours later, the first prints were on their way by air mail to New York. Other prints went to all parts of the country. Millions saw the Derby on Sunday afternoon, 24 hours after it had been run in Louisville. Competitors did not reach the screen in some cases until two days later.

This is but one example. The international polo matches in London are another. Also the English Derby, the inauguration of President Hindenburg of Germany, the Indianapolis Auto Races, etc., etc., etc.

A box containing a partial list of Fox News scoops appears at the bottom of this page.

Fox News Fashions a Hit with Public

It is computed that women comprise sixty-five per cent of motion picture theater audiences. What does every woman discuss and think about? Fashions! Fox News has presented each season the latest thing in dresses, wraps and sport attire—displayed on living models. As good as a seat in a Fifth Avenue shop. Fox News shows the women what they want to see.

Fox News Acquires its own Airplane to Serve Exhibitors with Pictures of World Events in Fastest Time

MRS. FOX CHRISTENING FOX NEWS PLANE

Powerful Curtiss Oriole is Used Exclusively in News Reel Work

FOX NEWS HANGAR, MINEOLA, ITS BASE

Fox News is the only news-gathering agency in the world that now owns and uses its own airplane, employed exclusively in the work of photographing news events and bringing the negative to the home office.

The plane, a Curtiss Oriole C-6 of 160 horsepower, with a cruising speed of 80 miles an hour, was put into commission July 21 at Curtiss Field, Long Island. It was christened by Mrs. William Fox before a gathering of notables of the motion picture and journalistic worlds.

The plane is subject to call at any hour of day or night winter or summer, to rush motion picture cameramen to the scene of a big news story, to assist in photographing the event and then to speed back to New York with the cameramen and their film. The plane is equipped with a complete array of the latest appliances for every phase of day and night flying and for every emergency. Besides an extra gas tank, which increases the flying radius to 750 miles without a stop, the plane is supplied with the latest style parachutes for all passengers and pilot. The pilot is Lieut. George A. Weis, Jr., a noted aviator.

Although news reels and newspapers have at times rented airplanes for special events, no other news gathering agency has ever owned its own plane, with a staff aviator. Exhibitors and the press have hailed this innovation as a great step forward in journalism.

FOX NEWS DOMINATES BIG THEATRES' COMPOSITE REELS

On Broadway and in other Theatrical Centers of the United States, Exhibitors Select Higher Percentage of Fox Subjects

The judgment of the six Broadway theatres of New York City is a fair standard of excellence. Each week, the managing directors of these six first run houses review all four American news reels and from their offerings select composite reels for presentation.

Selection is entirely on a basis of quality. The judgment of six keen and experienced theatre men comes into play. Fox News competes against three rivals, no favors asked and none given.

Month in and month out, Fox News leads in this competitive showing. Some weeks, Fox News has more subjects on Broadway than all its competitors combined. Other weeks some competitors will press close for leadership. But on an average, taken over the months and years, will show Fox News far ahead of all rivals.

Nor does this take into account that Fox News regularly comprises an average of nine subjects only, while competitors frequently use many more short subjects. On a basis of actual footage used, the showing of Fox News would be even greater than when computation is made by subjects used.

Here is the Broadway record for the last eleven weeks, typical of the showing week in and week out. Fox News, 47.3 per cent.; nearest rival, 27.2; next, 26.6; next, 8.7. Four of the six Broadway houses give Fox News preference over all others. One uses nothing but Fox News. The other puts Fox News second.

Surely this showing means that Fox News is truly "mightiest of All."

Editor Appointed in the Chicago Territory

Harry Lawrenson, long associated with Fox News and other motion picture enterprises in this country and Europe, has been appointed editor of the Chicago branch of Fox News. This move is in line with Fox News policy to distribute world events as close to the source as possible. Millions of theater patrons are now served, without delay from Fox News Chicago office.

FOX NEWS ATTAINS IMPOSING RECORD OF SCOOPS ON EVENTS OF WORLD WIDE IMPORTANCE

International Happenings Brought to the Screen First and Exclusively

Fox News has earned a reputation for speed and enterprise in the bringing of big news events to the screen FIRST. Not once, but many times, have competitors been beaten hours—even DAYS—in the delivering of pictures of world-important events to exhibitors. It has gotten to be a habit, and theater owners of the nation have come to expect Fox News to be first.

Perhaps the outstanding example of this priority came with the screening of the world-famous Kentucky Derby last May. The outstanding sport event of the year, renowned as a thriller made up of every requisite of pictorial value, every news and picture agency in the country had elaborate plans to cover it. Every resource of human and mechanical sort was liberally employed by all of them but Fox News added the extra measure of foresight that spelled an special beat.

Derby Day was one of sunshine and sudden showers. When the horses went to the post, the skies were suddenly darkened. Staff cameraman Edmund Reek took a desperate chance—he changed his shutter at the very last moment while the horses were at the barrier. His camera was ready just as they leaped away—but it WAS ready for the changed light conditions and no other motion picture camera was. Reek's negative looked as if it were made on a bright, sunshiny day—the race could be watched far better on the screen than it could at the actual track.

Director in Chief Truman H. Talley and a staff of cutters were waiting in Chicago. Reek and the other Fox News cameramen delivered their film to the pilot of an airplane. Through the gathering storm, he and a dozen others fought their way toward Chicago.

1925-26 Contracts Are Rolling in for Fox News Service

Business Already Signed Presages the Greatest Year in History

Some of the biggest—and canniest—exhibitors in the country are enthusiastic patrons of Fox News. Among them are Fitzpatrick and McElroy, controlling many theatres in Michigan; the Butterfield Circuit in Michigan; Fanchestein and Rotten with their chain of theatres in the Twin Cities territory; Comerford Amusement Company of Philadelphia territory; Stanley Company, Atlantic City territory, and Lubliner and Trinz, Chicago territory.

Fox News has enjoyed a rapid and steady growth since its origin, less than six years ago. Entering a field crowded with various news reels, it rapidly won its right to patronage by merit and exhibitors.

Today, Fox News holds front rank in many sections of the country and is rapidly reaching a commanding position, not only in the United States but in the thirty odd foreign countries in which it circulates.

Cameramen's College Endorsed by Industry

An innovation in motion picture journalism was the establishment in the early Fall of 1924 of Fox News camera college, for the benefit of editors, cameramen and mechanical experts. The lecturers were men foremost in various lines of the industry and their views were eagerly heard by Fox News employees as contributing their task of giving the public what it wants.

Among the lecturers were Carl Akeley, inventor of the camera that bears his name and big game hunter and explorer; W. L. Rothafel, "Roxy," of broadcasting fame and presentation director of the Capitol Theater, New York City; Rowland V. Lee, director of such famous successes as "As No Man Has Loved" and "Havoc"; Eric T. Clarke, manager of the Eastman Theatre of Rochester, and Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli, and Criterion Theatres, New York City.

Leaders of the industry endorsed Fox News' cameramen's college, prominent among the well-wishers being Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

$1,000 in Prizes for Fox News Cameramen

As a reward for exceptionally meritorious work during the year 1924-1925, two prizes of $500 each were given by Fox News to Staff Cameraman Edmund Reek of New York City, and Field Cameraman Charles W. Herbert, of Montana.

In addition, gold watches were given to Staff Cameraman Fred Mayell of Seattle, and Field Cameraman Ernest Corts of Pennsylvania. The above were in addition to weekly bonuses paid for outstanding subjects.

Staff Cameramen on Fleet's Pacific Trip

When the combined Atlantic and Pacific fleets of the United States Navy, a magnificent Armada, started on its year's cruise to the islands of the Pacific and to Australia, Cameraman Ferd Fordham of Fox News' New York staff went along.

From Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, the Panama Canal, San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco, Hawaii, Samoa and Australia, Fordham sent numerous interesting subjects that earned place in the issues of Fox News.

Fordham was first with pictures of the great naval and land manoeuvers at Oahu, Hawaii.

The Showman Who Exploits His Short Subjects to Make ADDED PROFIT From Them Always Gets the Finest Backing on Educational

Short subjects have had a great deal of stimulus this summer. The coming season should show how much they can mean. With the exhibitor. Who uses them as they should be used.
DANNY in Film Daily.

YOU are using Short Subjects as they should be used only when you are using them to build up Better Programs—and exploiting them to make Added Profit.

Fortunately for all concerned, more exhibitors are recognizing this than ever before—more Showmen are exploiting their one and two-reel pictures and making added dollars out of them than at any other time since the long feature came into vogue.

To all you Showmen who are having a part in the stimulus that is being given to Short Subjects, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., renews its pledge of cooperation with you—that its obligation to you only begins, and does not end, when you book Educational Pictures.

Educational Pictures are nationally advertised to your patrons—consistent advertising in The Saturday Evening Post increases their pulling power at your box-office.

A full line of accessories is available to help you advertise Educational Pictures—posters, lobby display cards, photographs, slides. Trailers on star comedies and specials can be had through the National Screen Service.

A press sheet on each two-reel comedy and each special contains information about the picture, newspaper stories and reviews, practical exploitation suggestions, one-column, two-column and three-column "ad" layouts and star and scene cuts. Mats for advertising and publicity cuts are FREE.

Educational backs up every Showman who backs up his Short Subjects. Your Educational Exchange will give you the fullest cooperation.

"THE TOURIST"

TUXEDO COMEDY

With JOHNNY ARTHUR

Here is the best two-reel comedy that has been turned out this season. It is a charming trifle, and there is every indication that in its star, Johnny Arthur, Educational has a real find. He is a delightful personality . . .

One of the best bits of business ever concocted—one that will set any audience howling—is the scene in which Johnny converts his car into a stove and cooks his breakfast on its various parts. It must be seen to be appreciated.

And if a real star and entertaining tale and excellent direction were not enough, there is added the presence in the cast of the most promising girl we have noticed on the screen in a blue, or even a red moon. She is Helen Foster .... She is beautiful, she has poise—she is, in plain language, a wow. She helps to make "The Tourist" a real knockout that any house should welcome with open arms.—N. Y. MORNING TELEGRAPH.

This is the first of the series of Tuxedo comedies starring Johnny Arthur and if it is indicative of what is to follow, the series should be a profitable one for all hands . . .

William Goodrich has done a splendid job with the directing and the cast does the rest with the good story. There is a touch of melodrama to it, great quantities of comedy and enough suspense to keep the interest at a high pitch.—M. P. NEWS.

"PLEASURE BOUND"

MERMAID COMEDY

With LIGE CONLEY

A ROARING COMEDY

This Mermaid comes through big on waves of laughter. It is one of the cleverest and funniest ever produced in this series. . . . the subtitles are as funny as the gags—which is a novelty in itself. At the fishing pier, the laughs come so fast you can't count them. Probably the funniest fishing scene ever filmed. . . . A scream—all the way.—FILM DAILY.

Here is an exceptionally good comedy with amusing situations galore.... a real comedy that will get laughs from any type of audience. . .—M. P. NEWS.

A corking good comedy. . . . Lige Conley is featured and does a splendid piece of work. Clever tricks with the automobiles and in the fishing sequences prove to be hilarious.... This picture strikes a funny gait from the start and is maintained all the way. Book this one by all means.—EX. TRADE REVIEW.

Here is a real laugh-getter. Dealing with the misadventures of a family who set out on a fishing trip in a Ford, it is full of hilarious, highly original "gags."

—N.Y. MORNING TELEGRAPH.

JIMMIE ADAMS

in "BE CAREFUL"

This is a comedy fairly bulging with humorous situations and some good slapstick and hokum. It is well acted by a competent cast and should go exceptionally well in the neighborhood houses.—M. P. NEWS.

This a lively-moving number that has a good quota of laughs scattered all the way through.—FILM DAILY.

The Editor's Views

IT would do a cynical, blase—that's an editor's word for hard-boiled—exhibitor a lot of good to attend a few sessions of the Paramount Training School for Theatre Managers.

It did us a lot of good. And we are free to admit that we are among the vast army who greeted Harold Franklin's announcement of a plan to prepare young men for exhibiting through the means of a school with more than one grain of salt.

We went through three stages. First, the stage where the mere idea was food for a smile—if not a sneer. Second, after we had read the prospectus and detailed plans of the school. This was the stage where we were willing to admit, "Gosh, they MAY have a real idea, a constructive plan. There is a ring of sincerity about the statement of plans. It's worth a chance."

The third stage is present today. We have concluded three days of work as a voluntary member of the "faculty." Our own contribution has been trifling, merely that of providing the pupils with a historical background to the more practical and definite work that the course really consists of.

But we have met the pupils, and we are impressed with the type of men who are setting about to prepare themselves for the vocation of theatre management. Impressed with their types, their past records, and their personalities; won to admiration by their sincerity and whole-hearted desire to bore in and WORK.

And we have met the men who are showing these pupils through the shoals and their eyes to the beacons. We are here to say that—in common with many veterans of this business—we would pay a lot of money to sit in the same seats as these pupils and profit by the wealth of information that will be theirs.

WHEN John Barry, supervising the work of the school, introduced us to E. J. Myrick on the occasion of our first visit, we opened our eyes.

E. J. Myrick is no theorist. In recent years general manager of the great Jensen and Von Herberg chain, his entire picture career has equipped him for a practical, hard-pan knowledge of theatre management from advertising to the balance sheet.

Paramount has drafted a man of Myrick's calibre to aid in the work of the school. I don't know how you exhibitor readers feel about it, but I am frankly willing to state that on my own entry into the business I'd have given a lot for the privilege of going to school under E. J. Myrick.

That is but a sample. Every member of the Paramount organization, from studio through to publicity, and on to real estate, is working to give the best that is in him—the total of all he and his organization have learned in years of struggle and hardship—to these youngsters whose presence in the school is a credit to the business we call theatre managing.

I AM enthusiastic. I can't help it. My only regret is that, without giving the names of all the lecturers and verbatim reports of their frank, concrete talks, it is impossible to transfer my enthusiasm to the reader.

There is a concrete example, however, that tells much.

Harry Kress, of Piqua, Ohio, has been an exhibitor—and a successful one—for as many years as we can remember.

Harry's son has been assisting him about his theatres for a year or so. That's the only school to which any theatre man could go in past years.

We imagine that Harry met the first announcement of the school with much the same attitude that we did. But at any rate he came on to New York to investigate. The result was the entrance of his son.

This we did not know until we appeared for our own third lecture and ran into Harry Kress.

"What are you doing around a school?" we asked.

"Nothing but looking on," was the answer. "But let me tell you that as recent ago as five years if I had had the chance to get the information that my own son has absorbed in the few days of this school I would have paid ten thousand cash and considered it a bargain."

That—from a cynical, HARD-BOILED exhibitor.

I don't need to say any more.

First in the Field!

Speaking Freely

A very enjoyable few weeks. Pictures, good pictures, and plenty of them. "The Wanderer," the year's first of a spectacular nature. A good show. "The Gold Rush" — long awaited. Laughs — laughs in abundance. What else could we expect from Chaplin? And Joe Plunkett is turning so many away up at the Strand that he has had to put on a midnight show. Though many of us "experts" will insist on telling you that while we frequently laugh our heads off, it isn't Chaplin at his best. These on the heels of "Sally of the Circus," "The Unholy Three," "The Homemaker" and so on. Looks like a good season, boys.

* * *

About Chaplin. When even venturing to question Chaplin's methods and results we feel like a woodpecker with a grudge against the Woolworth Building. But it seems to our own humble self that Chaplin's genius plus the sense for story and organization possessed by Harold Lloyd would be a comedy-maker's heaven. Give me Sam Taylor's story bump and directing ability and I think I could improve Chaplin. Of course it is only an editor who could modestly set out to paint the lily. But what's a little painting job between editors?

Incidentally, having mentioned Sam Taylor. Here's something always gives us a laugh. Our most impressive critics feel that no year can pass without their individual discovery of a startling new directing genius. Some of the wonders they discover make one good picture and are never heard from again. But that must be the fault of the low-brow picture audiences, or the super low-brow producers.

Meanwhile a chap like Sam Taylor spends many years on the Lloyd lot. Writing, co-directing, and finally in complete supervision of the Paramount-Lloyds. You don't get THERE without the goods. And we are willing to bet that there are any number of our metropolitan stars who wouldn't know the name if you mentioned it. What glory is there in discovering a ten year veteran?

Big doings today—Thursday. Out in Indianapolis. Executive meeting of First National. Much shooshing, a little bit of pish-pish, and a dash of mystery. Anything might happen. It is known that Bob Lieber's health has not been of the best for many months. It is only his sense of loyalty to the organization and his colleagues that has kept him at the helm for quite some time. The affable, capable leader may find it necessary to step out this time. Or, again, they may once more induce him to hold on. No telling. Other executive changes hinted. Maybe policy changes. No telling here, either. But it's hot weather to ride all the way to Indianapolis if nothing will happen.

Put this one in the book. The campaign for the opening of the new Embassy Theatre.

A hole in the wall entrance. Six hundred seats. No opportunity for electric lights, no front at all if you want to tell the truth.

How to put it over? How to start it off with fireworks and hurrahs?

Then the announcement that Gloria Gould, daughter of George Jay Gould, was to manage a motion picture theatre with full sway to put into effect her own ultra ideas. Front page stuff. Then a series of ads, distinctive personal messages from Miss Gould herself. And for weeks a painted signboard, reproducing the New York World front page story, that has never failed to stop 'em on Broadway.

I'll say that's putting it over. Sort of four-coloring a White Elephant. Put it in the book.

Oscar Price. Pulling an "on again, off again, Finnegan" act. With Associated Exhibitors. But I guess it is all set now. Just a mere matter of wrapping up the red tape and giving the auditors their turn.

Very interesting. Oscar Price has a standing in the picture industry, a following in financial circles. A rare combination. And holding out possibilities of contributing some important chapters to the picture business of the coming years.

We remember one day that we reminisced with Oscar. And checked over the number of opportunities he has had to cut his eye teeth as a picture man since leaving the right hand of William Gibbs McAdoo. Associated Producers — Tom Ince, Mack Sennett, among others to handle— Fred Warren, Al Lichtman and so on.

Yep, Oscar has cut his eye teeth. When he decides to step into Associated you know that he knows what he is doing. So prepare for action. Not fireworks—but methodical, carefully planned, deliberate work.

Maybe we'll have to call up the engraver and artist and have a standing head made reading, "Dear Martin—Let's stick to the facts." We hate to do it, because we have sense of humor enough to realize that no one else cares a hoot about it.

First Martin slipped on circulation facts. Then he went on to a minor matter when he gave the impression that his paper was THE textbook at the Paramount Theatre Managers' School. Rather tough on Paramount as an estimate of its intelligence. Because the FACT is, of course, that ALL of the trade papers are serving their purpose as text books. At least, three of them are. Three very good ones, "if we do say it as shouldn't."

Survey Shows Big Decline in Pictures Abroad

By
W. Stephen Bush

A CAREFUL survey of European productions during the last month or two shows a rather sensational decline. This is not due to the hot season, to vacation time or to any other fortuitous circumstance. It is the result of inherent causes which in all probability will in the future grow rather than diminish.

The warning voices raised both here and on our side of the water against underestimating the competition of European producers may or may not have been sincere but they clearly come under the heading of false alarms. Whoever watches the activities of European producing concerns with the least attention can have no doubt whatever that the star of the Americans is in the ascendant and that the immediate future at least belongs to them. One does not qualify as an expert on the European situation by rushing through the Continent on a hurried schedule, glancing at some studios and listening to the cheerful chirpings of press agents. Going somewhat into details, it may be remarked that in regard to quantity Germany is doing better than any other country, but the stuff that is being turned out has very little chance outside of Germany.

It is characteristic of the situation as it exists today that in France, Germany and Italy the native producers all seem anxious for American alliances of some kind, not as a matter of choice but as a matter of stern necessity. In my recent letters I have touched upon some of these alliances in France and Germany. Now Italy is seeking American connections more eagerly than ever before. It is rumored that the Unione Cinematografica Italiana wants to form some sort of a partnership with Paramount. The big banks that hold practically all of the stock of the U. C. I. are very desirous of forming such a partnership but the American company shows no great eagerness. It is claimed in Rome that Paramount proposes to make a series of pictures in Italy and that the U. C. I. may be able to help in some way. So far that seems to be little more than loose talk inspired probably by the hopefulness of the Italian company.

With the American pre-eminence in production well assured, the next phase in the development of the European film situation will be the struggle for the control of distribution and exhibition. Curiously enough, while production is almost at a standstill the building of theatres is progressing everywhere with the most astonishing rapidity. The fact has not been lost upon the American companies who have gained a foothold in Europe. Several big theatres in the key cities of France are now controlled by American producing interests; a similar movement is making progress in Germany. There are unmistakable signs that a drive is in preparation in Italy where two or three owners of theatre circuits have been having things all their own way, taking what they want and fixing their own prices. They feel that a struggle is on the way and are buying up theatres right and left. It is not at all unlikely that the American concerns here will pool their interests while the battle is in progress.

It is a safe prediction that within a short time at least one or two of the big American companies will have theatres of their own in every key city throughout Europe to assure them of an opportunity to make the best of their first-run. American influence and power in the film affairs of Europe are growing every day. The fact is not due to luck nor even to greater financial resources but simply to the superior quality of American workmanship. There are other reasons beneath the surface which have been described in Moving Picture World more than once and which need not be repeated here. If the Europeans expect to stay in the procession there is a place for them, but they must for the present at least, be satisfied with cooperation and forget about reciprocity.

There is one country in Europe which views the American film with a friendly eye and gives it a hospitable reception, satisfied to leave the question of reciprocity to the natural laws of supply and demand. I am speaking of Sweden. Just now in midsummer a very large percentage of the motion picture theatres in Sweden are closed, for the people there have to make the best of their short summer. There are plenty of open air shows, but the average Swede loves his summer too well to spend much time for anything but outdoor sports.

Sweden in proportion to its size is well provided with picture houses, possessing about 800. In Stockholm, with a population of less than half a million, there are close to a hundred houses. Compared to the rest of Europe the Swedish houses approach the American ideal of a first-class picture theatre. The houses in winter all do a splendid business, according to my information.

Sweden likes to make an occasional big film with a bid for international patronage, though at present she is not doing very much. The next big film on their "international program" is a superfeature built on Selma Lagerhoef's much read romance, "Jerusalem," which will contain two parts and will probably reach close to 9,000 feet. The film prosperity of Sweden is largely due to the enlightened policy of its government, which does not tax the industry to death like the governments on the Continent.

The Aubert feature, "Salammbo," of which a full description has been printed in these columns some time ago, will have its first-run in the Grand Opera of Paris. Literary and social "lights" were somewhat indignant at this concession of the government to a mere film, but the French government wants to encourage native productions even if it does on the other hand impose crushing taxes on the theatres. The first showing of "Salammbo" will take place October 15, two days before the assembling of the great International Film Congress.

Great as was the indignation of the Parisians over the purchase of the little classic theatre by the Paramount for converting it into a picture house, it has now been succeeded by a great calm. All the painful anticipations of distinguished literary ladies and gentlemen have been put to shame by the generous and enlightened attitude of the American company. The huge building in which the little theatre was housed will be completely reconstructed and when finished will look like a first-class creation of modern American architecture. Best of all, from the French point of view, the little theatre with some added improvements will be let to the "Société de Auteurs Dramatiques" at a nominal rent.

There will be a great International Film Ball at Nice to which all nationalities will be invited. For particulars address M. Comte de Castellane, Nice.

Mayoralty Fight Ends Cohen-Walker Feud; All Are Out to Elect Senator

Governor Smith Helps Bury Hatchet—T.O.C.C. Directors Pledge Support; Offer Headquarters for Camp—Plan Massive Campaign to Aid Tammany—Not Unfriendly to Hylan

By TOM WALLER

WITH Governor Smith as the intermediary, State Senator James Walker and Sydney Cohen have agreed to bury the hatchet. Because of Tammany's choice of Walker in the mayoralty issue soon to be thrashed out in Manhattan's Democratic primaries, differences of the past few years between the former president and the ex-chief attorney of the M. P. T. O. A. have come to an abrupt halt.

Manhattan exhibitors under the leadership of Cohen have already in the embryo a campaign of massive proportions to insure Walker's elevation to the City Hall throne now occupied by John F. Hylan.

Cohen's Position Delicate

Cohen's position is acknowledged to be a delicate one. He is known to be closely allied to New York's Governor and yet also to have been a frequent visitor to City Hall. It is a familiar fact to many in New York that Hylan some time ago appointed Cohen to a high position on the city's committee pertaining to housing conditions and rentals.

SENATOR JAMES J. WALKER

There have been some rumors, since Tammany's announcement of its official choice in the running, that New York exhibitors would put their shoulder to the Walker wheel. The differences that until this week were existent formed the chief barrier to any great amount of credence being associated with these whisperings.

Just before this issue of Moving Picture World was ready to go to press, however, matters in this respect suddenly took definite shape. This was brought about by an unexpected executive session of the directorate of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce being called.

Stand is Unmistakable

At that secret session a resolution was adopted which leaves no circumspection as to the trend of exhibitor sentiment for the highest municipal office. This openly provides that the T. O. C. C. shall individually and unanimously support the pick of the Tammany headquarters. Not only that but the resolution calls for the T. O. C. C. quarters in the Times building being used during the campaign as a wigwam of the theatre owner voters to confer and devise ways and means for the successful placement of Walker as New York's official Democratic candidate for Mayor.

When the resolution was first introduced it is understood that several of the directors voiced against the taking of a public stand on this sentiment at the present time. This, however, not until after a unanimous vote for the support of Walker had been registered.

It is said with authority that the exceptions to publicizing their stand at this time were due mainly to the fear of reprisals from the Hylan camp in view of the circumstances.

Cohen, who introduced the resolution and who is chairman of the T. O. C. C. directorate, is credited with having answered such apprehensive queries with the reply that reprisals were to be expected in such a heated election as the primaries here promise. In such a situation the old adage of "you're with us or ag'in us" made the action an out and out proposition, one way or the other.

Once Supported Hylan

The action of the T. O. C. C. directorate should not, however, allow the impression to prevail that the local showmen are against Hylan for any personal reason. He seems to be generally accepted as a friend of the industry. In fact Cohen was chairman of the motion picture campaign committee which helped re-elect Hylan four years ago. The Mayor at that time is said to have publicly expressed his gratitude for the work of the film men.

But Walker is essentially regarded as being in closer sympathy with the industry because of his actual knowledge of its needs through participation within its ranks. Again Walker's close relationship to the Governor furthers his aptitude as a film candidate.

Should Walker, however, be defeated at the primaries, it is said that the New York film men will subscribe the same vigorous support for the election of Hylan that they mustered four years ago.

Because of this situation some close associates of Cohen credit him with having little fear of anything in the nature of a reprisal being directed this way from the Hylan camp.

Hatchet "Buried Deeper"

The burial of the hatchet between Cohen and Walker has been expected right along, in fact several months prior to any rumbling of the job now aspired for by the Democratic House leader. Evidence of a letting down of the barriers between these two had been observed at various functions where they were both included on the speakers' list. The entrance of the political issue has only resulted, a few comment, in the hatchet being "buried deeper."

Big Tammany Aid

The entrance of the exhibitors into the mayoralty battle should prove to be one of Tammany's most powerful aids. The influence wielded by about 600 screens, said to comprise the representation of the T. O. C. C., is conceded by some authorities to be even greater in reaching more drastically and effectively the voters included in Manhattan's population of over 6,000,000 persons, than the media of the newspaper or district leader.

Should New York showmen include in their campaign the utilization of trailers and other Walker propaganda on their screens, which authoritative sources are inclined to doubt now, there may be a tremendous national reaction. This, in view of the fact that it would be the first time in political history that an army of theatres has actually taken an open position and declared itself. with no strings flying, for one political party.

A possible illustration of the Walker tendency manifested itself in the Rialto on Broadway even last week. Dr. Hugh Riesenfeld in an interview with the writer a year ago declared that one of the secrets in the successful management of a motion picture theatre was to prohibit the seeping into the program of anything smattering of a partisan aspect. Yet one of his stellar attractions at the show which we attended several days ago was a song about Walker as "our next Mayor" rendered by Ben Bernie. The effect in the theatre was proven at that instance by the round of applause the mentioning of Walker's name received.

It is interesting to note that in Cohen's private office are photographs—facing one another—of Walker and Hylan. The photo of Walker has occupied the same position near Cohen's desk since 1921 and 1922 when

Walker was counsel for the M. P. T. O. A. and came into almost daily contact with the former exhibitor president.

A recent angle on the situation which severed familiarity between the two would credit Cohen with a full sense of the duties incumbent upon a leader. In this respect it is volunteered that Cohen's lieutenants issued certain statements described as being derogatory to Walker. The latter and those in the trade in general were then apparently of the belief that such movements were made upon the instigation of Cohen. The ex-president, however, is said to have taken full responsibility at the time because of the desire to shield those on his staff and for whom he is said to have felt personally responsible.

It is now indicated that the old friendship of Cohen and Walker has been firmly re-cemented. Governor Smith's frequent private sessions with Cohen, which are said to have taken place especially during the past few weeks, are declared to have played no little part in bringing about this reconciliation.

First Inkling at Milwaukee

The first decided move for enlisting New York's exhibitors in the fray is now seen by some to have been made by the Governor during the Milwaukee convention when he sent to Cohen the following telegram, republished from a convention issue of Moving Picture World:

"Best wishes for successful outcome of convention. Congratulations and greetings to picture exhibitors. You know how I value their cooperation and that I have their best interests at heart."

Governor Smith's consistent stand against censorship and endorsement of bills beneficial to the film industry together with his intimate alignment with Walker, as leader of the house, who has at times actively participated in New York's exhibitor ranks, makes Tammany's pick a solidifying one for Manhattan theatre owners. Such, at least, is the interpretation by some of the T. O. C. C. endorsement.

Some of Walker's Activities

While up in Albany some of Senator Walker's most conspicuous moves to help the industry were widely publicized and lauded. Largely through his efforts, it has been said, the bill of Senator Thompson of Niagara Falls providing for Sunday opening was carried. This matter came up in the session of 1919.

One of his outstanding achievements in 1920 was the passage of the deposit bill, safeguarding moneys of exhibitors paid to film companies by making it necessary to maintain a trust fund in which exhibitors could deposit such sums.

In 1921 he is credited with having been greatly instrumental in carrying through the bill relative to the admission of minors in motion picture theatres under proper adult supervision. For this work he was commended by womens' clubs of New York who acclaimed it a constructive piece of legislation.

1600 Broadway?

A man who has held an official position in the M. P. T. O. A. informed us on the telephone that the motion picture division of the James J. Walker mayoralty campaign would have its headquarters in the old offices of Universal on the third floor of 1600 Broadway. He said that as yet no one has been appointed to take charge of these quarters but that the most likely man will be Sam Berman, widely known for his activities in Manhattan and state exhibitor circles. This office, he stated, would be conducted by an executive committee and a general committee to be named within the next few days.

This informant stated that he did not know that the T. O. C. C. directorate had named in their resolution their own headquarters for this purpose. It was his understanding, he said, that Senator Walker would be more likely to approve 1600 Broadway because of the neutrality of its position.

Sydney Cohen, while he refused to discuss any of the above issues, said that as the T. O. C. C. directorate has endorsed Walker and has agreed to campaign for him it would be hardly feasible to have the headquarters located in any other place than that described by the resolution.

Meet on Contract and Arbitration Aug. 24 at Natl. Hdqs.

Joseph M. Seider, chairman of the contract and arbitration committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Oscar Neufeldt, chairman of a similar committee of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, have agreed upon August 24 as the date for conferences on a new equitable contract and arbitration system.

This meeting is a direct result of the Asbury Park Convention of the New Jersey M. P. T. O., at which Frederick H. Elliott, General Manager of the independents, pledged his association to appoint a conference committee not later than July 10. The I. M. P. A., at a special meeting July 8, unanimously ratified Mr. Elliott's action and appointed a committee consisting of Oscar Neufeldt, Philadelphia, chairman. Jack Bellman and Joe Klein, of New York. President I. E. Chadwick and General Manager Elliott are ex-officio members.

The committee of the M. P. T. O. A., appointed at the recent Detroit meeting of the organization's directors, consists of Joseph M. Seider, chairman; Julian Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; Harry Davis, Pittsburgh; R. R. Biechele, Kansas City, Kas.; Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass. President R. F. Woodhull, of the M. P. T. O. A., is an ex-officio member.

FORTY-THREE ARE ELIGIBLE AS NEW YORK REVIEWERS

Forty-three men and women passed the recent civil service examination in New York State and are on the eligible list for appointment as reviewers to the New York State Motion Picture Commission. Mrs. Catherine Siegrist, of Buffalo, heads the list. About forty persons failed to pass the examination. Among the number was John J. Walker, of Schenectady, former owner of the Barcli Theatre in that city, but who sold out a year or two ago, and then entered the restaurant business. In the metropolitan district, reviewers receive $1,800 and their expenses, while outside of the metropolis they are paid $1,600 a year and their expenses.

New Chaplin Records

Charlie Chaplin's "The Gold Rush," which had its premiere this week at the Strand, Broadway, New York, is described in a statement from United Artists as "exceeding in attendance that recorded at any previous opening day's business for any Broadway motion picture theatre."

Aaron Jones is credited with having telegraphed United Artists that the new Chaplin picture, which opened in Chicago on August 16 at the Orpheum, "broke all records since the house was opened seventeen years ago."

Hectic Week of Changes in Albany

Never in the history of the motion picture theatre in Albany has there been a week so replete with important changes. This has not been confined entirely to the theatres, but it has occurred along Film Row as well. Charles Walder, manager for Fox and one of the old timers in the business, resigned to engage in the real estate business in Miami. Edward Lyons, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Albany for the past year, resigned and returned to New York and, according to rumor, may be succeeded by Oscar Perrin, who suddenly resigned during the week as manager of the Buckley houses. And then there came the resignation in the Berinstein chain of George Roberts, managing-director, and his son, Ormond.

Ben Davis resigned from the Schine circuit and Charles Sesonske, another old timer, sold the Grand in Johnstown. The Farrells in Schenectady sold the Lincoln, and at the same time the Sucknos in Albany disposed of the Albany and the Regent Theatres to the Strand interests. On top of this came the announcement that William Shirley and Myer Freedman of Schenectady, had bought a small theatre in that city and would re-enter the business. In addition to all this there were any number of minor changes.

TORONTO MAN WITH NEW UNIT

N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, has become identified with a new entertainment enterprise which has been organized under the name of Trans-Canada Bookings, Ltd., of which Lawrence Solman, manager of the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Toronto, has been made president, it has been intimated. Charles Rolley of Montreal has also gone to Toronto to take charge of the headquarters of the new company, it is announced. Trans-Canada Bookings will specialize in British and foreign productions. One-week engagements are promised for Toronto and Montreal, and three-night bookings are being arranged for Ottawa, Hamilton and London, in Eastern Canada. Other cities will also be included for short runs.

WOMAN EXHIBITOR DIES

Mrs. D. A. Alexander, proprietor of the Orpheum Theatre at Ionia, Mich., died recently following an operation in Grand Rapids. Mrs. Alexander won a state wide reputation among film salesmen for her hospitality and courtesy to them.

NEW KANSAS CITY HOUSE

By August 25 ground will be broken for the construction of the new $275,000 theatre at Thirty-eighth and Main streets, Kansas City, according to Jack Roth, who is to be manager. Blue prints and other details now are ready.

Connecticut Exhibitors Will Appeal From Decision Upholding New Tax

Albany Woman Ends Record Film Career

With a record of having been absent from the theatre but two nights in over five years, and that due to a sprained ankle, Mrs. Catherine Farrell, owner of the Lincoln in Schenectady, has sold her house to Jacob Feltman and son of Albany, newcomers in the business. When Mrs. Farrell walked out of the house the other night, turning over the keys to the new owners, it was like leaving an old friend, for the theatre has provided a good living for Mrs. Farrell and her son, Harold. Although with but 800 seats, with admission ranging from 10 to 17 cents, the theatre, always spick and span, could be depended upon week in and week out to play to capacity business.

And now Mrs. Farrell plans to enjoy the fruit of her labors. First will come an auto trip through the New England States and a portion of Canada, then back home, and perhaps if time hangs heavily on her hands, another theatre. Harold Farrell, the son, will find employment as a film salesman.

Demand of 30% Raise by Denver Unions Refused by Showmen

The musicians' union, operators' union and the stagehands' union in Denver have threatened to walk out September 1 because of the refusal of Denver Theatre Managers to accept a new contract offered to replace their old contract which expires the 31st of August.

Local theatre managers association, which is composed of the managers of all leading Denver amusement houses, have insisted that the terms of the old contract be renewed for another period and as a basis for their contention are prepared to show that the business of the theatres during the past year did not warrant any increase in wages or a cut in working schedule.

The unions have demanded a 30 per cent increase in pay and a cut from seven days a week to six days a week in active working time. They also insist on other minor changes. As the matter now stands, there seems to be very little hope for either side to make any concessions. It is reported that the theatre managers are prepared to fill all vacancies which may be created by a general walk-out of union employees.

EXCHANGE BUILDINGS IN N. B.

St. John, N. B., is to have two brand new film exchange buildings, one of which is to accommodate the local branches of Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., and Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto. The other will provide office and shipping accommodations for First National Pictures Corporation, of which William Melody is the local branch manager.

Lawyer for State Theatre Owners Says They Will Go to Highest Court for Ruling On Levy's Constitutionality

New Haven, Conn. (Special to Moving Picture World.)

AN appeal immediately will be taken to the U. S. Supreme Court on the decision, filed in New Haven, Conn., Monday, August 17, that the new state motion picture tax and censorship law is constitutional. The decision was reached by a special federal court composed of Judges Thomas Thacker, Henry Wade Rogers and Henry Goddard.

Although the law now is enforceable the exhibitors of the state virtually have agreed to ignore it, pending the appeal to the national tribunal.

The action of the special court is the result of petitions to restrain enforcement of the law by injunction brought by the American Feature Film Co. of Boston and the Fox Film Corp., of New York.

The special court, in its finding, declares that the law is enforceable; that it is purely a police regulation; that it is not a burden nor is it directly or substantially a restraint on interstate commerce such as conducted by the two complainant film companies.

The decision revealed that a brief in support of the complainants had been filed by the Motion Picture Council in America, Inc., as a friend of the court.

At the hearing on the petitions for the injunction in July the presentation was made by George W. Wickersham. He appeared as general counsel, representing the film industry nationally. Benedict M. Holden is counsel for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut.

The law went into effect on July 1, having been passed by the last session of the state legislature. The taxing of films was to have commenced July 8. Following notice of the filing of the injunction petitions, William H. Blodgett, state tax commissioner, suspended collection of the tax until such time as the special court had reached a decision. In the meantime, however, he ordered the theatre managers to keep a record of all films shown on and after July 8, stating that in the event the law was held to be constitutional he would proceed to collect the tax on all such films.

Shortly after Governor Templeton had made the law effective by signing the bill Tax Commissioner Blodgett appointed as a special deputy, John J. Splain, of New Haven, to see that the law was obeyed. Offices in Poli's Palace Theatre building, New Haven, were engaged for Splain.

Immediately after Holden learned that the special court had found the law constitutional he announced the taking of an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court. He likewise asserted that additional suits would be brought against the state on "other grounds." He indicated these actions would be commenced before the highest court has acted on the appeal.

Some exhibitors stated that Attorney Holden had advised them to "sit tight and go on as you have been."

John D. Powers, exchange manager at New Haven, declared that business would be conducted as usual in view of the proposal appeal and also because another temporary injunction will be sought.

The purpose of the law was to tax the producers. The theatre owners said they would have to bear the brunt of it. The statute imposes a levy of $10 for the first 1,000 feet of film of a subject and 50 cents for each 100 feet of film of the same subject at the time it is brought into the state to be released.

The censorship provision exempts news reels and scientific or other educational subjects as well as pictures intended to be for religious, educational, patriotic or charitable purposes.

At a hearing conducted by Governor Templeton before he approved the law those who favored its enactment declared that Connecticut was the only state in the Union that did not tax the motion picture industry —the seventh largest in the world. The new Connecticut law is said to provide a levy on films higher than that of any other state.

As a result of the reduction in the state tax on amusement enterprises within the state nearly a million dollars less was received from that source during the fiscal year ended June 30, last.

THEATRE MANAGERS UNITE IN LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Theatre Managers Association of Los Angeles, embodying motion pictures, vaudeville and legitimate stage interests, was formed Friday, August 7. The newly formed association includes: West Coast Theatres, A. M. Bowles; Orpheum Circuit, Harry Singer; Biltmore Theatre, V. E. Kennedy; E. D. Smith Productions and Mason Theatre, Jacque Pierre; Philharmonic Auditorium, George Smith; Orange Grove Theatre and Thomas Wilkes interests, Sydney Miller; Frank Egan and Egan Theatre, Lee Parvin; Pantages Circuit, Carl Walker; Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Sid Grauman; Majestic Theatre, Michael Corper; Famous Players-Lasky theatres, Frank L. Newman.

The primary motive of the association is to promote the best interests of theatrical activities in Los Angeles, both in a social and business way.

COSTA WITH BROOKLYN CHAIN

Anthony A. Costa, managing director of the National Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., has resigned to become director of publicity and exploitation for the Small & Strausberg Circuit in Brooklyn. He will have charge of the exploitation for more than 25 big houses, including some of the finest in Brooklyn and Long Island.

Pathex Provides Camera and Projector for Non-Theatricals

ONE of the most important developments in recent years in the field of motion-picture equipment has just been announced with the release on the market of a new camera and projector designed exclusively for non-theatrical purposes. The handling of each machine has been so simplified as to be almost automatic; and because of this facility of operation, the invention is expected to accomplish much in the popularizing of the motion-picture in such circles as have not already been won to the screen.

The American sponsors of the invention have been organized as the Pathex, Inc., which is a subsidiary of Pathe Exchange, Inc., one of the oldest established companies in the motion-picture industry. Pathex, Inc., is promoting the new camera and projector in America under license from Pathe Cinema of Paris, the patentees. The invention has already been demonstrated to be a positive success in France and other European countries, where many thousands of the Pathex sets are being sold monthly.

The invention comprises a motion-picture camera and projector so small as to be enclosable in a small-sized hand-bag, the combined weight of both machines being about five pounds. Both camera and projector are the acme of scientific construction and engineering technique and represent the fruits of over twenty-five years of continuous study and experimentation. The specially manufactured film stock to be used in this apparatus is an innovation in the American market and is declared to be vastly superior to the slow-burning stock now available for non-theatrical uses. The entire Pathex set, including motion-picture camera, projector and accessories, is procurable at less than $100 retail.

The Pathex camera is 3⅜ inches long, 4⅛ inches high, and 1⅝ of an inch wide. The lens is an f3.5 non-adjustable fixed focus anastigmat. "Close-ups" of objects in motion can be made at five feet, and the camera can be used immediately thereafter to photograph distant views without any focus adjustment. A calibrated lens adjuster permits the operator to vary the diaphragm opening in accordance with light conditions. A chart, simplified for the use of the amateur, indicates at a glance the proper lens adjustment to be employed. A view finder is conveniently located on top of the camera. A footage indicator on the side of the camera shows automatically how many feet of film have been exposed and how much remains in the film-magazine to be used.

The film stock employed in the Pathex camera and projector is of the reversible variety; that is, the negative film exposed in the camera is reversed by a special process to a positive. Accordingly, the same film is used in the projector that has been previously exposed in the camera. The film magazine contains thirty feet of film, is light-proof, and can thus be inserted in the camera in full daylight. The individual frame is 2-8's by 3-8's of an inch, and there are 1100 such frames in the thirty-foot reel, making the Pathex reel equivalent to 69 feet of standard film. A special feature of the Pathex film is that the perforations are located in the center of the film strip between the individual frames instead of on the edges as in the case of the standard film. A pull-down claw, seated directly in front of the film track and below the lens, engages and disengages in these perforations as the crank is turned, thus drawing the successive frames of the film in line with the lens aperature. The film magazines can be procured at any Pathex agency at less than two dollars each. When the entire thirty-foot reel has been exposed, the film magazine is removed from the camera and forwarded to the Pathex laboratory where the film is developed and returned at no extra cost to the owner in a ready-to-use reel for the projector.

The Pathex projector, like the camera, combines to a marvelous degree efficiency of operation with compactness of space. The projector is 12 1-2 inches high and is fastened to a base 7 inches long and 3 3-4 inches wide. It has all the essential mechanisms of the standard projector—lamp house, upper and lower magazines, adjustable lens, shutter, intermitent, and an ingenious arrangement of cogs and friction rollers to assure a steady pull on the film strip as it is drawn by the pull-down claw before the projecting lens. The projector is equipped with a 12-volt lamp, current for which is secured from the ordinary house circuit by merely plugging into a convenient outlet or lamp socket. Pictures can be projected on as small an area as the human hand with perfect visibility. A sheet or wall space up to 3 by 4 feet can be used with the same clarity of detail. An especially ingenious feature of the Pathex projector is an "automatic stop," which halts the movement of the film at such frames as contain sub-titles and holds the film in check until the spectator has had time to peruse the reading matter. In this way, a sub-title takes the space of only one frame or at the most two frames, thus effecting an immense saving in footage over the standard projection.

The Pathex Company has prepared a wide variety of interesting subjects in ready-made exhibition form for home projection. These subjects, which are procurable at a very moderate cost at the same stores handling the camera and projector, cover animal life, industry, art, science, drama, comedy, sports, travelogues etc. These exhibition films are provided in two sizes—thirty or sixty feet long. They require only the use of the projector the camera being employed for such original motion-picture photography as the amateur photographer may wish to make.

DAVIS LEAVES SHALLENBERGER

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation, announces the resignation of Hugh C. Davis from his post as comptroller of the organization. Davis has accepted a position with Davis Distributing Division, for whom, it is understood, he will perform the same offices as in his previous affiliation. "Mr. Davis goes to his new work with my every good wish," said Dr. Shallenberger.

SCHREIBER BROTHERS PART

The firm of Schreiber Brothers, which has thrived in the exhibiting business in Detroit for the past ten years, was broken last week when Jacob and Alex, the two members of the firm, divided their interests. Jacob will operate the Frontenac Theatre on Harper avenue and Alex will continue in the Blackstone, which is located across from the City Hall.

CHICAGO FILM BOARD OFFICERS

The new officers for the Chicago Film Board of Trade is headed by Jack Sampson, manager of F. B. O., as president. George Dembow of Fox, vice-president, Irving Mandel of Security Pictures, secretary, and I. M. Schwartz of Educational, treasurer. The following board of directors were elected: L. A. Rozelle, Harry Lorch, Jack Sampson, J. A. Steinson, J. L. Friedman, C. E. Bond and George Dembow. Joe Abramson continues as executive secretary.

COMMUNITY THEATRE PLAN FAILS

The project for a civic theatre in Chicago went glimmering last week when the 3,000 stockholders in the project received their $5 back that they had subscribed for the new theatre. It was hoped to get about 50,000 members but the promoters, of whom Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick was the leader, failed to get the people interested in the movement.

FANNIE HURST WINS PRIZE

Following the announcement that Fannie Hurst had won Liberty's $50,000 prize story contest, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, made known that Miss Hurst is now at the Lasky studio in Hollywood and that her story, which will be entitled "The Moving Finger," will be produced immediately as a Paramount picture by James Cruze.

FIRST NAT'L SET FOR SALES MEET

Plans are all set for the Sales Convention of First National supervisors and branch managers which will convene in New York under the direction of E. A. Eschmann, August 25, 26 and 27. An elaborate program has been arranged with a view to giving the sales executives complete knowledge of the First National product which they will handle during the coming season.

REPORT KERRY INJURED

Norman Kerry, Universal, was seriously injured in the mountains near Pendleton, Ore., several days ago, when the horse he was riding slipped and rolled on him, Universal announces. Kerry was the principal in a big super-western picture projected by Universal and directed by Edward Sedgwick.

BATAVIA COMPLIES WITH LAW

Numerous changes have been ordered in the construction, arrangement and equipment of every theatre in Batavia, N. Y., following a recent visit to the city by a state building inspector. About 30 changes have been ordered in the new Lafayette and Family Theatres and these will all be made.

VAUDETTE LOSS $30,000

The Vaudette Theatre at Sterling, Ill., was destroyed by fire last month with a loss of thirty thousand dollars and no insurance to cover the damage. Crossed wires are thought to have started the blaze and at the time of the fire the house was being remodeled for an early opening with pictures and vaudeville.

PICCADILLY RE-NAMED

Warner Brothers, who recently acquired the Piccadilly Theatre, New York, announce that the theatre's name would be changed just prior to the formal opening under their management. The new title is "Warners' Theatre."

WARNER'S EASTERN LABORATORY

In an effort to assure greater service to eastern and western exhibitors who show their product, Warner Bros. are opening the former Vitagraph film laboratory in Flatbush, New York in conjunction with their huge laboratory in Hollywood. It will relieve congestion at the Hollywood plant where heretofore all the Warner film has been developed and printed for the world distribution. All film will continue to be developed there, but one negative will be shipped east for print distribution in Eastern territory. The New York plant will be in operation in about sixty days and when in operation will employ 350 people.

Coming and Going

Col. Fred Levy, Louisville, recently postponed a trip to Europe to have started in July, on account of injuries suffered by Mrs. Levy in a fall from a horse. The trip will probably be made in the late summer.

Harry D. Goldberg, formerly connected with the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, is on a trip to San Francisco via the Panama Canal. He will be gone for two months.

Col. W. F. Clarke, vice-president of Cranfield and Clarke, Inc., left for Montreal on Sunday night on a business tour throughout the country.

Richard A. Rowland is on his way back to New York after a visit to the West Coast Studios.

Richard Dix has completed his four month's western visit and is now headed for New York City.

I. Libson, general manager of the Libson chain of first-run theatres in Greater Cincinnati, has returned to his office after a sojourn of several weeks in Atlantic City.

Ray Frankel, who is associated with the Frankel interests, operating theatres in Cincinnati, Columbus and elsewhere, is again back at his desk in Cincinnati, following a vacation along the Great White Way.

C. Lalumiere, general manager of the Film DeLuxe, Ltd., of Montreal, Canada, who has the Canadian distribution rights for Banner and Royal Productions has returned to Montreal after conferring with Henry Ginsberg concerning the business matters.

Buenos Aires Has 25 Native Producers

There are no less than twenty-five motion picture film producers in Buenos Aires engaged in the business of making current events films and plays, according to a recent report from the Department of Commerce.

Very little money is actually expended in the production of the Argentine film plays. Often the artists do not receive any pay until the play is in the circuit and bringing a return. However, practically all of them return a good profit as they have a local element of attraction. Although most of the artists are amateurs, the Argentine film industry has begun to develop a few "professionals" who devote all of their time to motion picture plays. The highest recorded fee paid to one of these artists was 1,500 pesos cash for the film and 10 per cent of the net profits.

ADDITIONS TO WARNER STAFF

Jack Warner, supervisor of Warner production, announces he has signed Ben Carre, art director, and William Koenig, until recently general production manager at Universal City.

Some Solution!

Frank H. Wooton, owner of the Park Theatre at Lebanon, who was denied a license because the Lebanon Improvement Society, Inc., desired to give film shows, has found a happy solution to his problem. He has sold his theatre to the society, which has closed it and is presenting shows in the town hall.

A. A. SCHMIDT

Just made F. B. O.'s West Coast representative.

F. B. O. Makes Schmidt West Coast Representative

A. A. Schmidt, for the last three years west coast division manager of Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., was this week promoted to the position of west coast representative of the company, to act as intermediary and contact man between the production department at the studio and the executive offices in New York in addition to his present duties with relation to distribution and sales, according to an announcement by Major H. C. S. Thomson, President and Managing Director of the company.

The appointment of Mr. Schmidt to this post will release B. P. Fineman, production manager, from some of his arduous work, and will permit Fineman to concentrate all of his attention on production activities and studio management, while Schmidt will be in constant communication with the eastern offices.

Movie Season Reports

Baltimore business is approximately 10 per cent better as a result of Greater Movies Season, according to Mr. Louis Schlichter, controlling the Edmondson and Bridge Theatres in that city, and general manager of the local campaign. Baltimore wants the season again next year, he added in a communication to Hays.

Robert Bender of the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, telegraphed that exhibitors there were well satisfied. The increase over the average business was considered good and the campaign was in every respect a success. While he has not yet taken a vote of exhibitors on next year's campaign, Mr. Bender believes that they will be favorable to another unified drive.

Herman Wobber, San Francisco: "Greater Movie Season was inaugurated here with publicity parades and every other legitimate and dignified effort to attract attention. The theatres are showing the results of the campaign through increased attendance."

CIRCUIT ASPIRATIONS IN ILLINOIS

The Mid-State Theatre Corporation, operated by E. E. Alger and E. B. Ramsey, which now owns six theatres in Illinois, has acquired the Riviera Theatre in Peru, Ill. By October 1 it expects to have 10 theatres on its circuit, it announces.

Places Cameraman on Par with Star

"The cameraman is just as important a unit of picture production as the star, the director or the writer," says Raymond L. Schrock, general manager of Universal City, who has just signed long-term contracts with nine cinematographers who have photographed recent Universal pictures, and, in addition, has instituted a course of training for new cameramen at the studio.

The experts now under contract are Charles Stumar, Milton Moore, Virgil Miller, Arthur Todd, Jackson Rose, Edward Shelton, Harry Newman, Max Dupont and John Stumar.

Butterfield Building Two New Theatres

A deal that has been pending for some time was consumated the past week between D. R. and C. B. Wilson, prominent manufacturers of Pontiac, and Col. W. S. Butterfield, president of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprise Company, Detroit, whereby the Messrs. Wilson plan the erection of a new theatre in Pontiac for Butterfield at a cost of $260,000.

The new theatre will be located on Saginaw Street, on a plot of ground sixty by one hundred and forty-five feet, across from the Oakland Theatre which was recently purchased by Butterfield and the occupancy of which he will secure in about a year and a half's time. The seating capacity will be approximately thirteen hundred.

At the same time, Col. Butterfield announces that articles of association for the Bay City Theatre Company have been filed with the Secretary of State at Lansing, and all arrangements have been made with contractors for the building of a new theatre in Bay City. The estimated cost of this new theatre will be $350,000 and it will be the largest theatre and auditorium in Bay City. The Capitol Theatre will have a total seating capacity of 1,660.

Laemmle Inaugurates Preview Parties for Small Towns

A NEW idea in marketing films in small cities and towns distant from the exchange centers was inaugurated last week by Universal Pictures Corporation by means of an elaborate trade showing held in the William Theatre, Creston, Ia. The showing was for the benefit of exhibitors in a radius of from 50 to 75 miles around Creston and was staged as a gala event in film circles of that section.

So successful was the showing, styled by Universal as "Carl Laemmle's Universal Theatre Party," that three more such showings are scheduled for other sections of Iowa and plans are under way at the Universal home office to extend the system to all parts of the country. It is predicted that in a few weeks every exhibitor in the country will have an opportunity of pre-viewing Universal pictures in his own locality.

The showing at Creston was arranged with great care. The use of the Willard Theatre was obtained from Eller Metzger, its owner, for a morning and afternoon showing. W. C. Truog, Universal's assistant sales director in that part of the country; M. Gottlieb, Universal exchange manager at Des Moines, and Dave Bader, representative from the Universal home office, co-operated to put the party over.

The Creston Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations in that town got behind the party, which rapidly developed into a sort of exhibitor convention, drawing theatre owners from the entire country-side. The exhibitors were invited to bring members of their families or other guests with them.

Upon arriving in Creston the visiting exhibitors found that they were the guests of Carl Laemmle in every sense of the word. Meals, entertainment and other incidentals were "on" Universal, and even the transportation expenses of the visitors were refunded. The entertainment, in addition to the showing of a number of Universal Jewels and other pictures, included the famous Sugar Corn Orchestra, which is a feature of Radio Broadcast Station WHO in Des Moines, Edna May Trine, a recognized Chautauqua vocal star, and a popular dancer from Des Moines.

The new system of small town trade showings made a great hit with the exhibitors, judging from reports. A letter of appreciation was written signed by all of them, for transmission to Carl Laemmle. They wrote as follows, in part:

"We, the assembled exhibitors of Southwestern Iowa, at Universal's first Exhibitors' Theatre Party, wish to tender our sincere thanks to you and your splendid organization.

"We feel that out of this first party may come a movement which will revolutionize the buying problems of the exhibitors of the small towns. It is our belief that a picture previewed by the exhibitor is better sold to the theatre patrons, and you, Mr. Laemmle, are to be commended for leading the way.

"Many fine pictures have been screened for us; we have dined upon the choicest foods; we have smoked the choicest brands of cigars; we were royally entertained by a good orchestra, a lovely singer and a cute little dancer—and the remarkable part of it all is that not an effort was made to sell a single contract, which speaks volumes for the sincerity of your organization."

The next "Carl Laemmle Universal Theatre Party" will be held in the Temple Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Ia. The week following the party at Mt. Pleasant, a third showing will be held, this time at Humboldt, Ia., and a fourth showing at New Hampton, Ia., early in September.

PARAMOUNT WEEK ADVERTISING

The Eighth Annual Paramount Week begins Sunday, September 5, and will be observed by from 7,000 to 8,000 theatres situated in approximately 2,000 cities in the United States. As in previous years, every exhibitor who books Paramount pictures for the solid week of September 6-12 will get the benefit of the free newspaper advertising which is scheduled for display in 3,500 newspapers. The size of the insertions will vary according to the number of theatres represented in a given city. But in no instance will the display space be under 845 lines, while arrangements have been made to allow for advertisements as big as 1,600 lines.

$3,000 BLAZE IN CHICAGO

The patrons of the Standard Theatre at 746 North Clark street, Chicago, had a fire scare when the hotel Wilmington next door caught fire and was damaged about $3,000 before the firemen put out the flames. The movie patrons filed out of the theatre in an orderly manner when the smoke from the blaze invaded the house.

State Rights Sales

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures, has sold his whole Artclass program of twenty-four pictures to Progress Pictures, Inc., of St. Louis. The territory covered in the deal includes Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri. With those territories already reported Louis Weiss now has releases from the Great Lakes down to the Gulf of Mexico.

Incorporations

Companies incorporated in New York State during the past week include: Vital Exchanges, Inc., $100,000, with D. R. Hochreich, J. C. Davis, J. K. Adams, New York City. Number Five Corporation, $10,000, Philip Goodman, A. V. Rodgers, Morris Katz, New York City. Wortham Pictures Corporation, $5,000, R. E. Wortham, Robert Sterling, Brooklyn; R. D. Hannessen, New York City. Mac Theatre Corporation, $6,000, William Mancuso, Salvatore Casalaro, Frank J. Allocca, Brooklyn. Scott-Bangsberg Corporation, $1,000, J. D. Scott, L. R. Bangsberg, David Detjan, New York City. Theatre Properties Corporation, $25,000, D. A. Ticktin, Francis Finger, M. S. Finesilver, New York City. Jack White Comedy Corporation, $100,000, I. M. Michelman, E. T. Gibe, E. Kraychie, New York City. Edmund Enterprises, Inc., $50,000, Ed Rosenbaum, Jr.; Joseph P. Bickerton, Jr.; S. D. Stutsen, New York, the following companies not stating the amount of capitalization: Yonkers Operating Company, with David Blum, I. N. Greenfield, Beatrice Selenke, New York City. Schaffner & Sweet, Inc., with I. C. Weisman, Edward C. Raftery, Mae M. Lipp, New York City. Coyle-Payne Manufacturing Corporation, A. F. vonBermuth, Whitestone, L. I.; O. A. Stumpe, Carl Newton, New York. Joyce Amusement Corporation, with Irving Bloom, Lillian Singman, Anna Abrams, New York City.

Gulf Coast Amusement Company, Goosecreek, Texas, capital stock $50,000. Incorporators Bassett Blakely, C. M. Cassill and D. L. Lunn.

The Parsons Theatres Enterprises, Inc., of Boston has been granted articles of incorporation. The capital is $25,000. The incorporators are: C. Parsons, A. Lillian Parsons and Lillian H. Parsons, all of Rockport.

The Film Building Corporation, capital $20,000, has been chartered at Louisville by Fred Levy, Fred Levy, Jr., and Lee L. Goldberg for construction of a new film exchange plant for the Big Features Rights Corporation and First National Pictures.

JERRY ABRAMS

A. M. McLAUGHLIN

Jerry Abrams, for many years with the Renown Pictures, Inc., as their Chicago branch manager, has been appointed district manager for Tiffany and Truart Productions by M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of both companies. Abram's territory will embrace Chicago, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines, Omaha, Minneapolis and Milwaukee. His headquarters will be in Chicago. Soon after his appointment as District Manager Abrams appointed A. H. McLaughlin, for many years his assistant, as manager of the Chicago branch of the Renown Exchange. Mr. McLaughlin's appointment is in line with the well known policy of M. H. Hoffman, Vice-President of the Renown Pictures, Inc. of promotion from the ranks.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

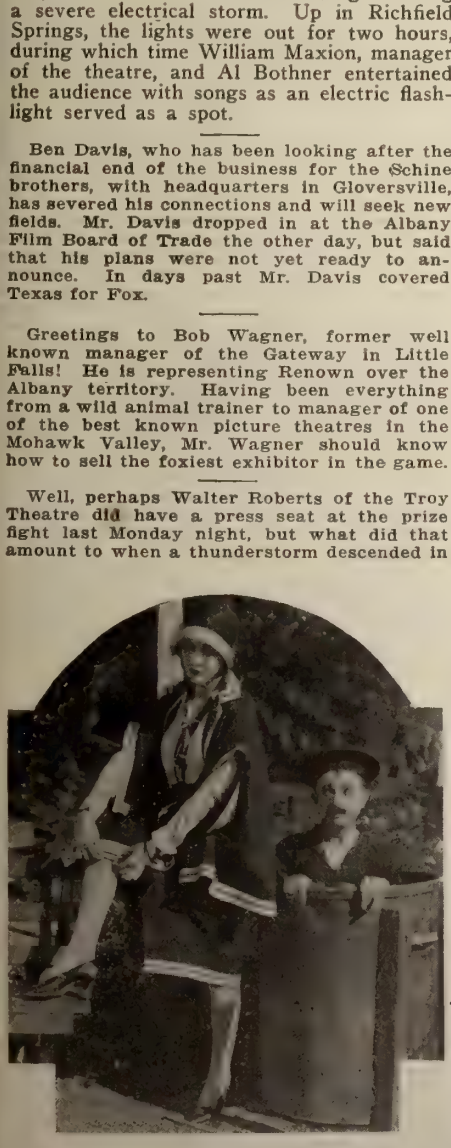
Uses Flashlight as "Spot" When Albany "Juice" Fails

Exhibitors have been put to their wits' ends during the last two or three weeks on account of trouble in light transmission wires running from the power plants north of here. Tony Veiller, of the Lincoln in Troy, has rigged up a large flashlight which he has placed in the rear of the house, and which he uses every time the lights fade and go out, which may be anywhere from two or three times an evening to double that number, as was the case the other night during a severe electrical storm. Up in Richfield Springs, the lights were out for two hours, during which time William Maxion, manager of the theatre, and Al Bothner entertained the audience with songs as an electric flashlight served as a spot.

Ben Davis, who has been looking after the financial end of the business for the Schine brothers, with headquarters in Gloversville, has severed his connections and will seek new fields. Mr. Davis dropped in at the Albany Film Board of Trade the other day, but said that his plans were not yet ready to announce. In days past Mr. Davis covered Texas for Fox.

Greetings to Bob Wagner, former well known manager of the Gateway in Little Falls! He is representing Renown over the Albany territory. Having been everything from a wild animal trainer to manager of one of the best known picture theatres in the Mohawk Valley, Mr. Wagner should know how to sell the foxiest exhibitor in the game.

Well, perhaps Walter Roberts of the Troy Theatre did have a press seat at the prize fight last Monday night, but what did that amount to when a thunderstorm descended in a veritable torrent, stopping the main go and incidentally catching Mr. Roberts in a crowd that jammed the exits and resulted in his returning to the theatre looking like a drowned rat. Each Monday night finds Mr. Roberts at the open air auditorium, and when press seats come his way he almost sits in the ring.



A scene from "Slick Articles," a two-reel Century comedy featuring Hilliard Karr and Billy Engle, directed by Al Herman. It concerns a sailor and his captain in love with the same girl. The comedy includes some peppy studio scenes and is filled with fast action and humorous situations. It is being released now through Universal exchanges.

The Grand in Johnstown, which has been run by Charles Sesonske, was sold last week to the Avon Theatre Corporation of Watertown, of which Frank Empsall is head. Mr. Sesonske formerly ran the Avon in Watertown and later went to Johnstown, where he enlarged and remodeled the theatre, making it one of the best in that part of the state.

And now Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose in Troy, has become a rhymester. Listen to this one, as it was displayed in front of the theatre last week:

"Ten little pennies make one dime,
The Rose means a happy time."

And the worst part of it is that Jake, all puffed up over his literary efforts, admits the crime. Mr. Rosenthal, accompanied by his brother-in-law, was at the Saratoga track during the week. Nothing more to be said there. Incidentally, the Rose is endeavoring to revive the old time illustrated songs and is putting on special singers each Tuesday night. And speaking of Tuesdays, during August, the kiddies are being admitted to the Rose each Tuesday afternoon for a nickel.

According to all reports, William Shirley and Mike Freedman of Schenectady have not only bought the Woodlawn Theatre in that city but are dickering for the Star, as well as any other subsequent-run houses around town. It now looks as though Mr. Shirley plans to re-enter the game. The Cozy in Schenectady, owned by T. E. Loomis, is said to have been offered James Rose during the week.

Owing to failure on the part of certain equipment to arrive on time, the American Theatre in Troy could not reopen on August 15, as scheduled, and now the opening has been set for the twenty-second. Ed Trembly, former doorman at the Lincoln, will be the chief factotum at the American.

Albany extended the hand of welcome last week to E. H. Harriman, Jr., of Methuen, Mass., former owner of the Casco Theatre in Portland, Me. Mr. Harriman may locate in this section, as it is understood that he is looking around for a theatre.

Harry Rose of Schenectady has been named district manager of the Rosewind Theatre chain. He is a brother of Jimmy Rose and will devote the major part of his time to the Bijou in Troy, as Henry Windekneckt, postmaster of Rensselaer, finds it impossible to give the theatre the time it demands. Mr. Rose announces the closing of the theatre in Queechy Lake on August 31, and the reopening of the one in Kinderhook on September 1. Jimmy himself blossomed forth last week with a brand new Nash sedan.

Harry Hellman of the Royal in Albany is a thoroughly disappointed man these days. His theatre is all right, so is his summer camp, but when it comes to the fishing in Crooked Lake, that's an entirely different story. When Mr. Hellman bought his summer home a few weeks ago, he planned to do a whole lot of fishing and naturally spent considerable in getting the latest in the way of tackle. Up to the present time his catches, few and far between, have consisted of sunfish and perch.

One might think this a scene in Spain, Southern California or Mexico, with Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Astor in "Don Q," but there's where we are mistaken. It is "Joe" Keller, of 4801 Ventor avenue, Fairbanks' "double," and Kathleen Ward as Mary Astor. This shot was snapped on the Boardwalk at St. James Place, Atlantic City, when "Don Q, Son of Zorro," a United Artists picture, opened a special engagement at the Strand Theatre last Friday to record-breaking receipts.

R. C. Kimball, who has been making the pick-ups for parcel post along Film Row, has been bitten by the theatre bug and has acquired and opened a picture theatre in Westerlo, to be known as Woodmen Hall.

Changes during the week include the sale of a motion picture theatre in Earlville, run by H. C. Rawley, to a Mr. Bricker, while Bob Grady, who has been running the Wawanda Theatre at Haines Falls, has surrendered the lease to Rusk and Andrews, the original owners.

Lawrence J. Carkey of Carthage, who has been appointed as district manager of the Schine theatres, with headquarters in Little Falls, has assumed his new duties and will have twelve theatres under his jurisdiction. Mr. Carkey is being succeeded in Carthage by his brother, J. W. Carkey, who has been assistant manager in the Carthage houses for some time past.

Jake Golden received many congratulations during the week on the success of his Old Home Week at the Griswold in Troy. Thursday night, along with the pictures, Mr. Golden put on an amateur revue of ten acts, as well as the D. and H. quartette. No wonder the Griswold was packed to the doors.

Nearly 500 tickets have already been sold for the annual outing of the Albany Film Board of Trade, scheduled for Saratoga Lake on September 14. Louis Buettner of Cohoes took four tickets during the week, while Jack Krause took no less than seventeen, the First National exchange sending back for thirty more. The program issued last week gives the first event of the day as a baseball game between the film salesmen and the managers.

The Pastime Theatre in Granville was bought last week by Adolph Kohn. The house has been closed for improvements and will be reopened the latter part of the month.

Ed McGregor, manager of Smalley's Theatre in Walton, delivered the goods when it came to exploiting "The Ten Commandments." The town was all dressed up for the occasion, the downtown streets resembling a chautauqua. And speaking of Smalley houses, Al Bothner will soon start in booking vaudeville for the chain. Smalley's theatre in Mohawk is now running six days a week, and with a mile to the theatre in Ilion and an equal distance to another house in Herkimer, is obliged to keep his eyes open through sharp competition.. Ed Richardson, who runs Smalley's Theatre in Fort Plain, put over a clever tie-up last week with "Miss Bluebeard," when a masked model was driven around town and prizes of gold pieces were awarded those guessing her identity.

Massachusetts

Tom Mix was galloping across the screen of the Central Theatre in Somerville the night of Thursday, August 13, when suddenly the front curtain was lowered, the house lights flashed on and the organist began to play a lively march. The audience, nonplused at the sudden stopping of the picture, left the seats and upon emerging into the street found there was a lively blaze in an adjoining garage. A man who discovered the fire ran to Manager Frank J. O'Connell of the Central Theatre and told him. Manager O'Connell ran to the booth and ordered the projectionist to cut the picture off.

Moving pictures, for the first time in the history of a number of New England fairs, are to be presented as attractions this year.

The Goldstein Brothers have introduced a new film policy at their recently acquired Union Square Theatre in Pittsfield. Beginning on August 17, with "Romola," the largest super-feature will be presented. There will be a five-piece orchestra at the matinees and ten musicians at night. Messrs. Goldstein have placed an order for an organ, which is expected to be completed in a couple of months.

Former Mayor William A. Bradford of Quincy has begun the erection of a theatre at Chestnut and Maple streets, Quincy. The building will be of a simple style of colonial architecture and will have a frontage of 160x 75 feet on Chestnut street. The stage entrance will be on Maple street. There will be a mezzanine floor and balcony in addition to the main floor. There will be approximately 1,900 seats. The cost of the building is estimated at $250,000. It is expected to be ready for opening on or about December 1.

It now is reported that the Capitol Theatre structure, nearing completion, at Tremont, Hollis and Dore streets, Boston, will be utilized by the Keith interests for a vaudeville policy.

Friends of George W. Magee, long prominent in theatrical circles of Boston and for many years manager of the Grand Opera House, gave a party in his honor at his summer home, Rackcliff Villa, Ash Point, Me. The event marked Mr. Magee's birthday.

Buffalo, N. Y.

A meeting of the directors of the Buffalo and Albany zones will be held soon in Buffalo to discuss arbitration. The by-laws recently drawn up have been approved by the two zones. The date of the meeting will be announced in a few days by J. H. Michael, chairman of Buffalo zone.

C. R. Rogers has purchased from Mrs. Anna Shuss two frame buildings on North Center street, Corry, Pa., and later will raze them to afford space for an addition to the Grand Theatre, at present a picture house. When remodeled the house will be used for legitimate attractions.

George J. Walker, 8 Milton street, Buffalo, has been appointed manager of Shea's Court Street Theatre, succeeding the late Henry Carr. For more than a score of years Mr. Walker has been connected with the Shea organization, for the past several years as assistant to Mr. Carr, who died in June.

John R. Osborne, manager of the New Family Theatre in Batavia, N. Y., announces the signing of a contract for the showing of all of the new Paramount pictures in the Greater Forty series.

William J. MacFarlane, who is interested in the theatre business in Canandaigua, N. Y., where he is also mayor, will again head the Republican ticket at the coming election.

George Rosing of the Fillmore Theatre, Buffalo, has built a summer home at Crystal Beach. He has just returned from a trip to South America where he went for his health.

Plans for the new picture theatre to be built at 1588-1598 Genesee street, including seven stores and offices, have been filed with the bureau of buildings in Buffalo. The new house will be built by Barney Vohwinkel, 2886 Main street, who has operated the Oriole Theatre near the site for many years. When completed the house will be leased by the Shea Amusement Company. According to Mr. Vohwinkel the theatre and stores will cost $350,000. The seating capacity will be 1,710. The frontage on Genesee street will be 168 feet. The house will have a depth of 132 feet.

Frances Aichinger, manager of the Cozy Corner, Buffalo, is married to George Hill. Frances, or Mrs. George, is one of the livest woman managers in this neck of the woods.

Hollis A. Shilling, for many years manager of the Flickinger store in Fairport, N. Y., has resigned to take over the management of the Rivoli in the Shilling block. Mr. Shilling announces that new projection machines will be installed in the Rivoli and the ventilation and lighting systems also will be changed.

Lockport, N. Y., stage employes have formed a new union with Austin Taylor, stage manager of the new Palace Theatre, as president. Robert Spedding is vice-president and Grover McGowan secretary-treasurer. The new union has been formed with the advent of two new theatres, the Rialto and the Palace, one a Schine house and the other under Paramount lease. The latter opened July 18 and on Labor Day will add Keith vaudeville to its picture program.

Michael Shea, head of the Shea amusement enterprises, announces that more than $300,000 will be spent for decorations and furnishings in the new Shea Buffalo theatre, the exterior work on which is practically completed.

It's a hard life. No sooner had he arrived home from a trip to Europe than Joseph A. Schuchert, Sr., owner of the Colonial and Columbia Theatres on Genesee street, Buffalo, hopped off again for a tour of the Yellowstone National Park. Joe, Jr., says 'tain't fair.

J. Walter Bengough, Esq., manager of the Jefferson in Auburn, N. Y., was seen in Niagara Falls the other night talking with Charlie Hayman of the Strand and Cataract Theatres. Walter is vacationing. Lionel Edel, assistant manager of the Lumberg at the Falls, went to New York last week.

Illinois

Among exhibitors on vacation this month are Chick Keppler and the missus. Danny Nikos of the Gem and Eagle Theatres is back from Colorado and Oscar Florine and wife are motoring the East. Harry and Leo Brunhild came back from the East last week.

A. Pratt sold his interest in the Dreamland Theatre at Fennville, Mich., and is now in Chicago to make a connection.

The Glen Theatre at Glen Ellyn, Ill., is now under the management of W. McLaughlin of the Parkside Theatre at Lombard and A. Mitchell of the Rose Theatre.

S. Zertanian will open a new 600-seat house at Granite City, Ill., and will show pictures exclusively. He formerly operated the Lincoln in that city.

Among the theatres reported closed for the summer are the Palace at Valier, Gem at Stonington, Liberty at Cowden, Roland at Payson, Premier at Grayville, and Croy at Toledo, Ill. Most of them will reopen next month and several have made needed improvements.

W. W. Watts, well known exhibitor of Springfield, Ill., is making a motor tour of the Northwest and will be away several weeks.

Arthur Lucas, well known southern exhibitor, was in Chicago recently and met his family, who were returning from an extended vacation trip.

D. Kemp of the Owl on South State street and his family have returned from a three months' tour across the country and report a fine trip.

Canada

Harold Bishop, formerly assistant manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, and now manager of the remodelled Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, has rounded out an exceptionally strong staff of department heads for the cinema. Albert Demkier, formerly concert master of the Capitol orchestra, under Director Earle Hill, has been selected as musical director of the new Metropolitan. Harold St. John Naftel, a prominent musician of Western Canada, has been appointed organist. George Parker, formerly at the Capitol, is in charge of the mechanical crew.

Manager Bishop has adopted the policy of breaking performances, the shows being presented from 1 to 5 p. m. and from 7 to 11 p. m. each day except Saturdays and holidays when performances will be given continuously from 1 to 11 p. m., prices ranging from 23 cents to 68 cents. Every Saturday afternoon the children will enjoy a special price of 15 cents.

John Golding, manager of the Imperial Theatre at St. John, N. B., for many years, made a special hit with a large group of local and visiting club members on the recent occasion of the visit to the city of the Boston Canadian Club and its ladies' auxiliary. Both Canadian clubs in St. John as well as the Boston people were guests of Mr. Golding at a theatre performance and a number of the guests were also entertained at the charming home of Mr. and Mrs. Golding.

H. C. Robinson of Beamsville, Ontario, has announced that he is selling his theatre there, which seats 375.

Fire of unknown origin broke out at 9.30 a. m. on August 14 in the Grand Theatre Building, 9-11 Adelaide street west, Toronto, the loss being estimated at $1,100.

The date of the re-opening of the Russell Theatre, Ottawa, which was recently acquired by Famous-Players interests, has not been announced. One problem has been the arising of difficulties between the company and the organized employees over the wage scale to be established.

St. Louis

It is reported from Hannibal, Mo., that Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Lilly have resigned as managers of the Star, Broadway, Orpheum and Park Theatres of that city. The resignations were to take effect on August 15, according to advices reaching St. Louis. It is said that John Price, formerly in charge of the Orpheum, will assume management of the consolidated theatres.

Hannibal is a closed town, all of the houses there being owned by one company. Stock is held by various business men of the town. It is said that there are two distinct groups among the stockholders, one headed by Mr. and Mrs. Lilly and the other favoring Price. So far as could be learned, Mr. and Mrs. Lilly have not sold their stock in the company, merely asking to be relieved of the details of management.

Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Rodgers have returned from a trip through the national parks of the West. J. C. Schmidt, Breese, Ill., exhibitor, is also taking in the beauties of Yellowstone Park and vicinity. Harry Redmond, Majestic Theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., has but recently returned from that section.

Joe Hewitt, Robinson, Ill., has gone to Bradford, Pa., to attend a home-coming and reunion of all old residents of Bradford.

George Smith of the Phoenix Theatre, Lawrenceville, Ill., will spend his vacation in the Minnesota woods.

Tom Reed of Duquoin, Ill., is back after spending some time in Florida.

Dr. Pitney has sold his home at Flora, Ill., to Frank Hocking.

The Lyric Theatre, West Terre Haute, Ill., has been taken over by E. G. Musser.

The Photoplay Theatre, Lovington, Ill., is again in charge of Ferris Brothers.

The Lyric Theatre, Flat Rock, Ill., has been taken over by R. C. Williams, St. Francisville, Ill.

Harry Weaver of the Grand Theatre, New London, Mo., is going to Minnesota for a few weeks.

Mrs. N. E. Fett of the Cozy Theatre, Kahoka, Mo., was called to her old home in Iowa by the death of her father.

Visitors of the week included: Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; Messrs. Reber & Hirsch, Pacific, Mo.; Jimmy Boyd, Blytheville, Ark.; Harry Miller, Festus, Mo.; A. C. Mercier, Perryville, Mo.; Leo Bernstein, Springfield, Ill.; P. A. Feitz, Highland, Ill., and H. E. Nelson, Quincy, Ill.

Texas

J. L. Santon opened his new Queen Theatre at Wharton, Texas, August 3. The building is strictly modern and fireproof and cost in excess of $200,000.

Gabriel Laskin has taken over the Cozy Theatre at Galveston, Texas. Pictures, musical comedy and road shows will be the policy.

John N. Sayeg will erect a new $35,000 theatre at Waxajachie, Texas.

The New Orpheum at Waco, Texas, was opened last week to pleased capacity. The house seats over 9,000 and is strictly modern.

LILYAN TASHMAN

One of the featured players in B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Picture, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work."

Pittsburgh

J. George Schweitzer, well-known Titusville exhibitor, recently addressed the Kiwanis Club in his town. Mr. Schweitzer made a short but very interesting address, during which he read the Golden Rules, as he calls the code which he uses in the management of his theatres; renewed his pledge to serve the community with the best and cleanest entertainment and wound up by offering his new Orpheum, now closed for extensive renovations and redecorations, free to the Kiwanis Club for a big free treat for the Titusville kiddies.

Mrs. H. B. Dawson, owner of the Colonial, Beaver Falls, is back home after a vacation trip to the West Coast.

A quartet of local exhibitors have gone to Atlantic City for a fortnight's vacation. The party, consisting of Harry Browarsky, Herman Browarsky, Mike Winograd and Milton Samuels, made the trip in Harry's car.

P. C. Weller, treasurer of the Rowland and Clark Theatres, is vacationing in parts unknown. He wouldn't leave any word as to his whereabouts, because he wanted to forget all about the grand old industry during his rest period.

Herbert A. Shaw, formerly manager of the Metropolitan, Morgantown, W. Va., is now officiating in a similar capacity at the Main Theatre, Uniontown.

Arkansas

L. Earl Powell has opened his new $15,000 theatre at Gurdon, Ark. The house is modern and seats about 500.

The Palace at Little Rock, Ark., has closed for the summer in order to permit extensive repairs and remodelling.

D. W. Strong will open his new Star Theatre at Gould, Ark., in the near future.

Oklahoma

Mrs. Alice P. Littlefield and Ed Rhoses Littlefield have purchased the Queen Theatre at Austin, Okla., for $1 and other valuable consideration. The property is valued at $125,000 and is now operated by Famous Players.

The Liberty Theatre, a government-owned house at Fort Sill, Okla., is being repainted and repaired.

Associated Exhibitors

RACING LUCK. Star, Monty Banks. This is a good comedy picture and has lots of thrills and action in it. Six reels and good print. Very good appeal. Suitable for Sunday in a small town. Special, no. Walter Jones, Marytown Theatre (150 seats), Marytown, West Virginia.

F. B. O.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5,291 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Boys, here's the best Thomson to date, the best balanced picture of either series, with plenty of hokum, action, comedy and thrills. Silver King has a bigger part than usual and comes to the front with some new tricks; and the "baby" is one of the cutest youngsters ever shown on our screen. Boost it big. Good tone. Exceptional appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

DIVORCE. Star, Jane Novak. This is a splendid picture and should appeal to any mixed audience. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Draw town and country class, town 400. Admission 10-25. A. H. Higley, Rushmore Theatre (260 seats), Rushmore, Minnesota.

DRUSILLA WITH A MILLION. (7,301 feet). (Gold Bond Special). Featuring Mary Carr and all-star cast. This is, without any doubt, one of the outstanding specials of the year and should be presented in every high class show house, large or small. In my estimation it is the only picture of this type that is the equal of the Fox production, "Over the Hill." This rare work of art was presented at my theatre on a Sunday and Monday and to say that it received the hearty support and co-operation of the church classes would be putting it quite mildly. The Monday presentation was marked by the large number of pupils from the Sunday School classes of all grades, and I wish most emphatically to add that this special is equally as good for, and was as well received by my regular picture fans as the church element. The story is wonderful; the climax is nothing short of smashing; and the work of Mary Carr is flawless. It's a "Gold Bond" in the truest sense of the words. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

NO-GUN MAN. (4,522 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Flynn is getting better all the time. I think he will be one of my best drawing cards before long; this picture has plenty of action and lots of comedy is furnished by the negro character. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

NO-GUN MAN. (4,522 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Can't say much for this—very dark, and the action was slow for a western. I see that some report it good; but I can't see it that way. Good tone. Only fair appeal. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw small town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

First National

FRIVOLOUS SAL. (7,307 feet). Star, Mae Busch, O'Brien. Extra good western love story. Scenery is worth admission. First National pictures are always good. Print in extra good shape. Appeal a hundred per cent. No for Sunday or as special. J. H. Heick, Allen Theatre (400 seats), Allen, Kansas.

FRIVOLOUS SAL. (7,307 feet). Star, Mae Busch. Very good picture of the western type, with exceptional scenic background. Plenty of action, interspersed with heart-tugging incidents. Good for any house. Tone O. K. General appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,600 feet). Star cast. A very interesting high class western that pleased about everyone who saw it in our theatre. Kerrigan is a mighty fine actor and it is to be regretted that he is not seen more often in pictures. This would be an ideal show for some warm night. Patrons would forget the heat looking at this one. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (7,425 feet). Star cast. Positively one of the best pictures we havo ever shown and it was sold to us as a program picture only. We don't see how First National could be any fairer to us. The print, as usual, was in fine condition, which means quite a bit to us even though we are out in the "sticks." If all our pictures were as good as this our worries would be at an end. Small town class. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

ONLY WOMAN. (6,700 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Very good feature. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered, 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

NECESSARY EVIL. (8,307 feet). Stars, Ben Lyon, Viola Dana. Nice picture that went over big. Didn't hear a single unfavorable comment. They came by to tell me how good it was and also went out and told others. Tone and for Sunday O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

NEW TOYS. Star, Richard Barthelmess. Not the type of picture this star is suited for. Dick, you had better get back to the kind of stories which made you famous or else you will be another has been. Not a bad picture but not the kind for Dick. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 26-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. While we did not do the business the picture justified, I am confident that it will give satisfaction wherever played. We had a few luke warm comments; but I find that to be the case with every picture that we tout to the extreme; many patrons are apt to get exaggerated ideas, and it is difficult for any picture to fulfill their expectations in such a case. Anyway, Colleen was especially pleasing in her part and Leon Errol was a scream. This picture is somewhat reminiscent of Mary Pickford in "Daddy-Long-Legs" and fully as good. Worth while playing in any house and don't be afraid to let the world know you have it. Good tone. General appeal. Yes for Sunday or as special. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

SILENT WATCHER. (7,576 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. I personally enjoyed this picture but I don't believe that my audience did. It has some wonderful acting but not much action. If your audience appreciates something good, then show them this picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 26-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SLIPPY McGEE. Oliver Morosco prod. A poor picture and the print was bad. I ran the picture myself. The story was very good but did not end to the best. Appeal, about fifty per cent. Sunday, no. Special, no. Walter Jones, Marytown Theatre (150 seats), Marytown, West Virginia.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star, Hobart Bosworth. Picture is too slow and long drawn out. Had it been shortened to about seven reels and livened up a bit it would have been a big picture. As it now stands it is just a little better than ordinary western. The paper is extra good. First National asked me a 10 plus for it when it was new. I held off a few months and they finally sold it to me for less. Basing the rental on my box office receipts I paid too much. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. National Theater (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

SUNSHINE TRAIL. (4,500 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A very clever little comedy drama starring Douglas MacLean and pleasing more people than some of his former vehicles. It's good for a number of laughs anywhere. If you're looking for a nice little picture for hot weather this is it. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

Fox

EVERYMAN'S WIFE. (4,365 feet). Star, Earl Foxe. One of Fox's 1924-25 specials that proved to be a very ordinary little program picture that was saved only by the very excellent photography and fine condition of film. Patrons didn't say much for or against this but they didn't wait to voice their approval of the two-reel comedy, ("Don't Pinch") and the Fox News. The short subjects made them feel satisfied—more power to 'em! Fair tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. As special, no! no! Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GOLD AND THE GIRL. Star, Buck Jones. Just an ordinary western, and costs me just about twice what any other western would. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw railroad and miner class, town 3,050. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. A very good Saturday night picture for me, but would suit any other night where they like horse racing scenes. Tone, good. Sunday, no. O. G. Odell, Adelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (5,578 feet). Star, Tom Mix. I had several tell me that this one was the best Mix has made. They all liked it, old and young. I broke all box office records on it. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

SHE WOLVES. Star, Alma Reubens. Nothing big but it pleased my audience fairly good. Something a little different. Tone, fine. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Adelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

Metro-Goldwyn

LADY OF THE NIGHT. (5,441 feet). Star, Norma Shearer. A nice little offering. Norma is very good in a dual role. In my estimation she is a coming star. She now has quite a following here. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 26-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Paramount

BIG BROTHER. (7,080 feet). Star, Tom Moore. You can go the limit on this one. My people all liked it. The kid in this picture is as good as the best of them. Very good tone. Sunday, yes. Special, not exactly. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 25-15. O. G. Odell, Adelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

CHEAT. (6,325 feet). Star cast. Somehow we did not like the idea of playing a Pola Negri picture in our theatre after hearing so much adverse criticism about her later films, however, we are glad we played this one now as everyone seemed to be well pleased, saying it was good. It drew fairly well, due to the popularity of the book no doubt. We think it's real good. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star, Wallace Beery. I personally enjoyed this picture and I think that my audience did. It is rather a weird picture but it has lots of reel comedy and many thrills. Wallace Beery walks away with all the honors. He's great. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 26-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. A very good program picture. The forest fire scene was excellent. Good for any place. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Adelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 feet). Prod. Cecil B. DeMille. This was a lavish production like all DeMille's pictures. It attracted the usual amount of business, but film rental was too high to make any money with it, as most of Paramount pictures are for this small town exhibitor. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty-five percent. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats,) Emporium, Pennsylvania.

Marion Harlan is appearing in William Fox photoplays.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

It's so much more important to read what exhibitors have to say than my little chirp that I am giving all the space to the folks who count.

Only—let me make just one bark—

KEEP TIPS COMING!

VAN

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 ft.) Star cast. While this picture did a fair business it didn't do anything near what I expected. The people who saw it thought it a very good picture and several were deeply impressed by it. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN. (8,300 ft.) Star cast. Good picture. A little above program schedule. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 ft.) Star, Gloria Swanson. Believe this would have been a real good show, but the print they sent us was the worst we have ever had in past ten years. Therefore, it was a joker for us. Special, no. Farmers and merchants town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats,) Greenville, Alabama.

KISS IN THE DARK. (5,767 feet). Star cast. Good picture: above program schedule. Good tone. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday and I'd say as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. Star, Jack Holt. The best western we have ever played though Billie Dove's Fifth Avenue getup was inconsistent on a southwest ranch. Appeal, one hundred percent. Sunday, no. Special, no. Pace and Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats,) Pocahontas, Iowa.

LITTLE FRENCH GIRL. (5,628 feet). Star, Mary Brian. Good picture but not a special. Worth seeing. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. This is a picture for the highbrows and for those who can appreciate something with class to it will be fascinated with this production. A romantic drama of the court of Louis XV of France and one of the most elaborate and artistic pictures ever produced on the shadow stage with its magnificent settings and glittering court scenes; and the glamour and intrigue of the court of a dissolute monarch. A wonderful cast; Rudolph Valentino, Lowell Sherman, Bebe Daniels and Lois Wilson giving artistic portrayals of star characters. All praise to Sidney Olcott, the director, and Forrest Halsey, scenarist. Get it? Sure. Town of 3,000. Admission 20-50. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. (Note, Mr. Batchelder's name got under the wrong report several weeks ago on this picture; this is his own report). Rather a slow moving picture; too long by about a reel, anyway. For those who like costume pictures and the star, I expect it's all right; but out here the second night proved that. Good tone, poor appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special with regard to above. Draw small town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,722 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Griffith in his first picture as a star: Folks went wild over him in "Forty Winks," "Miss Bluebeard" and "Paths to Paradise" and they expected to see more of this in "The Night Club" but what cheese! This picture has no story, little plot, all slapstick! Such a wonderful actor as Wallace Beery doing a villain a la Larry Semon Comedies, throwing Griffith about twenty-five feet in the air, and so on. It's a great show for the kids! That's all. We thought that Griffith would develop into a good drawing card but one more crazy picture like this one and he's dead here. No audience appeal. No for Sunday. Special, never. A. Bourget, Bourget Theatre (1,200 seats), Montreal, Canada.

PATHS TO PARADISE. Star, Ray Griffith. A crackerjack comedy that was a decided hit for us. Drew about average business. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats,) Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PETER PAN. (9,593 ft.) Star cast. Extra good production. A great kid picture. Adults do not seem to rave about it, but at that it's a real show. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. All classes town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

SACKCLOTH AND SCARLET. (6,732 ft.) Star, Alice Terry. A fair program picture. The paper ruined the engagement here. This paper led people to believe it was a western picture. The people who like westerns came to see it and were disappointed. The people who do not like westerns stayed away. Special, no. No appeal here. All clases in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats,) Graham, Texas.

SALOME OF THE TENEMENTS. (7,017 ft.) Star cast. Good picture. A little above program schedule. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SALOMY JANE. (6,276 ft.) Star cast. A fair outdoors story, pleased many and got no kicks. Should say it's about the average program picture. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 1,312. Admission 10-20. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (250 seats) Thornton, Arkansas.

SHADOWS OF PARIS. (6,549 feet). Star,

Irene Rich, Frank Leigh and Clive Brook in "The Pleasure Buyers," a forthcoming Warner Brothers picture.

Pola Negri. A good picture that seemed to have more than average box office value; very much on the order of "The Humming Bird" but less spectacular. Good supporting cast. Fair tone. General appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

SHOCK PUNCH. Star, Richard Dix. A fair program picture. Not as good as some of his former pictures and did not do so well at the box office. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats,) Graham, Texas.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Very good picture. Worth seeing. Plenty of action. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered, town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SINGER JIM McKEE. (7 reels). Star, William S. Hart. It is above the average program picture. Plenty of action and Hart is liked here. All were pleased. Good appeal. Suitable for Suday in a small town. Special, no. Walter Jones, Marytown Theatre (150 seats), Marytown, West Virginia.

SPANIARD. 6,676 ft.) Star, Ricardo Cortez. A fairly good picture of the Spanish shiek type. Was fairly well received. Not much to the much boosted bull fights. Found it a little repulsive in spots but entertaining, nevertheless. Fortez is good. It is not the big special Paramount would make you believe. Tone, okay. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats,) Graham, Texas.

TOMORROW'S LOVE. (5,802 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Nice little picture and everyone pleased. Many favorable comments. Many newlyweds came out. Tone and for Sunday O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

WORLDLY GOODS. (6,085 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Not bad—fair audience appeal, 80 per cent. Fair tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farm class, town 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

Word from E. N. Comes Now and Then

"Well, 'Gang,' while Van is taking on a beautiful brown, building Sand Pictures, Sand Theatres, Sand Banks, Mud Pies and what not at the beach, and probably without doing a thing to the clams and lobsters, I want to tell you that I have been favored with some patronage from the City of New York—Broadway coming to Main Street—for the past three weeks, showing that Maine is not without her beauty spots that lure them within her boundaries.

"What is the greatest surprise to me is to have these vacation people—sophisticated City-ites, single me out to tell me that 'The Siren of Seville' for them was one of the best pictures they ever remembered seing (and here on 'Main Street'), and saying that they were confirmed Picture Fans, by cracky!

"I have no gold buttoned ushers, no plush chairs, no fifty thousand dollar organ, no 'washed air' plant—oh, shucks, there is hardly anything that I do have except a piano, a booth (in place of projection room), a couple of 'machines'—Richardson says Projectors—and to cap the fade-out, a danged Operator, who, in spite of limited new-fangled devices to deliver the goods on the Gold Fiber (I mean linen sheet), succeeds in getting a picture on the screen which I have had many remark was steadier, clearer, with much less eye strain than in many of the places finer than those which I can operate. (So, hanged if I know whether the other fellows have the 'Operators' while I may have one of the new-fangled 'Projectionists.')

"However, as long as the public don't get critical I'll keep an Operator while those folks from Yonkers (! ! ! !) hie themselves to Maine only to find that some of the small town men are selling REAL pictures, 'projected' by Operators, while in New York they have Projectionists, ding bust it!

("Ask Richardson if he can explain what's 'a matter.")—E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, Union, Maine.

Pathe

HOT WATER. (5,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Believe this the weakest of Lloyd's feature comedies; audience will like it, however. Don't pay too much for it. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw farmers and from town 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels.) Star cast. Not a bad picture for its kind. Horse fair and cast fair, not a great picture, but if you can buy it cheap it might get you out. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats,) Piqua, Ohio.

WHITE SHEEP. Star, Glen Tryon. I played "Battling Orioles" with this samo star and it had this one beat a mile for comedy. This will do if you can buy it right and your patrons like comedy dramas. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (185 seats,) Piqua, Ohio.

WHITE SHEEP. (5 reels). Star, Glenn Tryon. Not as good as "The Battling Orioles" but it will go for a Saturday night. It is rather rough in spots. We hit a very rainy night and did not have very good attendance. Tone, good. A family picture. Not a special. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats,) Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. (5 reels.) Star, James Kirkwood. A fair program but have seen this pair in much better story. However, it will please the majority and is a good program. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats,) Havana, Illinois.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Wonderful picture; plenty of flag waving and patriotic stuff that will keep the thermometer up. Step on it. Don't advertise the sea fight between Monitor and Merrimac, as that was deleted from picture. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Yes as special. Draw farmers and small town class, town 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. Star, Harry Carey. For me, Carey is an important chap to have a line on as my patrons always get out to see his pictures and this one pleased them all as far as I have been able to learn. Good tone and appeal. No as special. Draw general class, towns 1,200 to 2,200. Admission 10-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 to 70 seats), Union, Maine.

CAFE IN CAIRO. (5,656 ft.) Star. Priscilla Dean. Pretty strong. Priscilla finally gets them "all off" appears in the nude entirely in this one, which I claim is too much for two bits. Tone, bad. Sunday, no. Special. no. Appeal, "depends." Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats,) Decorah, Iowa.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. A picture that will please one hundred per cent. Drew large crowd on second night. Just the thing for small town exhibitors. Print extra good. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. J. H. Heick, Allen Theatre (400 seats), Allen, Kansas.

CHORUS LADY. Star, Margaret Livingston. This is one of the best pictures of the year and is a real special although these people sell it at a fair price. The paper on this is no good as it is very cheap looking. If you buy this you can boost it to the skies. Good tone. Appeal excellent. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw railroad and miner class, town 3,050. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels.) Star, Dorothy Devore. Went over well; plenty of laughter but suspense not sustained like Lloyd's "Safety Last." Tone O. K. Appeal 80 per cent. No as special. Draw farmers and from town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

NOT ONE TO SPARE. (5 reels). Press sheets try to get over it's a great family picture, but after it was over (it didn't end, it just quit). Audience thought we had forgotten to run the balance of it. Pick a rainy night. Tone and for Sunday O. K. No as special. Very little appeal. Draw farmers and from town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

RAMSHACKLE HOUSE. (6,287 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Betty plays a fine part in this production, with the Florida Everglades and the Alligator Swamps as a part of the story, with New York and the natives in the action. The real villain is finally found. Good tone and appeal. No as special. Draw general class, towns 1,200 to 2,200. Admission 10-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 to 700 seats), Union, Maine.

RAMSHACKLE HOUSE. (6,287 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Melodrama of Florida Everglades, mystery and suspense well adapted. Seminole Indian Village and fight with huge alligator by Indian. A very true picture, and Indians authentic, for I know them, being in the Everglades. Tone O. K. Appeal 75 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmers and from town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

RECKLESS ROMANCE. (5,530 feet). Stars, Wanda Hawley, Jack Duffy. A clean and clever comedy. Good tone. Appeal 95 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farm class, town 150. Admission 15-30. Robert

Ed Explains About His Tips

"Dear Van and 'Gang': At last I am able to send in my reports. I have been so busy that I did not find the time, much as I wanted to get them out. However, I will try and keep up to date in the future.

"I don't think that I told you that I was running two theatres. One is the Monarch Theatre, in Medicine Hat, Alta, and the other is the Cameo Theatre, in Redcliffe, Alta. Redcliff is only six miles away and I am taking care of both myself. You see why I have been busy. The Cameo is only a small house with 225 seats.

"The reports that I am sending are on the Monarch, but the same thing applies for the Cameo, so you can say the same if you like. I will give exhibitors of towns of the size of Redcliff (900) an idea. Here in Canada and especially in the west Medicine Hat is considered a key city and the small exhibitors may not want to go by the dope I am giving them for Medicine Hat. You can use your own judgment about it.

"I hope you enjoy your holidays. A little trip to Medicine Hat would do you good and we have several ways of entertaining. I think the film salesman will bear me out in this. Best regards. Sincerely, Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre, Medicine Hat, Alta, Canada."

W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

SILENT SANDERSON. Star, Harry Carey. Very good production. Wonderful snow scenes. Good acting. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. No as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered, town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A splendid vehicle for Miss Dean. Splendid acting, also action, throughout, which centers around a South American arena, with a bull fight which has them catching their breath. Will please most any audience, in my opinion. Good tone and appeal. Fair as special. Draw general class, towns 1,200 to 2,200. Admission 10-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 to 700 seats), Union, Maine.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. If you are looking for a colorful action picture, here it is. Priscilla in a regular upheaval of dynamic dynamite. Feature bull fight, and big rough and tumble tussle with two girls. Old Spain locale. Fair tone. Appeal 80 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmers and from town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

TEXAS TRAIL. Star, Harry Carey. All the last Carey pictures have been good and the best he has ever made and you can't go wrong on them if they like Carey and plenty of action. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

WANDERING HUSBANDS. (6 reels). Star, J. Kirkwood, Lila Lee. Just sort of so-so; can't say a great lot for or against it. Well cast and portrayed but story hackneyed. Tone O. K. Appeal 60 per cent. No as special. Draw farmers and from town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

STOP FLIRTING. Special cast. This is a comedy drama that kept my patrons in a hilarious mood from start to finish. Everyone seemed to enjoy it immensely. A good one to place between the heavy features. Good tone. Fair appeal. No as special. Draw general class, towns 1,200 to 2,200. Admission 10-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 to 700 seats), Union, Maine.

United Artists

GARRISON'S FINISH. (8 reels.) Star, Jack Pickford. Had many flattering comments on this picture and it did a fair busines for the season. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels.) Star, Mary Pickford. For several reasons this show grew old before we could use it, but was glad when we did play it. Print was good and proved one of the best pictures we have had lately. Farmers and merchants town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats,) Greenville, Alabama.

Universal

DARING CHANCES. Star, Jack Hoxie. Very good western that went over okay. The horse race had the kids tearing the roof off the house. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

GAIETY GIRL. (7,417 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. Good picture. Very pleasing. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. No as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered, town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

K-THE UNKNOWN. (8,146 ft.) Star, Virginia Valli. This is a good picture in every respect. People came in crowds and all praised it highly. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Farmers and merchants town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats,) Grenville, Alabama.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. This is about the best I have seen of Gibson since the "Ramblin Kid." All of Gibson's westerns are good and lots of action. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (185 seats,) Piqua, Ohio.

MAD WHIRL. Star, May McAvoy. This is a nice little picture. Did a fair business and it seemed to please. Tone, okay, special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 300. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats,) Graham, Texas.

MEDDLER. Star, William Desmond. A good average western with some action; not a regular Desmond, as he makes better pictures than this. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, (185 seats,) Piqua, Ohio.

RIDIN' PRETTY. Star, William Desmond. Fairly good western. About the same as all his pictures. In my estimation, they are all pretty weak. I run them as part of a double feature show and in that way I am able to get away with it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, never. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 26-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SAWDUST TRAIL. (5,500 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Saturday patrons disappointed not to see Hoot in real western. Business only fair. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. Good; had most anything you could ask for. Plenty of exciting scenes and good plot, well acted. Everything looked natural. Should go any place. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farmer and small town class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

SMOULDERING FIRES. Star, Pauline Frederick. This might have been a good picture once but I could not say because the print I received was terrible. I had all kinds of breaks and misframes, etc. I certainly got a panning for this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 26-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Vitagraph

BAREE, CON OF KAZAN. Star, Anita Stewart. Very good outdoor picture; some exciting scenes and pretty scenery. If you can buy it right, play it. It should go any place if they like Northern pictures. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw small town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. Henry W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. Star cast. Just another Curwood picture with a dog actor. I have seen better Curwood stories than this, but will do if you don't have to pay too much for it. Has lots of action. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (185 seats,) Piqua, Ohio.

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,710 ft). Star cast. Here is a real picture with lots of action and tense situations. It should go over good and you can't make a mistake on this one. I played this in opposition to the first circus that has been here in three years and it kept my business up. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes city of 15,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (569 seats,) Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

BORROWED HUSBANDS. (7,000 feet). Ran this on a Saturday and it flopped, oh! so miserably. No action. Run a line through it. Moral tone so-so. Appeal 40 per cent. No as special. Draw farmers and small town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Rather mediocre; title somewhat misleading as it would suggest a Northwoods picture. Action very good and will get over with not too critical audience. Tone O. K. Appeal 50 per cent. No for special. Draw farmers and town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

FEARBOUND. (5,700 feet). Stars, Daw, Welch, Nigh. Action—yes, sirree! The cast is well-Nigh perfect; continuity rather loose, but I'm telling you the big fight near the end was absolutely REAL (Van, make it caps!) Louise MacIntosh wonderful in role. It will stand up for acting and action. Give us more Nighs. Good tone. Appeal 85 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmers and from town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Florida.

FEARBOUND. Star, Will Nigh. Boys, lay off. This show gave more disatisfaction than all others we have ever had put together. It's a regular slaughter pen. Would have paid ten times the rental if we hadn't played it. Special, no. Farmers and merchants town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats,) Greenville, Alabama.

GREATER THAN MARRIAGE. Star cast. Was well liked by everybody and several stopped to tell me how good they thought it was. Did a fair business. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

GREATER THAN MARRIAGE. Stars, Lou Tellegen, Marjorie Daw. Excellent picture; well acted, good story, and will appeal to all classes of patrons. Good tone. Yes for Sunday. Draw miners and railroad class, town of 3,050. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

VIRTUOUS LIARS. (5,650 feet). Star cast. One of the poorest Vitagraph ever did. Dull and insipid. Stay off of it. Tone O. K. Appeal 40 per cent. No as special. Draw farmers and from town of 600. Admission 10-25. C. C. Klutts, Glades Theatre (180 seats), Moore Haven, Flarida.

Comedies

DON'T PINCH. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. Bobby hits the bull's-eye again. While the comedy plot was laid along familiar lines, Bobby's pep and personality kept the house in a good humor from A to Z. Educational should keep him in action stories, though, with him playing a man's part instead of a kid's. Fine tone. Strong appeal. For Sunday, sure. Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

EMPTY HEADS. (Educational). Only a one reel comedy but we must report it, as it was pleasing and brought out some ha! ha's! Lots of times you'll hear 'em raving about the little single reeler when the big one doesn't get a word of praise. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FARE PLEASE. (Educational). Star, Al St. John. Al has "come back" in his last two or three efforts and this one is all to the good. That boy must be the champion bike rider of the world and his antics on his two wheeled steed never fail to bring forth laughter. Can class this as one of Educational's best productions. Fine tone. Appeal 100 per cent. For Sunday, yessir! Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

JULY DAYS. (Pathe). Our Gang. Once again the kids make another hit and keep the crowd in a jolly frame of mind. This has all the kid element one needs to keep them from getting sleepy. Good tone and appeal. Draw general class, towns 1,200 to 2,200. Admission 10-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (300 to 700 seats), Union, Maine.

RIDERS OF THE KITCHEN RANGE. (Pathe). Star, Earl Mohan. Chock full of laughs and plenty of new gags. Print new. Good appeal. Draw all classes, big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

ROARING LIONS AT HOME. (Fox). They picked a very good title for this comedy: it sure had them roaring from start to finish. Print good. Great appeal. Draw all classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SHORT CHANGE. (Educational). Star, Walter Hiers. A very good comedy that would best be played before the refined type of patronage. People who demand action and slapstick would, perhaps, not be entirely satisfied with this, although with a good feature it would pass muster. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday. Rural class, town 30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

TEN DOLLARS OR TEN DAYS. (Pathe). Star, Ben Turpin. If you want a real, hilarious comedy, with plenty of queer situations, get this one. It will lift a weak feature from the mud flats. Hook it. Good tone and appeal. Draw general class, towns 1,200 to 2,200. Admission 10-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 to 700 seats), Union, Maine.

WIDE AWAKE. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Very good two reel comedy that, in the second reel, had the crowd yelling at the scenes where the hero and a couple of negro watchmen are being scared to death by two "villyuns." Moral tone O. K. and audience appeal is all there! H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES. (Pathe). This one reel short subject is the most consistently good one of its kind on the market today we honestly believe. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

"Our Gang" Acquires a Real Enthusiast

"I am more than delighted to send you in reports on pictures I have played. The enclosed (which will appear very soon, Van) are the more recent ones I have played, as I am only open twice a week.

"If you will send along enough blanks I'll send you in reports on about seventy-five or more pictures, on both long and short pictures.

"I derive a great deal of benefit from your department, and, in fact, from the whole publication. There isn't a thing in your praiseworthy paper that I don't read before the next issue arrives each week.

"As I'm very much indebted to the Moving Picture World for its service to exhibitors, I'll say—Yours for co-operation, Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre, Atlantic, Massachusetts."

Independents

BRINGING HOME THE BACON. (Artclass). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. Good western. A new star here and most of them liked him. Was pleased with results. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

CRACKER JACK. (C. C. Burr.) Star, Johnny Hines. First class comedy picture which went over well and kept the house in a long laugh. Good tone. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw miner and railroad class, town 3,050. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

RANGE VULTURES. (Ward-Lascelles). Star, Lester Cuneo. Poor old Lester! This is the last of the second series of this star and we can truthfully say that the first series was far superior to the second. Had more walkouts on this one than on any Saturday night westerns we have played this summer. Even the strong admirers of Cuneo complained. Cuneo, with a high class action director, surely could deliver the goods. Fair tone. Poor appeal. No for Sunday. Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TRAIL DUST. (101 Ranch). Stars unknown here. A road show attraction that was only a fair program picture (western). None of the stars were known. Film in good condition. Photography very good. Fair tone and appeal. Maybe for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Holland Makes His Windshield Cards Not Only Self-Supporting But Liked

TWO or three years ago the windshield sticker for automobiles was developed. Six months later the device had became a pest. Owners objected to coming back to their parked cars to find the glass messed up with some photoplay title, and they not only scraped them off, but they developed a certain resentment against the house.

To offset this various ways of giving passes were devised, ranging from the straight proffer of a pass to the promise of an admission if the driver came to the theatre a week later with the sticker still on. This helped some. Now comes E. S. Holland, of the Bijou Theatre, Abingdon, Ill., with a still better idea.

Pay for Themselves

Mr. Holland has adapted another scheme to make the cards not only self supporting but in demand by auto owners. He worked the stunt on Girl Shy lately and although this was played on a Friday night, when the entire family is admitted for a flat payment of 35 cents, he played to large money and by far the best Friday night business of the year.

As the picture is not new, he got it at a rental that showed him a profit, and made his patrons feel that they were getting a real bargain at the low price.

Unfortunately Mr. Holland had his cards printed on orange stock, and the sample cannot be reproduced.

Simply Done

But the idea is very simple. The front of a card 4½ by 11 inches, is printed up with the title. It is affixed to the windshield with small strips of gummed tape such as is used for packages. This is less difficult to remove than the fully gummed face, which must be pressed into absolute adhesion if air bubbles are not to defeat the ends of the display by forming blind spots.

The trick work comes on the back of the card. In the first place this is printed up with the entire program for the week, with Girl Shy featured. In the second place there are two display ads, each 1¼ by 2¼ inches, one for a locally made ice cream and the other for a butcher shop.

At the top is a large "Free" with "please keep this card on your windshield." There is the further explanation that each day five auto numbers, arbitrarily selected, will be posted in front of the candy store and five others in front of the butcher shop. Owners of the cars thus indicated will receive two ice cream cones and a ticket to the Bijou, while at the butcher shop the gift is a ticket and a fifteen cent credit.

Changed Each Day

The numbers are changed each day for ten days, and the chances are that most of the cars visit both shops each day, as the numbers differ. With several hundred cards in the cars, this brings an almost equal number to each shop daily for ten days.

The value to the merchants is evident, and at the same time the house profits through its advertisement to the public and the more direct advertisement to the driver.

The cost is slight, since the two dealers pay for the cards and supply the gifts, while the house merely offers 100 tickets, most of which will bring along one or more paid admissions.

Had a Week too

If you think you can beat Mr. Holland's scheme, please send your idea along. This seems to be the best idea up to now, and it is going to require some beating.

Mr. Holland adds that recently he put on a Western Week, with an all western program, four changes, and did 25 per cent. more business than he did the previous week, though for the latter he had Classmates and some other good action stuff. Making it a "week" gave distinction to the program and they flocked in.

Only Ten Dollars For Champion Lie

Would you tell a lie; a great big, whopper of a lie, for only ten dollars. Out in Cleveland hundreds of people shot at the mark and a couple were glad to take $7.50 and $5 for their masterpieces.

This was hooked to the Plain Dealer in conjunction with the showing of Lightnin' at Keith's Palace Theatre. It will be recalled that old Bill Jones always could top any story he heard, and this made much comedy in the stage and screen play.

To put the point over, the theatre invested $22.50 in prize money and bought several columns of space for this small sum. It was good space, for people read it, and that should be the main point.

Like a Toy Train

E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, has found a mate for the ticket selling toy train in the lobby. He was playing The Shock Punch and his lobby attractor was a twelve story building done with toy structural steel. There was a crane which raised and lowered a beam ridden by a doll, presumably Dix, and a hod hoist which also was kept going up and down, powered by the same concealed motor.

Backed by a painting of the New York skyline, it attracted all the attention the toy train always gets.

TWO STUNTS ON THE IRON MAN USED BY EDWIN A. FERNANDEZ OF RANGOON

The house front of the Olympia Cinema was decorated to suggest all of the leading stunts on land, sea and in the air performed by Albertini in the chapter play. The same suggestion was carried about town by the bullock carts, which are the local equivalent of the auto truck perambulators. But that bannered trolley car might have come from anywhere, barring the background.

Three Car Cards to Tell of Havoc

This cut does not show one, but three cards. They were photographed together for convenience.

THREE CARDS

The top card was used on the street car dashes the week ahead of the showing, while the middle card was used in the rocks. The bottom card was on the dash the week of the showing, the cars being used for two weeks. The top card was black on red and more striking than the cut suggests.

Church Paper Took Commandment Space

Refusing general amusement advertising, the Mirror, a church paper in Memphis, Tenn,. accepted a display from George E. Brown for The Ten Commandments at Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, and added its own line: "The one picture every churchgoer should see."

The moral value of this concession did more than any other one factor to get those patrons Brown most desired to attract.

He planned an extensive general campaign to run two full weeks ahead of the opening including banners, posters and tack cards in the suburbs as well as in the business section and he even went into the small feeder towns with good returns.

The results was not alone large receipts, but a better mental attitude toward pictures in general on the part of the church people.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Five musical presentations and the Mark Strand Topical Review made up the show which went with "The Half Way Girl." The feature was 1 hour and 20 minutes long, while the review ran 8 minutes, and the musical numbers took up 37 minutes, making a complete show of 2 hours and 5 minutes.

Each deluxe performance opened with the new Ko-Ko Song Car-Tune, "Daisy Bell," or more familiarly known as "On a Bicycle Built for Two." This presentation required 8 minutes. The only light used on it was a very pale blue on the musicians.

A seven-minute presentation was built upon Schubert's "Serenade" and Liszt's "Liebestraum." A baritone, costumed as an old music master was seen seated before a pipe organ. This organ was painted upon a drop with a transparency square in the center above the organ, back of which was a platform 15 feet square raised 6 feet off the stage. A property console was built. At either side of the organist was a 6-foot candle-standard lighted. At opening, the singer, seated on the bench, sang Schubert's "Serenade" and at the conclusion his head drooped upon his arm on the organ console. Lights came up behind the transparency as the orchestra took up Liszt's "Liebestraum" and five of the ballet corps were seen in a tableau supposed to be a vision of the music master. Each dancer was costumed in silk of the Schubert period. At the close of the number, the lights behind the transparency dimmed out, leaving the set as at opening. Seven minutes for this number. The lights used included a blue overhead spot on the organist, with steel blue and light amber floods behind the transparency and two blue floods on the orchestra.

After the topical review came another specialty by the orchestra, this one being the introduction of four special violins with recording horns attached, demonstrating how musical selections are recorded on the phonograph. The selection used was "The Midnight Waltz," with the violinists standing during the solo part of the number. An introductory title was flashed on the screen preceding this novelty.

Estelle Carey sang "Old Pal." Lights for this included foots and borders of the large stage in blue; lemon arch spots on the purple-spangled curtains closed across the production stage; lemon spot on singer from the dome; two orange Mestrum floods on the orchestra from the projection room; green floods on small stage. This song required 3 minutes.

A "Popular Revuette," running 15 minutes, was made up of six popular incidents. This was put on in an especially painted set, representing a garden in full bloom. The sky was transparent and lighted from behind by blue open-box lamps. A piano to the left and a bench to the right were the only properties on the stage. The routine was as follows: male pianist played a special arrangement of "By the Light of the Stars" and "Sweet Georgia Brown"; tenor sang "Lovely Lady"; ballet corps danced "Lady Be Good" and "Fascinating Rhythm," with accompaniment by male pianist and orchestra; xylophonist played "Seminalo" from his accustomed place in the orchestra pit, a straw spot light being thrown on him from the dome; pianist played syncopated version of Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" and the act closed with "Don't Bring Lulu" by pianist, xylophonist and the ballet corps.

USED A CUTOUT TWENTY-FOUR ON A BILLING STAND

Dewey Mousson, of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., figured that if cut-outs were good for the lobby they should be good for stands and he set up this cutout for Colleen Moore in The Desert Flower on the most prominent location.

Beauty Parlor is Latest Show Idea

J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, has dug out a brand new one, getting the idea from the Lem Stewart broadcasts, but being the first to use it.

The stunt was suggested for The Manicure Girl and is very simple if there are two or more beauty shops in town; and it's a darned poor town with only a couple.

Each co-operating shop contributes an entry, and naturally each tries to do better than the others, so you are reasonably certain of a good program. As Harrison worked it, a plumber contributed the piping, a supply house loaned the equipment and a florist did the decorating. The only cost to the house was for a blackface comedian, who acted as porter and looked after the comedy.

The comedian opened with a monologue in one, after which the drop was taken up, disclosing the interior of a beauty shop. Four booths were provided, one lettered with the name of each of the four shops, and each shop had an attendant and two customers.

This made twelve girls, all of whom contributed solo numbers with announcements by the comedian, who faked lines to weave the stunt into a semblance of a play.

Six drug stores were hooked to displays of beauty aids and stress was given a nail polish, samples of which were given all women patrons at each performance. With the polish company and the four beauty stores contributing space, Harrison got almost a page of additional advertising, which cost him nothing.

You don't know how good this is until you have tried it.

A Visiting Band

As several musicians, former residents, were visiting in Greely, Colorado, recently, C. T. Perrin suggested that they unite in a concert between the two night shows of The Thundering Herd, and they were glad to show off. It made a strong attraction and packed the house for a rebook. A few passes to the friends the musicians were visiting was the only cost.

Both Benefited

George J. Schade, of Sandusky, staged a benefit for Boys and Girls Band of Sandusky. It began at the close of the run of Quo Vadis. To advertise the benefit the band played a couple of days in advance. To advertise Quo Vadis they played in front of the theatre about showing time.

Finds New Idea for a Big Town Contest

Here's a new idea for a newspaper circulation scheme that will work better in the larger cities, though it can be used in the smaller towns. It was originated by the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, for Reginald Denny in I'll Show You the Town.

The Call used the line "Show San Francisco to your fellow townsmen" and the gist of the idea was contained in this paragraph of the opening announcement:

"There are in San Francisco many hidden away corners with romantic appeal, many forgotten thoroughfares, many quaint and strange houses, many industries and public buildings of national interest. There are countless places and things hunted out by visitors, but probably known to few of us who live here."

Prizes for Best

The story of one of these oddities were to be told in 150 words, and ten prizes of $5 each were awarded the best with tickets for others used.

Even in a small town there are quaint nooks not generally known. In the cities there are literally hundreds of such places. And it makes a fine local feature.

It works best on I'll Show You the Town, but it can be adapted to other titles, such as "The Street of Forgotten Men." Save the idea until it fits just right.

Painted Paws

The hotter it gets in Texas the harder Jack Rowley, of the Royal Theatre, Laredo, hustles.

When it got good and hot, he painted pad marks on the pavement and lettered "The trail of The White Monkey goes in this direction." As other parts of the sidewalk told the title and the house, the readers hit the trail without the aid of Billy Sunday.

A NOVEL LOCATION FOR AN OUTDOOR STAND IN CHATTANOOGA

J. L. Cartwright got permission to plant his sign against the Physicians and Surgeons Hospital, on one of the best traveled streets in town. Naturally the sign against such a building is bound to attract more attention than the usual board.

Stenciled Signs On Fifty Walks

Stenciled sidewalks are not exactly a novelty, but when A. Blumenfield, of the Orpheus Theatre, San Rafael, Calif., painted the walks for Mme. Sans Gene, he made certain that there was no law against painting the walks, and went ahead without first asking permission. He painted about fifty street corners after midnight the day before Mme. Sans Gene was to open. The cut shows the stencil used, which he cut himself from a sheet of mat board.

HOW THE QUO VADIS POSTERS FRAME UP IN THE LOBBY

The Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oregon, used posters instead of paintings for this picture and made a fine flash at comparatively small cost. These work particularly well in the deep lobby where there is ample side wall space.

Had a Diver

Because a local bathing beach had a beauty contest, Ray Averill, of the Olympic Theatre, Buffalo, put in an entry as "Miss Olympic" and as long as he had her on the pay roll, he figured she could help advertise Reginald Denny. He put her in a nifty sport car, (borrowed) with a card reading "In fy —— car I'll show you the town." She was chaperoned by a huge darkey in a gorgeous Arabian costume, and when she got the chance she handed out cards with her picture and the legend, along with the house and playing dates. She helped much.

Traffic Blocks on Paths to Paradise

J. L. Crove, of the Lyric Theatre, Jackson, Tenn., worked a real stunt the other day when he persuaded the Mayor to let him box in the town's ten police traffic pedestals with compo board on which an advertisement for Paths to Paradise was lettered on all four sides.

They were put out a week in advance of the showing of the Griffith comedy and stayed up for full seven days.

You could not be in the town and not know that Paths to Paradise was due presently, and most persons took advantage of this information.

It's just as hard to land some of those small towns as the big ones, so Crove gets real credit.

FRANCIS M. KADOW PRINTED HIS OWN ONE SHEETS

This is a locally produced job for The Thundering Herd from the Mikadow Theatre, Manitowoc, Wis. We have no details as to the cut, which probably was locally made, but it is nicely done and a good seller. It is dark blue on white paper.

Tied Charley's Aunt To a Stove Campaign

Remembering how the gas companies ate up the hook to Ruud heaters on Hot Water, H. H. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., persuaded the electric company to do a lot of his advertising on Charley's Aunt.

The Alabama Power Company was launching a hot weather campaign on a new cooking range, known as the "73."

He got them to open the campaign with teasers on Charley's Aunt and they bannered their street cars with such announcements as: "Charley's Aunt uses a 73 at the Imperial Monday and Tuesday" and "What is a 73? Ask Charley's Aunt at the Imperial Monday and Tuesday." These banners were carried into three feeder towns by the interurban, and everyone wanted to know.

The screen told those who saw the picture, and the newspapers informed the few who didn't, but there were not many of the latter, for they played to a jam.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

A STAGE SET IN THE LOBBY OF A CLOSED THEATRE

Evidently a closed house was used to help the American Theatre, Evansville, Ind., when it ran The Navigator as a hot weather attraction. No details are offered, but the set is too elaborate to be erected just for morning showing.

Smallest Victrola Ground Out Chickie

What was described as "the smallest Victrola in the world" was the literal big noise in the lobby of the Palace Theatre, Memphis, for the run of that picture. It was small enough to fit into a miniature stage set, but large enough to transmit the waves from a portable Victrola in the box office, playing before a microphone.

Just how so small an object could give so great a tone was a puzzle that held the lobby shoppers fascinated, and they were thereby interested in the picture.

A credit card announced that this smallest instrument had been supplied by a local phonograph agency, but did not supply the details about the rest of the equipment, adding that the smallest machine was playing the greatest hit, Chickie.

The company which supplied the outfit not only gave a window to the picture and record, but carried mention in its newspaper ads.

W. G. Teague drew unusually good business.

Frosted It

Remember that nice compo board house H. J. Gould, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, built for Welcome Home?

Well, for The Goose Hangs High he painted on a dime's worth of snow, set in a real glass window, put a christmas tree back of the flat and had another nice display at even less than a nominal cost.

It got over the idea that the Goose is a story of a real family and not a nature fake as the title might suggest.

For The Light of Western Stars at the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Rodney Bush used a compo board book with three star shaped cutouts for the three chief players.

Each star was backed by a deep blue panel on which were a portrait and two stills. These were lighted by hidden bulbs, the entire book being spotlighted in pale blue.

It was cool, inviting—and selling.

Rolled Their Own

Guy Kenimer used the foot square dice for Seven Chances at the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, but built up the stunt a little. The dice were in charge of a man dressed as Keaton and a boy in burnt cork. After they had rolled the dice for a time they would offer a free pass to anyone in the crowd they attracted who could throw a seven the first try.

Not many got the desired number, but they contributed several hundred dollars worth of ballyhoo to the stunt. A revolving die was mounted in the lobby to connect with the street stunt.

Used Old Maps in a Treasure Hunt

Two old maps supplied the basis of a treasure hunt on Paths to Paradise at the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas. One of these was "found" in the cellar of the theatre, and was supposed to be of Aztec origin. The other was discovered by the Austin Statesman about a week before the stunt was started. Just how much E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic, had to do with the discovery is not told.

In any event these old treasure maps were played up by the newspaper and in the theatre lobby and then, apparently by inspiration, the newspaper inaugurated a Treasure Hunt along the Paths to Paradise. The paths led from the Capitol grounds to the dam on the Colorado river, the golf links at the Lions' Club, to a confectioner famous for his cones (one of which was given each participant), to a drug store (where samples of face and tooth powder were presented), and to the end of the trail.

The Prize Schedule

The prizes were $10, given by the paper, a month's pass to the theatre, a year's subscription to the paper and various smaller ticket prizes.

The prizes were awarded in the theatre lobby and the press was so great that patrons were unable to approach the box office, but they all went in later, so no money was lost.

There is nothing like a well planned treasure hunt to get the attention of the automobile crowd these hot days. Plan the tour to get them to the house just before the second night show, or put on a special eleven o'clock show, if you think you can get enough of a crowd, and make special arrangements for parked cars.

FIRELESS FIREWORKS HELPED OLD HOME WEEK

This is Pat Argust's idea of a quiet celebration in the lobby of the Rialto Theatre, Colorado Springs. The photograph may suggest flowers, but they really are rockets, with a couple of noiseless drummers to help along. Got business.

Old Home Week Was Home Products Show

Working on Meighan in Old Home Week, E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, put over some very clever ideas, the best of which was a Home Products Exposition in the large lobby of the house.

This was a miniature fair with all home products represented, including real estate, for one exhibit was a plaster model of a home. There were small wares and food products, machinery and other things, and you could get a free potato chip or a dab of salad, popcorn, peanuts and a lot of other things. The lobby lights were white and purple, the municipal colors, and the city's own official flag was loaned by the Mayor to dress and dignify the display.

On the sidewalk was a Ford car with the largest wheels that could be made to fit and a sign offering to take passengers to any part of the city for fifty cents during Old Home Week. No one took a ride, but everyone took a look.

Then there was a tie-up with the Statesman for the best old-time photograph of the city, with $5 for the winner, and everyone whose name was used in the Sunday edition was eligible to receive a pass.

Free tickets to a stated performance were given all who attended the Chamber of Commerce picnic and souvenirs were given some of the guests.

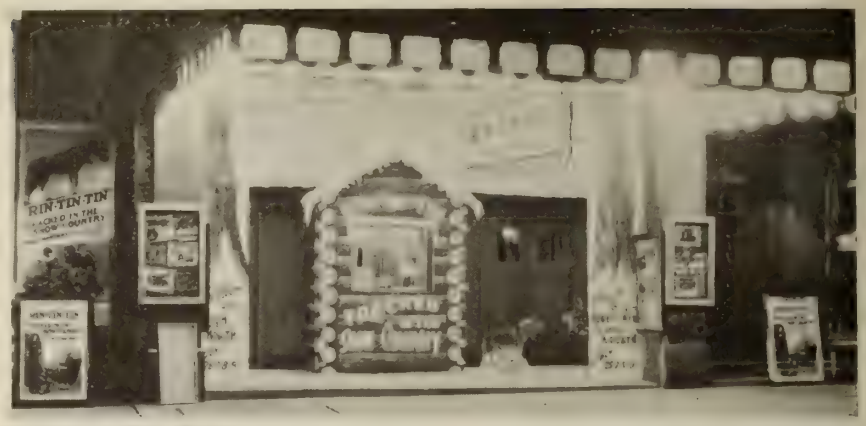
Cards suggested by the advertising department and reading "Au revoir, see you during old home week," were passed out and a 36-foot banner was used on the front of the house. Outside of this Mr. Roberts just did his regular stuff.

Much Argument

Essay contests have had a slump of late. They were overworked, and the public tired, so editors quit.

But you still can get action with a real idea, and Maurice Davis, St. Louis Universalist, got space aplenty when he tied the Times to a contest on Up the Ladder.

The story concerns a man who climbs the ladder of success until his wife shakes the ladder by losing his cash. The contest hinged on the question of whether or no a wife should be content to remain at the bottom of the ladder while hubby did the climbing. Passes to the Kings and Rivoli, where the picture was playing, rewarded the acceptances, and the discussion aroused a lot of caustic comment (mostly about husbands) that made excellent hot weather reading and helped advertise the picture.



A Warner Brothers' Release

AN INVITINGLY COOL LOBBY FOR A SUMMER ENGAGEMENT

The Majestic Theatre, Fort Dodge, Iowa, added painted compo board flats to its log box office for Rin-Tin-Tin in Tracked in the Snow Country and brought a lot of extra money to the box office on a July date. It pays to dig back for the snow stuff.

Getting the Radio

Air publicity for a week on The Light of Western Stars was easily achieved by W. G. League, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis.

He knew that a local station desired to increase its fan mail. He suggested a request concert, played by Harry Nichols, the house organist, the program to be selected from the requests received and tickets being sent those naming the selections chosen.

For a full week before the showing the station announced the contest between each number of its programs at each concert, naturally telling that the tickets would be for The Light of Western Stars. More than 300 suggestions were received, from which a fifteen number program was arranged, tickets being sent to all who suggested any of the numbers. And the radio company is ready for another hook-up.

Danced in Lobby at Howard, Atlanta

Making a drive on Syncopation Week, Howard Waugh, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., held the band over and permitted dancing in the huge lobby between eleven and twelve each evening. It was new in Atlanta, and brought out large attendance.

His feature was Oh, Doctor! and a good window display (in a drug store) showed a number of actual physicians' prescriptions, with a huge compo board enlargement in the centre with Denny's name as the physician and with clever copy tying up with the picture.

A street stunt was a girl dressed as a trained nurse, who handed out small envelopes printed with "The enclosed capsule is good for every ailment." Each envelope contained a capsule with an appropriately worded stuffer. This stunt was worked for a number of days before the opening and used up 75,000 capsules.

A book marker was supplied the public library, giving the titles of all the library's books by Harry Leon Wilson. Five thousand of these were handed out, supplementing 3,500 programs used as laundry stuffers.

Had Iced Tea for Charley's Auntie

Hooking a local dealer to the idea of serving iced tea in the lobby of the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, Barry Burke got them into the lobby of the theatre, where they cool off and listen to the black cat laughing in the usual phonographic way.

The tea was on flow for a week and not only sold tickets but tea, for those who liked the brew went over and bought a package at the store.

Burke used a second cat on the marquise and a third was placed about a block away.

A voiceless black cat dominated a candy display in a nearby confectionery, and a cut-out of Auntie was placed in a sporting club much frequented on the idea that the play would appeal to the members.

Five hundred tagged nuts were given out in the downtown offices and helped to swell the business in spite of the heat.

Splits a Space To Sell a Band

Because they had a special band as an attraction, the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, split its space between The Desert Flower and the band. Since the space is about a five sevens, there is plenty of room in which to put over both attractions very nicely. Half of that space would be a good seller for Colleen Moore alone, so she does not suffer from the intrusion of the band. She gets all the best of it on cuts, for the band of four men have three eyes, one mouth and one nose between them. Two of the four have no features at all, while the leader has eyes and a mouth but no nose, and the cornet has one eye and a nose. It's impressionistic to an extreme. The little panel at the bottom of the centre is a poor one because the printer has letter-spaced the words to exactly fill, and he separates the letters so that they are difficult to read. You have to come to a full stop, concentrate and then start in to read. It might not look as symmetrical with the lines of uneven length, but it would be much better selling, though we can't see that pictures of tropical lands make good July sellers. At any rate it shows that the Circle can get away from the long and narrow design on a pinch, and it offers a nice hot weather signature.

Makes a Four House A Sectional Space

Milt Crandall, of the Rowland & Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, has a four house space to look after, or rather four spaces some of which cover two houses. He changes the style every week, sometimes using hand work, but mostly trusting to type. His recent layout is to string them across the page in from five to eight columns, depending on what he has to announce, but he gets a nice design by changing the ends. The cut here shows one end. There is a similar design over on the right and in between are two other sections, differently treated. The result is a big smash and yet one in which each house stands out by itself instead of being merged into one large space. The result is that Milt gets all that he is paying for and a trifle more instead of much less than what he buys. This is a nice type layout, bar the all caps above the star, where they crowd Barthelmess' name down, and it is particularly good coming from Pittsburgh. It represents practically a two fours.

Cuts and Title Are Not Matched ager felt that he should have some cuts and not because he seemed to think that cuts were necessary. way the bathing girls happen in a couple of scenes and then forgotten. Patrons who go to see a bathing girl picture are apt to be disappointed and think that the picture is not good, or at least as good as it really is. There is plenty to sell in the actual story and plenty of good stills. There are good cuts in the plan book that are truer to the film, and we think that it is an error to select a passing incident to offer as the chief seller, even though bathing girls are best sellers this time of year. This is a little better than three nines; 130 lines, and gives ample display with a well-chosen topline. That "grin-fizz" promises to become as permanently a part of the advertising vocabulary as Ralph Ruffner's "mirthquake." It has been more widely used on this story than any plan book line we have come across in a long time.

"The Gold Rush"

Chaplin's Latest Is Great Box-Office Picture, Crammed with Laughter and Fine Touches of Pathos

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

So glowing was the report published in our issue of July 18 from our Pacific Coast correspondent on Charlie Chaplin's "The Gold Rush" when it opened in Hollywood, that we wondered if he had allowed his enthusiasm to sweep him off his feet; however, having now seen this picture, we unhesitatingly pronounce it great. It should delight any type of audience and shatter box-office records. Already at the New York Strand it is enjoying a four weeks' engagement, smashing to bits the policy of the house.

The Klondike of a generation ago furnishes the background and when he makes his appearance as the Lone Prospector in the midst of Alaskan snows clad in his familiar outfit, even to the little cane, there is the tremendous appeal of the Chaplin of old. Obviously, the main mission of "The Gold Rush" is to make you laugh and keep you laughing, but no one knows better than he the value of pathos in a comedy and that a laugh snatched out of a situation that borders on tears redoubles its force. Consequently there is a generous sprinkling of pathos. Chaplin himself calls this picture a dramatic comedy. He introduces drama, melodrama, romance and intense heart interest and toys with the emotions of his audience, keeping them in stitches of laughter, but at least one big situation will bring moisture to many eyes.

Included in its record-breaking length of ten reels for a comedy are a host of situations that are regular riots of laughter and several of them brought forth spontaneous outbursts of applause from the Strand audiences. It would seem impossible to find anyone with the least sense of humor who will not enjoy the original, ingenious and uncannily clever situations with which this picture is filled.

"The Gold Rush" is of a rather unusual type of construction for a feature comedy, for its force is concentrated on "highlights" rather than dovetailing situations such as distinguish a farce. All of these register with a bang. When his companions struggle for a rifle and Charlie keeps dodging to get out of range, when he is driven out of the cabin and the wind blows him back, when he feigns being frozen to get breakfast, when he hooks up his trousers with a cane and then ties them with a rope which is attached to a big dog that he pulls all over the dance floor; these and many other situations are a scream. On the other hand, the sequences where the girl kids him along and he believes she is serious and prepares a dinner for her and her friends, none of whom show up, provide as fine pathos as has ever been screened.

We don't believe there could be a cleverer or more delightful bit that where Charlie sticks two forks in bread rolls and gives an imitation of his own "foot-work." Then there is the climax, with Chaplin and Mack Swain in a cabin that has been carried by a storm so that it hangs over the edge of a precipice. Every time they move it slants at a more perilous angle. Here is thrill-comedy at its best, the kind that makes you alternately laugh and hold your breath.

Individually the situations in this picture are great; not one should be sacrificed and it would seem hard to trim them, but we believe there will be a rather general feeling that it is too long. Considered as a whole, its method of concentrating on the individual situations makes the story episodic rather than smooth running, and the meticulous detail causes a lack of snappiness to the movement. But, after all, there is a tremendous lot of sure-fire stuff; Chaplin is great, his new leading lady, Georgia Hale, is excellent and attractive, and his old pal, Mack Swain, is an able foil; and, as we said in the beginning, we believe it will please all classes of patrons and break box-office records, though many may not vote it his best picture.

Story

Among those who rushed to Klondike during the gold rush was a lone prospector who sought refuge from a storm at the cabin of Black Larsen, a desperado, to which came also Big Jim McKay who had discovered a valuable claim. Hunger drove Larsen out to seek food and he stumbled on McKay's claim and when McKay appeared he knocked him unconscious with a shovel. Soon after, Larsen was killed by an avalanche. The Prospector wandered into a mining town and was treated as a joke by everyone including Georgia a girl with whom he fell in love. McKay, his memory gone because of the injury, finally located the Prospector the only man who could aid him and together they went to the cabin. A storm blew the cabin about finally landing it on the edge of a precipice. McKay and the Prospector finally got out and found they were right at the claim. They returned home as multi-millionaires but the Prospector was disconsolate over his failure to find the girl, Georgia. Finally, he located her in the steerage and she believed him to be a stowaway. When the reporters asked who she was, he whispered that she was to become his wife.

"The Lucky Horseshoe"

Tom Mix Mingles Romantic Drama with Hard Riding Wild Western in His Newest Fox Presentation

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Pleased with the success of "Dick Turpin" and yet warned by the same play that his followers expect to see him in chaps in the wide open spaces where men are Tom Mixes, "The Lucky Horseshoe" offers a combination of both.

The story opens and closes in the ranch country, but following a clout on the head, Tom dreams of his excapades as Don Juan in the days of old for a couple of picturesque reels. This should come close to pleasing everyone, for the western section is the usual vivid stunt stuff; with a generous allowance of comedy, while the romantic period has been carefully and elaborately mounted. Here, too, there are a succession of stunts that will thrill the Mix followers, and the picture should give general satisfaction to his wide following.

Billie Dove makes an appealing heroine, with not very much to do, and Ann Pennington is seen in a couple of vivid dances, which give color to the picture while adding a useful name to the cast. J. Farrell MacDonald gets over a lot of comedy without clowning it. The picture classes well toward the top in the calendar of Mix releases.

Tom Foster, ranch manager, assumes charge of a mortgaged ranch on the death of the owner. He also is charged with the care of Elvira Hunt, the decedent's daughter, with the expressed hope that she will marry him. The diffident Tom permits her to be carried off to Europe by an aunt without the proposal the girl evidently is waiting for. Elvira returns with a European polish and a European fiance, to find that Tom has paid off the mortgage and greatly improved the place. The fiance, Denman, objects to her preference for Tom and has him abducted in the costume of Don Juan, the property of the foreman, Mack, who has urged Tom to be like his hero. Tom is no quiet captive and for the sake of peace his abductors club him into insensibility. During his stupor he dreams that he is Don Juan himself, lives a vivid romance, but comes to consciousness in time to break his bonds and win the girl just before the fatal "yes" is said in the marriage ceremony with the other fellow.

"Winds of Chance"

Rex Beach's Stirring Story of Klondike Gold Rush Filmed by Frank Lloyd on a Big Scale

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Frank Lloyd's newest production for First National "Winds of Chance" is a story of the great gold rush to the Klondike about a generation ago. Of entirely different type, in its scope and possibly in the number of persons employed in some of the scenes it is as big as "The Sea Hawk," although by no means as spectacular and colorful.

In transferring this Rex Beach story to the screen, it is evident that Mr. Lloyd went to great lengths to make it as accurate a picturization as possible of those stirring days. He has succeeded in making a picture that holds the interest and at times thrills, and is really an epic of this historical event.

The significance of the title is not quite clear. Possibly it refers to the fact that chance played so great a part in the struggle of these brave pioneers in their search for gold, or to the strange lot of human beings of all classes that chance brought together at that time. The latter idea has been well worked out and there are a number of excellent character portrayals of the strange and varied types that joined this stampede.

As a graphic record of the Klondike gold rush it is an excellent piece of work, although with the exception of a few scenes showing the prospectors toiling through Chilkoot Pass and braving the rapids, their hardships have not been strongly played up. There is a big thrill in this latter scene which is remarkably well done, with excellent short-distance shots of the barges being tossed about as they plunge through the rapids.

The unusually large number of characters has the effect of dividing the interest and it is in its broad aspect rather than as a drama of individuals that this film has its greatest appeal. The story of the hero and heroine is interesting but not compelling and never assumes such force as to dominate the picture. One reason of this would seem to be that the hero is far from being the virile and vigorous type usually found in Rex Beach stories or pictures of this type. He shows little resourcefulness or courage and luck or chance rather than his own initiative carries him through, in fact he seems strangely dependent on others. The heroine is really a much more virile character.

Both Ben Lyon and Anna Q. Nilsson are congenially cast in the leading roles and there is an unusually large number of important subordinate roles which are capably handled by such well-known players as Viola Dana, Hobart Bosworth, Dorothy Sebastian, Fred Kohler, Claude Gillingwater, William Conklin, Philo McCullough, Wade Boteler and Victor McLaglen. Especially noteworthy is the work of McLaglen as the happy, care-free French-Canadian river pilot.

"Winds of Chance" should prove an interesting attraction for the majority of patrons.

Based on story by Rex Beach.
Directed by Frank Lloyd.
Length, 9,554 feet.

Story

Pierce Phillips, one of the horde that rushed to the Klondike during the gold rush of 1897, loses his stake in a shell game and gets a job with the McCaskeys to help carry goods to the next camp. En route he meets Tom and Jerry, two old cronies who are always fighting and joins them. Arriving at their tent they find a woman, the Countess Courteau who is an old-timer and is already in possession. Pierce brings goods back for her and with the McCaskeys is arrested for theft but proves his innocence. He resents a slurring remark about the Countess and she engages him to take charge of packing goods over the trail for her. This is accomplished safely including passage through the rapids. Pierce falls in love with the Countess but when she tells him she is married he leaves in a huff and gets a job as gold weigher in a dance hall. Laura, a vamp tries to capture him but he scorns her and she teams up with McCaskey and frames a robbery on Pierce. The Countess forces her husband to confess the truth and en route to inform the police he is killed and Pierce is blamed. Poleon, a French Canadian aids the police in tracking the McCaskeys and learns that one of them killed Courteau. Pierce is freed and finds happiness with the Countess.

Mountain Tragedy Successfully Transferred to the Screen in a Finely Staged Metro-Goldwyn Presentation

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Relieved of the cramping confines of painted scenery and the stage proscenium, Lula Vollmer's strongly dramatic story of the Carolina "hill billies" gains in breadth and loses much of the drabness of the play without sacrifice of power. The continuity is jumpy in spots, particularly toward the close, but the dominant figure of the mother holds the interest. With this role less competently played, a different opinion might have to be written, for the character rises superior to the story.

The part of Ma Cagle is taken by Lucille La Verne, who was the creator of the role in the stage play. She has the screen technique and makes her part so human that the drama is real and the sombre story of lowly life becomes dignified tragedy. She is particularly good in the scenes in which she learns of her son's supposed death and takes comfort in the deserter from the training camp, who later turns out to be the son of the slayer of her husband. Her work takes rank with the finest screen characterizations.

Conrad Nagel, as the son, briefly strays from the type now and then in the earlier scenes, but is admirable as the returned boy and his graphic pantomimic description of bayonetting the Germans is a fine piece of work. He seldom has done better. Save in her moments of stress, Pauline Starke is a little too soubrettish; evidently a directorial fault, but in her big scenes she rises magnificently to the situation.

The cast is uniformly good in the lesser roles, and the photography is worthy of the splendid natural settings. "Sun-up" possibly may not be a popular success because of its sombreness, but even the less intelligent audiences can at least enjoy the melodrama if they cannot sense the true tragedy. It should possess a wider appeal than probably was anticipated.

Story

Ma Cagle is a product of the hills of the Carolinas. Her father and husband both killed by officers of the law, she rebels against the law of the land. She has but one law: a life for a life, and waits only the maturity of her son, Rufus, to gain her revenge. Then comes the call to arms. Rufe is swept into the army and is reported killed in action. She gives vent to human emotion at last by sheltering a deserter from a training camp, and lavishes her affection on him for nearly a year only to learn he is the son of the slayer of her husband. Rufe returns, remade through contact with the world. She turns to him to shoot the lad, but Rufe announces the new dispensation. The boy is left free to go, to Ma Cagle's great disgust. Only her joy at regaining her boy is compensation. Then Rufe's newly acquired principles are put to the test. His boyhood sweetheart, Emmy Todd, has been wronged by the Sheriff. For a moment there is a strong temptation to revert to type, but the dawn of the new day, the sun-up of civilization has come. He takes the Sheriff to jail and comes back with the badge. He is the new Sheriff—and Ma gets her final and greatest shock.

Reginald Denny Scores Again for Universal in a Fast-Moving and Hilarious Farce Comedy-Romance

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "Where Was I?," his newest Universal-Jewel production, Reginald Denny scores again. Looks like it is getting to be a habit with the Universal-Denny combination to turn out fast-moving comedies chock full of laughs. This one is a fitting successor to "Oh, Doctor" and "I'll Show You the Town."

"Where Was I?" is pure farce comedy. A successful young business man becomes engaged to his competitor's daughter and her father threatens to break him. Another woman apepars and claims she was married to the hero on January 9, 1923, and to prove an alibi it is necessary that he prove where he was on that date. The plot is slight but it has been built up with a lot of amusing action. There is a wild chase by taxi and subway to locate a former employee, in the course of which Denny walks off with a brief case containing a large sum of money, knocks down a traffic cop and finds his quarry has gone to Africa.

With his return home, Denny discovers the other woman has taken possession of his home. The girl appears on the scene and then begins a mad endeavor to keep the two from meeting. Finally, in true farce style, the girl's father, a lot of cops, the taxi-driver and finally a preacher get into the melee which ends by Denny marrying his sweetheart when it develops that the girl's father hired the other woman and that it was his own money that Denny stole.

Denny is excellent and Marion Nixon does good work as the girl. It seems strange to see Pauline Garon as the other woman, but she proves to be an excellent "baby vamp." Chester Conklin as the taxi driver and Lee Moran as Denny's secretary also furnish excellent comedy.

"Where Was I?" has a laugh in nearly every foot and there is never a dull moment. It should prove an excellent audience attraction.

Story

Thomas Berford has made a great success of the business he inherited from his father and has humbled all his competitors except George Stone. Suddenly Berford announces his engagement to Stone's daughter Alicia and Stone threatens to break him. Claire appears and claims Berford married her on January 9, 1923 and Berford with his secretary Henry start out on a mad rush to locate Potter the only man who has a record of where he was on that day. During a mad ride via subway and taxi, Berford grabs a brief case belonging to a bank messenger by mistake and knocks down a traffic cop. Returning home unsuccessful he finds Claire there. Alicia appears and there is a mad scramble to keep them from meeting. Finally, Alicia goes for the minister, the cops appear, then comes Alicia's father. When Claire learns of the romance she exposes her supposed marriage as a plot of Stone's. It develops that Berford has stolen his own money and while his partners argue with Stone, Berford and Alicia are married by the minister whom she summoned.

"Kentucky Pride"

John Ford's Newest for Fox, the Story of a Race Horse as Told by Itself, Has Unusual Appeal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "Kentucky Pride" William Fox presents a picture that has all the fascination of a racing drama, but the big point of appeal is the fact that, as was the case in the famous story, "Black Beauty," which the majority of us thrilled over, intense interest and sympathy are aroused by having the horse tell its own story.

The picture begins with the birth of the horse, "Virginia's Future," and this animal tells its story from the time it was a wee colt, through its childhood, its separation from its mother, the arduous training and finally the big race. This horse is at all times the centre of interest, but it is shared by a number of other horses, for the theme is redolent of the turf, the stable and the breeding farm, and a notable feature is the fact that several of the world's most famous race horses are introduced, including Man o' War, Morvich, Fair Play and The Finn. The scenes are all authentic, being filmed at the stock farms and tracks in Kentucky.

This story certainly glorifies the horse and Virginia's Future is pictured as experiencing the same emotions as human beings, joy, anger, pride, disappointment, ambition, grief. There are, of course, a number of human beings in the picture and they effectively aid in rounding out the theme, but their story is subordinated to that of the horse.

Early in the picture there is a scene with an unexpected punch. The horse is shown in a big race which is worked up with fine suspense, and just as it gains the lead it stumbles and is injured. This arouses intense sympathy and there is plenty of pathos and human interest in the subsequent scenes. The play on the emotions is strong where the horse is ordered to be shot, and genuine relief is felt when it is rescued by its trainer. We follow with interest as it is sold to a trainer, share its hope when it gives birth to the colt Confederacy, grieve with it when it is sold to junk dealers and ill-treated, and thrill when Confederacy realizes the hope and wins the big race.

Among the human players, Henry Walthall as the owner and J. Farrell MacDonald as the Irish trainer do exceptionally good work.

Director John Ford has succeeded in injecting a tremendous lot of feeling into this story, and we believe that the majority of patrons will find it a thoroughly satisfactory attraction. The presence of the famous race horses offers fine opportunities for exploitation. The picture should prove a good box-office attraction.

Length, 6,597 feet.

Story

Mr. Beaumont, a Kentucky horseman of the old school, owns a wonderful string of race horses. He loses several by gambling and pins his hopes on a colt which he calls Virginia's Future after his only daughter, but she falls and is injured just as it is about to win. Beaumont loses everything and his second wife turns him down for another admirer and he disappears. This horse is nursed back to health by Donovan, the trainer, and sold to another horseman and finally gives birth to a colt called Confederacy. Virginia's Future is finally auctioned off to a foreign junk dealer and mistreated. Finally Confederacy is entered in a big race and is ridden by Donovan's son Danny. Beaumont and Donovan bet all of the money they obtained from selling Virginia's Future to the horseman, except a hundred dollars with which they buy her back from the junk dealer. Confederacy wins and everybody is happy except Mrs. Beaumont and her friend, who have lost out by betting on another horse.

"Wild Justice"

Canine Star, Peter the Great, Scores in Exciting Punch Melodrama Released by United Artists

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Glowing recognition of the power of pictures starring police dog as audience attraction is found in the fact that "Wild Justice," the newest vehicle for Peter the Great, is being offered by United Artists, the company that has on its roster Griffith, Fairbanks, Chaplin and Norma Talmadge.

Much has been written about the high quality of the "acting" of these four-footed luminaries and it all applies to Peter. He gives you the impression that he thoroughly enjoys his work. He "puts over" his role with a zest that is refreshing and makes you feel he actually has the story in his grasp and is doing things of his own volition. There is no doubt about it, he actually registers his emotions from cowardly fear to agressive, bristling rage. Of course, much of this is due to the direction of Chester Franklin, but we can't help feeling Peter is entitled to a big share.

It is a delight to watch Peter and he easily succeeds in holding your interest and attention even though the story is mechanical and lacking in smoothness. Due to the limited possibilities of a canine star, there is much that is familiar, but C. Gardner Sullivan, an old hand at this sort of work, has provided a scenario that gives the star plenty of opportunities and Peter is there with the goods.

Of course there are human players, too, with a romance and a villain. They all do capable work, especially Frank Hagney, but it is the dog who is the real as well as the titular star. He is in nearly every scene and walks away with all of them. A good situation is where he attacks Hagney, and he does it so well that you don't envy Frank his role.

There is plenty of action and plenty of melodrama, with exceptional punch in the climax. The scene where the villain ties Peter in a rowboat and he manages to free himself and swim ashore as the boat goes through swirling rapids and nears the falls is a new angle on a sure-fire thrill situation that will bring you to the edge of the seat. In the fight with the villain, Peter will make you gasp as he hangs entirely over a high precipice and recovering his footing finally lunges at the villain with such force as to plunge him to his doom.

"Wild Justice" is one of the most thrilling of the dog pictures and should prove above the average with the majority of audiences. It will delight the children and please and thrill all who like stories with canine stars.

"Buster Brown Series"

Universal Offers Thoroughly Amusing Series of Comedies Based on Outcault's Famous Cartoons

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

R. F. Outcault's famous cartoon characters, Buster Brown and his dog Tige, have reached the screen and are being presented in a series of two-reel comedies made by Century and released through Universal. Judged by the first two, this series should prove a winner. They are crammed with amusing action. Some of it is slapstick but there is a lot of spontaneous humor that is bound to appeal to all classes. Little Arthur Trimble as Buster, and the dog Pete as Tige are so like the originals that you almost believe they stepped right out of the cartoons. Arthur is very good, and Pete the dog is really a wonder. Some of his stunts are almost unbelievable. Don't laugh at this, but this dog actually displays a variety of emotions and his facial expressions are remarkable. He is a real comedian, much better than a number of his human prototypes.

The kiddies will scream with delight at these Buster Brown pictures and they should thoroughly please the grown-ups.

"Educating Buster Brown"

This is the first of the series, and one of the most genuinely amusing comedies the writer has ever seen. In one sequence a fly lights on Buster's face and Tige, unable to chase it away, actually smashes it with his paw. There is some funny business when Buster, denied breakfast, gets on stilts and masquerades as a cop. Here is introduced a new use for the familiar pie, for Buster throws one in the dog's face. Buster is up to all sorts of tricks. He substitutes a fish for a dog that a lady is leading on a leash, and a pelican swallows the fish. Buster finally arrives at school and soon has the room in an uproar. A boy gives Tige a piece of Limberger cheese and Tige actually shows how it gradually overcomes him and finally rolls over as if he was knocked out. This is a corker, but the best scene is where Tige finds a skunk. Slow motion shows him going by a fence on which there are three birds and each one falls dead when he passes. The chap who has the role of the school teacher also furnishes some good acrobatic comedy.

"Buster, Be Good"

While not as clever or spontaneous in its humor as "Educating Buster Brown," this subject, the second of the series, is a good comedy. Buster and Tige go out in a toy sedan and are accidentally caught in a dog catcher's net and finally break a hydrant; the force of the water lifts the little car into the air. They aid Buster's sweetheart, Mary Jane, played by cute little Doreen Turner, to get rid of a troublesome tooth by means of a sky rocket, and she takes them to the home of her father where there is a meeting of spiritualists. This is pie for Buster, who calls the gang together and they impersonate spooks of all kinds. On being discovered, Buster dresses all the kids like himself and has the leading spiritualist think he is actually "seeing things" as Buster seems to be in several places at once. As is frequently the case with Buster, he ends by getting spanked and making another resolution.

"Butter Fingers"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

A galaxy of Pathe comedy stars, under Mack Sennett's regime, make of "Butter Fingers" a god crooked baseball funster. With Billy Bevan as the rival pitcher with the unbeatable "curve', and Madeline Hurlock as the vamp of the visiting team, things get off to a merry start. One particularly funny scene is when Billy takes a bath. He submerges and uses a rubber tube from the shower with which to get his oxygen. The showdown comes when Madeline decides to relinquish the bath to her husband, the visiting twirler. Billy has to turn over his secret device for making the ball curve before hubby decides to let him go. The game the next day is one of hilarity with Billy being batted all over the field, getting messed up in a tar barrell and fumbling flies that are sent directly into his glove.—T. W.

"Cold Turkey"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

A roasted turkey, with a live parrot as the stuffing, furnishes much fun and oportunity for clownishness in Mack Sennett's "Cold Turkey." Alice Day as a bride of eight weeks is forced to keep a regular boarding house of relatives and in-laws. Sunshine Hart, as her mother, provokes many laughs, especially so after she has consumed a few plates of soup into which the best part of a botle of grain alcohol has been accidentally emptied. As other in-laws have partaken of this contaminated liquid the party waxes raucous.

The parrot in his turkey disguise walks off the table, gets into a bed with Sunshine and Alice and incites considerable use of firearms until his identity is established. This comedy may be graded as A1 for Sennett by the average audience. Eddie Cline did the directing and Pat Harmon, Sam Lufkin and Will McCall are among those in the cast.—T. W.

"Watch Out"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Bobby Vernon comedy from the Christie studio, directed by William Watson, develops plenty of action of the slapstick sort and some of its incidents are very funny Bobby is a college boy whom fortune throws in with an antique collector and his charming daughter. Russians steal the "Czars' watch" and it insists on remaining with Bobby, who has taken a strong aversion to it because of the threatening Russians. When, however, he learns that the owner of the watch is the father of the girl, his troubles multiply. Jack Duffy plays the collector, Frances Lee the daughter, and Victor Rodman the leader of the gang. This subject begins fast and certainly steps along swiftly, with something doing every minute. The fun consists mostly of a series of chases that should please slapstick fans.—S. S.

"The Window Washers"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Cartoonist Paul Terry, under the title of "The Window Washers," has his cats using mice as sponges to wash Farmer Alfalfa's windows. The more intricate work of cleaning the farmer's spectacles this cartoonist leaves to Mr. Mouse. Amusing, but not quite up to the Terry standard.—T. W.

"Over the Plate"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

With Farmer Alfalfa behind the plate, Cartoonist Paul Terry gets his pen animals into a hot baseball game. The cartoon is replete with Terry's usual humor and should help along the general tempo of amusement in the average theatre.—T. W.

Seven Short Fox Films

Pleasing "Varieties" and Four Different Types of Excellent Comedies Usher in Enlarged Program for New Season

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Screening of the first seven subjects on the program for the new season bears out the promises made with the announcement of the enlargement of the short subject department of the Fox organization, and shows unmistakable evidence that William Fox is doing big things in a big way in the field of the little feature. There is not a weak sister in the lot, which consists of two-reel comedies, with a generous sprinkling of the Fox Varieties, which are interesting and instructive subjects of a scenic nature built along novel lines that increase their entertainment value. Every one is a humdinger and should be accorded a welcome reception by exhibitors and their audiences. They speak well for what is to follow and should make their appeal felt at the box-office.

There are four distinct types of comedies in this lot, including two new series. The thoroughly human and amusing short stories by the famous O. Henry furnish straight comedy, romance and drama, while Mabel Herbert Urner's popular newspaper articles dealing with the adventures of Helen and Warren are stories of newly married life in which the little things that crop up to cause strife between husband and wife are given a humorous slant. The familiar Imperial comedies furnish slapstick and rough and tumble humor, and the popular Van Bibber series based on stories by Richard Harding Davis supply laughs through the medium of exaggerated farce in the adventures of Van, who continually finds himself in a predicament where he has to make good and is aided by lucky accidents and a kind fate in doing so.

"Shoes"

A village wag persuades the none too clever hero to plant cockleburrs of the stickerless variety for cattle feed. When they develop stickers, the town laughs at him. He becomes consul in a mythical South American republic and is the innocent cause of his sweetheart's father bringing a cargo of shoes. The barefoot natives would not buy, and the hero sends to the village wag for cockleburrs, which he scatters around. As a result all of the shoes are sold and the wag, who appears with a shipload of cockleburrs, is treated roughly by the natives, who blame him for playing a trick on them. It is all thoroughly amusing and holds the interest. There are a lot of laughs. A particularly good scene shows the president dressed immaculately, even to frock coat and silk hat, but barefooted.

"A Business Engagement"

This is the first of the Helen and Warren with husband and wife having words because he has a business engagement and leaves her the night of her birthday. Warren's partner likes the ladies and leaves him with one of them. Helen, who comes to the hotel to bring his wallet, gets jealous and starts to flirt with an old friend. Warren flies in a rage and gets in a mix-up with the house detective and is about to lick his wife's companion. It develops that he is the man they were to meet and Warren finally lands the big contract. An amusing scene represents husband and wife "fading" into a barking dog and a snapping cat. There are a number of excellent touches and genuine laugh-provoking situations and the comedy is thoroughly worth while. Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley are excellent in the leading roles.

"Sweet Marie"

With Sid Smith as the hero, Eugene Cowles as his negro valet and Judy King in the title role, this Imperial Comedy proves to be filled with thoroughly amusing and fast moving slapstick, including a lot of good burlesque war stuff. There is a real story, much of it being told as a cut back after Sid finally locates his war-time sweetheart as a cafe dancer. The scenes with Sid and his dog in the trenches are a scream, especially where Sid throws a hand grenade and the dog retrieves it. The valet supplies a lot of laughs in a decidedly ingenious scene where he lands on top of a dirigible, ducks aeroplanes and finally gets caught on a rope dangling from one of them and lands in the German trenches. The finish of this comedy includes a rough and tumble comedy fight in the restaurant in which the hero conquers his rival more through luck than strength or courage. Slapstick patrons will be delighted with this one.

"The Wrestler"

A striking feature of the new Van Bibber series is the big scale on which they have been produced. The action in this one takes place in Russia, on a train in a typical village and in the home of a wealthy nobleman and the sets and number of persons employed make it look like a big feature. Van, portrayed by Earle Foxe, this time has a quarrel with a champion wrestler when he seeks to aid a lady in distress. She promptly falls in love with him and the wrestler demands a return engagement after a lurch of the train has enabled Van to throw him. The rival issues a challenge for Van to all comers and he makes good, aided by a rolling keg, a banana peel, etc., and finally even downs the champion when Lady Luck again gives him a helping hand. Great cleverness and ingenuity have been displayed in devising the

News, Comments of the Week and Guide to New Material

RIALTO'S LIBRARY OF RARE MANUSCRIPTS

ONE of the most complete working librarys in any theatre is found at the Rialto Theatre, New York, where Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld scores his pictures and the special Paramount attractions. The collection numbers about 25,000 pieces of music, and every year about a thousand new selections are added. Among these are several hundred manuscripts not to be found anywhere else in the country. These consist of compositions especially written for parts of film subjects for which nothing musically appropriate could be found. Dr. Riesenfeld began assembling the collection about nine years ago. Four men are required to look after the library and its work—helping the scores to find suitable selections, cataloging new music, mending torn pages, orchestrating the scores arranged, etc.

BOWES PRESENTATIONS ARE POPULAR

MAJOR EDWARD BOWES has early demonstrated his ability as a producer of presentations and prologues. His work during the past few weeks at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, has been of sufficient breadth and variety in its scope to stamp him as one of the leading exponents of this new art. Particular attention has been given to the lighting treatments which are as interpretative as the subject matter with which he has formed his features. With the capacity for work which Mr. Bowes possesses we are confident that some of the outstanding productions in the presentation field will be produced at the Capitol during the coming season.

BENNETT SUCCEEDS ZURO

DAVE BENNETT, well known stage director, has been appointed Director of Presentation for the Famous Players New York houses under the direction of Hugo Risenfeld. Mr. Bennett makes his debut as a presentation producer with a pretentious prologue to "The Wanderer," which has opened at the Criterion Theatre, New York.

VERSATILE ORCHESTRA DEMANDED

CERTAIN theatres are the scene of miniature revolutions. Only artistic ones affecting the orchestras. One musical director confided in us that he could see the handwriting on the wall for the old time orchestra of "straight musicians." The demands of today make it imperative that the musician do other things, such as sing, dance or be capable of putting over comedy bits. He may be right in his assumption that the standard form of orchestra will pass. We have had an opportunity of studying the audiences at various times when one of the "new type" was weaving its harmonious spell and the majority seem to favor the brighter, more scintillating features as a distinct change from the classics. This may be a metropolitan complex and the more balanced centers might turn their thumbs down.

PICCADILLY'S NEW CONDUCTOR

HERMAN HELLER, recognized as one of the leading musical directors in the West, has been signed by Warner Brothers to the post of Musical Director for the new Warners' Theatre, the rechristened Piccadilly, New York. Mr. Heller is already on the job and making elaborate preparations for the formal opening of the theatre under the new regime on August 29. The orchestra pit is being remodeled to accommodate the extra musicians who are being added to the present aggregation. Mr. Heller is a Californian and has enjoyed much distinction with his work as a conductor both in San Francisco and later at Grauman's Metropolitan in Los Angeles.

MUSICAL DIRECTORS MOVED

NATHANIAL FINSTON, musical director of the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, is guest conductor for the week at the new Uptown Theatre. He is replaced by Adolph Dumont, formerly of the Riviera. Jesse Crawford is also guest at the new house, Ray Malotte being featured at the console in the Chicago. H. Leopold Spitalny continues at the Tivoli, as musical director.

GREATER MOVIE SEASON REPORTS

IT is gratifying to receive so many reports from all over the country which tell in glowing and enthusiastic terms of the success which has been accorded various presentation features devised for this particular season. This Department is pleased with the cooperation given it by various producers in the actual production of many of its Greater Movie Season suggestions. The one which has been the most popular and which has seemed to "click" is the subject featuring the old picture house of about "thirty years ago." What we do want, especially during this season, is a fraternizing of the producers, and an interchange of ideas. We know each other now, perhaps that will help. We are never impoverishing our own supply of ideas when we pass the good ones along to some one else. Remember, he in turn may help us.

COLONY FEATURES EASTMAN'S SETS

IRVING EASTMAN, the well known scenic artist, has been recently appointed Art Director of the Colony Theatre, New York City. Mr. Eastman's settings have been highly artistic and indicate the influence of the "new school." Mr. Eastman paints for light, which is the proper basis for modern scenic treatments. There is a distinct characteristic which is most noticeable—his backgrounds reflect the mood of the action rather than dominate with positive forms. Mr. Eastman is an experienced artist and knows the demands of the presentation and prologue productions.

DENNY DESIGNS NOVEL STAGE

MILO B. DENNY, known as "Den," has designed and supervised the execution of the stage and its equipment in the remodeled Strand Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa. The house has no proscenium arch, but Denny developed a method whereby prologue production work could be adequately worked out. Tracks and rigging have been installed under his direction, providing all of the advantages of a modern stage in spite of the absence of an arch from the general scheme.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Detailed information relative to the production of the presentation suggested are printed herewith. Permission is given to any producer or exhibitor to use the Colby Harriman suggestions appearing in this section. Any other information desired to stage the presentation may be secured upon request.

"A STUDIO RIDDLE"
A Pantomime and Dance Novelty
A "Moving Picture World"
Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

THE "artist" subject seems to have a particular appeal to producers, and following the suggestion offered last week with "Poster Madness," comes a request for a presentation subject that is based on some phase of an artist's routine. The artist's studio with a model posing or with a statue becoming animated and making "wild love" with the artist, has been overdone. It is our belief that audiences are bored with subjects in which they can decipher the climax before the action reaches that point. Novelty is, after all, the factor to conjour with in all production work.

We are aware that many settings have been devised along the lines of this suggestion, but we believe that the action is new and if the producer carefully rehearses this number to the extent of correct pantomimic interpretation it will be comparatively easy for the theme to be "put over" without excessive titles.

The routine should be developed as follows: An artist is seated before an unfinished painting of a beautiful woman. He has been working about the face of the painting and as he raises his brush to tone and highlight the face, and to lend it the expression that will give it beauty and character, he pauses. The question is propounded—"What will the face express, what type will she represent." He looks at his palette, at the various colored pigments upon it, but that does not seem to give him the answer. He looks closely at the painting, studies it for a moment and turns away in despair. He sits on a stool, and looks at the painting. The question slowly appears on the drop, "What will her face express? What will her eyes and lips foretell?" The lights dim down and presently the artist disappears as the scene reveals an enlarged replica of the stand and easel. The palette is toned in vivid colors, the various pigments appear as vital things. Directly over the "blue" pigment, a character appears dressed in a costume of blue and represents "Wistfulness." She comes down the steps back of the palette, which are set to give the effect of the character walking down the edge of the plaque. She interprets her mood for the artist who has appeared again in the maze of his "working tools." This color does not express the type. The "green" pigment appears. This character represents "Jealousy." An exotic dance ensues, but this character does not suffice. "Black" appears, and in a dance characteristic of the tone—"Ominous, sullen, pensive"—she tries to woo the artist, but does not succeed. "Red" appears, the character of "Passion." A wild, free interpretative dance is rendered. The artist becomes more interested in the character as the dance reaches its climax. As he is about to clasp the dancer in his arm, the "white" pigment appears. She represents "Love and His Ideal." She slowly approaches him as the "Red" character strives madly to hold him. He casts this dancer aside and with outstretched arms rushes towards the character in "white." As he is about to take her in his arms, the lights dim, and we see the artist standing before the easel, in the scene as it appeared at the opening. He takes up his palette, and in the painting appears the face of the last character.

The routine of this number is easy to formulate. The basis or story of the pantomime can be planted with a title or can be worked out in a song.

The general plan of the setting is shown in the sketch herewith, Figure 1. The detailed description of the setting follows.

Ground Plan—Fig. 2

A scrim is hung down in one. In front of this at right should be an artist's table with various articles of the "studio" upon it which are to be duplicated in the setting, both in shape and color. An easel with a large canvas is placed at right with the painting on an angle and visible to the audience. A stool is beside the work stand. When the lights come up back of the scrim, the principal set appears. A large paint box is right of center, occupying the foreground. This can be used as a performing spot for the dancers. Two set pieces painted and cut to resemble paint-tubes are placed left. A brush jar is up left, and the tips of paint brushes are seen. A large palette is up right. This is the principal set piece and it should be set to occupy the most conspicuous position. Back of the palette are steps to follow the edge of the plaque. The steps are reached by a small platform secluded back of another brush jar up right, which also has the tips of brushes visible. The lower part of the easel and the painting is seen up left. A red plush drape is hung to give the effect that the top is draped on the painting. A light gray fabric backing should be used.

Scenic Treatment

It will be necessary for the artist to paint the various objects on the artist's stand and table to correspond with the enlarged pieces.

BIG FIRST RUN PRESENTATIONS

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Sun Up" (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Overture: The Capitol Grand Orchestra with David Mendoza, conducting, render "Poet and Peasant," by Von Suppe.

Dorothy Pilzer

This excellent contralto gave an effective rendition of "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Delilah" (Saint-Saens). The setting was very effective. Two plush curtains were drawn in heavy folds from center to right and left center, the folds caught with heavy red cords, and pendent tassels which were highlighted red from the sides, the cords in marked contrast with the dark tone of the drapes. Up left center was a large billowy couch covered with shimmering mettaline material. Two large circular pillows were used to dress at the sides and end. The couch was highlighted a light blue from right. A one step platform was placed up stage across the opening, bearing the lower part of two canopy poles. These were painted black. A sky drop was used to back. The lighting treatment was very effective on this drop. The effect secured was a dull gray-blue which was a correct night-sky effect. Several light blue stars studded the sky. The singer dressed in the characteristic costume of the character in the opera was highlighted light blue and amber from the sides.

"Kammenoi Ostrow"

This musical number was given a special setting, and was rendered by a male ensemble of twenty-five with the accompaniment of the orchestra and organ. Dr. Melchiorre Mauro-Cottone, chief organist, made the musical arrangement. The setting represented the wooded grounds adjoining a large church edifice. A cut wood drop with birch trees of sapling growths was hung in two. At left was a set piece, a flat placed on an angle and cut to resemble the buttresses of the building. Facing front was the adjoining flat, with a small doorway at the bottom, and the bottom part of a large stained glass window directly over it. Three set trees, green foliage tops and sapling trunks, were placed at extreme right, at center beside the church and down extreme left. A sky drop with a towered Russian skyline was silhouetted against it, and used as the backing. The characters were dressed in a variety of peasant costumes. The lighting treatment was designed to tone the set for "evening." Green foots and green borders with a blue border mixture at back. Magenta was thrown in from left and light blue from right to highlight the characters. Green toned the tops of the set trees. The sky drop was flushed a deep rose, the sky line in blue. When a priest entered through the door of the church at left, amber highlighted the backing. The characters entered the church through the door and when the exit was completed, the lights were brought up back of the stained glass windows, the reds and blues predominating. The lights in the set were dimmed for the finale.

"In Sunny Italy"

This feature was preceded by a Post Nature Scenic entitled "Italy," which provided the atmosphere needed for this number. The setting was similar to that used in a recent "gang" feature, and was the least effective of the group presented. It consists of a platform placed across stage above two. An opening of about eight feet marked with two large posts which support "winged lions," and painted balustrades mask and carry off. Two set trees with a profusion of orange colored fruit are placed extreme right and left in front of the balustrades. Some tables covered with red checkered clothes are placed on the platform center. Chairs placed around the tables. The drop is painted to represent an Italian landscape, with fleecy clouds and deep blue sky. The characters are dressed in gay colored Italian costumes, one of the dancers enters in a flower bedecked cart drawn by a Shetland pony. The lighting treatment simply floods the set for the general action. Green highlights the set trees, amber and canary foots and borders are brought up, and orange, amber and canary from the sides. The action features William Robyn, Douglas Stanbury, Mlle. Gambarelli and the Male Ensemble and Ballet Corps. A four number program was offered: (a) "Serenade," by Tosti. (b) Duet "Song of Love." (c) "The Girl from Sorrento." (d) "La Danza," by Rossini.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Lucky Horseshoe" (Fox)

Ben Bernie and His Orchestra

Bernie has been successfully entrenched at this theatre and his programs continue to be popular. This week he presents a "Wild West Program," the various members of his orchestra dressed in the costume of the proverbial "cow-boy," and Bernie, himself, is regaled in the black frock coat and sombrero of the well known gambler types of the ranch towns. Western dialect of the old melodrama days is constantly in evidence during the announcements.

The program opens with the orchestra playing "Yes, Sir, She's My Baby." This is followed by a repeat number (request) of last week's hit—"The Speech" a travesty on a banquet. The green foots are brought up, the curtains open and the set revealed. A saloon of the old western days is depicted. The set consists of a painted drop hung back and two returns also painted. The scenic treatment depicts a log and slab interior. Door up center, window right center and black plush to back. A small mahogany bar is at left in front of return, and an upright piano at right. A crude table and plain chairs up right. Various pictures and posters are placed about the walls of the room. A quartette dressed in cowboy costumes open the stage program, this is followed by a very clever dancer, dressed in a costume to suggest a wild-cat. Miss Drena Beach, the dancer, does some sensational bits in her routine, during which she emulates the slinking, clawing characteristics of the wild cat. Kendell Capps, another clever dancer, does his routine in a manner to secure loud applause. Jack Miller, roper, is introduced, and finally, Broncho Charlie Miller, whipcracker and roper, comes on. He is programmed as one of the last of "Buffalo Bill's" scouts. Bernie closes his program with orchestral selection. Amber, canary and green are used to tone the stage setting.

The Prologue

We will publish next week a photograph of the setting used in the prologue staged by Edward L. Hyman.

This prologue, which opened "in one" and gradually worked to a full stage, was preceded by an art-title anouncement introducing the purpose of the prologue and the characters. A basso, made up as W. C. Fields in the photoplay, came on in front of the purple spangled draw-curtains of the production stage for some business built around the character. In a moment the premiere danseuse, as "Sally," made her appearance. A special number was written for the duo, both music and lyrics, which embodied many of the sayings of McGargle in the picture, among them "the old army game."

As the pair finished their number, the purple draw-curtains opened, disclosing the outside of a huge circus tent. There was a group of performers in various poses and costumes, listening to a woman-whistler, made up as a boy, whistling "Invitation." Then a hobo, who had been lounging around the tent, picked up a football balloon and played two numbers on it, "When You and I Were Young" and "My Best Girl." Then the clown of the group, following the example set by the hobo, picked up a saw and played "Old Pal" on it. This was followed by the popular xylophonist of the orchestra, who dressed as the ringmaster, played "Ruffenready," while Sally danced and the rest of the performers swayed to the rhythm of the music.

Then the ensemble on the stage and in the orchestra took up the final, "The Gallop" from "Faust," after which the performers were seen packing their belongings in preparation to move. As the production stage was cleared, lights dimmed down on the circus tent, which was rigged on a traveler, slowly opened for the final scene which was that of the circus leaving the town.

This final scene was the climax of this pretentious and elaborately staged prologue. The scene depicted circus band wagons and animals, one behind the other, with lights on the sides, moving slowly along and disappearing in the distance. The calliope was heard playing as the circus left, gradually growing fainter and fainter as the curtains closed on the prologue and the feature picture, "Sally of the Sawdust," was flashed upon the screen.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Where Was I?" (Universal-Jewel)

Overture

The Colony Melody Masters played an effective selection—"Orientale," which was given a special arrangement. E. Charles Egget, conducted. Dr. Edward Kilenyi scored the picture. John Priest, at the console.

Roger Dixon

This soloist gave a very good rendition of "Pale Hands," by Finden. The setting was of the cameo type and an effective background for this song. The blue foots were brought up, the curtains drawn revealing a dull blue toned drop hung in one with a circular opening cut in the center. A platform was placed back of the opening upon which the singer appeared. The top of a palm tree trunk with a few hanging fronds appeared at the upper right section of the opening, and at left the edge of a fabric hung to suggest an Arabian tent. A tab drop painted to suggest a desert landscape was hung to back. A long steel blue star punctuated the sky at center. The back drop was toned rose at the base with a blend upwards to purple. Amber from right in a bridge position with light blue from left highlighted the singer, dressed in white costume of Arabian pattern and style.

Banjoland

The Colony Comedy Carnival introduced a unique group of seven banjoists. The set opened with a black out. The lights in foots were slowly brought up revealing a large banjo cut out placed against a deep blue sateen backing, bearing a wide yellow border. The body of the banjo was placed right center, the arm extending towards center. At left was a lace design panel used as a window which was draped on either side with red curtains and tied with cords and tassels. A scrim face masks the opening of the body of the banjo. The musicians are discovered in the circular opening. The lamps which outline the banjo are brought up, the scrim in the opening is opened, the men entering to down stage. The lights back of the window panel are toned from red to blue and green. The musicians wear tuxedos, one of the number does two dance routines, but the program consists of various popular selections on the banjos. Amber flood with pink tone at intervals highlights the artists. Red foots and first borders. Canary spot on dancer.

Dolores Farris

Miss Farris is always a welcome artist, and on her second week at the Colony she introduced some "Humorous Steps." The setting is similar to that of last week, the gold fabrics hung in two with vari-colored lights shot onto the surface from the sides. The returns are toned red.

Stratford Comedy Presentation

A Presentation

The smaller objects can be made out of heavy paper if desired. The various set pieces can be flats and painted to give the effect of constructed pieces.

The artist's palette is the most important set piece. The various pigments can be given a metallic treatment so as to identify them with the lighting treatment when the various characters appear. The steps can be attached to the back of the plaque and the entire set piece trucked. The scrim can be taken away during the action.

Lighting Treatment

The foreground in front of the scrim should be subdued, the foots and first border given a mixture of reds and blues to secure a purple, and the entire scheme dimmed down about half. The artist's bloc at right can be highlighted with amber from right, and amber from the foot spot on the face of the artist, with a light amber spot from the bridge over the easel, trained to spot the face of the painting. When the lights are brough up back of the scrim, the lights on the artist and in that area should be dimmed and out. The lights on the set pieces should come from the sides, with orange amber and green-blues predominating. The red plush drape can be toned with red from the sides, and the second border in a half mixture of reds and blues. The backing should be toned canary and green from the sizes to make a vivid contrast with the foreground. Bridge spots in colors similar to the pigments on the palette should be placed to highlight the various spots identified by the pigments and which are used as the links to the characters who appear in the action costumed in corresponding colors. The performing area should be toned with spots from the sides of the dancers, using the following tones for the varius characters. For the "Blue" character use green-blue medium. For the "Green" character use light and dark green. For "Black" character use the deep blue medium. For "Red" character use red and magenta mediums. For "White" character use canary and pink mediums. When the action returns to the original scene the spot, on painting, from bridge should be white.

Costumes

The artist should wear the customary smock. An artist's tam can also be worn. It is suggested that the smock be of light blue, the tam and trousers black.

The various dancers can wear costumes used in aesthetic dances, the materials colored to correspond with the characters they represent. Each girl can enter carrying a veil of light color, which can be of metaline cloth, covering her head and thrown off when the action commences.

New York's "First Nighters" Pay Homage to Charlie Chaplin and "The Gold Rush"

NEW YORK'S theatre world, as well as hundreds of persons representing the arts, sciences and industries, paid homage to Charlie Chaplin and his dramatic comedy, "The Gold Rush," at a special midnight premiere, Saturday night, August 15, at the Mark Strand Theatre.

Great plays and great stars and great pictures have had high honors paid to them by capacity audiences at sensational first night showings. But Broadway has never seen anything like the special showing for the New York premiere—the special Mark Strand Theatre presentation.

On one of the hottest of August nights, toward twelve o'clock, more than 3,000 persons—men and women in formal evening dress—struggled through a jammed lobby to seats or "standing room." Hundreds stood for almost three hours. Thousands of onlookers and those who had been unable to purchase tickets (all of which had been reserved for this special performance) crowded around Broadway and Forty-seventh Street, waiting, waiting for a glimpse of Chaplin.

Here was a vast aray of humanity, the most important, as the theatre world goes, who had gathered to watch Charlie Chaplin in ten reels of comedy, or just to get a glimpse of the man himself as he entered or left the Strand.

Everybody who is anybody was there. Leaders of the world of finance and business; society folk of prominence; actors and actresses of world fame; producers, exhibitors, managers, first-nighters, dramatic critics and motion picture reviewers; special writers, and an overflowing representation of the general public—all came and met and stayed till the small hours of Sunday morning to welcome and to cheer Chaplin, foremost screen comedy actor, director, producer.

Mr. Chaplin Arrives

Chaplin appeared at the Strand at five minutes before twelve. He motored directly from the Ritz-Carlton, accompanied by his physician, Dr. James MacKenzie, of New York, and A. C. Blumenthal, of Los Angeles. He entered the theatre from the front, through the hundreds in the jammed lobby, those who had bought standing room, and into the crowded aisles. At the entrance of the lobby Mr. Chaplin and his party were met by Edward Manson, of the star's organization, and Joseph Plunkett, Managing Director of the Strand.

Broadway, between Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth streets; Forty-seventh street as far west as the stage door of the Mark Strand, and the theater front and lobby was jammed with humanity for the entire period between 11 p. m. and 12:30 a. m., and fifty uniformed policemen were required to cope with the milling throngs.

Inside the large theatre, Managing Director Plunkett was devoting all of his time to Mr. Chaplin, who had been ill. Unusual attention was bestowed upon the star, and he afterwards expresed himself as peculiarly struck by the kindness shown him on all sides.

James J. McCormack, House Manager of the Mark Strand, and his assistants, Messrs. Steinart, McCumber and Epstein, were kept busy with the great rush. The ushers worked with quietness and precision, and covered themselves with glory. The big crowd was seated in record time, and without the slightest confusion.

CHARLES SPENCER CHAPLIN

Moe Mark, President of the Strand Theatre Company, with several of his associates, were in the lobby, with Mr. Plunkett, to greet Mr. Chaplin and the members of the latter's party.

Chaplin's procession down the aisle to his seat in the twelfth row of the orchestra was punctuated by many stops. Loud applause followed him as he edged nervously past scores who shouted greetings, as he paused for hasty handshakes and hastier introductions. From all quarters of the big theatre came shouts of greeting, came thunderous applause as the little comedian slipped into his seat. And, a moment later came louder shouts, greater applause as this same diminutive figure, pursued by a huge black bear, trudged dizzily on the edge of a snow-covered precipice as "The Gold Rush" slid into action.

Overture and Prologue

It was just one minute after midnight when Carl Edouarde, leader of the Mark Strand orchestra, raised his baton for the first note that started the projection. First, the overture (Dvorak's "Carneval") and Mr. Plunkett's special prologue to, "The Monte Carlo Dance Hall." Then the picture.

At five minutes after two the showing was at an end. There were many and frequent bursts of loud, prolonged and spontaneous applause. As the last bit of the picture flickered out on the screen, there came cries of "Chaplin! Chaplin!" "Charlie! Charlie!" "Speech! Speech!"

And from his seat rose the Prince of Comedy. Down the aisle he walked, through the orchestra pit and up onto the stage. He stood, nervously, clasping his hands, running them through his graying hair, stepping gingerly first to one side, then to another, waiting for the welcome of applause and outcries to die down. Then Chaplin stepped forward and held up his hands.

"I'm not accustomed to making speeches," he said. "I am much more capable at putting my story on the screen; and much prefer it that way. However, I do want to tell you I am made tremendously happy at the reception you have given to my picture, and to myself. I thank you on behalf of all those others who worked side by side with me for so many months—my associates to whom much of the success of 'The Gold Rush' is due."

After the little speech, Mr. Plunkett invited Mr. Chaplin and a number of friends to a reception to the star that had been arranged to take place in the Strand Theatre studio. There were some three hundred who attended this, and it was here that Mr. Chaplin was presented with the gold "mother record" of the phonograph reproduction of his own composition, and in which he plays the violin—"With You, Dear, in Bombay." This presentation was made by a representative of the phonograph company.

Later Mr. Chaplin mingled with the guests, chatted and joked for half an hour, and then at the direction of Dr. MacKenzie left for his apartments at the Ritz, Dr. MacKenzie telling him he had had excitement enough for the day.

"The Gold Rush" is reviewed by Charles S. Sewell on page 917 of this issue of Moving Picture World.

What the Reviewers Said

The motion picture reviewers of the New York newspapers were a unit in praising "The Gold Rush." In part, they wrote:

"If you think that Mr. Chaplin has run out of humorous ideas you'll change your mind when you see 'The Gold Rush,'" said Harriette Underhill in the Herald-Tribune. "Praising one of Mr. Chaplin's pictures is like saying that Shakespeare was a good writer."

"'The Gold Rush' collars you, plays quickly upon your emotions and leaves you in that mood where you can't laugh without a sob tearing through, or sob without a laugh bubbling up from the depths," said Mildred Spain in the New York Daily News. "It is the funniest and saddest of all comedies."

"'The Gold Rush' is a box-office mint," wrote Dorothy Herzog in the Daily Mirror. "This comedy sent an audience of blase movie fans into gales of laughter, fairly rocking the theatre."

"You can see 'The Gold Rush' more than once and still find little touches that escape you. It will undoubtedly set all America laughing, though tears will often be near the laughter," said Aileen St. John-Brenon in the Morning Telegraph.

"'The Gold Rush' is technically perfect," said Warren Nolan in the Evening Telegram, "with its blending of comedy and sadness, its caricature and its good direction. And, oh, how you will clap your hands when he does the 'Oceana Roll.'"

"Indescribably Clever"

"'The Gold Rush' is a typical Chaplin film—indescribably clever, inimitably subtle and uproariously funny," said Regina Cannon in the Evening Graphic.

"In the years to come, when the name of Charles Chaplin is only a memory, 'The Gold Rush' will be spoken of as an example of the comedian's art," said Louella O. Parsons, in the New York American.

"Any audience will be enthusiastic over 'The Gold Rush,'" said the reviewer for the Evening

ost. "Mr. Chaplin has never been funnier, nor is he ever been more pathetic."

"Charlie Chaplin's new film comedy, 'The old Rush,' is entertainment good enough for ybody in the world," says Quinn Martin in e New York World.

"'The Gold Rush' is a comedy with streaks poetry, pathos, tenderness, linked with usqueness and boisterousness. It is the outanding gem of all Chaplin's pictures, as it has ore thought and originality than even such asterpieces as 'The Kid' and 'Shoulder rms,'" said Mordaunt Hall in the New York imes.

"'The Gold Rush' is a great comedy, and by owing this play, the Strand, I should say, ill be having a gold rush, too,'" rhymed Rose elswick in the Evening Journal.

"With a little trimming 'The Gold Rush' ould be one of the greatest comedies ever reened. As it is it contains some of the best ork that Charlie Chaplin has ever done—and at means, of course, the best work of any reen comedian," said George Gerhard in the vening World.

Cecil B. De Mille Waited Twenty Years To Obtain Rights to "Road to Yesterday"

THAT Cecil B. De Mille waited twenty years for the opportunity to produce "The Road to Yesterday," his first personally directed picture through Producers Distributing Corporation, was disclosed this week in an interview in which De Mille reviewed his theatrical career and said:

"Just twenty years ago when the first rays of success were reflected upon my efforts in the theatrical field, and I became associated with Jesse Lasky, 'The Road to Yesterday' was presented by the Shuberts at the old Herald Square Theatre in New York City where it remained for an extended engagement; and then, on tour, played continuously for five years.

"I attended the performance the opening night and was so impressed with the play that I determined to secure it, if possible, at a later date and produce it on my own account. In fact I was so confident of its entertainment value that I confided to Mr. Lasky a plan to secure it at once, if by any chance it failed at the Herald Square Theatre, and start it immediately on tour.

"But my private opinion was shared by the New York public and the newspaper critics who heaped laudatory praise on the piece and it scored such a big hit that the rights to produce it became prohibitive in price. Then it became involved in litigation that held it in legal bonds until now, twenty years later, I have been enabled, at last, to secure it for production on the screen."

In confirmation of his long and unfailing interest in this fanciful play, Mr. De Mille has, among his most important memos, a program of the original presentation at the Herald Square Theatre on December 31, 1906, and a collection of the newspaper criticisms that, in bearing out his own estimate of the play, state in part:

"'The Road to Yesterday' has unusual humor and charm, good comedy and apt satire. It is amusement of a kind unusually fine and intelligent."—The Sun, New York, December, 1906.

"A fresh, charming work of fantasy. Scores a positive hit. Whether the scenes pass in waking moments or in dreams they never miss the mark."—The World, December, 1906.

"It is found to possess the merit of extreme ingenuity, the charm of fancy and the agreeable quality of romantic atmosphere. It is certain to have a successful career."—The Tribune, December 1906.

"In all respects, story and cast, 'The Road to Yesterday' is unquestionably the stuff. —The Evening Sun, December 1906.

CECIL B. DeMILLE

Producer of colossal spectacles, will work artistically on "The Road to Yesterday," a Producers Distributing Corporation release

In expressing his pleasure in finally securing the rights to "The Road to Yesterday," Mr. De Mille said:

"Marion Dix, now known in motion picture circles as Beulah Marie Dix, wrote the play in association with Ann Greenleaf Sutherland and by good fortune, Miss Dix who is now with my organization was available to assist Jeanie Macpherson in making the screen adaptation. So, while I waited twenty years for the story, I have been favored by the services of the author to preserve the remarkable spirit of the play and in addition contribute new ideas to her original work in making the screen translation.

"I also seem to be favored by Fate in securing the rights to this long sought vehicle, just at the time I am venturing forth as an independent producer. Also by a lucky chance, I have been able to fill the parts I have so long admired, with dramatic artists that are ideally suited for the roles. And it is with a feeling of unexampled confidence and satisfaction that I have undertaken the production of 'The Road to Yesterday' as my first personally directed production for release through Producers Distributing Corporation."

The screen presentation of "The Road to Yesterday" will feature Joseph Schildkraut with Jetta Goudal, Vera Reynolds, William Boyd and Julia Faye, while the supporting cast includes Casson Ferguson, Trixie Friganza, Clarence Burton, Josephine Norman and Charles West.

The story is a colorful blending of fantasy and realism in which the characters are first seen in modern settings and then in medieval surroundings while the action ranges from the dramatic to the romantic and back again.

De Mille has now reached the medieval scenes in "The Road to Yesterday" and with his cast transformed from modern humans to characters of the early 17 century, he is busy shooting scenes in and about an ancient tavern.

In the scenes now being filmed, Miss Friganza has changed from a dignified dowager of 1925 to an over-buxom, termagant inn-keeper of the year 1625.

Schildkraut is playing a lord of the period bedecked in the splendor of bright colored silks and satins, while Boyd has been transformed from a minister to a broad-shouldered, happy-go-lucky, swashbuckling musketeer.

These scenes as arranged in the script by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix, will present a marked and colorful contrast to the modern sequences that precede and succeed them in the rapid action of the story.

"Lost World" Facts

With the closing of a deal whereby "The Lost World" will be played over the entire Famous Players Circuit, and another contract with Jensen and Von Herberg for Portland, Seattle and Tacoma, First National announces that by the end of September this super-special will have been played in every key city of 20,000 and over.

"False Pride" to be Second Bernarr Macfadden Picture

WITH the second Bernaar Macfadden True Story picture in production in New York City, the Macfadden Publications and Astor Distributing Corporation have launched a new and intensive exploitation campaign to bring True Story films directly to the attention of the readers of the Macfadden magazines.

The second Macfadden picture is "False Pride." It stars Owen Moore with Faire Binney, the charming stage and screen star, playing opposite him. In support of Moore and Miss Binney are Ruth Stonehouse, an established box-office name"; Bradley Barker, long a popular stage and film player, and Jane Jennings, who has "mothered" almost every film star in the industry.

Owing to the unexpected departure of Burton King for California, "False Pride" is being directed by Hugh Dierker, with Bernard McEveety as assistant and Charles Davis, John Brown and Fred Chaston on the cameras. King was under contract to go to California to produce a picture with Betty Compson when she was ready for work. It was thought he would have time to complete the Macfadden picture before leaving, but the producers of the Compson picture wired for him the day he was to have begun work for Macfadden.

As part of the intensive campaign to exploit the Macfadden True Story Films, "False Pride" will be published as a serial in four issues of "True Romances," one of the most widely circulated of the Macfadden publications. Special reduced subscription rates for the complete serial are made to readers.

In addition, placards are being sent to every newsstand in in the country where Macfadden publications are sold, calling attention to the first Macfadden True Story film, "The Wrongdoers," which stars Lionel Barrymore and has an excellent cast, including Anne Cornwall, Henry Hull, Henry Sedley, and Tom Brown, the boy actor from the New York stage success, "Is Zat So."

Full page advertising of the Macfadden pictures is being carried in the following Macfadden magazines: "True Detective," "Dream World," "Sportlife," "Dance Lovers," "Modern Marriage Problems," "True Romances," and a full-page advertisement every week in Movie Weekly.

The New York Graphic, the Macfadden tabloid newspaper which has a circulation of more than 200,000 will, commencing next Sunday, print "The Wrongdoers" in daily serial form, illustrated with "still" photographs from the production.

Sennett Studios Active in Making New Comedies for Pathe

MACK SENNETT'S comedy companies are very active in the production of new Pathe comedies according to latest news from the Coast. Directors Harry Edwards, Alfred Goulding, Del Lord, Lloyd Bacon, and Eddie Cline are guiding the Sennett comedians through their paces.

Alfred Goulding, who recently joined Mack Sennett after making a number of full length features, is directing dainty Alice Day in a department store comedy. Lonnie Dorsa is assisting Goulding and the cast numbers Danny O'Shea, Eugenia Gilbert, and Barney Hellum.

Harry Edwards is finishing a new crook story with the popular Harry Langdon in the stellar role. Peggy Montgomery and Vernon Dent are in the supporting cast.

Del Lord is using fifty-seven lions in his current thriller, in which Billy Bevan and Madeline Hurlock play the leading roles. Gus Meins is assisting Del Lord, and Kewpie Morgan, Andy Clyde and Tiny Ward are in the cast.

Lloyd Bacon is in the midst of a new comedy in which Ralph Graves plays a paperhanger masquerading as a physician. Thelma Parr, Vernon Dent, and Irving Bacon essay important parts.

Having finished "Smith's Landlord," a new Sennett comedy, directed by Eddie Cline, Raymond McKee has been loaned by Mack Sennett to Warner Brothers for a leading role with Irene Rich in "Compromise." McKee is under contract with Sennett and has been appearing in some new domestic comedies with Ruth Hiatt, Mary Ann Jackson, and Cap, the canine. The player will resume his comedy work immediately upon the completion of the Warner feature.

Nears Completion

Johnny Hines' latest picture, "The Live Wire," which marks the initial starring production of C. C. Burr's comedian for First National release, is now in the final editing and titling stage, with every indication that it will be completed by August 15. George Amy, film editor of the Johnny Hines productions, has been working at top speed with the star in order to have the production ready for release at the earliest possible date.

"Thirty Years Ago"

"Thirty Years Ago," the single reel novelty distributed by Short Films Syndicate showing the beginnings of the motion picture, has been booked by the Stanley Company in all their houses and by Marcus Loew for his New York Circuit.

Greta Nissen and Alolphe Menjou in a scene in William de Mille's current Paramount release, "Lost—a Wife."

Fox August Films Headed By "Lightnin'" and Mix

THE "dog days" opening of the photoplay season should be aroused smartly from its mid-summer lassitude by "Lightnin'," which heads the William Fox August releases. The universal stage success of John Golden should receive spontaneous welcome from the motion picture public at a preview at the Strand Theatre the week of July 19. The Broadway opening heralds a great popularity for the Winchell Smith and Frank Bacon play.

"Lightnin'" heads the seven attractions released for the month by the Fox Company, ushering in one of the most promising photoplays in years.

The first Tom Mix picture since his tour of the United States and England, "The Lucky Horseshoe," is scheduled for release on August 30. Piquant Ann Pennington, she of the tingling toes, fresh from the Follies, makes her screen debut as a Fox player. Billy Dove, J. Farrell MacDonald, Malcolm Waite and Tony, the Wonder Horse, are in the cast.

Supplementing these leading attractions on the August release program is another of the Van Bibber Series, from the stories of Richart Harding Davis, "The Big Game Hunter," scheduled for August 16. Earle Foxe plays the leads in these delightful comedies. Florence Gilbert is his leading lady.

In "West Wind," the Fox Varieties start off their series of adventures into romance and science around the world. It was given a preview on Broadway and created an instant demand from other houses before the release date on August 23.

"A Business Engagement," another of the William Fox Married Life Series, depicting the marital difficulties of Helen and Warren, the newlyweds, adds to the spice of an exceptional schedule of releases. It makes its appearance on August 30 with Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley in the leading roles.

"The Other Woman's Story"

Under the supervision of B. P. Schulberg, Gasnier completed this week the selection of players who will be featured in his next Preferred Picture, "The Other Woman's Story." Robert Frazer and Alice Calhoun will play the leads in this screen transcription of the book by Peggy Gaddis who took from life this dramatic story—the co-respondent's side of a famous divorce case. The "other woman" will be portrayed by Helen Lee Worthing who scored a distinct hit in "The Swan." Others in the supporting cast will be David Torrence, Mahlon Hamilton and Gertrude Short.

CLARENCE BROWN

This noted director is handling the megaphone for Rudolph Valentino in the latter's first United Artists picture, "The Lone Eagle."

Big Publicity Stunt For Christie's "Seven Days"

PUTTING Al Christie's newest feature comedy, "Seven Days," before the public in an unusual way will be done the end of this month by a cross-country automobile run, which will attempt to make the trip from Hollywood to New York in seven days.

The "Seven Days" preview car will be a Studebaker standard coach piloted all the way by one driver and accompanied by Mike Newman, well known showman, who is being retained by the Christie Film Company as exploitation director of this nation-wide tour which will include, on the return journey to the Pacific Coast, many important cities which are not on the seven-day eastward run.

This year, which is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the use of the automobile as a means of conveyance, will see the first use of a car made in this way to broadcast from one end of the continent to the other prints of the motion picture "Seven Days" and preview them for the leading exhibitors in the various points which the car will make in its tour.

Souvenirs of the "Seven Days" run will be given to the public in each of the points where the car will stop. And after the run has been made, the car itself will attract widespread attention as it will carry the "Seven Days" title to millions of people on its return to Hollywood.

Barbara La Marr as "Fleur," in "The White Monkey," a Sawyer-Lubin production directed by Phil Rosen, from the novel by John Galsworthy. Adapted by Arthur Hoerl. Supervised by Arthur H. Sawyer. A First National picture.

"Strongheart" with Eastabrook

In order that there may be no misunderstanding regarding the arrangements for the appearance of "Strongheart," the noted canine star in a series of Howard Estabrook productions for Associated Exhibitors, Mr. Estabrook explains that he has obtained the loan of "Strongheart" from Miss Jane Murfin, sole owner and manager of the dog, in exactly the same way as he would secure the loan of a human star.

"'Strongheart' will have the best stories, productions and casts obtainable, and everything will be done to make his new series surpass anything he has done, both artistically and commercially," says Mr. Estabrook.

DENNISON CLIFT

Has joined Cecil B. De Mille's staff to produce for next year's program, for Producers Distributing Corporation release.

Butter and Egg Man

Sam Sax to Bring Him to the Screen in Feature Comedy

Negotiations were completed this week whereby Sam Sax has secured the screen rights to "The Butter and Egg Man," which will be produced as a Gotham Production in feature-comedy length along the lines contemplated by the same company for "McFadden's Row of Flats."

The screen version will be based on the magazine story in a current issue by Peggy Gaddis, who is also author of "The Part Time Wife," one of this season's Gotham releases.

In announcing this title for future production Mr. Sax states: "In 'The Butter and Egg Man' I feel that I have a film title that is good box-office. It is one of the current expressions that is always 'good for a laugh.' With this end in view I am now negotiating with one of the most popular and clever stage and screen comedians in the business."

"The Butter and Egg Man" will in all probability be produced in the East.

McIntosh "At Home"

Distinguished Actor to Greet His Friends at Pathe Offices

Burr McIntosh, the famous veteran of the stage and screen, and one of the most noted radio speakers of the country, will be "at home" to his countless radio and film fans at the Pathe Building, 35 West 45th Street, New York City, on Friday, August 21st from four to seven. On this date Mr. McIntosh will celebrate his sixty-third birthday, marking, as he phrases it, the "Three-Quarter Post" in life's race.

The "at home" also calls attention to three other important events in McIntosh's life. He has just returned to his radio audiences through Station WHN; he has just signed to appear in a leading role throughout the new Pathe serial, "The Green Archer," and on August 31st the veteran publicist will celebrate the 40th anniversary of his first appearance on the stage."

Neilan Signs With Flinn For Producers Dist. Corp.

UNDER the terms of a new contract signed in Los Angeles this week by Marshall Neilan and John C. Flinn, Producers Distributing Corporation will release four Marshall Neilan productions during the current fiscal year, instead of two pictures as originally planned.

This new contract makes Neilan an exclusive Pro-Dis-Co contributor and adds materially to the strength of the great program which John Flinn has arranged since the first of the year. It also brings another big studio; the Marshall Neilan Studio at Glendale, Calif., into the affiliation which already included the De Mille, Christie and Hollywood studios.

Neilan's record is one of conspicuous brilliancy and amazing versatility. In the long list of productions credited to his directorial genius there are no two stories alike. Each picture is different in theme, action and dramatic treatment yet they have all been gratifying successes and many of them record breakers.

Brilliant Versatile Record

A compilation of Neilan's work is like a summary of the industry's finest achievements. It recalls such splendid pictures as "Madame Butterfly," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "M'liss," "The Little Princess," "Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley" and "Stella Maris," starring Mary Pickford; "Hit-the-Trail Holiday" and "Hearts of the Wild." George M. Cohan starred in the former and Elsie Ferguson in the latter.

He then directed Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs"; Blanche Sweet in "The Unpardonable Sin' 'and Anita Stewart in "In Old Kentucky." Each of these pictures have created records.

He also directed "The River's End," "Don't Ever Marry," "Go and Get It," "Dinty," "Bob Hampton of Placer," "Penrod," "Fools First," "The Lotus Eater," "The Stranger's Banquet," "The Eternal Three," "The Rendezvous," "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "The Sporting Venus." "Mike" and "The Sky Rocket," his latest, are yet to be released.

Selecting Stories

Neilan's first P. D. C. picture is yet to be determined though he has several stories in his possession. These include "Ladies of Leisure," "The Unwelcome Guest," "Ups and Downs," "The House with a Bad Name," by Perley Poore Sheehan; "Faith," by Olga Shell; Adela Rogers St. John's "The Consuming Fires," and "The Man With a Shady Past," by Arthur Somers Roche. Many of these stories have been published either in magazine or book form.

Changes in Sales Force

Appointments of new branch exchange managers for Warner Bros. were announced this week by Sam E. Morris, general manager in charge of distribution, as follows: H. P. Decker, Cleveland; H. L. Hollander, Buffalo; Charles Kranz, Pittsburgh; R. T. Smith, Milwaukee; W. K. Beckwith, Portland, Ore.

NO PARKING AROUND THESE CURVES

Trixie Friganza puts up a "no parking" sign in two languages for the benefit of the male contingent while she entertains the members of the younger set of the De Mille stock company during the filming of Cecil B. De Mille's big production, "The Road to Yesterday." From left to right the players are: Rita Carita, Mabel Coleman, Trixie Friganza, Doris Rink, Alice Queensbury and Frances Dare.

Scenes in the William Fox production, "A Business Engagement," with Hallam Cooley and Kathryn Perry. The story is based on "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," by Mabel Herbert Urner.

Better Accessories From Fox for 1925-26 Pictures

IN keeping with the high standard of the product which Fox Film Corporation is releasing this season, every effort is being put forth to make the advertising accessories provided for each attraction, of a class that will keep pace with the production.

Probably more important than any other step taken for the improvement of the accessories is the new system now in force for the preparation of press books. In past years they have been written in the New York home office but now they are prepared by a staff of special writers in the company's West Coast Studios, while the productions are being made.

This makes it possible for the press books to contain news stories based on actual facts, which are much more readily accepted by newspapers than imaginative yarns created in the fertile minds of writers several thousand miles from the location of the story.

A staff of capable writers has been engaged for the sole purpose of writing the best possible material for newspaper and magazine publicity and for the press books.

The posters, too, are being given special attention, particularly so far as the art work is concerned. Many of the posters for this seasons' attractions are being painted by Luis Usabal, noted Spanish artist whose sketch for the big supreme attraction, "Havoc," should prove a revelation so far as picture advertising is concerned. Other artists of equal rank are being used in order to get the best possible results in the lithographs.

Another special accessory which is being given its initial test on "The Iron Horse," "As No Man Has Loved," "The Fool," "The Fighting Heart," and "Kentucky Pride," is a lobby photo designed especially for use by the first-class, first-run theatres. Two different styles are being prepared on these attractions. One style consists of a set of four 14 by 17 enlargements made from retouched negatives and printed on exceedingly high class photographic paper. The other style consists of a set of eight negatives and mounted on 11 by 14 decorative backs. Both of these styles of accessories can be used either for a high-class lobby display in the better class of windows such as jewelry stores, millinery shops or other such stores where the ordinary photograph or window card would be barred.

These, of course, are being prepared in addition to the regular sets of hand colored 11 by 14s and 22 by 28s, which are available on all attractions.

Special effort also is being directed toward the making of folder heralds suitable for the very best class of theatres. The finest of art work and printing is being used to keep these of the highest standard.

Another new accessory which is now in the exchanges is the salesman's sample book, consisting of handsome binder containing miniature scenes from all productions, as well as the casts, highlights from the productions and synopses of stories. This was prepared exclusively for the purpose of aiding managers and salesmen in discussing Fox product with exhibitors.

A greater variety and a higher class of other regular accessories also is the general rule. Regarding photographs, for instance, the Fox exchanges this year are receiving a greater number of sets as well as a greater variety of stills than ever before. Cuts and mats, too, are being prepared in greater variety and every attempt is being made to get up the kind of advertising material of this type that will please all classes of exhibitors.

The plans of the Fox company to aid the exhibitors properly to exploit their short subject attractions, as explained by Fred C. Quimby, short subject sales manager, are comprehensive and should be productive of excellent results.

In the first place complete press books will be issued by the Fox company with each two reel series. These books will be exactly alike, except in the number of pages, the books now issued with the starring fatures and supreme attractions produced by the company. They will be complete in every detail with synopses, cuts and mats, publicity stories, reviews and exploitation suggestions. For lobbies and outdoor advertising the Fox company will get up excellent one sheets of real magnetism which will be the work of a recognized specialist. In addition to this there will be an ample supply of stills for newspapers and lobbies. In fact all accessories but the larger sized lithographs may be had by exhibitors booking the Fox two-reelers.

For Fox News and Varieties attractive one sheets will be available.

MARIE PREVOST

Here, in a pensive mood, is the delightful Warner Brothers star. Miss Prevost registered one of her greatest characterizations in Ernst Lubitsch's "Kiss Me Again," winning the praise of the critics. Monte Blue again plays opposite the lovely Marie.

"Boy—Page Tex Rickard!"

Looks Like the Warner Brothers Are Stealing His Stuff

Warner Bros. have put a smashing box office punch into "Hogan's Alley," their picture of New York East Side life, starring Monte Blue, by engaging several world famous pugilists to appear in ring scenes of the production. Among them are James J. Jeffries, Ad Wolgast, Tommy Ryan (all champions in their time) and several others who have been prominent in the boxing arena for years.

Ben Turpin, who retired from the screen several months ago when he quit Mack Sennett, has been induced to make a re-appearance on the screen for this one production. He did this as special favor to Roy del Ruth, the director, his former director on the Sennett lot.

The three comedians of "Hogan's Alley" are Willard Louis, Max Davidson and Turpin. They have outstanding roles of different types, and beside the big thrill angle, "Hogan's Alley" is expected to develop into a big laugh picture.

Barrymore's "Don Juan"

Bess Meredyth Doing the Script—Mary Astor in Feminine Lead

Bess Meredyth has been chosen by Warner Bros. to prepare the scenario of "Don Juan," the famous love story immortalized in poetry by Byron. This picture has been selected as John Marrymore's next vehicle for Warner Bros., on their 1926-27 release schedule.

Mary Astor has been chosen to play the leading feminine role in "Don Juan."

When they appeared in "Beau Brummel," Mr. Barrymore and Miss Astor were credited with the most beautiful profiles in screendom and many letters were received at the Warner offices requesting that these two players be cast together in another picture.

Barrymore has expressed himself as entirely pleased with Miss Astor's work in "Beau Brummel," and was instrumental in her selection for the role of "Esther" in "Don Juan."

"Nightie Night Nurse" Is Syd Chaplin's Next Picture

"NIGHTIE NIGHT, NURSE," a title that is good for a couple of laughs in itself, will be "Syd" Chaplin's next feature comedy for Warner Bros.

"Nightie Night, Nurse" is a story by Robt. E. Sherwood, of 'Life" magazine, and has every appearance of being written by a man who knows comedy and comedy situations. It will be a fitting successor to Chaplin's last picture "The Man on the Box."

The story is now in the hands of Charles F. (Chuck) Reisner who will direct the picture. Reisner was responsible for the direction of "The Man on the Box" which was previewed the other night and took the house by storm.

"Nightie Night, Nurse" has every indication of topping that. Chaplin and his finished pantomiming can build and use situations for laughs that make a good logical story necessary and this yarn by Sherwood more than fills the bill.

There isn't any man capable of writing a comicer story than he, for funny quips and "gags" that appear in his magazine are more than ample proof of his ability. His training of years in this line is a qualification that not every one has the opportunity to gain.

Reisner, who worked with Charles Chaplin in the making of "The Gold Rush" and is responsible for the scenario of Syd's last, "The Man on the Box," also plays a role in that picture. He is known as the original "gag" man, having started the vogue on the Sennett lot about eight years ago.

Work on "Nightie Night, Nurse" will begin immediately.

Four New Units at Work For Warner; Six Preparing

WITH four companies now in actual production and six more ready to start within a week or ten days, the Warner Bros. schedule of forty pictures for the year, is 30 per cent completed. Both the Warner lot and the former Vitagraph studio are kept busy with the construction of new sets and apparatus. More than $50,000 has been spent already in equiping the Vitagraph for faster production, according to Bennie Ziedman.

Those pictures working now are "The Sea Beast"—"Compromise," "Hogan's Alley" and "The Clash of the Wolves."

"The Sea Beast" company and John Barrymore is now on a whaling vessel at sea. Mr. Barrymore is proving himself a real able seaman. He can climb the riggings and swing from the yard arms with the best of them. He has refused to let a double work him even in the long shots.

"Compromise," with Irene Rich and Clive Brook in the featured roles are at the present time on location at Big Bear. This story by Mr. Jay Gelzer and adapted by E. J. Lowe, Jr., is one Miss Rich has been anxious to play in for some time.

"Hogan's Alley" with Monte Blue, Patsy Ruth Miller, Louise Fazenda and Willard Louis is to be one of the big pictures of the year. Bennie Ziedman, production executive with Jack Warner is personally supervising with Roy Del Ruth directing.

John A. Steinson, Warner Bros. Chicago branch manager, has arranged in the display window of the exchange a replica of the main Warner studio at Hollywood, with plaques containing the rosters of directors and authors and the names of stars in a real starry "firmament." The window is brilliantly illuminated with many electric lights.

M.-G.-M. Culver City Studios Are Beehives of Activity

THE high peak of summer production is being approached at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio where practically every department of the lot is working at full capacity.

Among the pictures now actually in production is: Marion Davies' "Lights of Old Broadway," which is a screen adaptation of Laurence Eyre's stage play, "Merry Wives of Gotham," now being directed by Monta Bell. This is one of the most pretentious pictures of the year and a large cast, including Conrad Nagel, is supporting Miss Davies.

Mae Murray is appearing in "The Masked Bride," adapted by Carey Wilson from Leon Abrams' original story, Robert Z. Leonard is directing Charlie Ray and Pauline Starke in "A Little Bit of Broadway" and John M. Stahl is directing an all star cast in "Memory Lane," adapted by Benjamin Glazer from Stahl's original story. This picture is to be released by First National.

Construction work on the gigantic Circus of Antioch set for "Ben Hur" is being rushed by a construction force of approximately a thousand men and Director Fred Niblo will film the chariot race sequence next month, using some fifteen thousand people.

King Vidor's "The Big Parade," is almost ready for editing and titling as are William Wellman's "I'll Tell the World" and Hobart Henley's "An Exchange of Wives." The following have been almost completely cut: Edmund Goulding's "Sun-Up," Tod Browning's "The Mystic," Christy Cabanne's "The Midshipman," starring Ramon Novarro, and Victor Seastrom's "The Tower of Lies," costarring Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer.

Edmund Goulding is beginning to cast for "Sally, Irene and Mary" and King Vidor is preparing for rehearsal of Lillian Gish's first Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle, "La Boheme." Christy Cabanne has been given his script of "Dance Madness" and the continuity of Director Benjamin Christianson's "The Light Eternal" will be ready this week.

Director Al Raboch will receive his continuity of Rex Beach's "The Auction Block" within the next few days and continuity is in preparation of "Paris," the big production which will feature ballets and costumes created by Erte. This picture probably will be directed by Robert Z. Leonard. Several other scripts for big fall productions are in the course of preparation, including Rafael Sabatini's "Bardelys the Magnificent" and Vincente Blasco Ibanez' "The Temptress."

Mary Carr Chosen

Mary Carr has been added to the cast of "Hogan's Alley," which is an original story by Gregory Rogers, with Monte Blue and Patsy Ruth Miller in the major roles.

ELEANOR BOARDMAN

Lew Cody, Screen Favorite, Signs M.-G.-M. Contract

LEW CODY, one of the most popular players on the screen, and a firm favorite with film fans the country over, has been placed under a long term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He has recently been appearing in M.-G.-M. pictures with decided success.

Under the terms of the contract Cody will be featured in totally different roles than have been his forte in recent years. The contract is to take effect immediately.

During the last several months, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have experimented with Lew Cody in light comedy roles which have virtually taken the country by storm. In "A Slave of Fashion" Cody has met with nation-wide success as a subtle comedian. His future work for M-G-M will be chiefly along these lines in leading roles.

Lew Cody's carrer has been one of the most interesting in filmdom. At one time he was heavily featured as "a ladykiller." He was almost ruined professionally because of the type of characters he portrayed. To offset this he personally toured the country meeting the public. His real personality was immediately apparent and through his own efforts he swung public favor and became more popular than ever. Cody is one of the best liked players on the Coast, and during his visit to New York was lionized. While he was abroad, making "The Sporting Venus", it was demonstrated that he is held in high favor in Europe, being enthusiastically received wherever he went.

During the last year he has rapidly increased his popularity under the M-G-M banner with the result that today he is one of the greatest favorites of the fans.

Among Lew Cody's more recent pictures are "So This Is Marriage", "Man and Maid", "The Sporting Venus", "A Slave of Fashion" and "Time The Comedian." His next pictures for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will be "Exchange of Wives" in which he will appear with Eleanor Boardman and Renee Adoree, and "Dance Madness", in which he will appear with Aileen Pringle.

"TAKING NO CHANCE"

Bert Roach, the jolly comedian, and rapidly winning favor as a featured Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player, has got his ball up to within a few inches of the hole, and is using the handle of his golf stick on a billiard shot.

Tom Mix Starts Work

Making His Third Fox Production for 1925-26

With the addition of Alec Francis to the exceptional cast of "The Yankee Senor," Fox Film Corporation production in which Tom Mix is the star, the production of the photoplay adaption of Katherine Fullerton Garould's story is well under way. Announcement of the selection of Alec Francis for a role completes one of the best supporting companies gathered for a Tom Mix picture. Other performers will be Olive Borden, as leading lady; Francis MacDonald, Kathryn Hill, Margaret Livingston, Tom Kennedy, Martha Mattox and Raymond Wells.

United Artists Corporation Exploiting Pickford, Chaplin and Fairbanks Pictures

WITH the sound of smashing box office records pointing to extended runs, and a special staff of field men assisting exhibitors, the new United Artists Corporation pictures have been further strengthened by a series of national exploitation tie-ups arranged by the department recently created by Hiram Abrams and Joseph M. Schenck and headed by Harry Brand.

Six field men are already working in various sections of the country, with more to be added. Reports from exhibitors on the first showings of the Fairbanks "Don Q, Son of Zorro," and "Sally of the Sawdust" state the eclipsing of records despite the summer season.

The national tie-ups arranged enable exhibitors to collaborate with the concerns involved on whatever scale the exhibitor deems most appropriate for local conditions. They insure the co-operation of commercial houses noted for the elaborate scope of their advertising.

For Mary Pickford's "Little Annie Rooney" the transcending exploitation feature is a waltz and fox trot orchestration of the song by Vincent Lopez, leader of one of the nation's most famous dance orchestras. Lopez's orchestra is the most popular feature of all radio programs, being broadcast from the ball room of the Hotel Pennsylvania by wire from New York and Chicago to millions of "listeners in."

Lopez will make "Little Annie Rooney" the feature of his broadcasting programs for an entire month. His fox trot arrangement which will be included in the orchestration will be a distinct novelty. Copies will be made of the Lopez orchestration to be distributed by radio stations throughout the country and for the musical programs of theatres playing the Pickford film.

Another attractive feature for "Little Annie Rooney" is a song herald, a miniature sheet-music duplication. On the reverse side are illustrations from the film.

What is proving to be one of the most widespread tie-ups ever effected has been secured for Charlie Chaplin's great comedy, "The Gold Rush." It involves the two songs composed by Chaplin while filming "The Gold Rush." They are being issued by the music publishing houses of Irving Berlin and M. Witmark & Son, and the phonograph company, the latter of which is making a double-disc record of the two fox trots. The song houses are displaying photographs of Chaplin and mention of "The Gold Rush" on the covers, while the Brunswick company gives similar credit in its advertising. Window tie-ups are available to exhibitors by the thousands of local dealers of all three companies.

The Chaplin comedy will have the benefit further of a national tie-up with the Postal Telegraph Company, which is featuring facsimiles of telegrams of congratulation to Chaplin for his great achievement in "The Gold Rush." These telegrams are from the foremost stars of the screen world—Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Rudolph Valentino, William S. Hart, Norma and Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton. These telegrams will also be valuable for lobby displays.

Still another big Chaplin tie-up is a paper cutout of the famous Chaplin derby. The Pace Press of New York is issuing several hundred of these which exhibitors can secure for distribution to children at slight cost.

A sterling exploitation achievement effected for Douglas Fairbanks in "Don Q, Son of Zorro," is that which links the Y. M. C. A. which is issuing at its own expense herald setting forth Fairbanks' views on clean living and physical perfection. The herald is issued in connection with the "Y's" membership campaign. Doug's exploits and physical attainments in "Don Q" are remarked on as the reward of physical perfection, and pictures of Fairbanks in athletic poses add further value.

"Don Q, Son of Zorro," gets a further exploitation impetus from a tie-up with the book publishing house of Grosset & Dunlap. This company will re-issue the novel, "Don Q's Love Story," on which the Fairbanks film was based. The re-issue will be a popular priced edition, with a cover illustrated by Doug in his now famous whip-cracking pose and an inscription on the cover and title page mentioning its relation to "Don Q, Son of Zorro."

To further augment the record-breaking program in prospect for United Artists Corporation is a special line of exploitation and advertising suggestions on D. W. Griffith's "Sally of the Sawdust."

The department is now concentrating on the exploitation of Valentino's "The Lone Eagle" and William S. Hart's "Tumbleweed."

The field staff at present working in conjunction with exhibitors and the districts are James Ashcraft, Chicago; Fred Schaefer, Toronto, Canada; Fred Wallace, Detroit; Charles Baron, Omaha; Leon Victor, Philadelphia, and A. J. Kennedy, Seattle. Others are to be added shortly.

MARY PICKFORD

When "Little Annie Rooney" is released to the millions of admirers of this exquisite star, it will be noted that Mary has returned to the type of picture that made her famous and gave her a big lead over all of her rivals for a number of years. Miss Pickford will continue with this program for at least two additional pictures. United Artists Corporation is exploiting "Little Annie Rooney" heavily. It is a "showman's picture."

Lew Cody undertakes to show 'em how to keep fit and gets it in the neck, all between scenes of Hobart Henley's Metro-Goldwyn-Maye production of "An Exchange of Wives," by Cosmo Hamilton, in which he is featured with Eleanor Boardman, Renee Adoree an Creighton Hale.

Indianologist Is Engaged by Stromberg for "Last Frontier"

HUNT STROMBERG has engaged Col. Tim McCoy, famous Indianologist and government Indian agent, to handle the 8,000 Indians in "The Last Frontier." McCoy is now in Wyoming rounding up the various tribes which will participate in the scenes of Indian warfare in this big western spectacle which will be released by Producers Distributing Corp.

Colonel McCoy is held in great esteem by the Indians to whom he is known as "High Eagle." He has made a life study of their habits, their customs and their racial peculiarities, and he speaks seven tribal languages in addition to being an expert in the sign language. He achieved international recognition when he secured and handled the Indians employed in connection with the road shows of "The Covered Wagon," and is the only man ever able to induce primitive American Indians to cross the water to Europe, which he did in connection with the European presentation of the Cruze picture.

Colonel McCoy was recently chosen to manage "The Last Great Council," the feature attraction of the next world's fair, to be held in Philadelphia in 1926. For the first time in history every Indian tribe in America will set aside all ancient tribal enmities and smoke the pipe of peace in one great council.

In addition to taking charge of the Indians in "The Last Frontier," Colonel McCoy will also be a member of the cast and Stromberg believes that he has a real "find" in this new screen perosnality.

A new portrait of Hunt Stromberg, who is now busily engaged in preparing for the filming of "The Last Frontier," which he is to personally direct and dedicate to the memory of Thomas H. Ince, who conceived it. "The Last Frontier" will be one of the most pretentious attractions on the Producers Distributing Corporation program for this season.

Schulberg Brings Big Stars To the Independent Market

IN continuation of his policy of bringing the screen's biggest acting talent to the independent market, B. P. Schulberg this week signed Robert Frazer for the lead in his forthcoming Preferred Picture, "The Other Woman's Story," which Gasnier will direct from the story by Peggy Gaddis.

During recently months Mr. Schulberg has sponsored the first independent appearance of five other prominent players. Anita Stewart and Bert Lytell signed with an independent company for the first time to play in the Schulberg screen version of David Belasco's play, "The Boomerang."

Ethel Clayton made a similar debut in "The Mansion of Aching Hearts"; Mae Busch in "The Triflers" and Alice Joyce in "White Man."

Frazer has appeared exclusively in the past for Metro-Goldwyn with the exception of a few roles for other national organizations for which his services were loaned. He is the first of several big players with whom Mr. Schulberg is now negotiating.

Studio Capacity Tripled

New Generator Plant Speeds Up Educational Production

Seven comedy companies are going full blast at the new Educational Studio, turning out Jack White Productions and the comedies which will form a large portion of the releases of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., during the 1925-26 season.

Working on the big new stages are five companies producing the two-reel comedies of the Hamilton, Lupino Lane, Mermaid and Juvenile series, and two companies producing single-reel Cameo Comedies.

The units at work at the studio caught their mid-winter stride with the final installation of the new generator plant which will more than triple the former capacity of the electrical equipment of the huge studio. With an abundance of current and lamps the units can now keep up the pace without being handicapped by a shortage of current for the lamps.

Asher Arrives on Coast

To Aid in Production of "Two Blocks Away," New "U" Jewel for Second White List

E. M. Asher has just arrived at Universal City, Cal., where he will assist the studio officials at the plant of Universal in the production of "Two Blocks Away," one of the new Jewel pictures scheduled for the Second White List. Now that Asher has reached the Coast, production on the picture will be commenced without delay.

"Two Blocks Away" was acquired by Universal from Asher and the Faultless Pictures Corporation, with the provision that the production should be a joint effort. It is planned to be one of Universal's most important winter releases. It will reach the screen February 7, according to present intent.

Harry Pollard will direct. Several prominent screen stars will be featured in the cast, including George Sidney, Charles Murray, Vera Gordon and Alex Carr.

Chadwick's "Thoroughbred's" Unhampered, Are Making Good

BELIEVING that no one man is capable of directing mentalities from a great distance and that it is impossible to pool personalities, I. E. Chadwick began, this season, an innovation in studio control that is destined to be far reaching in its influence.

Chadwick has no studio manager, no production manager, no scenario chief, and, above all, no director general. From present indications, he seems to have struck upon a happy medium of production that foretells the biggest season he has known in all his many years as producer and distributor of feature pictures.

Mr. Chadwick, this season, will send out through his various distributing channels thirteen attractions in which Charles Ray, Theda Bara, George Walsh, Lionel Barrymore and Larry Semon will star. The thirteen subjects have been O. K.'d and work begins on one the instant the other is completed and a new supporting cast assembled. The thirteen stories were contracted for before the first one was started, and they were as widely varying as the human mind could make them.

Ray must have stories of a rural or semi-rural nature, with sufficient comedy relief to afford contrast. Walsh is the extreme opposite type, requiring romantic, virile, heman stuff, while Larry Semon is the buffoon and demands extreme satire, slapstick, broad comedy and just the myth of a plot to bring out his best. Lionel Barrymore is entirely antithetic. He requires subtle, intriguing, poignant material, the best to bring forth all the traditional histrionism of the Barrymore clan, and the best to exploit this great actor. Heavy dramatic roles have been assigned Barrymore.

Theda Bara, who in her day and until her voluntary retirement several years ago enjoyed the most uniquely popular place before the film fans of the world, will appear in one vehicle of the nature that popularized her and which has been completed and awaits release now.

Mr. Chadwick, therefore, saw before him thirteen stories adaptable to some one of the stars under his banner.

The four directors essential to the materialization of the stories were brought in and discussed the stories. There was no dictation from Chadwick.

"The stories are there, the studios available, the following stars have been assigned, these supporting players are at your disposal, you can spend so much money on each story."

That was Chadwick's side of the story.

The directors' side was never spoken.

First to come under the wire was a special Hunt Stromberg production, "Paint and Powder," visualized from the Saturday Evening Post story, "The Romance of an Actress," and it told in no humble words what the season would bring.

"'Paint and Powder' will not be exceeded as a box office attraction this year; it will not be paralleled as a poignant romantic story and as a production stands forth as an artistic achievement," says Chadwick. "It has Elaine Hammerstein in the best role she has ever essayed, and a supporting cast of great prominence.

Lionel Barrymore in "The Bells" needs no comment. For thirty years this has been a great stage attraction, the role of Matthias one of the sturdiest ever given an actor to portray and the plot one of the most gripping that ever has been recorded.

Charles Ray in "Some Pun'kins" brings back the great favorite in the type of picture that made him famous, and Larry Semon in "The Perfect Clown" is said to be by far the best plot and situation opportunity that Semon has ever had offered him.

Chadwick bought the stories, hired the stars, engaged the directors, permitted the supporting cast to be chosen and then sat back with the thought that these mentalities were capable of doing in their individual ways their parts without dictation from him.

He felt that, sitting at his desk 3,000 miles away, he would be placing his producing associates at a disadvantage by in any way interfering, so he gave his thoroughbreds a free rein, and in the first three instances so far noted—three completed productions—they all found the middle of the road and the best route home.

Reichenbach With Chadwick

Will Exploit the 1925-26 Season Progra

It is announced from the Chadwick hea office that Harry Reichenbach, the publicis has been signed by this concern to handl special exploitation and publicity on th forthcoming program.

"The Wizard of Oz," two of the Georg Walsh series, "The Unchastened Woman and two of the Charles Ray series are com pleted and ready for release. All of thes productions are included in the 1925-26 seaso program, and Reichenbach will be largely in strumental in exploiting them.

Reichenbach will have the best foundatio on which to base his campaign. Most of th productions included in the forthcoming pr gram are based on well known novels, play or stories with stars of the first calibre an excellent casts.

Chadwick September Releases

Of the seventeen pictures on the Chadwic program for the coming year arrangements fc the release of the next three have been com pleted. "The Unchastened Woman," starrin Theda Bara; "Some Pun'kins," starring Charl Ray, and "The Prince of Broadway," starrin George Walsh are scheduled for Septemb release.

Scenes in "Some Pun'kins," in which Charlie Ray is starred by Chadwick Pictures. Duane Thompson is the girl.

Melodrama is Keynote of New F. B. O. Productions

MELODRAMA, vigorous and unashamed, will be the keynote of a majority of the stories now in production or about to be filmed by F. B. O. according to advices from the West Coast Studios.

The passing of the sex story and the society drama of sophistication is recognized, it is stated, by all practical producers and F. B. O. is concentrating on stories of a more vigorous and wholesome calibre in which the out-door drama will doubtless predominate.

Fred Thomson, whose rise to stardom has been one of the features of the year in motion picture circles, is filming chase scenes for his next F. B. O. Western Special, "Ridin' the Winds," an original story by Marion Jackson. Del Andrews is directing. Silver King, Thomson's big white horse, has a role in which comedy and sentiment are the predominating elements.

"Three Wise Crooks" is the next Evelyn Brent vehicle, work having been launched last week under the direction of F. Harmon Weight, who achieved his greatest distinction recently by directing "Drusilla With A Million" for F. B. O. "Three Wise Crooks" is the joint work of John C. Brownell and Fred Kennedy Myton, east and west coast scenario editors of F. B. O. and presents the little star in the sort of character for which she is becoming famous. Other novels and stage plays are being sought for Brent vehicles in the future.

Emory Johnson has just returned from San Francisco where a week was spent filming the climax of his newspaper melodrama, "The Last Edition." Through the courtesy of the owners of the San Francisco Chronicle the press room of that publication was used as a "set" in which the most thrilling action of the story takes place. This bids fair to be Johnson's most important offering since his memorable picture "The Third Alarm." Ralph Lewis, who has rejoined the Johnson forces, will have the star role, that of an assistant foreman in the press room of a great newspaper. "The Last Edition" will be released early in autumn.

An interesting event of last week at F. B. O. was the debut of Tom Tyler, recently signed as a star in Western productions. Tyler, whose real name is William Burns, won the national amateur weight lifting championship this year. He is a finished actor and horseman. His first vehicle will be an original, "Let's Go, Gallagher," by Percy Heath and James Gruen. The latter will co-direct with Bob De Lacey. Tyler will be starred by F. B. O. in a series of eight Westerns, geared for action and comedy.

Maurice (Lefty) Flynn, under the direction of Harry Garson, is at work on "Heads Up," a comedy melodrama laid in South America. It is by A. E. Barranger.

Bob Custer is at work on "A Man of Nerve" and F. B. O.'s two reel company of comedians, headed by Alberta Vaugh, is filming the second episode of a new series by Nell Martin, called "The Adventures of Mazie." Al Cooke, Kit Guard and Larry Kent appear in the cast and the co-directors are Ralph Ceder and Jimmy Wilkinson.

Dick Talmadge contributes his mercurial career of stunts in "Dr. Jim," by James Bell Smith, and Associated Arts, headed by Ludwig Erb and O. E. Goebel are preparing to film "Flaming Waters," a drama of the oil industry. F. Harmon Weight has been signed to direct this production, which will be produced along the same elaborate lines as "Drusilla With a Million," which also goes to the credit of Associated Arts.

The game of football provides a merry sequence of fun in Harold Lloyd's new Pathe feature comedy, "The Freshman."

Rex Lease will be seen in F. B. O.'s "The Last Edition."

Carmel Myers Assigned

Hary Rapf, associate Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio executive, announced last week that he has assigned Carmel Myers the leading role in Benjamin Christianson's next production for M-G-M, which has not as yet been titled. Owing to the fact that she has been enacting the role of Iras in "Ben Hur," under the direction of Fred Niblo, Miss Myers has not been able to appear in any other film production for the last several months.

Blackton Films for Warner Bros.

Harry M. Warner made known this week the arrangements under which J. Stuart Blackton is to produce for Warner Bros. Under the terms of the contract the Warners will distribute this year four photoplays to be produced by a corporation of which Mr. Blackton is the directing head.

The first of these productions will be "The Gilded Highway," adapted by Marian Constance from W. B. Maxwell's story, "A Little More." The cast, as so far selected, includes Macklyn Arbuckle, John Harron, Dorothy Devore, Myrna Loy, Florence Turner, Tom Mills and Sheldon Lewis.

Particular interest attaches to the announcement that Miss Turner is again to appear, and under Mr. Blackton's direction, for this well known director was one of the "discoverers" of the long popular star in the early days of Vitagraph, when the Brooklyn studios of that organization were the cradle of movie favorites. Florence Turner was the first girl player to become a screen idol and her popularity never waned.

J. Stuart Blackton was among the pioneers of the film industry. He remained as vice-president of Vitagraph until the purchase of the company by Warner Bros. a few months ago, and throughout the intervening years he has continued to direct some of the most notable of picture successes.

"Drusilla With a Million" Praised by Chicago Critics

"DRUSILLA WITH A MILLION," the Associated Arts Corporation F. B. O. Gold Bond production which began its meteoric career at the Capitol Theatre, New York, continues to shatter all records wherever it is played. That it meets with the enthusiastic endorsement of the press is evidenced by the reception tendered the production during its run in Chicago, a city as hard to please as New York.

Bob Reel, of the American, Chicago, says:

"If 'Drusilla With a Million' does not run away with a goodly number of hearts at the Orpheum Theatre, it will not be because of any half-hearted attempt. That the picture exerts considerable heart appeal was pretty conclusively proved when the spectator at the performance attended by his column applauded at the crucial moment of the courtroom sequence climaxing the picture.

"Mary Carr is 'Drusilla' . . . It is a part that Mrs. Carr knows. Priscilla Bonner, as the orphan and unhappy mother, distinguished herself in the courtroom scenes. The picture is an excellent one."

Genevieve Harris of the Chicago Post also waxes enthusiastic. This is what Miss Harris thinks of the picture:

"Mary Carr in an excellent role. Mrs. Carr is artist enough not to overdo her role. She is pathetic but not mawkish. The role of 'Drusilla' gives this talented actress one of the best parts she has had since her famous 'Over the Hill' success. It's as much fun as a circus!"

"The Ancient Mariner," With Paul Panzer in Title Role

PRODUCTION work on "The Ancient Mariner," the superspectacle film adapted from Samuel Taylor Coleridge's allegorical poem, is well under way, according to an announcement of Fox Film Corporation.

Henry Otto, who created the screen classic from "Dante's Inferno," selected the island of Santa Cruz, off the Southern California coast, as "location" for some of the marine sequences of the photoplay because of the restless mystery of the deep which abounds along these rugged shores.

Paul Panzer has been cast for the leading role of "The Ancient Mariner" and more than a score of old salts, symbolic of the diversified characters immortalized in the famous poem, accompanied him and the William Fox director on this adventurous pilgrimage. The company will spend some time exploring the island, awaiting opportunity to record for the screen the terrifying rage and despairing calm of the sea upon which the atmosphere of the allegory is mainly constructed.

Woven into the sea fantasy of the English poet is a modern story which the Fox company has delegated to separate direction from the main theme. The completed picture, in its broad, comprehensive sweep, will visualize the projection of the present day application of truth on the ancient poetic parable.

The preparation of the scenario for "The Ancient Mariner" was assigned to the capable hands of Bradley King, who gave to the screen the competent picturization of "Anna Christie." Miss King has synchronized the theme of tolerance and human kindness of the allegory with the seasonal spirit of good will on earth prevailing at Christmas time, when the picture is scheduled for release.

Tourneur Directing

"Clothes Make the Pirate," Is a Sam Rork Production for First National

Camera work was begun recently at the Cosmopolitan Studios, New York City, on "Clothes Make the Pirate," the Sam Rork Production for First National release.

Maurice Tourneur is directing, with Ben Silvey as his assistant.

The cast includes Leon Errol, Dorothy Gish, Nita Naldi, Edna Murphy, Tully Marshall, George Marion, Frank Lawlor and Harry Lee.

H. R. H. to See "Charley's Aunt"

Another signal honor has come to "Charley's Aunt," Al Christie's big feature which has been achieving a continuous string of successes during the past several months.

By request a print of "Charley's Aunt" has been shipped to Africa for the entertainment of the Prince of Wales who is still on his Southern trip through various outlying countries.

The request for "Charley's Aunt" came to Ideal Films, London, who are releasing the picture in England following the successful showing in London at the Tivoli Theatre.

West Returns to Screen

Charles West, who has been absent from the screen for several years, has returned to motion pictures as a "heavy" in Cecil B. De Mille's personally directed production, "The Road to Yesterday." West is a veteran of the old Biograph days, and has appeared in a number of more recent successes, including "Manslaughter" under De Mille, "The Witching Hour," "The Eternal Three," and "Red Lights."

Red Seal Product Popular

Edwin Miles Fadman, president of Red Seal product are pouring in heavily from all parts of the country. Among recent bookings are Rowland & Clark, who are bringing the feature "Evolution" into Pittsburgh; Famous Players Rialto, N. Y., played an "Out-of-the-Inkwell" entitled "Ko-Ko Sees Spooks" last week, "Daisy Bell," a Ko-Ko song Cartune goes into the Mark Strand, Brooklyn; and "Ko-Ko Celebrates" and "Inkwell" is booked for Balaban and Katz Tivoli, Chicago.

Paul Bern, Director, Signs With Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

PAUL BERN, who has rapidly forged to the front as a director of unusual ability, was placed under contract last week by Louis B. Mayer and he will soon begin work on his initial production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Before signing with M.-G.-M. Paul Bern directed Pola Negri in her latest production and previously made a name for himself through his direction of "Grounds For Divorce" and "The Dressmaker From Paris."

Before he was won by the newer directorial school, Bern achieved great success at the Culver City studios as a scenario writer who possessed what most directors are pleased to call an infallible method. Now he returns to the scene of his earlier bent and fame.

The guess may be hazarded that Bern's new contract will increase the $$ size of his income taxes, and it is understood he will direct a series of big productions for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

As yet no announcement is forthcoming as to Bern's first story. It is now being selected however and it is expected that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's latest directorial acquisition will soon be supervising the actual filming.

PAUL BERN

One of the cleverest of our directors, Mr. Bern, who recently has been directing some of the biggest stars, has signed with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Being "an old Goldwyn director," Paul is among friends again!

Biggest American Circuits Booking All Educationals

THE majority of the many theatres, owned by or booking through the big circuits throughout the country, have signed up for the use of Educational Pictures throughout the 1925-26 season, and with the closing of negotiations now practically completed with a number of others, Educational's representation in the great circuits will be rapidly approaching a 100 per cent mark.

Among the most notable agreements reached since the recent signing of the entire Famous Players Circuit are those covering the Balaban and Katz Circuit, the Saxe Circuit, the Gordon and Gray Circuits in New England and the Loew Circuit in Greater New York City.

In the Blaban and Katz contract, which covers Educational's nine series of two-reel comedies, its three groups of single reel subjects and the news reel, Kinograms, the theatres participating are the five great B. and K. houses in the large centers of Illinois and twenty Blank houses in Nebraska and Iowa, as well as the twelve Lynch theatres booking through the B. and K. offices.

The twenty Blank houses are booked to run 100 per cent of the entire Educational one and two-reel output and the news reel. The twenty Midwest Circuit houses and the twelve Lynch houses are booked almost 100 per cent.

In Wisconsin the eleven Saxe theatres will run the Educational comedy output and the news reel 100 per cent. These theatres include six in Milwaukee, among them the Strand, Merrill and Wisconsin, and one each in Oshkosh, Green Bay, Marionette, Janesville and Kenosha.

Two score theatres in Greater New York City are included in the arrangement recently made by the New York Educational Exchange with the Loew Circuit in that city. The Gordon Circuit and the Gray Circuit, comprising thirty-nine towns in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont, were taken over by Famous Players following the completion of the big Educational Pictures' contract with Famous. An additional contract for Educational Pictures has now been completed for all these representative theatres.

An idea of the magnitude of the booking arrangements, many of which are 100 per cent deals and the others of which approach 100 per cent, can best be secured by considering the large program of Educational Pictures scheduled for the new season. They comprise six Hamilton Comedies, six Lupino Lane, six Bobby Vernon Comedies, six Walter Hiers Comedies, six Tuxedo Comedies, six Jimmie Adams Comedies, eighteen Mermaid Comedies, ten Christie Comedies and six Juvenile Comedies, each in two reels; and among the single reel product—twenty-four Cameo Comedies, twenty-six Felix the Cat Cartoons and twelve issues of Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge. The news reel, Kinograms, is issued twice a week.

Frances White, well known vaudevillian; Marion Davies, Director Monta Bell and Louis B. Mayer photographed together on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot on the occasion of a recent visit made by Miss White to the Culver City studios. Miss Davies wears a costume in which she appears in "Lights of Old Broadway," in which she is starred under Monta Bell's direction. This production is based on the stage success, "Merry Wives of Gotham," by Lawrence Eyre, adapted to the screen by Carey Wilson.

Books "Buster Brown" Comedies

William C. Herrmann, general manager of the Big "U" Exchange, Universal's New York distribution center, reports that the Loew Circuit has booked "Educating Buster," the first of a new series of Buster Brown Century Comedies, for 110 days, to commence the week of August 9.

Prod. Dist. Corp. Studios Busy; New Stage Ordered

WITH the first five pictures on the 1925-26 schedule completed, production activities for Producers Distributing Corporation have been increased more than one hundred per cent., and four big studios are now being taxed to the limit of their facilities on twelve productions for fall and early winter release.

The Cecil B. DeMille studio at Culver City is seething with activity on five pictures: "The Road to Yesterday," DeMille's personally directed production; "The Wedding Song," starring Leatrice Joy, under the direction of Alan Hale; "Braveheart," an epic of the American Indian in modern civilization, starring Rod La Rocque with Lillian Rich; "Eve's Leaves," an adaptation of the stage success by Harry Chapman Ford, under the direction of Paul Sloane, and "Three Faces East," the war time Secret Service play by Anthony Paul Kelly, under the direction of Rupert Julian.

At the Hollywood Studios mobility is revolving around five other productions: "The People vs. Nancy Preston"; John A. Moroso's story is in work under Tom Forman's direction with John Bowers and Marguerite De La Motte in the featured roles; "Simon the Jester" William J. Locke's story, is being filmed as a Frances Marion production under the direction of George Melford with Eugene O'Brien and Lillian Rich in the featured roles; Harry Carey with Harriett Hammond is visualizing the Bret Harte story "The Man From Red Gulch" under Edmund Mortimer's direction; A. H. Sebastian of Belasco Productions is busy on the preliminary work for "Fifth Avenue" and Hunt Stromberg is making active preparations for the first scenes of the big western spectacle "The Last Frontier."

At the Christie Studio Scott Sidney and his staff of gag men are working day and night on Al. Christie's next big feature "Madame Lucy" the riotous French farce in which Julian Eltinge is featured, with Ann Pennington and a troupe of Christie headliners in the supporting cast.

And at the Marshall Neilan studio in Glendale active preparations are being made for the filming of the first Neilan productions to be released through Producers Distributing Corporation.

That the producing activities of the various units releasing through Producers Distributing Corporation will be greatly increased this Fall is indicated by contracts just signed for the construction of a gigantic new stage at the Hollywood Studios where Hunt Stromberg, George Melford, Frances Marion, A. H. Sebastian and Renaud Hoffman are now working on productions for early release through Producers Distributing Corporation.

William Sistrom, general manager of the Hollywood Studios, has O. K.'d the plans for the new stage which will cost approximately $125,000 and embody new types of construction, equipment, wiring and ventilation.

The structure will measure 125 feet wide, 450 feet long and 50 feet from floor to truss bars. Among the new features incorporated in the plans are:

A semi-domed ceiling at one end of the stage which will permit, in long shots, of securing effective outdoor atmosphere.

A cinematographer's experimental room where light and lens tests will be possible.

The application of a new system for overhead wiring which will eliminate so much time now used in hanging overhead lights. It will be possible to plug in on the new system at intervals of about twelve feet.

A system of tracks suspended from the roof of the stage will support three small electric cranes. They will have a radius covering practically every foot of the stage and will be used to hoist large sets into position as well as raising and lowering overhead electrical equipment.

The stage will be built of concrete and steel and will provide ample space for the new companies which have leased space and facilities at the Hollywood Studios.

Harvey Leavitt, construction superintendent, William Whistler, chief electrician and George Bartholon, production manager, will have charge of the erection and equipping of the new stage, working directly with Sistrom. The new building was designed by C. Cadwallader, art director.

Mrs. George Bronson-Howard To Sell Playwright's Stories

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week that Mrs. Jean Bronson-Howard, widow of George Bronson-Howard, author and playwright who died November 20, 1922, has consented to the sale of a number of novels and plays and many short stories, for motion picture use.

Mrs. Bronson-Howard has withstood repeated requests for certain of these stories, but upon her return to New York City last week, having gone carefully over the published writings of her famous husband, she announced her willingness to permit the producers to examine them for their availability as screen material.

The novels and plays include "Birds of Prey," "Scars on the Southern Sea," "The Devils Chaplain, "The Only Law," (in collaboration with Wilson Mizner) and "The Red Light of Mars." There are more than two hundred magazine stories, as well as some unpublished manuscripts, to be examined.

Among the George Bronson-Howard stories used in photoplays have been "Queen of the Sea" (Annette Kellerman), by Fox Film Corporation; "The Spy," a story of the Great War, also by Fox; "The Parasite," and others.

Some of the best of the serials from Universal studios more than a decade ago, came from George Bronson-Howard's pen. He was on the Universal staff, at that time. Chet Withey, the director, and Lon Chaney, the star of today, were hidden away in serial casts, in those days.

Paramount's Long Island Studio to Hum With Greatest Activity in Its History

PARAMOUNT'S Long Island studio is about to begin a period of the greatest activity in its history. By September 1 seven productions will be added to the two already under way there, and more are scheduled to follow as soon as room can be found for them.

Both the upper and lower stages will be used, sets will be built on the lot in the rear of the building, and one is now under construction on a ball park in Astoria, Long Island.

The two pictures under way at present are: Betty Bronson in "A Kiss for Cinderella," Herbert Brenon's production of Sir James M. Barrie's story, and D. W. Griffith's production of Edwin Balmer's story, "That Royle Girl," in which Carol Dempster, Harrison Ford, James Kirkwood and W. C. Fields are featured.

Next week Mr. Brenon will have in use one of the biggest sets ever built in the studio. It will be the dream ballroom and will occupy the entire upper stage.

On August 17 two productions will start. These are Gloria Swanson's "Stage Struck," an Allan Dwan production of Frank R. Adams' story which has been adapted by Forrest Halsey; and Richard Dix in "Womanhandled," an Arthur Stringer story which has been adapted by Luther Reed. Gregory La Cava will make his bow as a director in this picture. He supervised the stunts in Dix's "The Shock Punch" and "The Lucky Devil."

On August 24 Adolphe Menjou will start in "The King on Main Street," from Ditrichstein's stage success. This will be directed by Monta Bell. On the same date Frank Tuttle will begin "The American Venus." This story is being written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and Townsend Martin. The winner of the Atlantic City Beauty pageant will have an important role in it and some of the scenes will be made at Atlantic City.

On September 1 Florenz Ziegfeld's first motion picture production will get under way. Edgar Selwyn is writing the story. It is to be called "Glorifying the American Girl." "Follies" beauties will play an important part. The story is to be adapted to the screen by Luther Reed. Also, on September 1, Gilda Gray will begin work in "Aloma of the South Seas," from the Broadway stage success. This will be the first picture in which she will be featured. The adaptation is being written by James Ashmore Creelman.

Thomas Meighan and the company of players now in Ireland making scenes for a picture adapted from "The Imperfect Imposter," are due to start back on August 25 and resume work on the interiors at the Long Island studio. Lois Wilson is playing opposite Mr. Meighan and Victor Heerman is directing.

As soon as Mr. Brenon finishes "A Kiss for Cinderella" he is to start work on "The Song and Dance Man," George M. Cohan's famous stage success. Paul Schofield is now adapting the story.

In the meantime the finishing touches are being put on the editing and titling of Bebe Daniels' last picture, "Lovers In Quarantine." Allen Dwan is getting Gloria Swanson's forthcoming picture, "The Coast of Folly," ready for the laboratory, and the editing of Thomas Meighan's last effort, "The Man Who Found Himself," is being completed.

Inez Is Now Joan

The leading lady of "The Silver Treasure," the screen production of Joseph Conrad's world-renowned novel, "Nostromo," will be Joan Rene, it is announced by Fox Film Corporation. Miss Rene has changed her given name from Inez for the sake of euphony. She will play opposite "Smiling" George O'Brien, the Fox star, who is cast for the difficult role of the hero in the Conrad masterpiece.

Scenes in Thomas Meighan's recently completed Paramount picture, "The Man Who Found Himself," directed by Alfred E. Green. The girl is Virginia Valli.

Two Mack Sennett Comedies On Pathe Program for Aug. 30

TWO Mack Sennett two-reel comedies head the Pathe short subject release schedule for the week of August 30th, which also includes a chapter of the Pathe-serial "Play Ball," "Topics of the Day," "Aesop's Film Fables," Pathe Review and Pathe News.

Alice Day makes her second starring appearance in two-reel comedies for Mack Sennett in "Cold Turkey," directed by Eddie Cline, Alice appears as a bride, and Raymond McKee is "the best husband in the world." The plot concerns Alice's efforts to entertain her guests who come to help celebrate the eighth week of marriage bliss. Her cooking ability is limited and naturally the guests provide plenty of funny action. The cast includes Pat Harmon, Sam Lufkin, William McCall and Sunshine Hart.

"Butter Fingers" is a Mack Sennett comedy directed by Del Lord, with a cast of favorites including Billy Bevan, Andy Clyde, Ruth Taylor, Kewpie Morgan and Madeline Hurlock. This is a burlesque of baseball and Billy Bevan is the crack pitcher.

"Play Ball" reaches the seventh chapter, entitled "A Million of Hate." This Pathe-serial written by Manager John J. McGraw of the New York Giants gains speed with each succeeding chapter. Exciting automobile accidents provide thrills in this episode. Spencer Bennet directed and Frank Leon Smith provided the continuity. Wally Oettel, Harry Semels, Mary Milnor, and J. Barney Sherry support Allene Ray and Walter Miller, the stars.

Pathe Review No. 35 presents three highly entertaining subjects: "The Cauldron of Kiluea," the "old faithful" of Hawaii; "The Origin of Man," conclusion of series "Tracing the First Man"; and "A Jaunt Through the Jura," high lights of the Franco-Swiss Mountains.

"Topics of the Day," the newspaper humor reel, "The Window Washers," one of the "Aesop's Film Fables" and two issues of Pathe News complete the August 30th program of Pathe.

Rex Troupe and Five Comedy Units Filming Pathe Product

THE Hal Roach forces filming new product for Pathe release embrace the Rex feature troupe and five units making comedies.

James W. Horne has finished the all-star Hal Roach comedy he directed in Yosemite, with Lucien Littlefield, Walter Long, Martha Sleeper, "Husky" Hanes, Noah Young, and B. Wayne Lamont in the cast, and is preparing another picture.

Leo McCarey has nearly completed the direction of Charley Chase's newest comedy, in which Katherine Grant, George Siegman, William J. Kelly, Jimmie Finlayson, Jimmie Parrott, Symona Boniface, and others appear. After the few remaining shots are made, preparations will be started for the next Chase picture. The title of the one nearing completion is "The Caretaker's Daughter."

While editing was under way on "Better Movies," featuring "Our Gang," the next comedy with Hal Roach's "Rascals" was started in production under Robert McGowan's direction. Farina, the brunette boy wonder, is the center of the new story.

Stan Laurel has started production on the newest Clyde Cook comedy, with "Mamma's New Papa" and another one is in the editorial rooms.

Fred Guiol is directing Glenn Tryon in a new two-reeler to follow "Good Morning Judge," the latest, in which Tyler Brooke, Katherine Grant, Marjorie Whiteis and others appeared.

In the heart of Eastern Montana, on Custer's last battlefield, "The Devil Horse," a seven-reel feature, is being filmed, starring Rex, the hero of "Black Cyclone," under the direction of Fred Jackman and Roy Clements.

West's First Is Titled

"Help! Police!" has been decided upon as the title of the first of a series of four five-reel feature-length comedies starring Billy West. The pictures are being produced by West Brothers Productions and directed by Grover Jones, well known comedy director. In the cast of the first release, in addition to West, are Virginia Pearson, Lionel Belmore and Kathleen Myers of Christie Comedy fame. The picture is scheduled for release on October 1 under the Rayart banner.

West Productions will also produce a series of two-reel comedies for the Rayart program to be known as Joy Belle comedies, starring Gloria Joy. The first release of this series, "Wood Simps," has been completed.

Canutt Recovering

Yakima Cannutt, champion horseman, appearing in "The Devil Horse," the new "Rex" feature being produced by Hal Roach for Pathe release, is reported convalescing from his burns. Canutt was seriously burned when a flare torch he was carrying exploded while he was riding at high speed. He has been removed from the hospital in a nearby city to the camp at Lodge Grass.

Al. Christie's transcontinental "Seven Days" preview car that will leave Los Angeles on August 26 for a record run to New York City.

Patheserial, "Green Archer," Is Placed In Production

A NEW Patheserial, based upon Edgar Wallace's novel, "The Green Archer," has just been placed in production at the Long Island Studio in Astoria, L. I. Frank Leon Smith is adapting the novel to the screen and Spencer Bennet is directing this ten-chapter screen play. Allene Ray and Walter Miller, well known to all Patheserial fans, again appear at the head of a cast of screen celebrities, which includes Burr McIntosh, Stephen Grattan, Frank Lackteen and Earl B. Powell, archery expert.

"The Green Archer" is considered ideal serial material because of its intriguing mystery and absorbing romance. The acquisition of this best seller as the basis of a serial story is a continuation of the Pathe plan of securing the best possible story backgrounds for its continued-chapter plays.

The new serial being made under the book title of "The Green Archer," is being produced upon a pretentious scale, requiring a large number of massive interior settings as well as a great many unique and picturesque locations. Scenes for the first episode are being staged at Storm King Mountain and at the famous Sound View Golf and Country Club. At the latter location the new game of Archery Golf will be played before the camera.

In casting "The Green Archer" Director Bennet and Scenario Editor Smith co-operated in bringing together one of the best casts in serial history. Allene Ray has been featured in six previous Patheserials and has shared honors with Walter Miller in two recent chapter plays. Both of these popular players are accomplished athletes and will be able to meet all the difficult demands of their roles in the new film. Frank Lackteen, polite villain of many serials, again joins the Pathe ranks and Wally Oettel, who provided the comic relief in "Play Ball" continues before the Pathe camera.

Burr McIntosh and Stephen Grattan are veterans of stage and screen with many notable roles to their respective credits. The rest of the cast, now being engaged, will measure fully up to the high standard of the players already signed up.

To insure the accuracy of the archery action in "The Green Archer," Pathe has engaged Earl B. Powell, nationally known as an expert, to instruct the cast in the use of the bow and arrow. As evidence of Mr. Powell's standing, it may be stated that he served as archery instructor for Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," and supervised the bowman in Cecil B. DeMille's "The Ten Commandments."

GASNIER

The distinguished director will shortly begin work on a screen version of Peggy Gaddis' novel, "The Other Woman's Story," a Preferred Picture presented by B. P. Schulberg.

Rayart Celebrates First Year; Johnston is Happy

RAYART PICTURES CORPORATION, headed by W. Ray Johnston, completed its first year's operation recently and Mr. Johnston is reported to be extremely pleased with the record.

During its first year Rayart released a total of twenty features and two serials which have had a very wide distribution, reaching to the four corners of the earth. The Rayart Product distributed abroad by Richmount Pictures has proven very popular and already most of the foreign territory has been disposed of on the 1925-1926 product.

For the coming season Rayart will release five brands consisting of a series of eight speedy comedy dramas starring Reed Howes and produced by Harry J. Brown Productions. Billy Sullivan will be featured in twelve action dramas also produced by Harry Webb Productions. The Gerson Pictures Corporation will make a series of six Superior Melodramas for Rayart release. The first of these, "The Pride of the Force," has already been completed.

Billy West will release under the Rayart Banner four five-reel comedy features, the first of which will be "Help! Police!!" with an excellent cast which includes Virginia Pearson, Lionel Belmore and Kathleen Myers. 'Grover Jones, well known comedy and feature director, will direct this series.

For the short reel part of its program there will be the Beacon Film Corporation's production entitled "The Flame Fighter," which is to be a ten episode serialplay starring Herbert Rawlinson. Billy West will also produce a series of two reel "Joy Belle Comedies," starring Gloria Joy. Th Rayart product is placed in practically every domestic territory, according to Mr. Johnston, and by September 30th the few remaining territories are expected to be closed. This will leave the Rayart officials free to concentrate on production exclusively.

The first wedding at "home plate" at the New York Polo Grounds, shown in the Pathe serial, "Play Ball," written by the famous John McGraw, manager of the "Giants." Allene Ray and Walter Miller (seen just back of the bride and groom) are starred. "Jawn" McGraw is the gentleman in civies.

"Action Galore"

Louis Weiss, managing director of Artclass Pictures announces that he has been advised by Lester F. Scott, Jr., of Action Pictures, Inc., that Robert Eddy has completed the filming of "Action Galore," third of the series of eight five-reel Rough Riding Romances featuring Buddy Roosevelt.

Henry Ginsberg Optimistic

Receives Complimentary Remarks on New Productions

Henry Ginsberg having disposed of sales and distribution problems by selling his product 100 per cent. is receiving very encouraging letters from his distributors. The first of the Banner Productions, "The Love Gamble," has received very favorable recognition, as has also "Before Midnight," the first Royal Picture.

Both of these pictures have been booked in a number of principal theatres throughout the country and "Wreckage," the second Banner, is now released. The second Royal, "Big Pal," has an exceptionally strong cast including William Russell, Julianne Johnston, Mary Carr and Mickey Bennett. It is a story of the prize ring and rich in heart interest and action scenes.

The third Banner to be released will be "Wandering Footsteps," with Estelle Taylor and Bryant Washburn in the leading roles. Following this "The Checkered Flag" will go into production. Sam Briskin, who is supervising production, left for the West Coast this week and will get all the pictures into work so that there will be no delays on scheduled release dates.

With the opening of the season, a strong campaign of advertising and exploitation for both Banner and Royal pictures has been commenced. Commencing about September 1 regional advertising and fan publicity, with the possibility of a nation-wide poster campaign, will be inaugurated.

Preferred Distribution

J. B. Bachmann Arranges New Franchises in Middle West

Screen Classics, J. B. Bachmann states, will take over the distribution of the ten current Preferred Pictures formerly handled by Friedman Film Corporation. These Productions are "The Breath of Scandal," "White Man," "The Triflers," "Capital Pnishment," "The Parasite," "The Mansion of Aching Hearts," "The Boomerang," "Go Straight!" "Faint Perfume" and "My Lady's Lipe." The new franchise also gives Screen Classics the rights to the twenty pictures on the approaching season's schedule announced by Schulberg Productions.

A contract for the distribution of twenty Preferred Pictures in Omaha, Kansas City, and Des Moines, was closed this week by Mr. Bachmann, with Monsky Brothers, exchange men who are well known in the middlewestern territory. Under this agreement, the Monskys will operate the Schulberg franchise for the twenty new pictures.

"The Lone Eagle"

Six well-known screen players have been added to the cast of "The Lone Eagle," Rudolph Valentino's first feature production for United Artists Corporation release, which Clarence Brown is now directing at the United Studios. Spottiswoode Aitken, veteran of stage and screen, has been engaged to play the role of Valentino's father. George Nichols will appear as the father of Vilma Banky, leading woman, who has been loaned by Samuel Goldwyn for this production. Other additions are Barbara Tennant, Mario Carillo, Gustav von Seyffertitz and Otto Hoffman, all established screen players. Louise Dresser is playing the Czarina.

Kenneth Harlan, of Warner Bros. Star Players, who is co-starring with his wife, Marie Prevost, in "Bobbed Hair."

In Larger Quarters

Red Seal Moves as Fadman Announces 95 Subjects

Coincident with the announcement of Edwin Miles Fadman, president of Red Seal Pictures Corporation, of a list of ninety-five subjects for 1925-26, the company moved to larger quarters at 729 Seventh avenue, which will house both the main office and the New York exchange.

The move was necessitated, according to Mr. Fadman, because of the fact that Red Seal has far outgrown the quarters at 1600 Broadway, which could no longer house the additional sales and publicity staff he has been compelled to add.

Of the ninety-five subjects only one, "Evolution," is a feature, being five reels in length. This film, an Urban-Kineto production edited by Max Fleischer and made under the scientific supervision of Edward J. Foyles of the American Museum of Natural History, has already done tremendous business at the Rialto, Rivoli and Loew houses in New York, in Frank Newman's Rialto, Los Angeles, and other important towns where it was pre-released.

Ferdinand Earle to Advertise 'Ben Hur'

The services of Ferdinand Earle, noted artist at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio has been enlisted to the cause of publicizing "Ben Hur." With the assistance of Gordon B. Pollock, photographer, Mr. Earle is creating special photographic conceptions which will be extensively used to advertise this production.. Mr. Earle's work in connection with motion pictures has gained particular prominence. Specially painted backgrounds are being prepared by him before which Ramon Novarro and other characters of the production are being photographed in still pictures and portraits of unusually artistic conception and lighting.

Mexico Is Booming

Deal by Arrow Pictures Shows Motion Picture Houses Flourishing

For some time reports have been coming into the offices of W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Pictures Corporation, that business conditions in Mexico have improved to such an extent as to indicate a boom in this Republic, and in consequence, the motion picture theatres are doing a better business than ever before.

A confirmation of this condition was reflected yesterday when Mr. Shallenberger completed a deal with Charles N. Jawitz and Si Braunstein, of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, representing General Norberto C. Olvera of the Ajusco Pictures Company of Mexico City, who purchased the entire production output of Arrow Pictures for 1925-26.

This is generally regarded, among the trade, as one of the largest independent foreign deals brought to a successful issue for the product of the coming season.

Among the pictures included in the sale are two W. E. Shallenberger subjects, one of which is "Scandal Street," four of the Whitman Bennett series, four of the Wilfred Noy series, four Dallas M. Fitzgerald pictures, four Major Maurice Campbell productions and two Chadwick specials.

Praise for Anne Dale

London News Critic Charmed by Her Work in "The Fool," Fox's Picture

The London News, in its issue of July 27, bestows lavish praise on the work of Anne Dale, the little crippled girl in the cast of the William Fox-Channing Pollock screen version of the latter's stage success, "The Fool." This photoplay was given a special preview in the English capital, late in July, and the critics and special writers commented most favorably on Miss Dale's characterization.

The News also reproduced a sketch of little Miss Dale done by Violet, Duchess of Rutland, during one of the latter's visits to New York in recent months. Miss Dale was in the cast of "The Miracle," when the Duchess, mother of Lady Diana Cooper, first met Anne, and expressed deep concern regarding Anne's future on the stage and screen.

Some of the sketches of Miss Dale by the Duchess have been reproduced by the leading art and theatrical publications in London.

"Potash and Perlmutter"

To Henry King has been entrusted the direction of Samuel Goldwyn's next annual contribution to the joy of all nations—"Partners Again—with Potash & Perlmutter," to go into production immediately upon completion of "Stella Dallas," upon which King is yet engaged for the same producer. "Partners Again—with Potash and Perlmutter" will be released by United Artists. The former two of this series were distributed by First National.

Dawn With Universal

Norman Dawn, well-known director and cinematographic expert, has signed a long-term contract with Universal Pictures Corporation, according to announcement from General Manager Raymond L. Schrock. Dawn will act in an advisory capacity on matters of production, story and photography.

How to Use This Chart

First—Bookings! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play Date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over- and under-length programs.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Pitcure World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Screen Manufacturers, Attention

After extended consideration the editor of his department, who is also author of the Bluebook of Projection, has finally decided to take much needed action regarding motion picture screens.

Some years ago a rather comprehensive examination of the projection screen surfaces at that time commercially available, was made by Mr. L. A. Jones of the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company. The results of these tests were published in the form of a paper in the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers (Nov. 11, 1920) and in the Bluebook of Projection. Since that time many new projection screens have been placed on the market and some of those examined at that time are no longer available. These data are therefore inadequate for the present needs. This matter has been taken up again with the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company through Mr. Jones and they have agreed to repeat this work and to make tests on all screen surfaces submitted to them.

These tests will be similar to those made previously and will relate only to the reflection characteristics of the surfaces. No attempt will be made to deal with the problems of fabric, color, texture or construction. The idea is to give the projectionist and exhibitor complete data as to the percentage of the total incident light which the various surfaces will reflect and the proportion which is reflected in any given direction relative to the plane of the screen surface. In other words, these tests will give understandable data as to the reflecting powers of the surfaces and their powers of diffusion or lack of them.

In case of the tests made previously, all screen manufacturers were invited to submit samples. Some manufacturers did submit them and gave permission that the results of the tests be published. This indicated confidence in the excellence of their own product, or at least a willingness that the projectionist and exhibitor be given the facts. That was Honesty.

Other manufacturers submitted samples but stipulated that the results of the tests be not made public, which apparently indicated lack of confidence in their own goods —the goods they were selling to the exhibitor on the loudly made claim that they were "the best on the market."

Still others refused to submit samples at all, which—well you may form your own opinion.

Different

The tests which are now proposed will be conducted somewhat differently. This department and Moving Picture World has nothing whatever to do with the tests, except that the editor of this department has secured the consent of Mr. Jones to make them. The tests will be made at the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company. They will be under the supervision of Mr. L. A. Jones, who incidentally is president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Mr. Jones informs me that the apparatus which is used in making such tests has recently been carefully overhauled and rebuilt so that tests can be made rapidly and with high precision. Every possible precaution will be taken in the conduct of the work and the data published will conform to the usual rigid requirements of the Eastman Research Laboratories regarding precision and regarding liability.

The Big Thing

Now here is where I propose to make this matter really effective. When the tests have been made and are available, I propose to publish them both in the Projection Department and in the next edition of the Bluebook of Projection. Moreover, I propose in the future to warn projectionists to recommend no screen surface which has not been tested and the results of the test published, and to warn exhibitors to buy only tested surfaces.

In this action Mr. Abbott of the Motion Picture News has agreed to join. The results of the tests will, of course, be available to all papers and will doubtless be published in the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, although as to the latter I can not say positively.

No Objection

All this is being done purely for the following reasons:

(A) To protect the motion picture projectionist who must have some real scientific data on which to base his recommendations for screens to suit various auditoriums.

(B) To protect the exhibitor by placing at the disposal of the projectionist and himself scientific data enabling him to judge intelligently as to the efficiency of a screen surface and its fitness for their individual auditorium.

(C) To protect the screen manufacturers who manufacture a really high grade screen surface from the competition of surfaces which are more or less inefficient, both as to reflecting power and power of diffusion.

(D) To protect the producer from having his productions improperly displayed before the public because of screen surfaces which have either low reflection powers or are unsuited to the auditorium in which they are used, or both.

(E) To protect the public which often has the value of the thing it buys reduced through improper presentation due to the causes set forth in clause D.

No honest screen manufacturer can possibly have any legitimate objection to any of the above purposes.

The standing of the Eastman Kodak Company is such that any suspicion of the tests being other than efficient and impartial would be just absolutely absurd, verging, in fact, upon the ridiculous.

All screen manufacturers who sell screen surfaces or who propose to sell screen surfaces to theatres are cordially invited to send samples of their surface or surfaces to Mr. L. A. Jones, Building 3, Kodak Park, Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., as soon as possible. Each sample should be two feet square and should be marked plainly on the back with its manufacturer's name and its individual trade name. This is very necessary in order to avoid misunderstanding and errors in reporting the results. Care should be exercised in packing the samples for shipment to the laboratory, to insure the adequate protection of the surfaces against rubbing or damage during transit. In the past some difficulty has been encountered due to improper packing, the surfaces on arrival at the laboratory being rubbed and damaged in such a way as to materially decrease their efficiency as reflecting surfaces. No report will be made on structure, texture, material, color,

Bluebook School

Note: I have looked carefully into the matter of dividing the questions up so that only one or two difficult ones will be asked each week. I intended to do it, and promised I would, but guess I will have to crawfish on that, because I really don't quite see how it can be done without a lot of confusion, from my viewpoint anyhow. I think all I can do is try to see to it that not more than two really difficult questions will be asked in any one series, but even that may not work out perfectly, because sometimes questions which seem quite simple call forth some lengthy replies. If I could just attend to this question stunt, and nothing else, it would be different, but whereas you fellows mostly attend to that one thing, in the study line at least, I am kept jumping sidewise all the time answering questions which cover dozens of things each week. If all I had to do were the department, it would be comparativtly easy, but much the hardest part of the work usually is in the correspondence.

Question No. 353—With increase in what element does it become necessary to increase the insulation resistance?

Question No. 354—Explain something about the necessity for variation of character of insulation under varying conditions of service.

Question No. 355—Name as many types of insulation as you know.

Question No. 356—Where may weatherproof insulation be used? Where may rubber covered wires be used and where must they be used?

Question No. 357—Why are rubber covered wires rated at lower capacity than wires having other types of insulation?

Bluebook School—Answers 326 to 330

Question No. 326—Upon what law is the action of an electric dynamo based?

After a careful examination of all the replies, I am unable to determine whether any of them have grasped the idea it was intended to convey or not except W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; Ray Saxon, Lufkin, Texas; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, and T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama. Henning and some others described the action of an elementary coil, but that was not what was asked for in the question.

Fell replies thus:

The generation of electric energy in the armature of a dynamo is based upon the following law:

If an electric conductor in the form of a closed circuit be moved in a magnetic field in such way that lines of force are cut, a current of electricity will be generated therein, which same will flow in a direction at right angles to the line of motion, and at right angles also to the lines of force as viewed from the point where the motion originated.

Faraday's principle, to cover all cases of electromagnetic induction:

When a conducting circuit is moved in a magnetic field in such manner as to alter the number of lines of force passing through it, or when the strength of the field is varied so as to either increase or decrease the number of lines of force passing through the circuit, a current is induced therein which lasts only during the interval of change in the number of lines of force embraced by the circuit.

The first law quoted is the one on which dynamo action is based though of course Favaday's law also applies; on the whole Carl O. Henning, Iowa City, Iowa is correct when he says: "The action of the electric dynamo is based upon the law of electromagnetic induction." He should, however, have quoted the law. But anyhow this question is a duplication of question 319, a blunder for which I have apologized.

Question No. 327—Give us an explanation of the action of an elementary dynamo armature—an armature having but one wire.

This, too, is a duplicate, being the same as question 320, answered in August 15 issue. As I said before, I don't know how it occurred, and will try to see that nothing of the sort happens again.

Doe, Henning, Saxon, Hanover and Fell answered correctly.

Question No. 328—Describe a dynamo armature. No particular type of armature is meant. Just tell us what you know about the general build and electrical action of an armature.

The reply of Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Massachusetts, who did not answer questions 326-7 because they were duplicates, reads thus:

An elementary generator has been defined as "consisting of a metallic closed loop placed in a magnetic field and so arranged that it can be rotated around a horizontal axis extending at a right angle to the direction of the lines of force." The "loop" is the armature of this elementary generator, but the electromotive force generated by such an armature would have no practical value, being such a feeble electrical impulse that it can only be detected and recorded by a sensitive galvanometer.

It is upon this action of the elementary armature, however, that the practical armature has been evolved and developed. Armature construction is designed around a shaft extending through its center, and arranged to turn in bearings located at either end of the generator castings, thus providing a means for rapidly rotating the entire armature within the magnetic field built up by the energized pole pieces and field coils.

Built upon, or around this shaft is an iron core that has two functions. It serves as a frame upon which to wind a good many loops or coils of wire; also it acts to concentrate and increase the magnetic field. There are two general types of cores upon which the loops of wire are wound, (1) the drum and (2) the ring. The drum type is the one most commonly employed, largely because of its comparative simplicity of construction and mechanical strength. On the drum type the armature coils are wound around the outside of the drum, and in the ring type are wound under and over, and do not pass all around the outside. The electric action is similar in either case, but in the drum type a greater amount or length of windings is active at any particular instant in cutting lines of force, hence, other things being equal, the voltage generated is higher. The loops of wire wound on this drum are each one continuous pieces of wire, but the electrical effect is that of a large number of single coils wound in series, so that the voltage across the terminals of this large loop at any time is the sum of the voltages in each loop. The shaft, loops and core, together with the device for taking the current from the loops (commutator for transmission of D. C. and collecting rings for A. C.) form the armature of most D. C. and A. C. generators.

Saxon says:

A dynamo armature consists of coils of insulated wire wound around or upon an iron core, and so arranged that when it is rotated in a magnetic field the wires cut lines of magnetic force in such manner that electric currents are induced or generated in the aforesaid coils. The number and strength of the pulsations of electric energy induced in the armature will depend upon the number of coils it carries, and the strength of the magnetic field.

In practice all armatures have a large number of coils, so arranged that a large percentage of them are constantly cutting lines of magnetic force.

Which might be quite a bit more ample, but is, as our Canadian brother would say: "Not so bad!"

Fell says:

The armature of a dynamo consists of insulated wires wound upon an iron core, and so arranged that electric currents are induced when the armature is rotated in a magnetic field, or when the field magnets are rotated and the armature is held stationary.

The practical objection to the elementary armature described in the answer to question 327 is that it would induce but a very feeble current, which would be far from constant in the matter of pressure—voltage. It would be highly pulsating in character, there being two pronounced impulses of E. M. F. to each revolution, these pulsations being due to the fact that the coil moves alternately into and out of the positions of best and least action in the magnetic field.

In order to obtain E. M. F. of more uniform pressure additional coils are wound upon the armature, their ends suitably connected to cummutator bars or collector rings, all in such manner that a large proportion of the coils are cutting lines of magnetic force all the time.

From a mechanical viewpoint the armature consists of a shaft, a core, or in large machines a "spider," the insulation and the commutator, or in the case of alternators the collector rings.

The shaft is of steel, and in the smaller machines is thicker in the center than at the ends, in order to give it the stiffness necessary to withstand the strong magnetic side pull on the core when the latter is precisely centered between the pole pieces. The shaft is also provided with shoulders, designed to keep the armature in proper position endwise.

In the small or medium size dynamos, the core is attached direct to the shaft. There are two kinds of core, viz: the smooth and the slotted. The smooth type of core has become obsolete, except in special cases, such as machines used for electrolytic work, where a large current at low voltage is required.

A slotted core is one having a series of parallel slots, somewhat similar to the spaces between the teeth of a gear wheel. In these slots the coils are wound or laid.

To avoid eddy currents in cores, they are laminated, being built up of layers of thin, wrought iron, or mild steel. These thin discs are threaded on the shaft, forming, when finished, a practically solid metal mass. The thickness of the discs range from .014 to .025 of an inch, corresponding to 27 and 22 B & S gauge respectively, 27 gauge being most used. The bore of these discs is also slotted to engage with the key which locks the core to the shaft, and they are locked into a solid mass by two metal end plates, pressed together either by a large nut at either end of the core engaging with a suitable thread on the shaft, or by bolts passing entirely through the core through holes provided. A quick drying varnish is used as an insulation between the core discs.

When core bolts are used, they are insulated from the core discs by tubes and washers of mica, or some other suitable insulating material. The rims of the end plates are beveled quite thin in order to avoid eddy currents.

The inductors (coils) are made of copper, the ordinary form consisting of copper wire, insulated with a double and triple covering of cotton. In some cases copper bars are used for large current machines.

The objection to copper bars is that they are likely to have eddy currents set up in them. On account of their size the field is sometimes weaker at one point than in another, and the unequal E. M. F. thus produced will induce eddy currents.

That's some considerable answer, if you ask me! The question asked answerers to tell us what they knew about armatures. I don't know whether Fell had all that in his noodle, or dug it up somewhere, nor do I care. It's equally creditable to him either way. I can't myself check all that up without taking more time than I can spare to look up a lot of data, but so far as I know it is correct.

Question No. 329—All dynamo armatures generate alternating current. Explain just why this is so.

Doe says:

Only alternating current is generated in the armature of a dynamo for the reasons explained in the reply to question No. 320. The law of magnetic indiction is that the current generated will move in a direction at right angles to the line of motion, and since the direction of motion of the wires comprising the coils with relation to the magnetic field is reversed with every half revolution, it follows that the direction of the current flow will also be reversed.

Correct, Brother Doe. Wipe your nose and go up to the head of the class.

Gray says:

When a closed metallic loop is rotated in a magnetic field in such a manner as to cut lines of force, there will be an induced e. m. f. set up in the loop that will cause a current of electricity to flow in a direction that is governed by the relationship of the direction in which the loop is moving to the direction of the lines of force. Thus, the current flows in one direction while the loop is rotating through an arc of 180 degrees and flows in the opposite direction while the loop is completing the remainder of the cycle. This change in the direction of the flow occurs at these two phases of the cycle so long as the loop is being rotated. The result is the generation of an alternating pulsating current. The above is based primarily upon the action of an elementary generator but is the same principle upon which the commercially practical dynamo is designed and constructed.

Crect, BUT I doubt if friend apprentice will be able to make very much out of it.

Question No. 330—Just what is an "armature coil," anyhow?

Fenning says:

"An armature coil is one continuous length of insulated wire which is wound upon an armature core and suitably connected to other cummutator bars or collector rings."

Guimond says:

"An armature coil is a length of insulated wire suitably mounted upon an armature core, connected at either end to collector rings or commutator bars. It forms the energizing element of the dynamo."

Gray says:

"It has been shown that the voltage induced in a single loop of wire revolving in a magnetic field is too small to have any practical value in itself. If the density of the magnetic field be increased, or if the loop be rotated faster in this field, or if the magnetic field be increased in area and a loop of larger dimensions used, or both, then the number of lines of force that will be cut during one revolution of the loop will be increased, and so will the voltage be increased. There obviously is a pretty well defined limit to which it is practical to extend, or spread out, the area of the field and also the length and width of the loop. If, however, a great number of these loops are provided by winding many turns of a long continuous wire upon and over each other, the voltage induced across the two ends of this wire will be the sum of the voltages induced in each convolution or single turn. These turns considered collectively are termed an armature coil."

This time I think we must let Gray, first having brushed off his ears, ascend and form the head of the class.

or any factor other than the reflection characteristics of the surfaces.

The results of all tests will, I repeat, be made available to projectionists, exhibitors and the industry in general through this department, through the Bluebook and doubtless through other trade papers and the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. New surfaces which may appear on the market from time to time will be tested if sent to the Eastman Laboratories and the results made known as soon as possible. THIS DEPARTMENT WILL IN THE FUTURE ADVISE EXHIBITORS TO PURCHASE NO UNTESTED SCREEN SURFACE.

Operators and Reports

Just now I am in receipt of a letter from a high official in a large producing organization, in which the following occurs:

We conducted a rather remarkable experiment with thousands of feet of a perforation that we would have thought every operator would have noticed, and seen fit to make some sort of report upon. Yet, though it must have been in the hands of four or five hundred operators, we did not have a line or receive any sort of comment from any one of them.

Well, if you put the films into the hands of four or five hundred machine attendants (which is precisely what a machine operator really is) what did you really expect? The operator of a machine, who considers himself as an operator and nothing more, naturally has no interest beyond the operation of the mechanism.

But anyhow, even projectionists would be unlikely to make report, unless they had trouble with the film. They have found, through long experience for a projectionist to write a producer is one most excellent way of wasting energy. This official may be an exception, but how were they to know that? Projectionists often do make comment on film matters to this department, but it is only once in a while we get a letter of this sort which sets the matter forth clearly enough that we can make out what it is all about. Frequently this is the case, even when samples of the film are sent in. I have no instruments for making accurate measurements of such things as sprocket holes, etc., and as a rule all the men can tell me is that the film did not run good, or was noisy, or the picture jumped.

This department is in position to, and would be glad to co-operate with any producer or producers in matters of having tests made by really competent projectionists, but the trouble is that it is impractical to send out a whole production to several projectionists to use as a "show," and of course it is impossible for the producer to know whether any given man will ever have any given production.

However, this might be done. Suppose the Dagnabit Film Company has an experiment in sprocket holes it wishes to try out. It places them in the production titled "The South North Pole" and notifies me of the facts.

I can then, through the department, ask for reports on the action of "The South North Pole" in projection, by all projectionists who run it. In this way unquestionably there would be a large response and good results.

Movements

C. L. Armstrong, Sedalia, Missouri, asks:

Will you be good enough to tell me whether or not the present "star and cam" movement has always been used as a projector intermittent movement? What I mean is, has there ever been any other kind of a movement used?

I would also like to know why a certain trade magazine I have seen three copies of is trying to ridicule projection, projectionists, yourself, your work and in fact everything connected with projection.

Another question that has bothered me is why so many pictures have a sort of snowflake appearance. By that I mean there is what looks like snow tumbling around in the air. It is not and cannot be snow, because it occurs in summer scenes; also I don't think it can be any real thing in the air. What is it, please?

"Graininess"

Backing up on your questions, the effect you allude to is what is called "graininess." It is a fault basic in the photographic emulsion. I do not know whether it is due to fault in the emulsion as it is made, whether it is due to age of the emulsion or to developement processes. It was dealt with in a paper read before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers some time ago, and only at the last (Schenectady) meeting of the Society I again brought the matter of the evil of graininess to the attention of the meeting, suggesting that its elimination, or reduction to the lowest possible minimum was a problem confronting the engineering forces which demanded attention.

As soon as I shall have finished with your matters I shall write an editorial again directing attention to the evils of graininess and again asking concentrated attention to it by the engineers who handle such problems.

As to the endeavors of the paper you speak of, I think I know the thing you refer to. Such things are not to be taken seriously. They injure no one and nothing. In fact they really, to a certain extent, do good, because they arouse resentment among men who need just such a thing as that to stir them up and to thus make them see and understand that there is an effort being made to injure their profession. I have seen evidence of this resulting from the publication you refer to. Don't let trifles worry you, Brother Armstrong. Every one and everything I ever heard of who or that amounted to Adam in this world had traducers.

Intermittent Movement

As to the intermittent movement, no, the star and cam was not the first movement used for motion picture projectors. So far as I have been able to find out, using the United States patent office records and the statements of such men as Thomas Armat, Thomas Edison and others, the star and cam "Geneva" type movement, of which the Power movement is a variation, was first applied to the motion picture projector by Thomas Armat, United States Patent No. 578185. That patent was issued in 1885 or 1886. I have the patent filed way, but it would require a bit of work to look it up, and I guess that is close enough for our purpose.

Prior to that the intermittent of the crude projectors used was what is known as the "beater type," in which the film was struck by a roller rotating at the end of a short arm. It struck the film when stretched tightly between the bottom of the aperture plate and a lower sprocket, and was thus jerked down one frame. It was used by Gaumont on his projector as late as, unless my memory serves me punkly, 1907 or 1908.

Improvement Sought

Since the introduction of the star and cam there have been many attempts to find something better. The Cameron projector, which Howard Coles tried hard to "put over," had what might be called a modified type of beater movement. It failed, though I for a long time thought it had great possibilities. I don't remember what slight flaw in its action finally condemned it.

Nicholas Power worked at various times on various intermittent movements, but finally discarded them all, except the one the Power has ever since used. It was adopted in 1908, but only a few of them went out until 1909. It is a really splendid movement, but cost the Power company tens of thousands of dollars in experimental work before it finally reached its present state of perfection.

There were, I believe, one or two other intermittent movements used to a limited extent on European projectors, but I have forgotten just what type they were, and have not the data handy.

I think we may safely predict that the star and cam, or some variation of it, such as the Power, for example, will be and remain the projector intermittent movement so long as motion pictures are projected intermittently.

Master Blade Width

From a certain Southern city comes a letter from a theatre manager in which the following occurs:

The projectors have shutters which will not give sharp focus; also the flicker is objectionable unless the projection speed is very fast. I procured two 3-wing shutters, with intention of installing them and reducing the master blade width, which always gave me excellent results on another make of projector.

Upon installing them, however, I found that there was a ghost both up and down, no matter how I might set them. In other words the master blades seemed to be too narrow. I forgot to mention that I seem to have a very heavy loss of light with the shutter. I can't figure it out, unless the lens is too large. Dope it out and send the bill to me.

Having concealed your location I shall use the matter in the department, because the accompanying discussion may be of value to others, and surely there can be no objection. Moreover you are saved a bill.

In Synchronism

In the first place you must understand that the width of the rotating shutter master blade and the speed of the intermittent movement of a projector automatically lock together. The slower the intermittent speed, the wider must the master blade be, other things being equal. If you have a Bluebook, see page 615 for explanation. If not, then here it is briefly: The master blade of the rotating shutter must cover the light beam except for a certain limited portion thereof, during the entire time the film is in movement. The white streamers you see, called "travel ghosts" are white objects in the photograph which has started to move over the aperture, before the edge of the master blade had cut through the light beam, or had not come to rest before the light beam was uncovered, hence of course moved upon the screen itself.

One complete cycle in intermittent movement, say from the time the film starts to move until it stops again, consumes a certain definite period of time. The rotating shutter is running continuously, hence a certain, fixed portion of its surface will pass a given spot in a given time at a given speed. It therefore follows that if the intermittent speed be lowered, it will take a longer period of time to move the film, or in other words the film will move through a longer period of time, HENCE THE WIDTH OF THE ROTATING SHUTTER MASTER BLADE MUST BE MADE CORRESPONDINGLY GREATER.

For instance: suppose the intermittent movement is such that the film is moved from start till stop in 1/120th of a second. The master blade is just wide enough to prevent travel ghost, or in other words to keep the screen dark while the film is in motion. We change projectors and get one which, at the same projection speed, requires 1/100 of a second to move the film from start to finish. Don't you see that this would automatically set up travel ghost, which could only be eliminated by a wider rotating shutter master blade?

Other Elements Enter

But on the other hand, suppose the change of projectors to have been made, and the intermittent speed of both to be identical, BUT that the optical system of the new one is such that the diameter of the light beam at its most narrow point in front of the projection lens is greater than was that of the old optical system—a very possible thing, by the way. Don't you see that this would automatically set up travel ghost unless the rotating shutter master blade be wider than was the one on the old projector?

But suppose the intermittent speed and the light beam diameter to be the same still, another element enters to some extent, and that is the distance from optical axis to center of rotating shutter shaft. This you will find explained on page 617 of the Blue-book, if you have one; also see figure 228 thereof. Briefly it is this. Given a definite speed of rotation, you will understand that it will require a greater period of time for the edge of a shutter blade at a point three inches from its center to travel a given distance than it would for a point six inches from its center (an exaggerated example) to travel a like distance. That should be plain enough. All right! It then would require a different period of time for a shutter blade edge to cut through a light beam of given diameter if the center of the beam be 2 45/64, 3 17/64 and 3 3/4 inches from the center of the shutter shaft, which are the distances used by three leading motion picture projectors now on the market in this country.

The reason why the three-wingers you bought don't cover may be any one of those named, or a combination of all three. That could only be determined by an examination and comparison. I have pointed out the way for you to yourself make such a comparison.

What to Do

And now as to what to do: The optics of your condenser and optical system I have handed to Griffith, with request that he check them and see if his analysis agrees with mine. The answer will be forwarded you by mail.

You cannot change your projectors, and must work with what you now have, I suppose. By that I don't mean that you ought to change them, but usually that in any event you won't, so we must merely deal with what we have. First, it is essential to best results that you get your shutter at the most narrow point of the light beam. You are using a plano-convex condenser, hence your shutter should probably be at the aerial image plane. To find this, hold any opaque object in front of the projection lens and cut slowly down through the light beam at different distances from the lens, until a shadow starts from BOTH top and bottom of screen, the two meeting in the center of the screen.

Where the shadows meet exactly in the screen center is the aerial image point, and it is there your shutter should be for the best results. If you cannot get it there, as is very likely, then get it as close as you can. If there is a considerable difference in the light beam diameter—if it is considerably less in diameter—at the aerial image than elsewhere, I would have an extension shaft, properly supported, mounted and get the shutter out there.

As to the shutter you named and injury to the focus—well, I have never yet observed any such thing. What the shutter does is permit a certain, very small portion of light to get through the shutter blades themselves. The theory is that the dark periods on the screen will thus be made gray, and therefore a bit less visible to the eye—the flicker tendency will be less.

There is a sharp divergence of opinion as to the advisability of this stunt. Many swear by it, while others swear against it. Personally I have not observed any evil effect from it, nor do I see how it could possibly affect definition (focus) to its damage. In that I think you are wrong. If definition is injured it must be due to some other cause.

On the whole I think I will send this all to Griffith and hear his comment and get his version of the optical line-up for publication, to the end that the thing be complete.

Projectionist's Tools

A man in South Boston, Massachusetts, wants to know:

Dear Brother Richardson: I would greatly appreciate a bit of information. In the first place, when a motion picture projectionist takes a position, ought he to have a set of tools of his own, or is it the place of the theatre to supply them? I have a pretty good set, but would like to get a new set complete. Would appreciate the name of a firm making a specialty of projectionist's tools.

Secondly, could you give me the name of a concern which makes a specialty of booking help for theatres all over the country? I want to get a job down in Florida. Made application to a party in that state several months ago, and had a reply saying that all the help was booked them out of a booking office in New York City. They did not give me the name of the concern.

I typed your name, but concluded not to publish it. The firm they referred to very evidently was a booking office for actors. There evidently has been some misunderstanding. There is no concern which books motion picture projectionists. In the nature of things there could be none, because of the fact that local unions of projectionists usually control local employment, and were a projectionist "booked" to work in, for instance, Tampa, he would find when he arrived that the local union probably would not consent to let him work. They keep the local work for local men, which is right and quite proper, though it has a very serious drawback in that the local union is frequently forced by circumstances to, or at least does accept into membership men who have little or no real ability, and then are forced to maintain them in a job, to the exclusion of competent men—either home men or men from elsewhere.

You address me as "Dear Brother," which may or not mean that you are an I. A. man. If you are not, then you would have to get a job, as best you could, in some unorganized place—a small town—and work there until you could get into the local having jurisdiction over that territory. If you are an I. A. man—a member of the union—you could take a transfer card, go to Florida and work anywhere you could get a job, PROVIDED the local union where you got the job would accept your transfer. That latter is doubtful, though—very doubtful indeed, since this is the slack season and almost everywhere there are more or less local men out of work.

As to tools, as a general thing I think a man prefers to own his own tools. There is no set rule. Most theatre managements will, I think, supply the really essential tools. There is no firm, so far as I know, making a specialty of making or dealing in projectionists' tools. Aside from a few special tools, those a man needs are such as can be bought at almost any first class hardware store.

"Graininess"

This department and its editor desire once more to direct the undivided attention of the engineers who handle such matters to the unmitigated evil of graininess in pictures. The editor called the attention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to this matter at the Schenectady meeting. I do not know how much can be done towards reducing or eliminating this evil, but certainly every effort should be made to that end.

GRAININESS IS ONE OF THE WORST EVILS THE PROJECTIONIST OF TODAY HAS TO CONTEND WITH, and when it appears he is entirely helpless. If you doubt the evil effect, just sit fairly well down front, or anywhere you may wish to if you have a good opera glass, and watch the difference between a scene free from graininess, and one which is not free from it.

The scenes free from it will, unless otherwise defective, appear beautifully sharp and clear-cut, but the moment graininess appears the definition suffers sadly. I find that very often graininess may not be apparent, as such, to the naked eye, but the eye nevertheless does appreciate the falling off in quality due to its introduction even in limited amounts. Also I might further remark that it is present, under the glass, in an amazing number of scenes.

Possibly graininess cannot be eliminated, but there are so few faults which will not yield to modern science that I am loath to believe it. Get busy, Mr. Engineer men. Graininess is a SERIOUS fault. Its reduction or elimination is up to YOU. Get busy.

The Shreveport, La., Strand, Opens; Link in Saenger-Ehrlich Chain

THE STRAND, Shreveport, La., was recently opened, showing "The Lost World," the First National - W. R. Rothacker Special production.

The exploitation for the opening included a 12-page co-operative section of the Shreveport Times. Many other ideas were successfully worked out, including a liberal use of 24-sheets, a big mailing order campaign direct to patrons; newspaper teasers and display ads and the use of a mechanical dinosaur in miniature display in the main street near the theatre.

The opening bill was a complete success. The Strand, the new million dollar theatre in the Saenger-Ehrlich Enterprises, Inc., is a work of exceptional beauty. No detail in the effort to provide for the comfort of the patrons has been overlooked. Every effort has been made to combine practicability with convenience.

The exterior of the Strand represents a grouping into a beautiful and practical construction plan the best elements of the leading play houses of this and other countries.

Emile Weil, architect for the Saenger-Ehrlich interests, has visited some of the world-renowned homes of the drama, show palaces, the boasts of great metropolitan centers of this and other countries. And his observing eye selected details of construction and adornment which have been incorporated in the exterior lines and interior embellishments of the Strand.

Visions of a great playhouse in Shreveport, such as the Strand, have been cherished by Julian H. and A. D. Saenger, Harry and Simon Ehrlich and E. V. Richards, their General Manager.

It was in Shreveport that their initial successes in the commercial and theatrical world were achieved. For many years these men have sought to serve the public by presenting wholesome entertainment. And it was their hope for years that some day they might erect in Shreveport a theatre which would be a realization of their dreams and their expressive appreciation to the public which made possible for them the fulfilment of their vision.

The answer is the Strand. It represents, exclusive of ground value, an investment of fully one million dollars. For one and one-half years this theatre has been in the course of construction. The period of time spent in construction is indicative of the thoroughness and painstaking attention to details.

The builders desired a theatre beautiful, elaborate, elegant, safe and massive, with every comfort provided and in every line and decoration a delight to the eye.

Seen from the exterior, the Strand compels the attention of the passerby. The great dome, artistic by day and beautiful in its varied colored myriad lights by night, attracts the eye. But in this lighting as in the announcement signs about the marquise and the wall signs, there is a dignified softness, nothing garish, yet attracting the eye to the messages and beauties of construction.

The Crockett Street side of the Strand is embellished with a great Gothic arch, patterned along the lines of the cathedral windows of great European centers. The keystone of the arch tells the message and there is an inscription, hewn in the stone and gilded, which further declares the purposes of this great temple of art, namely to furnish wholesome amusement for progressive people.

The lobby of the Strand is in solid marble and genuine travitine stone walls. The floor is laid with marble blocks. The ticket windows are practicable and in harmony with the elaborateness of the lobby in general. Gazing above the eye sees lights of many colors twinkle as the stars in the firmament.

Beautiful Paintings

Surrounding the upper wall of the circular lobby is a beautiful work of art, painted by Paul Heerwagen, one of the South's leading artists. This painting portrays a falcon hunt. There is flashed before the eye a picture of the scene of old and mental pictures revived of the lore of childhood and the records of history when the Old World was in the heyday of its glory.

All 2,200 seats are "good seats," that is, they are comfortable, upholstered in genuine leather and with visibility unobstructed to each. There are no posts in the Strand to mar the view. Off the stage, there are the great loges, or boxes, handsomely draped and beautifully decorated. These boxes, uppers and lowers on each side, are capable of comfortably seating 200 persons.

The orchestra pit is ample. A feature of the Strand musical equipment is the great organ. The acoustics of the theatre are so excellent that the sound swells and rolls through the great structure, delighting every ear with the mellowness of the music.

Temple Theatre, Kane, Pa., Is Artistic and Amply Equipped

WHEN, recently, the Temple Theatre, Kane, Pennsylvania, under the auspices of H. E. Brown and A. R. Nelson, threw wide its doors to the public, residents of Kane and nearby territory were treated to their first view of the magnificent 1,200-seat house, modern in every detail, spacious and inviting in design.

Foyer, rest rooms and other adjuncts of the auditorium proper are laid out for comfort and convenience.

A mushroom heating and ventilating system installed by the Smith Hardware Company ensures good air and plenty of it at the right temperature.

The orchestra floor, the balcony, which is featured with a luxurious loge, give splendid seating facilities.

A Minusa Gold Fibre Screen is installed, set in a shadow box. Soft lighting provides eye comfort.

Wide aisles, plentiful and carefully planned exits, modern fire prevention apparatus and an emergency lighting system ensure patron safety.

An organ, costing $15,000, is the feature of the musical provision of the new theatre. It is said to be the most modern and complete instrument in Western Pennsylvania.

The policy of the house is announced to be straight pictures, changing three times a week or oftener. First National's Colleen Moore production, "Sally," a Pathe News and Bobby Vernon Christie-Educational comedy, "Bright Lights," with speeches, organ specialties and a glee club, comprised the opening program.

situations and this comedy is thoroughly amusing.

"The Sky Jumper"

This is another of the Van Bibber series and Van of course makes good with terrible odds against him. This time, with a party in the mountains, a flippant remark causes him to be challenged by a crack ski jumper. Van is scared, but the rival gives him a push and he takes the slide against his will, making a record jump. He loses his nerve when it comes to entering the cross country run and climbs a hill to get away. A bear chases him and he makes a getaway by using two boards for skis. Once he gets started he can't stop and catches up with his rival, who slings him off the course into a tree. Van circles the tree several times and, unable to hold on, is flung down the hill, crossing the finish line first and winning the prize. Just as clever and amusing as "The Wrestler."

"My Own Carolina"

North Carolina furnishes the material for this Fox Variety. There are a number of beautiful shots of forest, mountain and stream, apparently filmed around the beautiful Asheville section. This has been varied by interesting scenes showing the hunting of quail with bird dogs, and other shots of a day's activities of the natives of that region. A thoroughly entertaining subject.

"The West Wind"

We don't believe we have ever seen anything like as great a variety of scenes in one reel of film. What the west wind sees furnishes the idea and serves to introduce a beautiful selection of shots of nature in all of its manifestations. There are shots of mountains, lakes, rivers, forests, pasture land, desert, hillsides, villages, great cities, the sea and the clouds fanned by gentle breezes. Then there are scenes with the fury of the wind unleashed on land and sea and a view of the Arctic regions, camels on a desert and the garden of a Moorish palace. This interesting subject certainly justifies the brand title, for it includes about every variety of nature scenes.

"Pathe Review No. 35"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Some unusual shots of the molten crater, during the day and the night, of Hawaii's Kiluea, under the title of "The Cauldron of Kiluea," make of the "Pathe Review No. 35" an especially interesting offering. "Tracing the First Man" of Roy Chapman Andrews' "The Origin of Man" series shows the expedition at work unearthing bones in Mongolia and later their assembling in New York's Museum of Natural History. "A Jaunt Through Jura" is composed of scenes of the Franco-Swiss Alps in Pathecolor.—T. W.

It's expected

"Eastman" and "Kodak," in black letters in the margin, identify the genuine Eastman product—the film that carries quality through to the screen.

Eastman Positive Film assures the kind of photographic reproduction that audiences are entitled to—and expect.

RALPH GRAVES COMEDIES

Two Reels

A Series of 12

Sennett Productions in all that the name implies.

Sizzling with humor like hot fat in a pan.

Fast stepping. Not a dull moment.

Pretty girls—and Graves himself.

Seen him? Big and handsome. Clever. Funny because he makes himself John J. Dumbell himself.

When Sennett takes a comedian out of a crowd and makes him a star it means something.

How can you make every dollar possible if you don't advertise him to your public?
